L. Chan. Unto faith? we must have many more words to make it plain.

Brad. You shall so: but first give me leave to speak two words.

L. Chan. Speak on.

Brad. I have been now a year and almost three quarters in prison, and of all this time you never questioned with me hereabout, when I might have spoken my conscience frankly without peril: but now have you a Law to hang up and put to death, if a man answer freely, and not to your appetite, and so now you come to demand this question. Ah my Lord, Christ used not this way to bring men to faith. No more did the Prophets or the Apostles. Remember what Bern. writeth to Eugenius the Pope; Apostolos lego stetisse iudicandos, sedisse iudicantes non lego. Hoc erit, illud fuit, &c. That is, I read, that the Apostles stood to be judged, but I read not, that they sate to judge. This shall be, that was, &c.

Note well the Popes way to bring men to faith. The Popes judging and condemning men for their faith, reproved by Bern.

Chan. Here the L. Chancellor was appalled, as it seemed, and said most gently that he used not this means. It was not my doing, quoth he, although some there be that think this to be the best way: For I, for my part have been challenged for being too gentle oftentimes. Which thing the Bishop of London confirmed, and so hath did almost all the audience, that he had been ever too milde and too gentle.

Winchester blamed without a cause, as he saith.

Brad. At which words Bradford spake thus: My Lord, I pray you stretch out your gentleness, that I may feel it, for hitherto I never felt it.

Chan. As soon as ever he had spoken thus: the Lord, Chancellor, belike thinking that Bradford would have had mercy and pardon, faith, that with all his heart, not only he, but the Queens Highness would stretch out mercy if with them he would return.

Brad. Return, my Lord? God save me from that going back! I mean it not so, but I meant that I was three quarters of a year in the Tower; you forbid me paper, pen and ink, and never in all that time, nor thence did I feel any gentleness from you: rather hitherto found, as I looked for, extremity. And I thank God that I perceive now ye have kept me in prison thus long, not for any matter ye had, but for matter ye would have; Gods good will be done.

Bradford three quarters of a year in the Tower kept from pen and ink.

Here now were divers telling my Lord it was dinner time. And so he rose up, leaving Bradford speaking, and saying that in the afternoon they would speak more with him. And so was he had into the Veltrey, and was there all that day till dark night, and so was conveyed again to prison.

Bradford kept in the Veltrey till dark night.

In the mean time, about four of the clock the same afternoon, a Gentleman called Master Thomas Haffey of Lincolnshire, which was once an Officer in the Duke of Northfolks House, did come into the Veltrey to inquire for one Stronking, and when it was answered him by the Undermarshals Officers of the Kings Bench, that there was none such, he entered into the house, and took acquaintance of John Bradford, saying, that he would commune and speak with him the next morning for old acquaintance.

T. Haffey came to Bradford.

The next morning about seven of the clock, this Gentleman came into the Chamber wherein John Bradford did lye, and being with him, he began a long Oration, how that of love and old acquaintance he came unto him to speak that which he would further utter. You did (said he) so wonderfully behave your self before the L. Chancellor, and other Bishops yester day, that even the veriest enemies you have, did see that they have no matter against you: & therefore advise you (speaking as though it came of his own good will, without making any other man privie, or any other procuring him, as he said) this day (for anon you shall be called before them again) desire a time, and men to confer withall, so shall all men think a wonderful Wisdom, gravity, and godliness in you: and by this means you shall escape present danger, which else is nearer than you are ware of. To this John Bradford answered, I neither can nor will make such request. For then shall I give occasion to the people and to all other to think that I doubt of the Doctrine which I confess: the which thing I do not, for I am most assured, & therefore will give no such offence.

Counsell of M. Haffey given to M. Bradford.

As they were thus talking, the Chamber Door was unlocked & Dr. Seton came in, who when he saw M. Haffey, What Sir, quoth Bradford in his heart to God, goeth the matter thus? This man told me, no man knew of his coming. Lord give me grace to remember thy lesson, with a 13.

M. Bradford's refusal to require respit.

Dr. Seton came in to M. Bradford, who took a 13.

Anno 1555. Caveat ab hominibus illis, Beware of those men, &c. Cast not your Pearls before Dogs: for I see these men be come to hunt for matter, that the one may bear witness with the other.

Concert of D. Seton given to M. Bradford. Seton. Dr. Seton, after some by-talk of Bradford's Age; of his Country and such like, began a gay and long Sermon of my Lord of Canterbury, Mr. Latimer, and Mr. Ridley, and how they at Oxford were not able to answer any thing at all; and that therefore my Lord of Canterbury desired to confer with the Bishop of Durham and others: all which Talk tended to this end, that John Bradford should make the like suit, being in nothing to be compared in Learning to my Lord of Canterbury.

Brad. To this John Bradford briefly answered as he did before to Mr. Hussey.

Seton. With this Answer neither the Doctor nor Gentleman being contented, after many persuasions, Mr. Doctor said, I have heard much good talk of you, and even yesterday a Gentleman made report of you at the Lord Chancellors Table, that ye were able to persuade as much as any that he knew. And I (though I never heard you preach, and to my knowledge did never see you before yesterday,) yet methought your modesty was such, your behaviour and talk so without malice and impatience, that I would be sorry you should do worse than my self. And I tell you further, I do perceive my Lord Chancellor hath a fantasie towards you: wherefore be not so obdurate, but desire respite and some Learned man to confer withal, &c.

Brad. But John Bradford kept still one answer: I cannot nor I will not so offend the People. I doubt not, but I am most certain of the Doctrine I have taught.

Seton. Here Mr. Doctor waxed hot, and called Bradford arrogant, proud, vain-glorious, and spake like a Prelate.

Brad. But Bradford answered, Beware of judging, lest you condemn your self. But still Mr. Doctor Seton urged him, shewing him how merciful my L. Chancellor was, and how charitably they entertained him.

Brad. I never saw any Justice, much less Love, if I speak for my part, quoth Bradford, in my Lord Chancellor. Long have I been unjustly imprisoned, and handled in the same uncharitably: and now my Lord hath no just matter against me.

This talk served not the Doctors purpose: wherefore he went from matter to matter, from this point to that point. Bradford still gave him the hearing, and answered not: for he perceived that they both did come but to fish for some things which might make a shew that my L. Chancellor had justly kept him in Prison.

When all their talk took no such effect as they would or looked for, Mr. Hussey asked Bradford, will ye not admit conference, if my L. Chancellor should offer it publickly?

Brad. Conference, if it had been offered before the Law had been made, or if it were offered so that I might be at liberty to confer, and as sure as he with whom I should confer, then it were something: but else I savor to what other purpose Conference should be offered, but to defer that which will come at the length, and the lingring may give more offence than do good. Howbeit, if my Lord shall make such an offer of his own motion, I will not refuse to confer with whomsoever he shall appoint.

Mr. Doctor hearing this, called Bradford arrogant, proud, and whatsoever it pleased him.

Then Bradford perceiving by them that he should shortly be called for, besought them both to give him leave to talk with God, and to beg wisdom and grace of him: for, quoth he, otherwise I am helpless: and so they with much ado departed. Then Bradford went to God and made his Prayers, which the Lord of his goodness did graciously accept in his need, praised therefore be his holy Name. Shortly after they were gone, Bradford was led to the fore said Church, and there tarried uncalled for till Eleven of the Clock, that is, till M. Sanders was Excommunicated.

The effect and sum of the last Examination of John Bradford, in the Church of St. Mary Overies.

After the Excommunication of Lawrence Sanders, John Bradford was called in, and being brought in before the L. Chancellor and other the Bishops there sitting, the L. Chancellor began to speak thus in effect: that if Bradford, being now citizens come before them, would answer with modesty and humility, and conform himself to the Catholick Church with them, he yet might find mercy, because they would be loath to use extremity. Therefore he concluded with an Exhortation, that Bradford would recant his Doctrine.

After the Lord Chancellor had ended his long Oration, Bradford began to speak thus: As yesterday I besought your Honours to set in your fight the Majesty and presence of God to follow him, which seeketh not to subvert the simple by subtle questions: so I humbly beseech every one of you to do this day; for that you know well enough, that guiltless Blood will cry for Vengeance. And this I pray not your Lordships to do, as one that taketh upon me to condemn you utterly herein, but that ye might be more admonished to do that, which none doth so much as he should do: For our Nature is so much corrupt, that we are very oblivious and forgetful of God. Again, as yesterday I pretended mine Oath and Oaths against the Bishop of Rome, that I should never consent to the practising of any Jurisdiction for him, or on his behalf in the Realm of England: so do I again at this day, lest I should be perjured. And last of all, as yesterday the Answers I made, were by protestation and saving mine Oath, so I would your Honours should know that mine Answers shall be this day: and this I do, when Death (which I look for at your hands) shall come, I may not be troubled with the guiltiness of Perjury.

L. Chan. At which words the L. Chancellor was wroth, and said, that they had given him respite to deliberate till this day, whether he would recant his Errors of the blessed Sacrament, which yesterday (quoth he) before us you uttered.

Brad. My Lord, you gave me no time of any such deliberation, neither did I speak any thing of the Sacrament which you did disallow. For when I had declared a presence of Christ to be there to Faith, you went from that matter to purge your self, that you were not cruel, and so went to Dinner.

L. Chan. What? I perceive we must begin all again with thee. Did I not yesterday tell thee plainly, that thou madest a Confession where none should be? Did I not make it plain, that the Oath against the Bishop of Rome was an unlawful Oath?

Brad. No indeed my Lord: You said so, but you proved it not yet, nor ever can do.

L. Chan. O Lord God, what a Fellow art thou? Thou wouldest go about to bring into the Peoples heads, that we, all the Lords of the Parliament House, the Knights and Burgeses, and all the whole Realm be perjured. O what an Heretick is this? here good People, you may see what a senseless Heretick this Fellow is. If I should make an Oath I would never help my Brother, nor lend him Money in his need; were this a good answer to tell my Neighbour desiring my help, that I had made an Oath to the contrary? or that I could not do it?

Brad. O my Lord, discern betwixt Oaths that be against Charity and Faith, and Oaths that be according to Faith and Charity, as this is against the Bishop of Rome.

Chan. Here the Lord Chancellor made much ado, and a long time was spent about Oaths, which were good and which were evil, he captiously asking often of Bradford a direct answer concerning Oaths: which Bradford would not give simply, but with a distinction. Whereat the Chancellor was much offended: but Bradford still kept him at the bay, that the Oath against the Bishop of Rome, was a lawful Oath, using thereto the Lord Chancellors own Book, de vera Obedientia, for confirmation.

At the length they came to this issue, who should be judge of the lawfulness of the Oath; and Bradford said the Word of God, according to Christs Word, John 12. My Word shall judge; and according to the testimony of Esay and Micah, That Gods Word coming out of Jerusalem, shall give sentence among the Gentiles. By this Word, quoth Bradford, my Lord, I will prove the Oath against the Bishop of Romes Authority, to be a good, a godly and a lawful Oath. So that the Lord Chancellor left his hold, and as the other day he pretended a denial of the Queens Authority and Obedience to her Highness, so did he now.

But Bradford, as the day before, proved, that obedience in this point to the Queens Highness, if he should demand an Oath to the Bishop of Rome, being denied, was not a general denial of her Authority, and of Obedience to her; no more, quoth he, than the sale gift or lease of a piece of a mans Inheritance, proveth it a sale, gift, or lease of the whole Inheritance.

And thus much ado was made about this matter: the Lord Chancellor talking much, and using many examples of Debt, of going out of Town to morrow by Oath, and yet tarrying till Friday, and such like. Which trifling Talk Bradford did touch, saying, That it was a wonder his Honour weighed Confidence no more in this, and would be so earnest in Vows of Priests Marriages made to Bishops, and be careless for solemn Oaths made to God and to Princes. Summe, this was the end. The Lord Chancellor said, the Queen might dispense with it, and did so to all the whole Realm. But Bradford said, that the Queens Highness could do no more but remit right; as for the Oath made to God, he could never remit, for as much as it was made unto God.

L.Chan. At which words the L.Chancellor chafed wonderfully, and said, that in plain sense I slandered the Realm of Perjury; and therefore (quoth he to the People) you may see how this Fellow taketh upon him to have more knowledge and confidence than all the wise Men of England, and yet he hath no Confidence at all.

Brad. Well, my Lord, let all the standers-by see who hath Confidence: I have been a year and a half in Prison: Now before all this People, declare wherefore I was imprisoned, or what cause you had to punish me. You said the other day in your own house, my Lord of London witnessing with you, that I took upon me to speak to the People undefeared. There he sitteth by you, I mean my Lord of Bathe, which desired me himself for the Passion of Christ, I would speak to the People. Upon whose words I coming into the Pulpit, had like to have been slain with a Dagger (which was hurled at him, I think) for it touched my Sleeve. He then prayed me I would not leave him, and I promised him, as long as I lived, I would take hurt before him that day, and so went out of the Pulpit and intreated with the People, and at length brought him my self into an house.

Besides this, in the Afternoon I preached at Bow-Church, and there going up into the Pulpit, one willed me not to reprove the People; for, quoth he, you shall never come down alive, if you do it. And yet notwithstanding I did in that Sermon reprove their fact, and called it Sedition at the least twenty times. For all which my doings, I have received this recompence, Prison for a year and a half, and more, and Death now, which you go about. Let all men be judge where Confidence is.

In speaking of these words, there was endeavour to have letted it: but Bradford still spake on, and gave no place till he had made an end, speak what they would. And then the Lord Chancellor said, that for all that fair Tale, his fact at the Cross was naught.

Brad. No, my fact was good, as your your self did bear witness with me. For when I was at the first before you in the Tower, you your self did say, that my fact was good, but (quoth you) thy mind was evil. Well, quoth I, then my Lord, in that you allow the fact, and condemn my mind; for so much as otherwise I cannot declare my mind to man but by saying and doing. God one day, I trust, will open it to my comfort, what my mind was, and yours is.

L.Chan. Here the L.Chancellor was offended, and said, that he never said so. I, quoth he, had not so little wit I trow, as not to discern betwixt meaning and doing: and so brought forth, little to the purpose, many Examples to prove that men construe things by the meaning of men, and not by their doings. But when this would not serve, then cometh he to another matter, and said, that Bradford was put in Prison at the first because he would not yield, nor be conformable to the Queens Religion.

Brad. Why my Lord? your Honour knoweth that you would not reason with me in Religion, but said a time should afterwards be found out, when I should be talked withal. But if it were as your Lordship saith, that I was put in Prison for Religion, in that my Religion was then authorized by publick Laws of the Realm, could Confi-ence punish me, or cast me in Prison therefore? Wherefore let all men be Judges, in whom Confidence wanteth.

M.Chamb. Here came forth M.Chamberlain of Woodstock, and spake to my L.Chancellor, how that Bradford had been a Serving-man, and was with M.Harrington.

L.Chan. True, and did deceive his Master of Seven score l. and because of this, he went to a Gospeller and a Preacher (good People) and yet you see how he pretendeth Confidence.

Brad. My Lord, I set my foot by his, whosoever he be, that can come forth and justly vouch to my face, that ever I deceived my Master. And as you are Chief Justicer by Office in England, I desire Justice upon them that so slander me, because they cannot prove it.

L.Chan. Here my Lord Chancellor and Mr.Chamberlain were smitten blank, and said they heard it. But quoth my Lord Chancellor, we have another manner of matter hold than this against you: for you are an Heretic.

Lord. Yea, quoth the Bishop of London, he did write Letters to M.Pendleton, which knoweth his hand as well as his own, your Honour did see the Letters.

Brad. This is not true, I never did write to Pendleton since I came to Prison, and therefore I am not justly spoken of.

Lord. Yea, but you ended it.

Brad. I did not, nor know not what you mean, and this I offer to prove.

Here came in another, I trow they call him Mr.Allen, one of the Clerks of the Council, putting the Lord Chancellor in remembrance of Letters written into Lancashire.

L.Chan. You say true: for we have his hand to shew.

Brad. I deny that we have my hand to shew of Letters sent into Lancashire, otherwise than before you all I will stand to, and prove them to be good and lawful.

Here was all answered, and then the L.Chancellor began a new matter. Sir (quoth he) in my house the other day you did most contemptuously condemn the Queens mercy, and further said, that you would maintain the erroneous Doctrine in K.Edwards days against all men, and this you do most stoutly.

Brad. Well, I am glad that all men see now you have had no matter to imprison me afore that day justly. Now say I, that I did not contemptuously condemn the Queens mercy, but would have had it (though if Justice might take place, I need it not) so that I might have had it with Gods mercy, that is, without doing or saying any thing against God and his Truth. And as for maintenance of Doctrine, because I cannot tell how you will stretch this word Maintenance, I will repeat again that which I spake. I said I was more confirmed in the Religion set forth in King Edwards days, than ever I was; and if God so would, I trust I should declare it by giving my life for the confirmation and reedification thereof. So I said then, and so I say now. As for otherwise to maintain it, than pertaining to a private person by Confession, I thought not, nor think not.

L.Chan. Well, yesterday thou didst maintain false Heresie concerning the blessed Sacrament, and therefore we gave thee respite till this day to deliberate.

Brad. My Lord, as I said at the first, I spake nothing of the Sacrament, but that which you allowed, and therefore reproveth it not, nor gave me any thing to deliberate.

L.Chan. Why? didst thou not deny Christs presence in the Sacrament?

Brad. No, I never denied nor taught, but that to Faith, whole Christ, Body and Blood was as present as the Bread and Wine to the due receiver.

L.Chan. Yea, but dost thou not believe that Christs Body naturally and really is there, under the forms of Bread and Wine?

Brad. My Lord, I believe Christ is present there to the Faith of the due Receiver: as for Transubstantiation, I plainly and flatly tell you, I believe it not.

Here was Bradford called Diabolus, a Slanderer: for they we ask no question (quoth my L.Chancellor) of Transubstantiation, but of Christs presence.

Brad. I deny not his presence to the Faith of the Receiver, but deny that he is included in the Bread, or that the Bread was transubstantiated.

B.Wrecch. If he be not included, how is he then present?

Brad.

A Clerk of the Council thought to back Allen.

Winchester capricious quarrel answered.

Another usurruth in Winchester.

Blasphemy are you when they shall revile you, and speak all that is ought against you for my names sake, Amen y.

ADMO 1555 Brad. Forsooth, though my Faith can tell how, yet my Tongue cannot express it, nor you otherwise than by Faith hear it, or understand it.

Here was much ado, now one Doctor standing up and speaking thus, and others speaking that, and the L. Chancellor talking much of Luther, Zuinglius, Oecolampadius, but still Bradford kept him at that point, that Christ is present to Faith, and that there is no Transubstantiation nor including of Christ in the Bread: but all this would not serve them.

Therefore another Bishop asked this Question, Whether the wicked man received Christs very Body or no? And Bradford answered plainly, No. Whereat the L. Chancellor made a long Oracion, how that it could not be that Christ was present, except that the evil man received it.

But Bradford put away all his Oracion in few words, that Grace was at that time offered to his Lordship, although he received it not: so that (quoth he) the receiving maketh not the Presence, as your Lordship would infer: but Gods Grace, Truth, and Power is the cause of the Presence, which Grace the wicked that lack Faith, cannot receive. And here Bradford prayed my Lord, not to divorce that which God had coupled together. He hath coupled all these together; Take, eat, this is my Body: He saith not, See, peep, this is my Body; but, Take, eat. So that it appeareth this is a Promise depending upon Condition, if we take and eat.

L. Chan. Here the L. Chancellor and other Bishops made a great ado, that Bradford had found out a toy that no man else ever did, of the Condition, and the L. Chancellor made many words to the People thereabout.

Brad. But Bradford said thus, My Lord, are not these words, Take, eat, a Commandment? And are not these words, This is my Body, a Promise? If you will challenge the Promise, and do not the Commandment, may you not deceive your self?

L. Chan. Here the L. Chancellor denied Christ to have commanded the Sacrament, and the use of it.

Brad. Why my Lord, I pray you tell the People what Mood Accipitis, Manducatis, is; Is it not plain to Children, that Christ in so saying, commandeth?

L. Chan. At these words the L. Chancellor made a great toying and trifling at the Imperative Mood, and fell to parsing or examining, as he should teach a Child, and so concluded that it was no Commandment, but such a Phrase as this, I pray you give me drink, which quoth he, is no Commandment, I trow.

Brad. But Bradford prayed him to leave toying and trifling, and said thus; My Lord, if it be not a Commandment of Christ to take and eat the Sacrament, why dare any take upon them to command and make that of necessity, which God leaveth free? as you do in making it a necessary Commandment, once a year for all that be of discretion, to receive the Sacrament.

L. Chan. Here the L. Chancellor called him again * Diabolus, bolus or Calumniator, and began out of these words, Let a man prove himself, and you eat of the Bread (yea Bread, quoth Bradford) and drink of the Cup, to prove that it was no Commandment to receive the Sacrament: for then (quoth he) if it were a Commandment, it should bind all men, in all places, and at all times.

Brad. O my Lord, discern between Commandments: some be general, as the Ten Commandments, that they bind always, in all places, and all persons: some be not so general, as this of the Supper, the Sacrament of Baptism, of the thrice appearing before the Lord yearly at Jerusalem, of Abraham offering of Isaac, &c.

Here my L. Chancellor denied the Cup to be commanded of Christ: for then, quoth he, we should have eleven Commandments.

Brad. Indeed I think you think as you speak: for else would you not take the Cup from the People, in that Christ saith, Drink ye all of it. But how say you my Lords? Christ saith to you Bishops especially, Ie, predicate Evangelium: Go, and preach the Gospel: Feed Christs Flock, &c. Is this a Commandment, or no?

L. Chan. Here was my Lord Chancellor in a chafe, and said as pleased him.

Duref. Another, the Bp. of Durefme I ween, asked Bradford, when Christ began to be present in the Sacrament? whether before the Receiver received it, or no?

Brad. Bradford answered, that the question was curious, and not necessary, and further said, that as the Cup was the New Testament, so the Bread was Christs Body to him that received it duly, but yet so that the Bread is Bread. For as much as, in all the Scripture ye shall not find this Proposition, Non est panis, There is no Bread. And so I brought forth Christum, Si in corpore est enim, Hominem. 82. Mich. 34. Summa. Much ado was hereabout, they calling Bradford Hereticke, and he desiring them to proceed on in Gods Name, he looked for that which God appointed for them to do.

L. Chan. This Fellow is now in another Hereticke of fatal necessity, as though all things were so tied together, that of meer necessity all must come to pass.

Brad. But Bradford prayed him to take things as they be spoken, and not wrest them into a contrary sense. Your Lordship, quoth he, doth discern betwixt God and Man. Things are not by fortune to God at any time, though to Man they seem so sometimes. I speak but as the Apostles be, said, Lord (quoth he) see how Herod and Pontius Pilate, with the Prelats, are gathered together against thy Christ, to do that which thy hand and counsel hath before ordained for them to do.

L. Chan. Here began the Lord Chancellor to read the Excommunication. And in the Excommunication, when he came to the name of John Bradford, Laicus, Lay-man: Why (quoth he) art thou no Priest?

Brad. No, nor never was either Priest, either Beneficed, either Married, either any Preacher, afore Publick Authority had established Religion, or Preacher after Publick Authority had altered Religion, and yet I am thus handled at your hand: but God I doubt not will give his Blessing where you Curse. And so he fell down on his knees, and heartily thanked God that he counted him worthy to suffer for his Names sake. And so praying God to give him repentance, and a good mind, after the Excommunication was read, he was delivered to the Sheriff of London, and so had to the Clink, and afterwards to the Compter in the County, in the same City of London, this being purposed of his Murderers, that he should be delivered from thence to the Earl of Derby, to be conveyed into Lancashire, and there to be burned in the Town of Manchester, where he was born: but their purpose concerning the place was afterward altered; for they burned him in London.

After the Condemnation of Mr. Bradford, which was the last day of January, Mr. Bradford being sent into Prison, did there remain until the first day of July, during all which time, divers other Conferences and Conflicts he sustained with sundry Adversaries, which repaired unto him in the Prison. Of whom first Bishop Boser, coming to the Compter to degrade Dr. Taylor the fourth day of February, entred talk with the said Mr. Bradford; the effect whereof here ensueth.

Private talk had with John Bradford, by such as the Prelats sent unto him, after the time of Condemnation, by his own writing.

UPON the fourth of February, that is, the same day Mr. Rogers was burned, Boser Bishop of London, came to the Compter in the Poultry, to degrade Dr. Taylor, about one of the Clock at Afternoon. But before he spake to Mr. Taylor, he called for John Bradford which was Prisoner there, whom when he saw, he put off his Cap, and gave him his hand, saying, Because I perceive that ye are desirous to confer with some learned men, therefore I have brought Mr. Archdeacon Harpsfield to you. And I tell you, you do like a wife man. But I pray you go roundly to work, for the time is but short.

Brad. My Lord, as roundly as I can I will go to work with you: I never desired to confer with any man, nor yet do. Howbeit if ye will have one to talk with me, I am ready.

Boser. What (quoth the Bishop in a fume to the Keeper) did you not tell me that this man desired conference?

Keeper. No my Lord, I told you that he would not refuse to confer with any; but I did not say that it is his desire.

Boser. Well, Mr. Bradford, you are well beloved, I pray you consider your self, and refuse not Charity when it is offered.

Christs body present to him? Transubstantiation denied.

The wicked receive not the body of Christ. Receiving maketh not the presence of the body, but grace. The L. Chan. Church divorceth that which God hath coupled together.

The Sacrament hath both a commandment and a promise, and both.

Bradford doth confer with some, and yet is ready to talk with any.

Brad. Indeed, my Lord, this is small Charity, to condemn a man as you have condemned me, which never brake your Laws. In Turkey a man may have Charity, but in England I could not yet find it. I was condemned for my Faith, so soon as I uttered it at your requests, before I had committed any thing against the Laws. And as for conference, I am not afraid to talk with whom ye will. But to say that I desire to confer, that do I not.

Boner. Well, well. And so he called for Mr. Taylor, and Bradford went his way.

Another private matter of talk between Mr. Bradford and Willerton, Crefwell, Harding, Harpsfield, and others more.

U Pon another day of February, one Mr. Willerton, Chaplain of the Bishop of London, did come to confer with Bradford, but when he perceived that Bradford desired not his coming, and therefore wished rather his departing then abiding: Well, Mr. Bradford quoth he, yet I pray you let us confer a little, perchance you may do me good, if I can do you none. Upon which words Bradford was content, and so they began to talk. Willerton spake much of the Doctors, the Fathers, of the Bread in the fifth of John, &c. labouring to prove Transubstantiation, and that wicked men do receive Christ.

But Bradford on the contrary part improved his Authorities, so that they came to this issue, that Willerton should draw out of the Scriptures and Doctors his Reasons, and Bradford would peruse them; and if he could not answer them, then he would give place. Likewise also should Bradford draw out his Reasons out of the Scriptures and Doctors, to which Willerton should answer if he could: and so for that day they departed.

The next day following in the Morning, Willerton sent half a sheet of Paper written on both sides, containing no Reasons how he gathered his Doctrine, but only bare Sentences; Pania quem ego dabo, &c. The Bread which I will give is my flesh; And the places in the 26. of Matthew, the 14. of Mark, the 22. of Luke, and the 10. and 11. of the Corinthians, with some Sentences of the Doctors, all which made as much against him as with him.

In the afternoon he came himself, and there they had a long talk to little effect. At the length Willerton began to talk of the Church, saying that Bradford swerved from the Church.

Brad. No that I do not, but ye do. For the Church is Christs Spouse, and Christs obedient Spouse, which your Church is not, which robbeth the People of the Lords Cup, and of Service in the English Tongue.

Willer. Why? It is not profitable to have the Service in English; for it is written, Labia Sacerdotum custodiant legem; The lips of the Priest should keep the Law, and out of his mouth man must look for knowledge.

Brad. Should not the People then have the Scriptures? Wherefore sterveth this saying of Christs, Search the Scriptures.

Willer. This was not spoken to the People, but to the Scribes and Learned men.

Brad. Then the People must not have the Scriptures. Willer. No, for it is written, Erunt docti a Deo; They shall be all taught of God.

Brad. And must we learn all at the Priests?

Willer. Ya.

Brad. Then I see you would bring the People to hang up Christ, and let Barabbas go, as the Priests did then perfwade the People. At which words Mr. Willerton was so offended, that he had no lust to talk any more.

In the end Bradford gave him the Reasons which he had gathered against Transubstantiation, and prayed him to frame his into the form of Reasons, and then quoth Bradford, I will answer them.

Willer. Well, I will do so. But first I will answer yours. The which thing until this day he hath not done.

Upon the 12. of February, there came one of the Earl of Derby's Servants to Bradford, saying, My Lord hath sent me to you, he willeth you to tender your self, and he will be a good Lord to you.

Brad. I thank his Lordship for his good will towards me: but in this case I cannot tender my self more than Gods Honour.

Servant. Ah Mr. Bradford, consider your Mother, Sisters, Friends, Kinsfolk, and Country, what a great discomfort will it be unto them to see you dye as an Heretic?

Brad. I have learned to forsake Father, Mother, Brother, Sister, Friend, and all that ever I have, yea, even mine own self, for else I cannot be Christs Disciple.

Servant. If my Lord should obtain for you that ye might depart the Realm, would you not be content to be at the Queens appointment, where she would appoint you beyond the Sea.

Brad. No, I had rather be burned in England, then be burned beyond the Seas. For I know that if she should send me to Paris, Lovain, or some such place, forthwith they would burn me.

Talk between Mr. Bradford and one Percival Crefwell, and after that with Dr. Harding.

U Pon the fourteenth of February, Percival Crefwell, an old Acquaintance of Bradford's, came to him, bringing with him a Kinsman of Mr. Feckenham, who after many words, said;

Cref. I pray you let me make labour for you.

Brad. You may do what ye will.

Cref. But tell me what suit I should make for you.

Brad. Forsooth that ye will do, do it not at my request, for I desire nothing at your hands. If the Queen will give me life, I will thank her. If she will banish me, I will thank her. If she will burn me, I will thank her. If she will condemn me to perpetual Prisonment, I will thank her.

Hereupon Crefwell went away, and about eleven of the Clock he and the other men came again, and brought a Book of Mores making, desiring Bradford to read it over.

Bradford taking the Book, said, Good Percival, I am felled for being moved in this Article.

Cref. Oh if ever ye loved me, do one thing for me.

Brad. What is it?

Cref. Desire and name what My Learned man or men ye will have to come unto you. My Lord of York, my Lord of Lincoln, my Lord of Bath, and others will gladly come unto you.

Brad. No, never will I desire them, or any other, to come to confer with me; for I am as certain of my Doctrine as I am of any thing. But for your pleasure, and also that all men may know I am not allahed to have my Faith sifted and tried, bring whom ye will, and I will talk with them. So they went their way.

About three of the Clock in the Afternoon, Master Dr. Harding, who was then the Bp. of Lincolns Chaplain, came to Bradford, and after a great and solemn Protestation, shewing how that he had prayed to God before he came, to turn his talk to Bradford's good, he began to tell of the good opinion he had of Bradford, and spent the time in such tatling, so that their talk was to little purpose, save that Bradford prayed him to consider from whence he was fain, and not to follow the World, nor to love it: For the Love of God is not where the World is.

Harding. But Harding counted Bradford in a damnable estate, as one being out of the Church, and therefore willed him to take heed of his Soul, and not to dye in such an Opinion.

Brad. What Master Harding, quoth Bradford? I have heard you with these ears maintain this that I stand in.

Harding. I grant that I have taught that the Doctrine of Transubstantiation was a subtle Doctrine, but otherwise I never taught it. And so he inveighing against Mariages of Priests, and namely against Peter Martyr, Martin Bucer, Luther, and such, which for breaking their Vows were justly given up into Heresies (as he said.) Bradford seeing him altogether given up to Popery, after admonishment thereof, bade him farewell.

Talk between Dr. Harpsfield Archdeacon, and Mr. Bradford.

U Pon the 25. of February, Percival Crefwell came with Mr. Harpsfield Archdeacon of London, and a Servant waiting upon him. After formal Salutations

More charity amongst the Turks, than amongst the persecuting Papists.

Talk between Mr. Bradford and Willerton, Chaplain to Bp. Boner.

Willerton seeketh his writing to Bradford to prove Transubstantiation.

Willerton cometh again to Bradford.

Argument. Erunt docti a Deo: Ergo, The people must not have the Scriptures.

Mr. Bradford's Reason against Transubstantiation not answered.

Percival Crefwell talketh with Bradford.

Crefwell offereth to make suit for Bradford.

Dr. Harding cometh to Mr. Bradford.

Dr. Harding inveigheth against Peter Martyr, Martin Bucer, Luther, and such.

...which this is a short
the Jews, Turks, Jews, Ar-Christianity, as well as the Chri-one thinketh they shall attain to it by this Reli- To which Bradford answered brilliantly, that he did not far a mile.

Harpsf. Then said Harpsfield, But the way thither is not all alike: For the Infidels by Jupiter, Juno, the Turk by his Alcoran, the Jew by his Talmud, do believe to come to Heaven. For so may I speak of such as believe the Immortality of the Soul.

Brad. You speak truly.

Harpsf. Well, then here is the matter, to know the way to this Heaven:

Brad. We may not invent any manner of ways. There is but one way, and that is Jesus Christ, as he himself doth witness; I am the way.

Harpsf. It is true that you say, and false also. I suppose that you mean by Christ, believing in Christ.

Brad. I have learned to discern betwixt Faith and Christ. Albeit I confess, that who so believeth in Christ, the same shall be saved.

Harpsf. No, not all that believe in Christ; for some shall say, Lord, Lord, have we not cast out Devils &c.
But Christ will answer in the day of Judgment to these,
Depart from me, I know you not.

Brad. You must make difference betwixt believing, and saying I believe: As for example, If one should say and (wear he loveth you, for all his sayings, ye will not believe him when you see he goeth about to utter and do all the evil against you that he can.

Harpsf. Well, this is not much material. There is but one way, Christ. How come we to know him? Where shall we seek to find him?

Brad. Forsooth, we must seek him by his Word, and in his Word, and after his Word.

Harpsf. Very good: but tell me now how first we came into the company of them that could tell us this, but by word cometh Baptism.

Brad. Baptism is the Sacrament, by the which outwardly we are ingrafted into Christ: If say outwardly, because I dare not exclude from Christ all that dye without Baptism. I will not say God, where he is not bound. Some infants dye, whose Parents desire Baptism for them, and cannot have it.

Harpsf. To these we may think perchance that God will shew Mercy.

Brad. Yea, the Children whose Parents do condemn Baptism will not I condemn, because the Child shall not bear the Fathers offense.

Harpsf. Well, we agree, that by Baptism then we are brought, and (as a man would say) begotten to Christ.
For Christ is our Father, and the Church his Spouse is our Mother. As all men naturally have Adam for their Father, and Eve for their Mother; so all spiritual men have Christ for their Father, and the Church for their Mother: and as Eve was taken out of Adam's side, so was the Church taken out of Christ's side; whereout flowed blood for the satisfaction and purgation of our sins.

Brad. All this is truly spoken.

Harpsf. Now then tell me whether this Church of Christ hath not been always?

Brad. Yea, since the creation of man, and shall be for ever.

Harpsf. Very good. But yet tell me whether this Church is a visible Church, or no?

Brad. It is no otherwise visible, then Christ was here on Earth; that is, by no exterior pomp or shew that setteth her forth commonly, and therefore to see her we must put on such eyes, as good men put on to see and know Christ when he walked here on Earth: for as Eve was of the same Substance that Adam was of, so was the Church of the same Substance that Christ was of, Flesh of his flesh, and bone of his bone; as Paul saith, Ephes. 5.
Look therefore how Christ was visibly known to be Christ when he was on Earth, that is, by considering him after the Word of God, so is the Church known.

Harpsf. I do not come to reason at this present, and therefore I will go on forward. Is not this Church a multitude?

Brad. Yes that it is. Howbeit, Latet angui in herba, as the Proverb is. For in your Question is a subtilty.

What visible multitude was there in Helias time; or when Moses was on the Mount, Aaron and all Israel worshipping the Calf?

Harpsf. Ye divert from the matter.

Brad. No, nothing at all. For I do prevent you knowing well where about you go. And therefore fewer words might well serve if that you so would.

Harpsf. Well, I perceive you have knowledge, and by a little perceive I the more. Tell me yet more, whether this multitude have not the ministry or preaching of Gods Word?

Brad. Sir, ye go about the bush. If ye understand preaching for the confessing of the Gospel, I will go with you: for else if you will, you may know that perfection often letteth preaching.

Harpsf. Well, I mean it so. Tell me yet more: hath it not the Sacraments administered?

Brad. It hath the Sacraments, howbeit the administration of them is often letted. But I will put you from your purpose, because I see where about you go. If He-reticks have Baptism, and do baptize, as they did in S.
Cyprians time, you know this Baptism is Baptism, and not to be reiterate. This Bradford did speak, that the standards by might see, that though the Papists Church have Baptism which we have received of them, yet therefore it is not the true Church, neither need we to be baptized again.

Harpsf. You go far from the matter, and I perceive you have more Errors than one.

Brad. So you say, but that is not enough till you prove them.

Harpsf. Well, this Church is a multitude. Hath it not the preaching of the Gospel, and the ministration of the Sacraments? And yet more, hath it not the power of Jurisdiction?

Brad. What Jurisdiction is exercised in Perfection and Affliction.

Harpsf. I mean by Jurisdiction admonishing one another, and so forth.

Brad. Well, go to; what then?

Harpsf. It hath also Succession of Bishops. And here he made much ado to prove that this was an essential point.

Brad. You say as you would have it; for if this part fall you, all the Church that you go about to set up will fall down. You shall not find in all the Scripture this your essential part of Succession of Bishops. In Christ's Church Antichrist will sit. And Peter telleth us, as it went in the Old Church afore Christ's coming, so will it be in the New Church since Christ's coming: that is, as there were false Prophets, and such as bear rule were Adversaries to the true Prophets, so shall there be (saith he) false Teachers, even of such as are Bishops, and bear rule amongst the People.

Harpsf. You go always out of the matter: but I will prove further the Succession of Bishops.

Brad. Do so.

Harpsf. Tell me, were not the Apostles Bishops?

Brad. No, except you will make a new definition of a Bishop: that is, give him no certain place.

Harpsf. Indeed, the Apostles Office was not the Bishops Office: for it was universal, but yet Christ instituted Bishops in his Church, as Paul saith, he hath given Pastors, Prophets, &c. So that I trow it be proved by the Scriptures the Succession of Bishops to be an essential point.

Brad. The ministry of Gods Word and Ministers, be an essential point. But to translate this to the Bishops and their Succession, is a plain subtilty: And therefore that it may be plain, I will ask you a Question. Tell me whether that the Scripture knew any difference between Bishops and Ministers, which ye called Priests?

Harpsf. No.

Brad. Well, then go on forwards, and let us see what ye shall get now by the Succession of Bishops: that is, of Ministers which can be understood of such Bishops as minister not, but Lord it.

Harpsf. I perceive that you are far out of the way. By your Doctrine you can never shew in your Church, a multitude which ministrerth Gods Word and his Sacraments, which hath Jurisdiction and Succession of Bishops; which is Harpsf.

...time believed as you believe, beginning at the bottom, and going upwards, as I will do of our Lord's, and therefore are ye out of the Church, and cannot be saved. Perchance you will bring me some words a flew to bleed Peoples eyes; but to go upwards, that you can never do, and this is the true Word.

Brad. Ye must and will, I am assured, give me leave to follow the Scriptures and Examples of good men.

Harpsf. Yes.

Brad. Well then, Stephen was accused and condemned as I am, that he had taught new and false Doctrine, before the Fathers of the Church then as they were taken. Stephen for his Purgation improveth their Accusation. But how? doth he it by going upwards? no; but by coming downwards, beginning at Abraham, and continuing still to the present time, and the Peoples Captivity. From whence he maketh a great leap until the time he was in, which was (I think) upon 400. years, and called them by their right names, Hell-hounds, rather than Heaven-hounds. On this foil will I prove my Faith, and that can you never do yours.

The Papists challenge to this, the true Church, even as the Brother of the dead Child challenged the living Child from the true Mother. See Reg. 3.

Bradford's Prayer.

Harpsf. Yea Sir, if we did know that you had the Holy Ghost, then could we believe you. Here Bradford would have answered, that Stephens Enemies would not believe he had the Holy Ghost, and therefore they did as they did: but as he was in speaking, Mr. Harpsfield rose up, and the Keeper and others that stood by began to talk gently, praying Bradford to take heed to that Mr. Archdeacon spake, who still said that Bradford was out of the Church.

Brad. Sir, I am most certain that I am in Christs Church, and I can have a demonstration of my Religion from time to time continually.

God our Father, for the name and blood of his Christ be merciful unto us, and unto all his people, and deliver them from false Teachers, and blind Guides, through whom (alas) I fear me, much hurt will come to this Realm of England. God our Father bless us, and keep us in his Truth and poor Church for ever. Amen.

Then the Archdeacon departed, saying, that he would come again the next Morning.

The next days talk between Dr. Harpsfield and Mr. Bradford.

Upon the 16. of February in the Morning, the Archdeacon, and the other two with him, came again, and after a few by-words spoken, they sat down.

Archdeacon Harpsfield saith again to Mr. Bradford. At Harpsfield again proveth his Church by Succession of high Priests.

Harpsf. Mr. Archdeacon began a very long Oration, first repeating what they had said, and how far they had gone overnight, and therewith did begin to prove upwards Succession of Bishops here in England for 800 years: in France at Lyons for 1200 years: in Spain at Hispalen for 800 years: in Italy at Millam for 1200 years, labouring by this to prove his Church. He used all Succession of Bishops in the East Church for the more confirmation of his words, and so concluded with an Exhortation and an Interrogation: The Exhortation, that Bradford would obey this Church; the Interrogation, whether Bradford could shew any such Succession for the demonstration of his Church (for so he called it) which followed.

Bradford answers to Mr. Harpsfield.

Brad. Unto this his long Oration, Bradford made this short Answer; My memory is evil, so that I cannot answer particularly your Oration.

Outward defects of Multitudes maketh not the true Church; but the truth of Gods Word maketh true Ministers. The true Church not tied to Succession, but to Gods Word.

Therefore I will generally do it, thinking because your Oration is rather to persuade than to prove, that a small Answer will serve. If Christ or his Apostles, being here on Earth, had been required by the Prelates of the Church, then; to have made a demonstration of that Church by Succession of such high Priests as had approved the Doctrine which he taught, I think that Christ would have done as I do: that is, have alledged that which upholdeth the Church, even the Verity, the Word of God taught and believed, not by the high Priests, which of long time had persecuted it, but by the Prophets and other good simple men which perchance were counted for Heretics of the Church: which Church was not tied to Succession, but to the Word of God. And this to think S. Peter giveth me occasion, when he saith that as it went in the Church before Christs coming, so shall it go in the Church after his coming: but then the Pillars of the Church were Persecutors of the Church; therefore the like we must look for now.

Harpsf. I can gather and prove Succession in Jerusalem Anno of the high Priests from Aarons time.

Brad. I grant, but not such Succession as allowed the Truth.

Harpsf. Why, did they not allow Moses's Law.

Brad. Yes, and keep it, as touching the Books thereof, as you do the Bible, and holy Scriptures. But the true interpretation and meaning of it they did corrupt, as you have done and do, and therefore the Persecution which they stirred up against the Prophets and Christ, was not for the Law, but for the interpretation of it. For they taught as you do now, that we must fetch the interpretation of the Scriptures at your hands. But to make an end, death I look daily for, yea hourly, and I think my time be but very short. Therefore I had need to spend as much time with God as I can whilst I have it, for his help and comfort, and therefore I pray you bear with me, that I do not now particularly and in more words answer your long talk. If I saw death not so near me as it is, I would then weigh every piece of your Oration, if you would give me the sum of it, and I would answer accordingly: but because I dare not, nor I will not leave off looking and preparing for that which is at hand, I shall desire you to hold me excused, though I do as I do, and heartily thank you for your gentle good will: I shall heartily pray God our Father to give you the same light and life I do wish to my self; and so Bradford began to rise up.

Harpsf. But then began Mr. Archdeacon to tell him he was in very perilous case, and that he was sorry to see him so fettered. As for death, whether it be nigh or far off, I know not, neither forceth it, so that you did dye well.

Brad. I doubt not in this case but that I shall dye well: for as I hope and am certain my death shall please the Lord, so I trust I shall dye cheerfully to the comfort of his Children.

Harpsf. But what if you be deceived?

Brad. What if you should say the Sun did not shine now? (and the Sun did shine through the window where they fate.)

Harpsf. Well, I am sorry to see you so secure and careless.

Brad. Indeed I am more carnally secure and careless than I should be: God make me more vigilant. But in this case I cannot be so secure, for I am most assured I am in the Truth.

Harpsf. That ye are not; for you are out of the Catholic Church.

Brad. No, though you have Excommunicated me out of your Church, yet am I in the Catholic Church of Christ, and am, and by Gods Grace shall be a Child, and an obedient Child of it for ever. I hope Christ will have no less care for me, than he had for the blind man Excommunicated of the Synagogue: And further, I am sure that the necessary Articles of the Faith, I mean the twelve Articles of the Creed, I confess and believe with that which you call the holy Church, so that even your Church hath taken too much upon her to Excommunicate me for that, which by the testimony of my Lord of Durham, in the Book of the Sacrament lately put forth, was free many an hundred year after Christ, to believe or not believe.

Harpsf. What is that?

Brad. Transubstantiation.

Harpsf. Why: ye are not condemned therefore only.

Brad. For that, and because I deny that wicked men do receive Christs Body.

Harpsf. You agree not with us in the Presence, nor in any thing else.

Brad. How you believe you know: for my part I confess a Presence of whole Christ, God and Man, to the Faith of the Receiver.

Harpsf. Nay, you must believe a Real Presence in the Sacrament.

Brad. In the Sacrament? Nay, I will not shut him in, nor tye him to it otherwise than Faith seeth and perceiveth. If I should include Christ really present in the Sacrament, or tye him to it otherwise than to the Faith of the Receiver, then the wicked men should receive him, which I do not, nor will by Gods Grace believe.

Harpsf. More pity: But a man may easily perceive, you make no Presence at all, and therefore you agree not therewith us.

Brad.

The true Succession of Priests, and the Succession of the Jews. The Jew's corrupt the Law, as the Papists do the Scriptures. A comparison between the old Pharisees & our new Papists.

Bold confidence and hope of Gods Word and Promise, seemeth strange among them which are not exercised in meditation.

Free to believe or not to believe Transubstantiation many hundred years after Christ.

Christ not included really in the Sacrament.

Christ's Body not tye him to the Faith of the Receiver.

Anno 1555. Brad. I confesse a preſence, and a true preſence but to the Faith of the receiver.
What? quoth one that flood by) of Chriſts very Body which died for us?

Brad. Yea, even of whole Chriſt God and Man; to feed the Faith of him that receiveth it:

Harps. Why? this is nothing elſe but to exclude the Omnipotency of God, and all kind of miracle in the Sacrament.

Brad. I do not exclude his Omnipotency, but you do it rather: for I believe that Chriſt can accompliſh his promiſe, the ſubſtance of Bread and Wine being there, as well as the accidents, which you believe not. When we come to the Sacrament, we come not to feed our Bodies, and therefore we have but a little piece of Bread; but we come to feed our Souls with Chriſt by Faith, which the wicked do want, and therefore they receive nothing but panem Domini, as Judas did, and not panem Dominum, as the other Apoſtles did.

Harps. The wicked do receive the very Body of Chriſt, but not the Grace of his Body.

Brad. They receive not the Body. For Chriſts Body is no dead Carcaſs: he that receiveth it, receiveth the Spirit, which is not without Grace I throw.

Harps. Well, you have many errors. You count the Maſs for abomination, and yet Saint Ambroſe ſaid Maſs, and ſo he read out of a Book written a Sentence of S. Ambroſe to prove it.

Brad. Why Sir? the Maſs as it is now, was nothing ſo in S. Ambroſe time. Was not the moſt part of the Canon made ſince by Gregory and Scholasticus?

Harps. Indeed a great piece of it was made (as ye ſay) by Gregory: but Scholasticus was before S. Ambroſe time.

Brad. I ween not: howbeit I will not contend. Saint Gregory ſaith, that the Apoſtles ſaid Maſs without the Canon, only with the Lords Prayer.

Harps. You ſay true: for the Canon is not the greateſt part of the Maſs, the greateſt part is the Sacrifice, Elevation, Transubſtantiation, and Adoration.

Brad. I can away with none of thoſe.

Harps. No, I think the ſame: but yet Hoc facit, ſpeaketh plainly the Sacrifice of the Church.

Brad. You confound Sacrifices, not diſcerning betwixt the Sacrifice of the Church; and for the Church. The Sacrifice of the Church is no propitiatory Sacrifice, but a gratulatory Sacrifice. And as for Hoc facit, is not referred to any Sacrificing, but to the whole action of taking, eating, &c.

Harps. You ſpeak not learnedly now: for Chriſt made his Supper only to the twelve Apoſtles, not admitting his Mother or any of the ſeventy Diſciples to it. Now the Apoſtles do ſignifie the Priests.

Brad. I think that you ſpeak as you would Men ſhould underſtand it: for elſe you would not keep the Cup away from the Laity. We have great cauſe to thank you, that you will give us of your Bread. For I perceive you order the matter ſo, as though Chriſt had not commanded it to his whole Church.

Harps. Then Harpsfield would have proved Elevation by a place of Baſilius.

Brad. I have read the place; which ſeemeth to make nothing for elevation: but be it as it is, this is no time for me to ſcan the doubtful places of the Doctors with you. I have been in Priſon long without Books and all neceſſaries for ſtudy, and now death draweth nigh, and I by your leave muſt now leave off, to prepare for him.

Harps. If I could do you good, I would be right glad, either in Soul or Body. For you are in a perilous caſe both ways.

Brad. Sir, I thank you for your good will. My caſe is as it is. I thank God it was never ſo well with me; for Death to me ſhall be Life.

Crefwell. It were beſt for you to deſire Maſter Archdeacon that he would make ſute for you, that you might have a time to confer.

Harps. I will do the beſt I can: for I pity his caſe.
Brad. Sir, I will not deſire any Body to ſue for time for me. I am not wavering, neither would I that any Body ſhould think I were ſo. But if you have the Charity and love you pretend towards me, and thereto do think that I am in an error, I think the ſame ſhould move you to do as you would be done to. As ye think of me, ſo do I of you, that you are far out of the way, and I do not only think it, but alſo am thereof moſt aſſured. And in this and ſuch like gentle talk they departed.

Christian Bishops talking with M^r. Bradford in Priſon.

Two Spaniſh Friers, talking with M^r. Bradford?

The talk of Doctor Heath Archbiſhop of York, and Day Biſhop of Chicheſter, with Maſter Bradford.

The three and twentieth of the ſame Month, the talk between the Archbiſhop of York, and the Biſhop of Chicheſter, came to the Counter to ſpeak with Bradford. When he was Anno 1555. Chib. Ah Mr. Bradford, you were but a Child when this matter began. I was a young man, and then coming from the University, I went with the World, but I tell you it was always against my Conscience.

Brad. I was but a Child then, howbeit as I told you, I think you have done evil. For ye are come, and have brought others to that wicked man which sitteth in the Temple of God, that is, in the Church: for it cannot be understood of Mahomet, or any out of the Church, but of such as bear rule in the Church.

Tork. See how you build your Faith upon such places of Scripture as are most obscure, to deceive your self, as though ye were in the Church where you are not.

Brad. Well, my Lord, though I might by fruits judge of you and others, yet will I not utterly exclude you out of the Church. And if I were in your case, I would not condemn him utterly that is of my Faith in the Sacrament; knowing as you know, that at the least eight hundred years after Christ, as my Lord of Duresm writeth, it was free to believe or not to believe Transubstantiation.

Tork. This is a toy that you have found out of your own brain; as though a man not believing as the Church doth, that is, Transubstantiation, were of the Church.

Chib. He is an Heretic, and so none of the Church, that doth hold any Doctrine against the definition of the Church, as a man to hold against Transubstantiation. Cyprian was no Heretic, though he believed rebaptizing of them which were baptized of Heretics, whereas if he held it before the Church had defined it, whereas if he held it after, then had he been an Heretic.

Brad. Oh my Lord, will ye condemn to the Devil a man that believeth truly the twelve Articles of the Faith (wherein I take the Unity of Christs Church to consist) although in some points he believe not the definition of that which ye call the Church? I doubt not but that he which holdeth firmly the Articles of our Belief, though in other things he differ from your definitions, yet he shall be saved.

Tork. Chib. Yes, said both the Bishops? this is your Divinity.

Brad. No, it is Paul's; which faith, that if they hold the Foundation, Christ, though they build upon him straw and stubble, yet they shall be saved.

Tork. Lord God, how you delight to lean to so hard and dark places of the Scriptures.

Chib. I will shew you how that Luther did Excommunicate Zuinglius for this matter, and so he read a place of Luther making for his purpose.

Brad. My Lord, what Luther writeth, as you much pass not, no more do I in this case. My Faith is not builded on Luther, Zuinglius, or Oecolampadius in this point; and indeed to tell you truly, I never read any of their Works in this matter. As for them, I do think assuredly that they were, and are Gods Children, and Saints with him.

Tork. Well, you are out of the Communion of the Church.

Brad. I am not, for it consisteth, and is in Faith.

Tork. Lo, how you make your Church invisible; for you would have the Communion of it to consist in Faith.

Brad. For to have Communion with the Church needeth no visibility of it; for Communion consisteth, as I said, in Faith, and not in exterior Ceremonies. Disagreement in Rates breaketh not agreement in Faith.

Chib. The same place hath often even wounded my Conscience, because we differed our selves from the See of Rome.

Brad. Well, God forgive you; for you have done evil to bring England thither again.

Tork. Here my Lord of York took a Book of Papers of Common Places, and read a piece of S. Augustine contra Epistolam Fundamenti, how that there were many things that did hold S. Austin in the bosom of the Church; consent of People and Nations, Authority confirmed with Miracles, nourished with Hope, increased with Charity, established with Antiquity: besides this, there holdeth me in the Church, said S. Augustine, the consent of Priests from Peters Seat until this present Bishop. Last of all, the very name of Catholic did hold me, &c. Lo (quoth he) how say you to this of S. Augustines Point me out your Church thus.

Brad. My Lord, these words of St. Augustine make as much for me as for you: although I might answer, that all this if they had been so firm as you make them, might have been alleged against Christ and his Apostles. For there was the Law and the Ceremonies consented on by the whole People, confirmed with Miracles, Antiquity, and continual Succession of Bishops from Aarons time until that present.

Chib. In good faith, Mr. Bradford, you make too much of the state of the Church before Christs coming.

Brad. Therein I do but as Peter teacheth, 2 Pet. 2. and Paul very often. You would gladly have your Church here very glorious, and as a most pleasant Lady. But as Christ faith, Beatus est qui cruciatur, non furit offensus per me; so may his Church say, Blessed are they that are not offended at me.

Tork. Yea, you think that none is of the Church, but such as suffer Persecution.

Brad. What I think, God knoweth: I pray your Grace judge me by my words and speaking, and mark what Paul faith, Omnes qui, &c. All that will live godly in this world, but specially in Christs Church, must suffer Persecution. Sometimes Christs Church hath rest here; but commonly it is not so, and specially towards the end her form will be more uniformly.

Tork. But what say you to S. Austin? where is your Church that hath the consent of People and Nations?

Brad. Even all People and Nations that be Gods People have consented with me, and I with them in the Doctrine of Faith.

Tork. Lo, ye go about to shift off all things.

Brad. No, my Lord; I mean simply, and so speak, God knoweth.

Tork. S. Augustine doth here talk of Succession, even Succession from Peters Seat.

Brad. Yea, that Seat then was nothing so much corrupt as it is now.

Tork. Well, you always judge the Church.

Brad. No, my Lord, Christs sheep discern Christs voice, but they judge it not; so they discern the Church, but judge her not.

Tork. Yes, that they do.

Brad. No, and it like your Grace: and yet full well may one not only doubt, but judge also of the Romish Church; for the obeyeth not Christs voice, as Christs true Church doth.

Tork. Wherein?

Brad. In Latin Service, and robbing the Laity of Christs Cup in the Sacrament, and in many other things, in which it committeth most horrible Sacrilege.

Chib. Why? Latin Service was in England when the Pope was gone.

Brad. True; the time was in England when the Pope was away, but not all Popery; as in K. Henry's days.

Tork. Latin Service was appointed to be sung and had in the Quire, where only were Clergy, that is, such as understood Latin, the People sitting in the Body of the Church praying their own private Prayers; and this may well be yet seen by making of the Chancel and Quire, so as the People could not come in, or hear them.

Brad. Yea, but in Chrysostoms time, and also in the Latin Church in S. Jeroms time, all the Church (with he) reboate, Amen: that is, answereth again mightily, Amen. Whereby we may see that the Prayers were made, so that both the People heard them and understood them.

Chib. Ye are too blame, to say that the Church rob both the People of the Cup.

Brad. Well, my Lord, term it as it please you: all men know that the Laity hath none of it.

Chib. Indeed I would wish the Church would define again, that they might have it, for my part.

Brad. If God make it free, who can leave to make it bond?

Tork. Well, Mr. Bradford, we need our labour; for ye seek to put away all things which are told you to your good: your Church no man can know.

Brad. Yes, that ye may well.

Tork.

What B. Transubstantiation.

None how these Bishops themselves do grant that this was when Transubstantiation was not defined by the Church, Tork faith that it was more then too years after Christ.

Mr. Bradford saith that he is not builded on Luther, &c. and yet he accounteth them good men.

Communion of the Church consisteth in Faith, and not in visible Ceremonies. Disagreement in Rates breaketh not agreement in Faith. Tork. Yea, but in Chrysostoms time, and also in the Latin Church in S. Jeroms time, all the Church (with he) reboate, Amen: that is, answereth again mightily, Amen. Whereby we may see that the Prayers were made, so that both the People heard them and understood them.

The People robbed of the Cup.

The Church known only by the Scriptures. Chrysostom in opere imperfecta.

Lyra Supra Mat.

Hilarius ad Augustinum

The coming of two Spanish Friars to Master Bradford.

The talk between certain Friars and M. Bradford.

This Alphonsus had written a Book before in Latin against Heretics.

Bradford would pray, and teach his prayer.

No Man ought to be in doubt of his Religion.

York. I pray you whereby?

Brad. Forsooth Chrysostom saith, Tantummodo per Scripturas, alone by the Scriptures; and this speaketh he very oftentimes, as ye well know.

York. Indeed that is of Chrysostom in opere imperfecta, which may be doubted of. The thing whereby the Church may be known best, is succession of Bishops.

Bradford No, my Lord, Lyra full well writeth upon Matthew, that Ecclesia non consistit in hominibus ratione possitatis Secularis aut Ecclesiastica, sed in hominibus in quibus est notitia vera, & confessio fidei & veritatis: that is, The Church consisteth not in Men by reason either of Secular or Temporal Power, but in Men induced with true knowledge, and confession of Faith, and of verity.

And in Hilarius time, you know he writeth to Augustinus, that the Church did rather desistere in cavernis, then emittere in primariis sedibus: that is, was hidden rather in Caves and Holes, then did glitter and shine in Thrones of preminence.

Then came one of the Servants and told them, that my Lord of Duresm tarried for them at Master Yorks Houise; and this was after that they had tarried three hours with Bradford. And after that their Man was come they put up their written Books of common places, and said that they lamented his case: they willed him to read over a Book which did D. Cromme good; and so withing him good in words, they went their way, and poor Bradford to his Prison.

After this Communication with the Bishops ended, within two days following came into the Counter two Spanish Friars to talk with Master Bradford, sent (as they said) by the Earl of Derby; of whom the one was the Kings Confessor, the other was Alphonsus, who had before written a Popish Book against Heretics, the effect of which their reasoning here likewise followeth.

Talk between Master Bradford and two Spanish Friars.

U Pon the five and twentieth day of February, about eight of the Clock in the Morning, two Spanish Friars came to the Counter where Bradford was Prisoner; to whom Bradford was called. Then the one Friar, which was the Kings Confessor, asked in Latin (for all their talk was in Latin) of Bradford, whether he had not seen or heard of one Alphonsus that had written against Heretics?

Brad. I do not know him.

Confes. Well, this Man (pointing to Alphonsus) is he, We are come to you of Love and Charity, by the means of the Earl of Derby, because you desire to confer with us.

Brad. I never desired your coming, nor to confer with you, or any other. But seeing you are come of Charity, as you say, I cannot but thank you: and as touching conference, though I desire it not, yet I will not refuse to talk with you if you will.

Alphon. It were requisite that you did pray unto God, that ye might follow the direction of Gods Spirit, that he would inspire you, so that ye be not addit to your own self-will or wit.

Brad. Whereupon Bradford made a prayer, and besought God to direct all their wills, words, and works, as the wills, words, and works of his Children for ever.

Alph. Ye, you must pray with your Heart. For if you speak but with Tongue only, God will not give you his grace.

Brad. Sir, do not judge, lest ye be judged. You have heard my words, now Charity would have you leave the Judgment of the Heart to God.

Alph. You must be as it were a neuter, and not wedded to your self, but as one standing in doubt: pray and be ready to receive what God shall inspire; for in vain labour we our Tongue to speak etc.

Brad. Sir, my Sentence, if you mean it for Religion, must not be in a doubting or uncertain, as I thank God I am certain in that for which I am Condemned: I have no cause to doubt of it, but rather to be more certain of it; and therefore I pray God to confirm me more in it. For it is his truth, and because it is so certain and true that it may abide the light, I dare be bold to have it Anno looked on, and confer it with you, or any Man; in respect whereof I am both glad of your coming, and thank you for it.

Alph. What is the matter whereof you were condemned? we know not.

Brad. Sir, I have been in Prison almost two years: I never transgressed any of their Laws wherefore I might justly be Prisoned, and now am I Condemned, only because I frankly confessed, whereof I repent not, my Faith concerning the Sacrament, when I was demanded in these two points: one, that there is no Transubstantiation, the other, that the wicked do not receive Christs Body.

Alph. Let us look a little on the first. Do you not believe that Christ is present really, and corporally in the form of Bread?

Brad. No, I do believe that Christ is present to the Faith of the worthy receiver, as there is present Bread and Wine to the senses and outward Man: as for any such preference of including and placing Christ, I believe not, nor dare believe.

Alph. I am sure you believe Christs Natural Body is circumscribable. And here he made much ado of the two Natures of Christ, how that the one is every where, and the other is in his proper place, demanding such questions as no wise Man would have spent any time about. At length because the Friar had forgotten to conclude, Bradford put him in mind of it, and thus then at length he concluded. How that because Christs Body was circumscribable, concerning the Humane Nature in Heaven, therefore it was so in the Bread.

Brad. How hangeth this together? Even as if you should say; because you are here, Ergo, it must needs follow that you are at Rome. For thus you reason; Because Christs Body is in Heaven: Ergo, it is in the Sacrament under the form of Bread: which no wise Man will grant.

Alph. Why? will you believe nothing but that which is expressly spoken in the Scriptures?

Brad. Yes Sir, I will believe whatsoever you shall by demonstration out of the Scriptures declare unto me.

Alph. He is obinate, quoth Alphonsus to his fellow: and then turning to Bradford, said, Is not God able to do it?

Brad. Yes, but here the question is of Gods will, and not of his power.

Alph. Why? doth he not say plainly, This is my Body?

Brad. Yes, and I deny not but that it is so, to the Faith of the worthy receiver.

Alph. To the Faith? how is that?

Brad. Forsooth Sir, as I have no Tongue to express it: so I know ye have no ears to hear and understand it. For Faith is more than Man can utter.

Alph. But I can tell all that I believe.

Brad. You believe not much then. For if you believe the joyes of Heaven, and believe no more thereof then you can tell, you will not yet desire to come thither. For as the mind is more capable and receivable then the mouth, so it conceiveth more then Tongue can express.

Alph. Christ saith it is his Body.

Brad. And so say I, after a certain manner.

Alph. After a certain manner? that is, after another manner then it is in Heaven.

Brad. Saint Augustine telleth it more plainly, that it is Quodammodo ad Augustinum Episcopum ad Bonifacium. Christs Body after the same manner as Circumcision was the Covenant of God, and the Sacrament of Faith is Faith; or to make it more plain, as Baptism and the Water of Baptism is Regeneration.

Alph. Very well said, Baptism and the Water thereof is a Sacrament of Gods Grace and Spirit in the Water cleaning the Baptized.

Brad. No Sir, away with your enclosing: but this I grant, that after the same sort Christs Body is in the Bread, on which sort the Grace and Spirit of God is in the Water.

Alph. In Water is Gods Grace by signification.

Brad. So is the Body in the Bread in the Sacrament.

Alph. You are much deceived, in that you make no difference between the Sacraments that be standers, and the Sacraments that are transitory and passers by. As for

The cause why M. Bradford was Condemned.

Christ is present to the Faith of the worthy receiver.

A Spanish Argument. Christs Body is circumscribable in Heaven. Ergo, Christs body is circumscribable in Bread.

Christ is able to do he doth it.

How can corporeus mensura.

Argument. As Grace is in the Water of Baptism: so is the Body in the Sacrament.

Ergo, so is the Body in the Sacrament.

A Popish distinction of Sacraments.

Ex.

Example, the Sacrament of Orders, which you deny, though S. Augustine affirm it, it is a slander, although the Ceremony be past. But in Baptism so soon as the Body is washed, the Water ceaseth to be a Sacrament.

Brad. Very good, and so it is in the Supper of the Lord: no longer then it is in use, is it Christs Sacrament.

Here was the Frier in a wonderful rage, and spake so high (as often he had done before) that the whole House rang again, chafing with em and cho. He hath a great name of learning, but surely he hath little patience. For if Bradford had been any thing hot, one House could not have held them. At the length he cometh to this point, that Bradford could not find in the Scripture Baptism and the Lords Supper to bear any similitude together. And here he triumphed before the conquest, saying, that these Men would receive nothing but Scripture, and yet were able to prove nothing by the Scripture.

Brad. Be patient, and you shall see that by the Scripture I will find Baptism and the Lords Supper coupled together.

Alph. No, that canst thou never do. Let me see a text of it.

Brad. Paul saith; That as we are Baptized into one Body, so were we potati in uno spiritu, i. we have drunk of one Spirit, meaning the Cup in the Lords Supper.

Alph. Paul hath no such words.

Brad. Yes that he hath.

Confes. I trow he hath not.

Brad. Give me a Testament, and I will shew you.

So a Priest that fate by them gave him his Testament, and he shewed them the plain Text. Then they looked one upon another. In fine the Frier found this simple shift, that Paul spake not of the Sacrament.

Brad. Well, the Text is plain enough, and there are of the Fathers which do so understand the place: For Chrysostom doth expound it so.

Alph. Alphonsus which had the Testament in his hand, desirous to suppress this foil, turned the Leaves of the Book from Leaf to Leaf, till he came to the place, 1 Cor. 11 and there he read how that he was guilty, which made no difference of the Lords Body.

Brad. Yea, but therewith he saith, He that eateth of the Bread: calling it Bread still, and that after Consecration (as ye call it) as in the tenth of the Corinthians he saith; The Bread which we break, &c.

Alph. Oh how ignorant are ye, which know not that things after their Conversion do retain the same Names which they had before, as Moses Rod: and calling for a Bible, after he had found the place, he began to triumph: But Bradford cooled him quickly, saying,

Brad. Sir, there is mention made of the Conversion, as well as that the same appeared to the sense. But here ye cannot find it so. Find me one word how the Bread is converted, and I will then say, ye bring some matter that maketh for you.

Alph. At these words the Frier was troubled, and at length he said, how that Bradford hanged on his own sense.

Brad. No that do I not; for I will bring you forth the Fathers of the Church 800. years after Christ, to confirm this which I speak.

Alph. No, you have the Church against you.

Brad. I have not Christs Church against me.

Alph. Yes that you have. What is the Church?

Brad. Christs Wife, the Chair and Seat of verity.

Alph. Is the visible?

Brad. Yea that she is to them that will put on the Spectacles of Gods Word to look on her.

Alph. This Church hath defined the contrary, and that I will prove by all the good Fathers from Christs Ascension, even for 800. years at the least continually.

Brad. What will you so prove? Transubstantiation?

Alph. Yea, that the Bread is turned into Christs Body.

Brad. You speak more then you can do.

Alph. That do I not.

Brad. Then will I give place.

Alph. Will you believe?

Brad. Belief is Gods gift; therefore cannot I promise: but I tell you that I will give place; and I hope I shall believe his truth always, so good is he to me in Christ my Saviour.

Alph. Here the Frier found a great fault with Bradford, that he made no difference betwixt Habitus and Actus; as though Actus, which he called credulity, had been in our power. But this he let pass, and came again asking Bradford, if he could prove it as he said, whether he would give place?

Brad. Yea that I will. Then called he for Paper, Pen, and Ink, to write; and then said I, What and if that I prove by the Testimony of the Fathers, that continually for 800. years after Christ, at the least, they did believe that the substance of Bread doth remain in the Sacrament? what will ye do?

Alph. I will give place.

Brad. Then write you here that you will give place if I so prove, and I will write that I will give place if you so prove: because ye are the ancient, ye shall have the Preheminency.

Here the Frier fumed marvellously, and said; I came not to learn at thee: Are not here witnesses? (meaning the Priests) be not they sufficient? But the Man was so chafed, that if Bradford had not passed over this matter of writing, the Frier would have slain to plain folding.

Confes. At the length the Kings Confessor asked Bradford what the second question was?

Brad. That wicked Men receive not Christs Body in the Sacrament, as S. Augustine speaketh of Judas, that he received Panem Domini, but not Panem Dominum.

Alph. Saint Augustine saith not so.

Brad. Yes that doth he. So they arose and talked no more of the matter. Thus went they away, without bidding Bradford farewell.

A Priest. After they were gone one of the Priests came, and willed Bradford not to be so obstinate.

Brad. Sir be not you so wavering; in all the Scripture cannot you find me, non est panis.

Priest. Yes that I can in five places.

Brad. Then I will eat your Book. So the Book was opened, but no place found; and he went his way smiling. God help us.

Talk between Master Bradford and Doctor Weston, and others.

IT followed after this, upon the twenty one of the Month of March, that by means of one of the Earl of Derby's Men, there came to the Counter to dinner one M. Collier, once Warden of Manchester, and the said Servant of the Earl of Derby, of whom M. Bradford learned that Doctor Weston Dean of Westminster would be with him in the afternoon about Two of the Clock. At Dinner time, when the said Warden did commend King Edward, and went about to set forth the Authority of the Pope, which Bradford withstood, defending the Kings Faith, that it was Catholic, and that the Authority of the Bishop of Rome Supremacy was usurped, bringing forth the Testimony of Gregory, which affirmed the name of supreme head, to be a Title of the forerunner to Antichrist. A Woman Prisoner was brought in, whereupon the said Bradford took occasion to rise from the Table, and so went to his Prison-Chamber to beg of God Grace, and help therein, continuing there still untill he was called down to speak with Master Weston, which was then come in.

Mr. Bradford then being called down, so soon as he was entered into the Hall, Master Weston very gently took him by the hand, and asked how he did, with such other talk. At length he willed avoidance of the Chamber: So they all went out, save Master Weston himself, Master Collier, the Earl of Derby's Servant, the Subden of Westminster, the Keeper, Mr. Claydon, and the Parson of the Church where the Counter is.

Now when he began with Master Bradford, to tell how that he was often minded to have come unto him, being thereto desired of the Earl of Derby: and (quoth he) after that I perceived by this Man, that you could be contented rather to speak with me, than any other: I could not but come to do you good, if I cannot hurt you be sure I will not.

Brad. Sir, quoth Mr. Bradford, when I perceived by the report of my Lords Servant, that you did bear me good will: more (as he said) then any other of your fort,

The Priests hold that the Act of believing is in Mans Power.

The Frier saith to him to abide Tryal with Bradford.

Conversion is mentioned in turning. Moses Rod, so it is not in the Sacrament. Moses Rod was seen to be turned, so is not the Sacrament.

The Church is visible, but to them that have Spiritual Eyes.

I told him then, that therefore I could be better content and more willing to talk with you, if you should come unto me. This did I say, quoth he, otherwise I desired not your coming.

West. Well, quoth he; now I am come to talk with you: but before we shall enter into any talk, certain principles we must agree upon, which shall be this days work.

First, quoth he, I shall desire you to put away all vain glory, and not hold any thing for the praise of the World.

Brad. Sir, S. Augustine maketh that indeed a piece of the definition of an Heretick; which if I cannot put away clean (for I think there will a spice of it remain in us, as long as this flesh liveth) yet I promise you by the Grace of God, that I purpose not to yield to it. God I hope will never suffer it to bear rule in them that strive there against, and desire all the dregs of it utterly to be driven out of us.

West. I am glad to hear you say so although indeed I think you do not so much esteem it as others do.

Singularity.

Secondly, I would desire you that you will put away singularity in your Judgment and Opinions.

Brad. Sir, God forbid that I should stick to my singularity or private Judgment in Gods Religion. Hitherto I have not desired it, neither do, nor mind at any time to hold any other Doctrine than is publick and Catholick, understanding Catholick as good Men do; according to Gods Word.

West. Very well, this is a good days work, I hope to do you good; and therefore now thirdly I shall pray you to write me Capita of those things whereupon you stand in the Sacrament, and to send them to me betwixt this and Wednesday next: untill which time, yes, untill I come to you again, be assured that you are without all peril of death. Of my fidelity, I warrant you, therefore away with all dubitations, &c.

Weston will-instruct Brad- ford to put down in writing the chief grounds of his Faith.

Brad. Sir, I will write to you the grounds I lean to in this matter. As for death, if it come, welcome be it; this which you require of me, shall be no great let to me therein.

West. You know that Saint Augustine was a Manichean, yet was he converted at the length; so have I good hope of you.

Brad. Sir, because I will not flatter you, I would you should flatly know, that I am even settled in the Religion, wherefore I am condemned.

West. Yea, but if it be not the truth, and you see evident matter to the contrary, will you not then give place?

Brad. God forbid, but that I should always give place to the Truth.

West. I would have you to pray so.

Brad. So I do, and that he will more and more confirm me in it, as I thank God he hath done and doth.

West. Yea but pray with a Condition, if you be in it.

Brad. No Sir, I cannot pray so, because I am settled and assured of his truth.

West. Well, quoth Weston, as the learned Bishop answered S. Augustine Mother, that though he was obstinate, yet the Tears of such a Mother could not but win her Son: so, quoth he, I hope your Prayers (for then Bradford eyes did show that he had wept in Prayer) cannot but be heard of God, though not as you would, yet as best shall please God. Do ye not, quoth he, remember the History thereof?

Brad. Yea Sir, quoth Bradford, I think it be of St. Ambrose.

West. No, that it is not. And here Weston would have laid a wager, and began to triumph, saying to Bradford, as you are overseen herein, so are you in other things.

Brad. Well, Sir, I will not contend with you for the name. This (I remember) S. Augustine writeth in his Confessions.

After this talk Weston began to tell Master Bradford, how the People were by him procured to withstand the Queen.

M. Bradford
wrongfully charged with Sedition.

Whereunto Bradford answering again, bade him hang him up as a Traytor and a Thief, if ever he encouraged any to Rebellion: which thing his Keeper, and others that were there of the Priests, affirmed on his behalf. So much talk there was to little purpose at that time. D. Weston declared moreover how he had saved Men going in the Anno Cart to be hanged, and such like.

The end was this, that Bradford should send unto him, Capita doctrine of the Supper, and after Wednesday he would come unto him again, and thus departed he, after that he had drunk to him in Beer and Wine. I omit here talk of Oxford, of Books of Germany writers, of the fear of death, and such other talk, which are to no purpose.

Another disputation or talk between Master Bradford and Doctor Pendleton.

In the mean time, when Master Bradford had written his Reasons and Arguments, and had sent them to Doctor Weston, in short space after, about the 28. of March, there came to the Countess Doctor Pendleton, and with him the forefard Mr. Collier, sometime Warden of Manchester, and Stephen Bach. After salutations Master Pendleton began to speak to Bradford, that he was sorry for his trouble. And further (quoth he) after that I did know you could be content to talk with me, I made the more speed, being as ready to do you good, and pleasure you what I can, as ye would wish.

Brad. Sir, the manner how I was content to speak with you, was on this sort: Master Bach was often in hand with me whom he should bring unto me, and named you amongst other: and I said that I had rather speak with you then with any of all the other. Now the cause why I so would, I will briefly tell you. I remember that once you were (as far as a Man might judge) of the Religion that I am of at this present, and I remember that you have set forth the same earnestly. Gladly therefore would I learn of you what thing it was that moved your Confidence to alter, and gladly would see what thing it is that you have seen since, which you saw not before.

Pendleton. Master Bradford, I do not know wherefore you are condemned.

Brad. Transubstantiation is the cause wherefore I am Condemned, and because I deny that wicked Men do receive Christs Body: wherein I would desire you to shew me what reasons, which before you knew not, did move your Confidence now to alter. For once (as I said) you were as I am in Religion.

Here Master Pendleton half amazed, began to excuse himself, if it would have been, as though he had not denied fully Transubstantiation indeed, although I said, quoth he, that the word was not in Scripture, and so he made an endless tale of the thing that moved him to alter: but (said he) I will gather to you the places which moved me, and send you them. And here he desired Bradford that he might have a Copy of that which he had sent to Mr. Weston, the which Bradford did promise him.

Some reasoning also they had, whether evil Men did receive Christs Body, Bradford denying, and Pendleton affirming. Bradford said that they received not the Spirit: Ergo, not the Body; for it is no dead Carcass. Hereto Bradford brought also Saint Augustine, how Judas received Panem Domini, and not Panem Dominum, and how that he must be in Christs Body, which must receive the Body of Christ. But Pendleton went about to put it away with idem, and not ad idem, and how that in Corpore Christi was to be understood of all that be in the visible Church with Gods elect. Bradford denied this to be Saint Augustine meaning, and said also that the allegation of idem, and not ad idem, could not make for that purpose. They talked more of Transubstantiation, Pendleton bringing forth Cyprian; Panis natura minatur, &c. And Bradford said, that in that place natura did not signifie substance. As the nature of an Herb is not the substance of it; so the Bread changed in nature is not to be taken for changed in substance: For now it is ordained not for the food of the Body simply, but rather for the Soul. Here also Bradford alleged the Sentence of Gelasius. Pendleton said, that he was a Pope. Yea, said Bradford, but his Faith is my Faith in the Sacrament, if ye would receive it.

They reasoned also whether accidentia were Res, or no. If they be properly Res, said Bradford, then are they substances; & if they be substances, they are earthly, and then are there earthly Substances in the Sacrament, as Irenaeus saith, which must needs be Bread. But Pendleton saith that the

I omit the talk they had of my Lord of Canterbury, of Peter Martyr's Book, of Pendleton's Letter laid to Bradford's charge when he was Condemned, with other talk more of the Church; whether Dic Ecclesie was spoken of the Universal Church, or of a particular (which Pendleton at the length granted to be spoken of a particular Church) also of vain glory, which he willed Bradford to beware of, and such like talk. A little before his departing Bradford said thus, Master Doctor, as I said to Master Weston the last day, so say I unto you again, that I am the same Man in Religion against Transubstantiation still, which I was when I came into Prison; for hitherto I have seen nothing in any point to inform me: At which words Pendleton was something moved, and said that it was no Catholic Doctrine. Yes, quoth Bradford, and that will I prove even by the Testimony of the Catholic Fathers until Councilum Lateranense, or thereabout. Thus Pendleton went his way, saying, that he would come often to Bradford, God our Father be with us all, and give us the Spirit of his Truth for ever. Amen.

The same day in the afternoon, about five of the Clock, came M. Weston to Bradford; and after gentle Salutations, he desired the company every Man to depart, and for they two sat down. And after that he had thanked Bradford for his writing unto him, he pulled out of his Bosom the same writing which Bradford had sent him. The writing is this that followeth.

Certain reasons against Transubstantiation, gathered by John Bradford, and given to D. Weston and others.

That which is former (saith Tertullian) is true; that which is later is false. But the Doctrine of Transubstantiation is a late Doctrine: for it was not defined generally afore the Council of Lateran, about 1215 years after Christ's coming, under Pope Innocentius the third of that name. For before that time it was free for all Men to believe it, or not believe it as the Bishop of Durham doth the witness in his Book of Presence of Christ in his Supper lately put forth: Ergo, the Doctrine of Transubstantiation is false.

2. That the Words of Christ's Supper be figurative the Circumstances of the Scripture, the Analogy or proportion of the Sacraments, and the Sentences of all the Holy Fathers, which were and did write for the space of 1000 years after Christ's Ascension, do teach: whereupon it followeth, that there was no Transubstantiation.

3. That the Lord gave to his Disciples Bread, and called it his Body, the Scriptures do witness. For he gave that, and called it his Body, which he took in his hands, whereon he gave thanks, which also he brake, and gave to his Disciples, that is to say, Bread, as the Fathers Irenaeus, Tertullian, Origen, Cyprian, Epiphanius, Augustine, and all the residue which are of Antiquity, do affirm: but in as much as the Substance of Bread and Wine is another thing than the Substance of the Body and Blood of Christ, it plainly appeareth that there is no Transubstantiation.

4. The Bread is no more Transubstantiated than the Wine: but that the Wine is not Transubstantiated, Saint Matthew and Saint Mark do teach us: for they witness, that Christ said that he would drink no more of the fruit of the Vine, which was not Blood, but Wine: and therefore it followeth, that there is no Transubstantiation. Chrysostom upon Matthew, and Saint Cyprian, do affirm this reason.

5. As the Bread in the Lords Supper is Christ's Natural Body, so is his Mystical Body: for the same Spirit that spake of it, This is my Body, did say also, For we many are one Bread, one Body, &c. but now it is not the Mystical Body by Transubstantiation, and therefore it is, not his Natural Body by Transubstantiation.

6. The words spoken over the Cup in Saints Luke and Paul, are not so mighty and effectual, as to Transubstantiate it: for then it, or that which is in it, should be Transubstantiated into the New Testament: therefore the words spoken over the Bread, are not so mighty as to make Transubstantiation.

7. All that Doctrine which agreeth with those Churches which be Apostolic Mother Churches, or Original Churches, is to be counted for truth, in that is holdeth that which these Churches received of the Apostles, the Apostles of Christ, Christ of GOD. But it is manifest, that the Doctrine taught at this present of the Church of Rome, concerning Transubstantiation, doth not agree with the Apostolic and Mother Churches in Greece, of Corinth, of Philippos, Colossia, Thellalonica, Ephesus, which never taught Transubstantiation; yet it agreeth not with the Doctrine of the Church of Rome taught in time past. For Gelasius the Pope, sitting forth the Doctrine which that See did then hold, doth manifestly confute the error of Transubstantiation, and reproveth them of Sacrilege, which divided the Mystery, and keep from the Laity the Cup, therefore the Doctrine of Transubstantiation agreeth not with the Truth.

This was the writing which Weston pulled out of his Bosom: and yet before he began to read it, he shewed Bradford that he asked of his Conversation at Cambridge since his last being with him, and, quoth he, M. Bradford, because you are a Man not given to the glory of the World, I will speak it before your face: Your Life I have learned was such there always as all men, even the greatest enemies you have, cannot but praise it, and therefore I love you much better than ever I did: but now I will read over your Arguments, and so we will confer them. Such they are, that a Man may well perceive you stand on Conscience, and therefore I am the more ready and glad to pity you. So he began to read the first; to the which he said, that though the word Transubstantiation began but lately, yet the thing always was, and hath been since Christ's Institution.

Brad. I do not contend, or hang upon the word only, but upon the thing which is as new as the word.

West. Then went he to the second, and there brought out Saint Augustine, how that if an evil Man going to the Devil, did make his Will, his Son and Heir would not say his Father did lye in it, or speak tropically: much more Christ, going to God, did never lye, or use any figurative speech in his last Will and Testament. Do you not remember this place of Saint Augustine, said he?

Brad. Yea Sir, but I remember not that S. Augustine hath those words tropic or figurative, as you rehearse them: for any Man may speak a thing figuratively, and not lye: and so Christ did in his last supper.

West. After this he went to the third, and brought forth Cyprian, how that the Nature of Bread is turned into Flesh. Here (saith he) of my Lord Canterbury expounded Nature for Quality, by Gelasius. The which interpretation serveth for the answer of your Argument, that Christ called Bread his Body: that is, the quality, form, and appearance of Bread. And further the Scripture is wont to call things by the same Names which they had before, as Symon the Leper, he was not so presently, but because he had been so.

Brad. Cyprian wrote before Gelasius: therefore Cyprian must not expound Gelasius, but Gelasius Cyprian: and so they both teach, that Bread remaineth still. As for things having still the Names they had, is no answer, except you could shew that this now were not Bread, as easily as a Man might have known and seen then Symon to have been healed and clear from his Leprosie.

West. After this he went to the fourth, of the Cup, the which he did not fully read, but digressed into a long talk of Cyprian's Epistle De Agnitione, also of S. Augustine, expounding the breaking of Bread by Christ to his two Disciples going to Emmaus, to be the Sacrament, with such other talk to no certain purpose: and therefore Bradford prayed him, that in as much as he had written the reasons that stablished his Faith against Transubstantiation, so he would likewise do to him, that is, answer him by writing, and shew him more reasons in writing to confirm his Transubstantiation. Which Doctor Weston, promised to do, and said that he would send or bring it to Master Bradford again within three days.

Thus when he had over-read the Arguments, and here and there spoken little to the purpose for the avoiding of them, and Bradford had prayed him to give him in writing his answer: then he began to tell Bradford how and what he had done for Grimoald, and how that Bradford needed not to fear any reproach or slander he should suffer, meaning belike to have Bradford secretly to come to them, as Grimoald did, for he subsidized.

Brad.

Bradford could hear no reason of the Papists to inform his Opinion against Transubstantiation.

Transubstantiation not brought into the Church before the year 1215, by Pope Innocentius.

The reason proving the words of the Lords Supper to be figurative. 1. Circumstances of Scripture. 2. Proportion of Sacraments. 3. Testimony of Old Doctors.

The Wine is not Transubstantiated: Ergo, neither the Bread.

The same Spirit which said This is my body, said also, We many are one bread, one body, &c. The words concerning transubstantiation do say, into the new testament: Ergo neither the wine, nor the body.

The doctrine of the Church of Rome concerning transubstantiation agreeth not with the Greek Churches, nor with the old Roman Church.

The words of Augustin gothicly wrested by Weston.

Symon though he were called the Leper, yet he was seen to be no Leper. But bread is seen still to be bread: and therefore hath his name out of that it was, but of that it is. Cyprian expounded by Gelasius.

Weston required to write his reasons.

the Truth.

Brad. Mr. Dean, I would not gladly that you should conceive of me that I pass of shame of Men simply in this matter: I rather would have you to think of me, as the very truth is, that hitherto as I have not heard nor seen any thing to inform my Faith against Transubstantiation, so I am no less settled in it, than I was at my first coming hither. I love to be plain with you, and to tell you at the first, as you shall find at the last.

West. In good Faith, M. Bradford, I love you the better for your plainness: and do not think otherwise of me, but that you shall find me plain in all my talk with you.

Here Weston began to ask Bradford of his Imprisonment and Condemnation; and so Bradford told him altogether, how he had been handled. Whereat Weston seemed to wonder: yea in plain words he said, that Bradford had been handled otherwise than he had given cause; and so shewed Bradford how that my Lord of Bath reported that he had deserved a benefit at the Queens hand, and at all the Councils.

In this kind of talk they spent an hour almost, and so, as one weary, Bradford rose up, and Weston called to the Keeper, and before him he bade Bradford be of good comfort, and said that he was out of all peril of death.

Keeper. Sir, quoth the Keeper, but it is in every Mans Mouth, that he shall dye to morrow.

The vain promises of Weston.

Weston. Whereat Weston seemed half amazed, and said, he would goe say Evening before the Queen, and speak to Her in his behalf. But it is to be thought that the Queen had almost supped at that present: for it was past six of the Clock.

Brad. Before the Keeper, Bradford told Weston again that still he was one Man, and even as he was at the first; and till he should see matter to reach his Conscience the contrary, he said he must needs so continue.

Keep. The Keeper desired Bradford to hearken to M. Doctors Council, and prayed M. Doctor to be good unto him: and so after they had drunk together, M. Doctor with most gentle words took his leave for three days.

Now when he was gone, the Keeper told Bradford, that M. Doctor spake openly, how that he saw no cause why they should burn him. Which Sentence, for the Ambiguity of the meaning, made him somewhat sorry, lest he had behaved himself in any thing, wherein he had gathered any conformableness to them in their Doctrine, which God knoweth, faith Bradford, I never as yet did. God our Father bless us, as his Children, and keep us from all evil for ever, Amen.

Another
talk or conference between M.
Bradford and
Dr. Weston.

Upon the fifth day of April came Mr. Doctor Weston to the Counter about two of the Clock in the afternoon, who excused himself for being so long absent; partly by sickness, partly for that Doctor Pendleton told him that he would come unto him; and partly for that, quoth he, I withstood certain Monks which would have come again into Westminster; telling him moreover, how that the Pope was dead, and also declared unto him, how he had spoken to the Queen in his behalf, and how that death was not near to him.

Weston. Last of all, he excused himself for not answering his Arguments against Transubstantiation; because my coming to day, quoth he, was more by fortune, than of purpose.

Brad. I would gladly, Mr. Doctor, if it please you, see your Answers to my Arguments.

Weston. Why? you have remembered something that I spake to you, when I was last with you.

Brad. No Sir, I never call them in manner to mind, since that time, as well because I hoped you would have written them; as also for that they seemed not to be so material.

West. In good Faith I cannot see any other or better way for you, than to submit your self to the Judgment of the Church.

Brad. Marry so will I, Sir, if so be by the Church you understand Christs Church.

West. Lo, you take upon you to judge the Church.

Brad. No, Sir, that I do not in taking upon me to discern, I do not judge the Church.

West. Yes that you do; and make it invisible.

The Papists will not have the Church
judged.

Brad. I do neither.

West. Why, who can see your Church?

Brad. Those Sir, that have Spiritual Eyes, wherewith they might have discerned Christs visible conversation here upon Earth.

West. Nay, Christs Church hath three tokens, that all Men may look well upon: namely, Unity, Antiquity, and Consuet.

Brad. These three may be as well in evil as in good, as well in Sin as in Vertue, as well in the Devils Church, as in Gods Church: As for an Example, Idolatry amongst the Istaics had all those three. Chrysostom telleth plainly, as you well know, that the Church is well known, Tantummodo per Scripturas, Alonely by the Scriptures.

West. In good Faith, you make your Church invisible, when you will have it known alonely by the Scriptures.

Brad. No Sir, the Scriptures do plainly set forth to us the Church, that all Men may well enough thereby know her, if they list to look.

West. The Church is like a Tower or Town that all Men may see.

Brad. True Sir, all Men that be not blind. Visible enough is the Church, but Mens blindness is great. Impute not therefore to the Church, that which is to be imputed to Mens blindness.

West. Where was your Church forty years ago? or where is it now? except in a corner of Germany?

Brad. Forsooth Sir, the Church of God is dispersed, and not tyed to this or that place, but to the Word of God; so that where it is, there is Gods Church, if it be truly taught.

West. Lo, is not this to make the Church invisible? point me out a Realm a hundred years past, which maintained your Doctrine.

Brad. Sir, if you will, or would well mark the state of the Church before Christs coming, with it now (as Saint Paul and Peter willett us) I think you would not look for such shews of the Church to be made, as to point it by Realms. You know that in Helias time, both in Israel, and elsewhere, Gods Church was not pointable; and therefore cried he out, that he was left alone.

West. No marry, did not God say that there was 7000, which had not bowed their Knees to Baal? Lo then 7000, shew me 7000, a hundred years ago of your Religion.

Brad. Sir, these 7000, were not known to Men: for then Helias would not have said, that he had been left alone. And it is plain enough by that which the Text hath, namely that God faith, Reliqui mihi, I have reserved to me seven thousand. Mark that it faith, God hath reserved to himself, to his own knowledge; as I doubt not but a hundred years ago, God had his seven thousand in his proper places, though Men knew not thereof.

Weston. Well, M. Bradford, I will not make your cause worse, than for Transubstantiation: although I know that we agree not in other matters. And I pray you make you it your self not worse. If I can do you good, I will hurt you I will not. I am no Prince, and therefore I cannot promise you Life, except you will submit your self to the definition of the Church.

Brad. Sir, so that you will define me your Church, that under it you bring not in a false Church, you shall not see but that we shall soon be at a point.

West. In good Faith Mr. Bradford, I see no good will be done, and therefore I will with you as much good as I can, and hereafter I will perchance come or send to you again: and so he sent for Mr. Wash, and departed.

Now after his departing, came the Keeper, M. Claydon, and Stephen Beech, and they were very hot with Bradford, and spake with him in such sort that he should not look but to have them utter enemies unto him, notwithstanding the friendship they both had hitherto pretended. God be with us, and what matter is it who be against them.

Among divers which came to M. Bradford in Prison, some to dispute and confer, some to give Counsell, some to take comfort, and some to visit him, there was a certain Gentlewoman Servant, which Gentlewoman had been cruelly afflicted, and miserably handled by her Father & Mother & all her kindred, in her Fathers House, for

This Gentlewomans Servant therefore, being sent to Mr. Bradford with Commendations, had this talk with him, which I thought here not to over-slip.

A Colloquy between Mr. Bradford, and a Gentlewomans Servant, being sent to visit him in Prison.

Talk between Bradford and a certain Gentlewomans servant.

His Servant or Messenger of the foresaid Gentlewoman coming to Mr. Bradford, and taking him by the hand, said, God be thanked for you. How do you?

Brad. Mr. Bradford answered, Well, I thank God. For as men in saying, which be near to the Shore or Haven where they would be, would be nearer; even so the nearer I am to God, the nearer I would be.

Serv. Sir, I have never seen you so strong and healthsome of body, as me think you be now, God be thanked for it.

Brad. Why, quoth he, I have given over all care and study, and only do I covey to be talking with him, whom I have always studied to be withal.

Serv. Well, God hath done much for you since the time that I first knew you, and hath wrought wonderfully in you to his glory.

Brad. Truth it is, for he hath dealt favourably with me, in that he hath not punished me according to my sins, but hath suffered me to live, that I might seek Repentance.

Serv. Truly, we hear say, there is a Rod made so grievous, out of the which I think no man shall pluck his head.

Brad. Well, let all that be of Christs flock, arm themselves to suffer: For I think verily, God will not have one of his to escape untouched, if he love him, let them seek what means or ways they can.

Serv. Well Sir, there goeth talk of a Friar that should preach before the Kings, and should tell him, that he should be guilty of the innocent blood that hath been shed of late.

Brad. Verily, quoth Bradford, I had a Book within these two days of his writings, and therein he saith, that it is not meet nor convenient that the Hereticks should live: and therefore I do marvel how that talk should rise: for I have heard of it also, and I have also talked with this Friar (he is named Friar Fosfo) and with divers other, and I praise God they have confirmed me: for they have nothing to say but that which is most vain.

Serv. Sir, Father Cardmaker hath him commended unto you.

Brad. How doth he, how doth he?

Serv. Well, God be thanked.

Brad. I am very glad thereof: for indeed my Lord Chancellor did cast him in my teeth; but as David saith, God hath disappointed him.

Serv. Forsooth, Gods Name be praised, he is very strong.

Brad. And I trust, so are we. What else? our quarrel is most just: therefore let us not be afraid.

Serv. My Mistress hath her recommended unto you.

Brad. How doth she?

Serv. Well, God, be praised, but she hath been sore afflicted with her own Father and Mother, than ever you were with your Imprisonment, and yet God hath preserved her, I trust, to his glory.

Brad. I pray you tell her, I read this day a godly History, written by Basilus Magnus, of a virtuous woman which was a widow, and was named Juledda. She had great Lands and many Children, and nigh her dwelled a Cormorant, which for her virtuousness and godly living, had great indignation at her, and of very malice he took away her Lands, so that she was constrained to go to the Law with him: and in conclusion, the matter came to the trial before the Judge, who demanded of this Tyrant why he wrongfully withheld these Lands from this woman? He made answer and said, he might so do: for (saith he) this woman is disobedient to the Kings proceedings; for she will in no wise worship his gods nor offer Sacrifice unto them. Then the Judge hearing that, said unto her, Woman, if this be true, in what art not only like to lose thy Land, but also thy Life, unless that thou worship our gods, and do sacrifice unto them. This godly woman hearing that, slept forth to the Judge, and said, Is there no remedy but either to worship your false gods, or else to lose my Lands and Life? Then farewell Suit, farewell Lands, farewell Children, farewell Friends; yea, and farewell Life too: and in respect of the true honour of the everliving God, farewell all. And with that saying did the Judge commit her to Prison, and afterward she suffered most cruel death: and being brought to the place of Execution, the exhorted all women to be strong and constant. For, saith she, ye were redeemed with as dear a price as men: For although ye were made of the rib of the man, yet be you all of his flesh: so that also, in the case and trial of your faith towards God, ye ought to be as strong. And thus died she constantly, not fearing death. I pray you tell your Mistress of this History.

Serv. That shall I, Sir, by Gods grace: for she told me that she was with you and Mr. Sanders, and received your gentle counsel.

Brad. We never gave her other counsel but the truth, and in witness thereof, we have and will seal it with our bloods. For I thought this night that I had been sent for, because at eleven of the Clock there was such rapping at the door.

Then answered a Maid, and said, Why then I perceive you were afraid.

Brad. Ye shall hear how fearful I was. For I considered that I had not slept, and I thought to take a nap before I went: and after I was asleep, these men came into the next Chamber, and sang, as it was told me, and yet for all my fearfulness, I heard them not: therefore belike I was not afraid, that slept so fast.

Serv. Do you lack any thing towards your necessity?

Brad. Nothing but your prayers, and I trust I have them, and you mine.

Serv. I saw a Priest come to you to day in the morning.

Brad. Yea, he brought me a Letter from a Friar, and I am writing an answer.

Serv. Then we let you, therefore the living God be with you.

Brad. And with you also, and bless you.

Serv. Amen, said we, and gave him thanks and departed.

Thus still in Prison continued Bradford, until the month of July, in such labours and sufferings as he before always had sustained in Prison. But when the time of his determined death was come, he was suddenly conveyed out of the Compter where he was Prisoner, in the night season to Newgate, as afore is declared, and from thence he was carried the next morning to Smithfield, where he constantly abiding in the same truth of God, which before he had confessed, earnestly exhorting the People to repent, and to return to Christ, and sweetly comforting the godly young springal of nineteen or twenty years old, which was burned with him, cheerfully he ended his painful life, to live with Christ.

John Leaf burnt with Bradford.

With whom was burnt one John Leaf an Apprentice to Humphrey Gawdy, Tallow-Chandler, of the Parish of Christ Church in London, of the age of nineteen years and above, born at Kirkly Morefield, in the County of York: who upon the Friday next before Palm Sunday, was committed to the Compter in Breadstreet by an Alderman of London, who had rule and charge of that Ward, or part of the City, where the said Leaf did dwell. After he coming to examination before Boner, gave a firm and christian testimony of his Doctrine and Profession, answering to such Articles as were objected to him by the said Bishop.

and Wine, there was not the very true and natural Body and Blood of Christ in Substance: and further did hold and believe, that the said Sacrament of the Altar, as it is now called, used, and believed in this Realm of England, is idolatrous and abominable; and also said further, that he believed, that after the words of Consecration spoken by the Priest over the material Bread and Wine, there is not the self same Substance of Christs Body and Blood there contained; but Bread and Wine, as it was before: and further said, that he believed, that when the Priest delivereth the said material Bread and Wine to the Communicants, he delivereth but only * material Bread and Wine; and the Communicants do receive the same in remembrance of Christs Death and Passion, and spiritually in Faith they receive Christs Body and Blood, but not under the Forms of Bread and Wine; and also affirmed that he believed Articular Confession not to be necessary to be made unto a Priest: for it is no point of Soul health, neither that the Priest hath any Authority given him by the Scripture to absolve and remit any sin.

Scholar.

Then the Bishop, after many words to and fro, at last asked him, if he had been Mr. Rogers Scholar? To whom the foresaid John Leaf answered again, granting him so to be, and that he the same John did believe in the Doctrine of the said Rogers, and in the Doctrine of Bishop Hooper, Cardmaker, and others of their Opinion, which of late were burned for the testimony of Christ, and that he would dye in that Doctrine that they died for: And after other replications again of the Bishop, moving him to return to the Unity of the Church, he with a great courage of spirit, answered again in these words: My Lord, quoth he, you call mine opinion Herefie, it is the true light of the Word of God: And again repeating the same, he professed that he would never forsake his said and well grounded opinion, while the breath should be in his body. Whereupon the Bishop being too weak, either to refuse his sentence, or to remove his constancy, proceeded consequently to read the Popish Sentence of eternal Condemnation; whereby this godly and constant young man, being committed to the Secular Power of the Sheriffs there present, was then adjudged, and not long after suffered the same day with Mr. Bradford, confirming with his death, that which he had spoken and professed in his life.

It is reported of the said John Leaf, by one that was in the Compter the same time, and saw the thing, that after his Examinations before the Bishop, when two Bills were sent unto him in the Compter in Breadstreet, the one containing a Recantation, the other his Confessions, to know to which of them he would put his hand, first hearing the Bill of Recantation read unto him (because he could not read nor write himself) that he refused. And when the other was read unto him, which he well liked of, in stead of a Pen he took a Pin, and so pricking his hand, sprinkled the blood upon the said Bill, willing the Reader thereof to shew the Bishop, that he had sealed the same Bill with his Blood already.

Sentence against John Leaf.

John Leaf sealed the Bill of his Confessions with his blood.

The behaviour of Mr. Bradford Preacher, and the young man that suffered with him in Smithfield, named John Leaf, a Prentice, which both suffered for the testimony of Christ.

First, when they came to the Stake in Smithfield to be burned, Mr. Bradford lying prostrate on the one side of the Stake, and the young man John Leaf on the other side.

Bradford and John Leaf at the Stake, how they behaved themselves.

other side, they lay flat on their faces, praying to themselves the space of a minute of an hour. Then one of the Sheriffs said to Mr. Bradford, Arise, and make an end; for the press of the People is great.

At that word they both stood upon their feet, and then Mr. Bradford took a Ragot in his hand, and kissed it, and so likewise the Stake. And when he had so done, he desired of the Sheriffs, that his Servant might have his Raiment. For (said he) I have nothing else to give him: and besides that, he is a poor man. And the Sheriff said he should have it. And so forthwith Mr. Bradford did put off his Raiment, and went to the Stake: and holding up his hands, and casting his countenance to Heaven, he said thus, O England, England, repent thee of thy sins, and repent thee of thy sins. Beware of Idolatry, beware of false Antichrists, take heed they do not deceive you. And

The words of Mr. Bradford to England.

Anno 1555. as he was speaking these words; the Sheriff bid. rye his hands, if he would not be quiet. O Master Sheriff (said Mr. Bradford) I am quiet: God forgive you this Master Sheriff. And one of the Officers which made the fire, hearing Mr. Bradford to speaking to the Sheriff, said, If you have no better learning then that, you are but a fool, and were best hold your peace. To the which words Mr. Bradford gave no answer; but asked all the world forgiveness, and forgave all the world, and prayed the people to pray for him, and turned his head unto the young man that suffered with him, and said, Be of good comfort Brother; for we shall have a merry Supper with the Lord this night: And so spake no more words that any man did hear, but embracing the Reeds, said thus; Spiritus est via, et narrow is the gate that leadeth to eternal salvation, and few there be that find it.

The firing of M. Bradford at his death.

And thus they both ended their mortal lives, most like two Lambs, without any alteration of their countenance, being void of all fear, hoping to obtain the price of the Game that they had long run at to the which I beseech Almighty God happily to conduct us, through the Merits of Jesus Christ our Lord and Saviour, Amen.

Touching Mr. Woodrofe the Sheriff, mention is made a little before how churlishly he answered Mr. Bradford at the Stake, not suffering him to speak, but commanding his hands to be tied, &c. The like extremity or worse, he used also before to Mr. Rogers, whereof ye have heard before.

Difference between two Sheriffs, M. Chesser and M. Woodrofe.

The said Woodrofe Sheriff, above mentioned, was joyned in Office with another, called Sir William Chesser, for the year 1555. Between these two Sheriffs such difference there was of Judgment and Religion, that the one, that is, Mr. Woodrofe, was wont commonly to laugh, and other to shed tears at the death of Christs People. And whereas the other was wont to restrain, and to beat the People, which were desirous to take them by the hands that should be burned: the other Sheriff contrariwise again with much sorrow and mildness behaved himself, which I wish here to be spoken and known to the commendation of him, although I do not greatly know the party.

Sir W. Chesser commended.

Furthermore, here by the way to note the severe punishment of Gods hand against the said Woodrofe, as against all such cruel Persecutors, so it hapned, that within half a year after the burning of this blessed Martyr, the said Sheriff was so stricken on the right side with such a fallie, or stroke of Gods hand whatsoever it was, that for the space of eight years after, till his dying day, he was not able to turn himself in his Bed, but as two men with a sheet were fain to stir him; and withal such an insatiable devouring came upon him, that it was monstrous to see. And thus continued he the space of eight years together.

A notable example of Gods hand upon Mr. Woodrofe.

Here follow the Letters of Mr. Bradford.

His godly Bradford and heavenly Martyr, during the time of his Imprisonment, wrote sundry comfortable Treatises, and many godly Letters, of which, some he wrote to the City of London, Cambridge, Walden, to Lancashire and Cheshire, and divers to his other private Friends. By the which foresaid Letters his time tent it may appear how godly this man occupied his time being Prisoner, what special zeal he bear to the state of Christs Church, what care he had to perform his Office, how earnestly he admonished all men, how tenderly he comforted the heavy-hearted, how faithfully he confirmed them whom he had taught, I thought here good to place the same and although to exhibit here all the Letters that he wrote (being in number so many, that they are able to fill a Book) it cannot well be compared, yet nevertheless we mind to excerpt the principall of them, referring the Reader for the residue to the Book of Letters of the Martyrs, where they may be found.

And first, forasmuch as ye have heard in the story before, how the Earl of Derby complained in the Parliament House, of certain Letters written of John Bradford out of Prison, to Lancashire, and also he was charged both of the Bishop of Winchester, and of Mr. Allen with some Letters; to the intent the Reader more perfectly may understand what Letters they were, being written indeed to his Mother, Brethren, and Sisters, out of the Tower, before his Condemnation, we will begin first with the same Letters; the Copy, with the Contents whereof, is this, as followeth.

A comfortable Letter of Mr. Bradford to his Mother, a godly Matron, dwelling in Manchester, and to his Brethren and Sisters, and other of his Friends there.

Our dear and sweet Saviour Jesus Christ, whose Prisoner at this present (praised be his Name therefore) I am, preserve and keep you my good Mother, with my Brethren and Sisters, my Father John Tinsley, Thomas Sorrecoild, Laurence and James Bradshaw, with their Wives and Families, &c. now and for ever, Amen.

I am at this present in Prison, sure enough for starting, to confirm that I have preached unto you: as I am ready (I thank God) with my life and blood to seal the same, if God vouchsafe me worthy of that honour. For, good Mother and Brethren, it is a most special benefit of God, to suffer for his Names sake and Gospel, as now I do: I heartily thank God for it, and am sure that with him I shall be partaker of his glory, as Paul saith, If we suffer with him, we shall reign with him. Therefore be not faint-hearted, but rather rejoyce, at the least for my sake which now am in the right and high way to Heaven: for by many Afflictions we must enter into the Kingdom of Heaven. Now will God make known his Children. When the wind doth not blow, then cannot a man know the Wheat from the Chaff; but when the blast cometh, then flieeth away the Chaff, but the Wheat remaineth; and is so far from being hurt, that by the wind it is more cleanted from the Chaff, and known to be Wheat. Gold when it is cast into the fire, is the more precious; so are Gods Children by the Crois of Affliction. Always God beginneth his Judgment at his Houle. Christ and the Apostles were in most misery in the Land of Jewry, but yet the whole Land flinarted for it after: so now Gods Children are first chastised in this world, that they should not be damned with the world: for surely, great Plagues of God hang over this Realm.

A letter of M. Bradford to his mother, his brethren, &c. sisters.

God beginneth his judgment with his own house.

Ye all know there was never more knowledge of God, and less godly living, and true serving of God. It was counted a foolish thing to serve God truly, and earnest Prayer was not past upon. Preaching was but a pastime. The Communion was counted too common. Fastings to subdue the flesh, was far out of use. Alms was almost nothing. Malice, Covetousness, and Uncleanness was common every where, with Swearing, Drunkenness, and Idleness. God therefore now is come, and you have heard me preach, and because he will not damn us with the world, he beginneth to punish us: as me for carnal living. For, as for my preaching, I am most certain it is and was Gods Truth, and I trust to give my life for it by Gods grace: but because I loved not the Gospel truly, but outwardly, therefore doth he thus punish me; nay rather in punishing blesteth me. And indeed I thank him more of this Prison, than of any Parlor, yea, than of any pleasure that ever I had: for in it I find God my most sweet good God always. The flesh is punished, first to admonish us now heartily to live as we profess; secondly to certify the wicked of their just damnation, if they repent not.

Complains of the carnal and wicked life among Gospelers.

The cause why God first punisheth his in this world.

Perchance you are weakened in that which I have preached, because God doth not defend it, as you think, but suffereth the Popish Doctrine to come again and prevail: but you must know, good Mother, that God by this doth prove and try his Children and People, whether they will unfeignedly and simply hang on him and his Word. So did he with the Israelites, bringing them into a Desert,

Desert, after their coming out of Egypt, where (I mean the Wildernesse) was want of all things, in comparison of that which they had in Egypt. Christ, when he came into this World, brought no worldly Wealth, nor quietness with him, but rather war, The World (saith he) shall rejoyce, but ye shall mourn and weep, but your weeping shall be turned into joy: and therefore happy are they that mourn and weep, for they shall be comforted. They are marked then with Gods mark in their forehead, and not with the Beasts mark, I mean the Popes shaven Crown, who now with his shavelings rejoyce: but woe unto them; for they shall be cast down, they shall weep and mourn. The rich Glutton had here his joy, and Lazarus sorrows, but afterwards the time was changed. The end of carnal joy is sorrow. Now let the Whoremonger joy with the Drunkard, Swearer, Covetous, Malicious, and blind buzzard Sir John: for the Maf's will not bite them, neither make them to blush, as preaching would. Now may they do what they will, come Devils to the Church, and go Devils home, for no man must find fault. And they are glad of this; now they have their hearts desire, as the Sodomites had when Lai was gone, but what followed? Forsooth when they had peace, all shall be well, then came Gods vengeance, fire and brimstone from Heaven, and burnt up every Mothers Child; even so (dear Mother) will it do to our Papists.

Wherefore fear God; stick to his Word though all the World swerve from it. Dye you must once, and when, or how, can you not tell. Dye therefore with Christ, suffer for serving him truly and after his Word: for sure may we be that of all deaths it is most to be desired to dye for Gods sake. This is the most safe kind of dying, we cannot doubt but that we shall go to Heaven, if we dye for his Names sake. And that you shall dye for his Names sake, Gods Word will warrant you, if you stick to that which God by me hath taught you. You shall see that I speak as I think; for by Gods grace I will drink before you of this Cup, if I be put to it.

I doubt not but God will give me his grace, and strengthen me thereunto: pray that he would, and that I refuse it not. I am at a point, even when my Lord God will, to come to him. Death nor Life, Prison nor Pleasure, I trust in God, shall be able to separate me from my Lord God and his Gospel. In Peace, when no Persecution was, then were you content and glad to hear me, then did you believe me, and will ye not do so now, seeing I speak that which I trust by Gods grace, if need be, to varifie with my life? Good Mother, I write before God to you, as I have preached before him.

It is Gods Truth I have taught: It is that same infallible Word wherof he said, Heaven and Earth shall pass, but my word shall not pass. The Maf's and such Baggage as the false worshippers of God, and enemies of Christs Cross (the Papists I say) have brought in again, to payson the Church of God withal, displeaseth God highly, and is abominable in his sight. Happy may be he which of Confidence suffereth loss of Life or Goods in disallowing it. Come not at it. If God be God, follow him: If the Maf's be God, let them that will see it, hear, or be present at it, and go to the Devil with it. What is there as God ordained? His Supper was ordained to be received of us in the memorial of his Death, for the confirmation of our Faith, that his Body was broken for us, and his Blood shed for pardon of our sins; but in the Maf's there is no receiving, but the Priest keepeth all to himself alone. Christ saith, Take, eat: No, saith the Priest, Gape, peep. There is a sacrificing, yea killing of Christ again as much as they may. There is Idolatry in worshipping the outward sign of Bread and Wine; there is all in Latin, you cannot tell what he saith. To conclude, there is nothing as God ordained. Wherefore (my good Mother) come not at it.

Oh, will some say, it will hinder you, if you refuse to come to Maf's, and to do as other do. But God will further you (be you assured) as you shall one day find: who hath promised to them that suffer hindrance or loss of any thing in this world, his great blessing here, and in the way to come life everlasting.

You shall be counted an Heretic: but not of others then of Heretics, whose praise is a dispraise.

You are not able to reason against the Priests, but God will, that all they shall not be able to withstand you. No body will do so but you only. Indeed no matter, for few enter into the narrow Gate which bringeth to salvation. Howbeit, you shall have with you (I doubt not) Father Traves, and other my Brothers and Sisters, to go with you therein: but if they will not, I your son in God, I trust, shall not leave you an inch, but go before you: pray that I may, and give thanks for me. Rejoyce in my suffering, for it is for your sakes to confirm the truth I have taught. Howsoever you do, beware this Letter come not abroad, but into Father Traves his hands: for if it should be known that I have Pen and Ink in the Prison, then would it be worse with me. Therefore to your selves keep this Letter, commending me to God and his Mercy in Christ Jesus, who make me worthy for his Names sake, to give my life for his Gospel and Church sake. Out of the Tower of London, the sixth day of October, 1553.

My Name I write not for causes, you know it well enough: Like the Letter never the worse. Commend me to all our good Brethren and Sisters in the Lord. Howsoever you do, be obedient to the higher Powers, that is, in no point either in hand or tongue rebel, but rather if they command that which with good Conscience you cannot obey, lay your head on the block, and suffer whatsoever they shall do or say. By patience possesse your souls.

After the time that Mr. Bradford was condemned, and sent to the Compter, it was purposed of his Adversaries (as ye heard before) that he should be had to Manchester where he was born, and there be burned. Whereupon he writeth to the City of London, thinking to take his last Vile of them in this Letter.

To the City of London.

To all that profess the Gospel and true Doctrine of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ in the City of London, John Bradford a most unworthy Servant of the Lord, now not only in Prison, but also excommunicated and condemned to be burned for the same true Doctrine, witheth Mercy, Grace, and Peace, with increase of all godly knowledge and piety from God the Father of Mercy, through the Merits of our alone and omniscient Redeemer Jesus Christ, by the operation of the Holy Spirit for ever, Amen.

My dearly beloved Brethren in our Saviour Christ, although the time I have to live is very little (for hourly I look when I should be had hence to be conveyed into Lancashire, there to be burned, and to render my life by the Providence of God, where I first received it by the same Providence) and although the charge is great to keep me from all things whereby I might signifie any thing to the world of my state: yet having, as now I have, Pen and Ink, through Gods working, maugre the Head of Satan and his Souldiers, I thought good to write a short Confession of my Faith, and thereto joyn a little Exhortation unto you all, to live according to your Profession.

First, For my Faith, I do confesse and pray all the whole Congregation of Christ to bear witness with me of the same, that I believe constantly, through the gift and goodness of GOD, (for Faith is Gods only gift) all the twelve Articles of the Symbol and Creed, commonly attributed to the Collection of the Apostles. This my Faith I would gladly particularly declare and expound to the confirmation and comfort of the simple; but alas! by starts and stealth I write in manner that I write, and therefore I shall desire you all to take this brevity in good part. And this Faith I hold, not because of the Creed it self, but because of the Word of God, the which teacheth and confirmeth every Article accordingly. This Word of God written by the Prophets and Apostles, left and contained in the Canonical Books of the whole Bible, I do believe to contain plentifully all things necessary to Salvation, so that nothing (as necessary to Salvation) ought to be added thereto, and therefore the Church of Christ, nor none of his Congregation ought to be burdened with any other Doctrine, then which heretofore hath his foundation and ground. In testimony of this Faith, I render and give my life, being condemned as well for not acknowledging the Antichrist of Rome to be Christs Vicar general and supreme Head of his Catholick and Universal Church here or elsewhere.

where upon Earth; as for denying the horrible and idolatrous Doctrine of Transubstantiation, and Christs real corporall, and carnall Presence in his Supper, under the forme and accidents of Bread and Wine.

To believe Christ our Saviour to be the Head of his Church, and Kings, in these Realmes to be the Supream Powers, to whom ever, Soul oweth Obedience, and to believe that in the Supper of Christ (which the Sacrament of the Altar, as the Papists call it, and use it, doth utterly overthrow) is a true and a very Presence of whole Christ, God and Man, to the faith of the Receiuer, but not to the slander by and looke upon, as it is a true and very Presence of Bread and Wine to the Sences of men: to believe this (I say) will not erre, and therefore as an Heretick I am condemned, and shall be punished; whereof I ask God heartily mercy that I do no more, because than I do, having so great cause, as to be an Instrument wherein it may please my dear Lord God and Saviour to suffer.

For albeit my manifold sins, even since I came into Prison, have deferred at the hands of God, not only this Temporal, but also Eternal fire in Hell, much more than my former unkind life, which the Lord pardon for his Christs sake, as I know he of his mercy hath done, and never will lay mine Iniquities to my charge, to condemnation, so great is his goodness, (praised therefore be his Holy Name) although (I say) my manifold and grievous late sins have deferred most justly all the tyranny that Man or Devil can do unto me; and therefore I confess that the Lord is just, and that his Judgments be true and deferred on my behalf: yet the Bishops and Prelates do not persecute them in me, but Christ himself, his Word, his Truth, and Religion. And therefore I have great cause, yea most great cause to rejoyce that ever I was born, and hitherto kept of the Lord; that by my death, which is deferred for my sins, it please the heavenly Father to glorifie his Name, to testify his Truth, to confirm his Verity, to repugn his Adversaries. O good God and merciful Father, forgive my great unthankfulness, especially herein.

And you, my dearly Beloved, for the Lord Jesus Christs sake, I humbly and heartily in his Bowels and Blood do now, for my last Vale and Farewell in this present life, beseech you, and every of you, that you will consider this word of the Lord accordingly: First by me be admonished to beware of Hypocritie and Carnal Security; profess not the Gospel with tongue and lips only, but in heart and verity; frame and fashion your lives accordingly; beware Gods Name be not evil spoken of, and the Gospel less regarded by your Conversation. God forgive me that I have not so heartily professed it as I should have done, but have sought much my self therein. The Gospel is a new Doctrine to the old man; it is new wine; and therefore cannot be put in old bottles, without more great hurt, than good to the bottles. If we will talk with the Lord, we must put off our shoes and carnal affections; if we will hear the voice of the Lord, we must wash our garments and be holy; if we will be Christs Disciples, we must deny our selves, take up our Crosse and follow Christ; we cannot serve two Masters. If we seek Christs Kingdom, we must seek for the righteousness thereof. To this Petition (Let thy Kingdom come) we must joyn, Thy will be done, done on Earth as it is in Heaven. If we will not be doers of the word, but hearers of it only, we sore deceive our selves. If we hear the Gospel, and love it not, we declare our selves to be but fools, and builders upon the sand. The Lords Spirit hateth feigning; deceitfulness the Lord abhorreth; if we come to him, we must beware that we come not with a double heart; for then may chance that God will answer us according to the block which is in our heart, and so we shall deceive our selves and others.

To Faith see that we couple a good Conscience, lest we make a shipwrack. To the Lord we must come with fear and reverence. If we will be Gospellers, we must be Christs; if we be Christs, we must crucifie our flesh with the lusts and concupiscences thereof; if we will be under grace, sin must not beare rule in us. We may not come to the Lord, and draw night to him with our lips, and leave our hearts elsewhere, lest the Lords wrath wax hot, and he take from us the good remaining. In no case can the Kingdom of Christ approach to them that repent not. Therefore, my dearly Beloved, let us repent and be heartily sorry that we have so earnestly, so hypocritically, so covetously, so vain-gloriously professed the Gospel. For all these I confess my self, to the glory of God, that he may cover mine offences in the day of Judgment. Let the anger and plague of God most justly fall upon us, be applied to every one of our defects, that from the bottom of our hearts, every of us may say, It is I, Lord, that have sinned against thee. I am my hypocritie, my vain-glory, my carnal security, my cleanness, carnality, security, idleness, unthankfulness, self-love, and such like, which have deferred the taking away of our good King, of thy Word and true Religion, of thy good Ministers by exile, imprisonment, and death; it is my wickedness that causeth this state of authority and peace to thine Enemy. Obtemperate, be merciful unto us. Turn to us, O Lord, our Hosts, and turn us unto thee; correct us, but not in thy fury, lest we be consumed in thine anger; chastise us not in thy wrathful displeasure; reprove us not, but in the midst of thine anger remember thy mercy. For if thou mark what is done amiss, who shall be able to abide it? But wilt thou be merciful, that thou mightest be worshipped. Oh then be merciful unto us, that we might truly worship thee. Help us, for the glory of thy Name: be merciful unto our sins, for they are great. O heal us, and help us for thine honour. Let not the wicked people say, Where is thine God, O Lord?

On this sort, my right dearly Beloved, let us heartily bewail our sins, repent us of our former evil life, humbly and earnestly purpose to amend our lives, continually watch in prayer, diligently and earnestly attend, hear, and read the holy Scriptures, to better our Vocation to amend our Brethren. Let us improve the works of darkness. Let us fly from all iniquity. Let us abhor the Anichristian and Romish service, detest the Popish Mass, abrenounce their Romish god, prepare our selves to the Crosse, be obedient to all that are in Authority in all things that be not against God and his Word, for then Answer with the Apostles, It is more meet to obey God than man. Howbeit never for any thing resist or rise against the Magistrates. Avenge not your selves, but commit your cause to the Lord, to whom vengeance pertaineth, and he in his time will reward it. If you feel in your selves an hope and trust in God, that he will never tempt you above that he will make you able to bear, be assured the Lord will be true to you; and you shall be able to bear all brunts. But if you want this hope, fly and get you hence, rather than by your carrying Gods Name should be dishonoured.

In sum, cast your care on the Lord, knowing for most certain, that he is careful for you; with him all the hairs of your head are numbered, so that not one of them shall perish without his good pleasure and will: much more then, nothing shall happen to our bodies, which shall not be profitable, howsoever for a time it seem otherwise to your senses. Hang on the Providence of God, not only when you have means to help you, but also when you have no means, yea when all means be against you. Give him this honour, which of all other things he most chiefly requireth at your hands: namely, believe that you are his Children through Christ, that he is your Father and God through him, that he loveth you, pardoneth you all your offences, that he is with you in trouble, and will be with you for ever. When you fall, he will put under his hand, you shall not lye still: before you call upon him he heareth you, out of the evil he will finally bring you, and deliver you to his eternal joy. Doubt not, my dearly beloved, herein, doubt not (I say) this will God your Father do for you, not in respect of your selves, but in respect of Christ your Captain, your Pastor, your Keeper, out of whose hands none shall be able to catch you, in him be quiet, and often consider your dignity: namely, how that ye be Gods Children, the Saints of God, Citizens of Heaven, Temples of the Holy Ghost, the Thrones of God, Members of Christ, and Lords over all.

Therefore be ashamed to think, speak, or do any thing that should be unseemly for Gods Children, Gods Saints, Christs Members, &c. Marvel not though the Devil and the World hate you, though ye be persecuted here, for the Servant is not above his Master. Covet not earthly kindnesses, fear not the power of man, love not this world, nor nor things that be in this world; but long for the Lord Jesus his coming, at which time your Bodies shall be made like unto his glorious Body, when he appeareth you shall be like unto him; when your life shall thus be revealed, then shall ye appear with him in glory.

We must live in the Name of Christ
The property of faith.

In the mean season live in hope thereof. Let the life you lead be in the faith of the Son of God: For the just doth live by faith: which faith flieth from all evil, and followeth the Word of God as a Lanthorn to her feet, and a Light to her steps; her eyes be above where Christ is, the beheldeth not the things present, but rather things to come; she glorieth in Affliction; she knoweth that the Afflictions of this life are not like to be compared to the Glory which God will reveal to us, and in us. Of this Glory God grant us here a lively taste; then shall we run after the scent it fendeth forth. It will make us valiant men to take to us the Kingdom of God; whether the Lord of Mercy bring us in his good time through Christ our Lord, to whom with the Father and the Holy Ghost, three Persons and one God, be all honour and glory, world without end, Amen.

My dearly beloved, I would gladly have given here my Body to have been burned for the confirmation of the true Doctrine I have taught here unto you. But that my Country must have. Therefore I pray you take in good part this signification of my good will towards every of you. Impute the want herein to time and trouble. Pardon me mine offensive and negligent behaviour when I was amongst you. With me repent, and labour to amend. Continue in the Truth which I have truly taught unto you by preaching in all places where I have come; Gods Name therefore be praised. Confess Christ when you be called, whatsoever cometh thereof, and the God of Peace be with us all, Amen. This 11. of February, 1555.

Your Brother in bonds for the Lords sake,
John Bradford.

To the University and Town of Cambridge.

Another letter of Mr.
Bradford to the University of Cambridge.

To all that love the Lord Jesus and his true Doctrine, being in the University and Town of Cambridge, John Bradford a most unworthy Servant of the Lord, now not only prisoned, but also condemned for the same true Doctrine, witheth grace, peace, and mercy, with increase of all godliness from God the Father of all mercy, through the bloody Passion of our Saviour Jesus Christ, by the lively working of the holy Spirit for ever, Amen.

Although I look hourly when I should be had to the Stake (my right dearly beloved in the Lord) and although the charge over me is great and freight, yet having by the Providence of God secretly Pen and Ink, I could not but something signify unto you my solicitude which I have for you and every of you in the Lord, though not as I would, yet as I may. You have often and openly heard the truth (specially in this matter wherein I am condemned) disputed and preached, that it is needles to do any more but only to put you in remembrance of the same: but hitherto have you not heard it confirmed, and as it were sealed up, as now you do and shall hear by me, that is, by my death and burning. For albeit I have deserved (through my uncleanness, hypocritie, avarice, vain-glory, idleness, unthankfulness, and carnality, whereof I accuse my self, to my confusion before the world, that before God through Christ I might, as my assured hope is I shall, find mercy) eternal death, and hell fire, much more than this affliction and fire prepared for me: yet, my dearly beloved, it is not theft, or any of these things, wherefore the Prelates do persecute me, but Gods verity and truth; yea, even Christ himself is the only cause and thing wherefore I am now condemned, and shall be burned as an Heretick, because I will not grant the Antichrist of Rome to be Christs Vicar general and supreme Head of his Church here, and every where upon earth, by Gods Ordinance, and because I will not grant such corporal, real, and carnal Presence of Christs Body and Blood in the Sacrament, as doth transubstantiate the substance of Bread and Wine, and is received of the wicked, yea of Dogs and Mice. Also I am excommunicated, & counted as a dead Member of Christs Church, as a rotten Branch, and therefore shall be cast into the fire.

Therefore ye ought heartily to rejoyce with me, and to give thanks for me, that God the eternal Father hath vouchsafed our Mother to bring up any Child in whom it would please him to magnifie his holy Name as he doth, and I hope for his mercies and truths sake, will do in me, and by me. Oh, what such benefit upon earth can it be, as that I, which deserved death by reason of my sins, should be delivered to a demonstration, a testification, and confirmation of Gods verity and truth? Thou my Mother the University hast not only had the truth of Gods Word plainly manifested unto thee by reading, disputing and preaching publickly and privately; but now to make these altogether excusable, and as it were, almost to sin against the Holy Ghost, if thou put to thy helping hand with the Romish rout to suppress the verity, and set out the contrary, thou hast my life and blood as a Seal to confirm thee, if thou wilt be confirmed, or else to confound thee, and bear witness against thee, if thou wilt take part with the Prelates and Clergy, which now fill up the measure of their Fathers which slew the Prophets and Apostles, that all the righteous blood from Abel to Bradford, shed upon earth, may be required at their hands.

Oh this therefore I thought good before my death, as time and liberty would suffer me (for love and duty I bear unto thee) to admonish thee good Mother, and my Sister the Town, that you would call to mind from whence you are fallen, and study to do the first works. You know (if you will) these matters of the Romish Supremacy, and the Antichristian Transubstantiation, whereby Christs Supper is overthrowen, his Priesthood evacuate, his Sacrifice frustrate, the Ministry of his Word unplaced, Repentance repelled, Faith fainted, Godliness extinguished, the Mass maintained, idolatry supported, and all impiety cherished: you know I say (if you will) that these Opinions are not only besides Gods Word, but even directly against it, and therefore to take part with them, is to take part against God, against whom you cannot prevail.

Therefore for the tender mercy of Christ, in his bowels and blood I beseech you, to take Christs Collyrium and Eye-salve to anoint your eyes, that you may see what you do and have done in admitting (as I hear you have admitted, yea alas, authorized, and by consent confirmed) the Romish rotten rags, which once you utterly expelled. O be not Canis reversus ad vomitum. Be not Sus loto reversus ad volutabrum cæni. Beware lest the Satan enter in with seven other Spirits, and then postrema shall be worse then the first. It had been better ye had never known the truth, then after knowledge to run from it. Ah, who to this world and the things therein, which hath now so wrought with you. Oh that ever this dirt of the Devil should daub up the eye of the Realm. For thou, O Mother, art as the eye of the Realm. If thou be light and give shine, all the Body shall fare the better: But if thou the light be darkness, alas how great will the darkness be? What is man whose breath is in his nostrils, that thou should thus be afraid of him?

Oh what is honour and life here? Bubbles. What is the glory of this world, but shame? Why art thou afraid to carry Christs Cross? Wilt thou come into his Kingdom, and not drink of his Cup? Dost thou not know Rome to be Babylon? Dost thou not know that as the old Babylon had the Children of Judah in Captivity, so hath this Rome the true Judah, that is, the Confessors of Christ? Dost thou not know that as destruction hapned unto it, so shall it do unto this? And crowdst thou that God will not deliver his People now when the time is come, as he did then? Hath not God commanded his People to come out from her? and wilt thou give ensample to the whole Realm to run unto her? Hast thou forgotten the wo that Christ threatneth to offence givers? Wilt thou not remember that it were better that a Millstone were hanged about thy neck, and thou thrown into the Sea, then that thou shouldst offend the little ones?

And alas, how hast thou offended? Yea, and how dost thou still offend? Wilt thou consider things according to the outward shew? Was not the Synagogue more seemly and like to be the true Church, then the simple Flock of Christs Disciples? Hath not the Whore of Babylon more costly Arrays, and rich Apparel externally to set forth her self, then the homely Housewife of Christ? Where Anno 1555. where is the beauty of the Kings Daughter the Church of Christ? Without or within? Doth not David say, within? O remember that as they are happy which are not offended at Christ, so are they happy which are not offended at his poor Church. Can the Pope and his Prelates mean honestly, which make so much of the Wife and so little of the Husband? The Church they magnifie, but Christ they contemn. If this Church were an honest Woman (that is, Christs Wife) except they would make much of her Husband, Christ and his Word, the would not be made much of them.

Custom, Unity, Antiquity, Consistency or Multitude are marks discernible.

When Christ and his Apostles were upon earth, who was more like to be the true Church, they or the Prelates, Bishops, and Synagogue? If a Man should have followed custom, unity, antiquity, or the more part, should not Christ and his company have been cast out of the doors? Therefore bade Christ, Search the Scriptures. And good Mother, shall the Servant be above his Master? Shall we look for other entertainment at the hands of the World, then Christ and his dear Disciples found? Who was taken in Noah's time for the Church? Poor Noah and his Family, or others? Who was taken for Gods Church in Sodom? Lot, or others? and doth not Christ say; As it was then, so shall it go now towards the coming of the Son of Man? What meaneth Christ when he saith; Iniquity shall have the upper hand? Doth not he tell, that Charity shall wax cold? And who seeth not a wonderful great lack of Charity in those, which would now be taken for Christs Church? All that fear God in this Realm truly can tell more of this then I can write.

Mr. Thomas Darcy Preaching True Religion, Grindal, Haddon, Rogers, Sanders, Taylor.

Therefore, dear Mother, receive some admonition of one of thy poor Children, now going to be burned for the testimony of Jesus. Come again to Gods Truth; come out of Babylon; confess Christ and his true Doctrine; repent that which is past; make amends by declaring thy repentance by the fruits. Remember the Readings and Preachings of Gods Prophet the true Preacher Martin Bucer. Call to mind the threatenings of God, now something seen by thy Children Leaver and others. Let the exile of Leaver, Pilkington, Grindal, Haddon, Horn, Scorie, Ponts, &c. something awake thee. Let the Imprisonment of thy dear Sons, Crammer, Ridley, and Latimer move thee. Consider the Martyrdom of thy Chickens, Rogers, Sanders, Taylor. And now cast not away the poor admonition of me going to be burned also, and to receive the like Crown of Glory with my fellows. Take to heart Gods calling by us. Be not as Pharaoh was: for then will it happen unto thee as it did unto him. What is that? Hardness of heart. And what then? Destruction eternally both of Body and Soul. Ah therefore, good Mother, awake, awake, repent, repent, humble thy self, and make hast to turn to the Lord. For else it shall be more easie for Sodom and Gomorrab in the day of Judgment than for thee. O harden not your hearts; O stop not your ears to day in hearing Gods voyce; though it be by a most unworthy Messenger. O fear the Lord: for his anger is begun to kindle. Even now the Axe is laid to the root of the Tree.

Bradford prophesies before the time what would follow of carnall Gospeling, if repentance did not ensue.

You know I prophesied truly to you before the Sweat came, what would come, if you repented not your carnal Gospeling. And now I tell you before I depart hence, that the ears of Men will tingle to hear the vengeance of God that will fall upon you all, both Town and University, if you repent not; if you leave not your Idolatry, if you turn not speedily to the Lord, if you still be ashamed of Christs truth which you know.

Thorne, Thome, his teaching & moving to pray.

O Perne repent, O Thompson repent, O you Doctors, Bachelors, and Masters repent: O Major, Aldermen, and Town-dwellers repent, repent, that you may escape the near vengeance of the Lord. Rent your hearts, and come apace, calling on the Lord. Let us all say, Peccavimus, we have all sinned, we have done wickedly, we have not hearkened to thy voice, O Lord. Deal not with us after our deserts, but be merciful to our iniquities, for they are great. O pardon our offences. In thine anger remember thy mercy. Turn us unto thee, O Lord God of hosts, for the glory of thy names sake. Spare us and be merciful unto us. Let not the wicked People say, Where is now their God? for thine own sake, for thy names sake, deal mercifully with us. Turn thy servants unto thee, and unto thee, and we shall praise thy name for ever.

If in this sort (my dearly beloved) in Heart and Mouth we come unto our Father and prostrate our selves before the throne of his grace, then surely, surely we shall find mercy. Then shall the Lord look mercifully upon us, for his mercy sake in Christ: then shall we hear him speak peace unto his People. For he is gracious and merciful, of great pity and compassion: he cannot be chiding for ever; his anger cannot last long to the penitent. Though we weep in the morning, yet at night we shall have our sorrow to cease. For he is exorable, and hath no pleasure in the death of a Sinner: he rather would our conversion and turning.

Gods mercy promised to be repented.

Oh turn ye now and convert yet once again, I humbly beseech you, and then the Kingdom of Heaven shall draw nigh. The eye hath not seen, the ear hath not heard, nor the Heart of Man is able to conceive, the joys prepared for us if we repent, amend our lives, and heartily turn to the Lord. But if ye repent not, but be as you were, and go on forwards with the wicked, following the fashion of the World, the Lord will lead you on with wicked doers, you shall perish in your wickedness, your Blood will be upon your own heads; your parts shall be with Hypocrites, where shall be weeping and gnashing of teeth; ye shall be cast from the face of the Lord for ever and ever: eternal shame, sorrow, woe, and misery; shall be born in Body and Soul to you. Would without end. Oh therefore, right dear to me in the Lord, turn you, turn you, repent you, amend your lives, depart from evil, do good, follow peace and pursue it. Come out from Babylon, cast off the work of darkness, put on Christ, confess his truth, be not ashamed of his Gospel, prepare your selves to the Cross, drink of Gods Cup before it come to the dregs, and then shall I with you and for you, rejoyce in the day of Judgment, which is at hand, and therefore prepare your selves thereto, I heartily beseech you. And thus I take my Vale in aeternum, with you in this present life, mine own dear hearts in the Lord. The Lord of mercy be with us all, and give us a joyful and sure meeting in his Kingdom, Amen, Amen. Out of Prison the eleventh of February, Anno 1555.

Your own in the Lord for ever
John Bradford.

To Lancashire and Cheshire.

To all those that profess the Name and true Religion of our Saviour Christ in Lancashire and Cheshire, and specially abiding in Manchester and thereabout, John Bradford a most unworthy servant of the Lord, now not only in bonds, but also condemned for the same true Religion, witheth mercy and grace, peace, and increase of all godliness from God the Father of all pity, through the deserts of our Lord Jesus Christ, by the working of the most mighty and lively Spirit the Comforter for ever, Amen.

Another Letter of Mr. Bradford to Lancashire, Cheshire and specially to Manchester.

I heard it reported credibly, my dearly beloved in the Lord, that my Heavenly Father hath thought it good to provide, that as I have Preached his true Doctrine and Gospel amongst you by word, so I shall testify and confirm the same by deed; that is, I shall with you leave my life, which by his providence I first received there (for in Manchester was I born) for a seal to the Doctrine I have taught with you, and amongst you: so that if from henceforth you waver in the same, you have none excuse at all. I know the enemies of Christ, which exercise this cruelty upon me (I speak in respect of mine offence which is none to themwards) think by killing of me amongst you to affray you and others, lest they should attempt to teach Christ truly, or believe his Doctrine hereafter. But I doubt not but my Heavenly Father will by my death, more confirm you in his Truth for ever. And therefore I greatly rejoyce to see Satan and his Souldiers supplanted in their own sapience, which is plain foolishness amongst the wise indeed, that is, amongst such as have heard Gods Word, and do follow it: for they only are counted wise of the Wisdom of God our Saviour.

Indeed if I should simply consider my life with that which it ought to have been, and as God in his Law requireth, then could I not but cry as I do, Justus es Domine, & omnia judicia tua veras. Righteous art thou, O Lord, and and all thy judgments, are true. For I have much grieved thee, and transgressed thy holy precepts, not only before my praising the gospel, but thence also: yea, thence my coming into prison I do not excuse, but accuse myself before God and all his Church that I have grievously offended my Lord God, I have loved his Gospel as I should have done, I have fought my self, and not simply and only his glory and my Brethrens commodity, I have been too unthankfull, secure, carnal, Hypocritical, vain-glorious, &c. All which my evils, the Lord of mercy pardon me for his Christs sake, as I hope and certainly believe he hath done for his great mercy in Christ our Redeemer.

But when I consider the cause of my condemnation, I cannot but lament, that I do no more rejoice then I do. For it is Gods verity and Truth; So that the condemnation is not a condemnation of Bradford simply, but rather a condemnation of Christ and of his Truth. Bradford is nothing else but an Instrument in whom Christ and his Doctrine is condemned. And therefore my dearly beloved, rejoice, joyce and give thanks with me and for me, that ever God did vouchsafe so great a benefit to our Country, as to choose the most unworthy (I mean my self) to be one, in whom it would please him to suffer any kind of affliction: much more this violent kind of death, which I perceive is prepared for me with you for his sake. All glory and praise be given unto God our Father, for his great and exceeding mercy towards me through Jesus Christ our Lord, Amen.

But perchance you will say unto me, what is the cause for the which you are condemned? We hear say, that ye deny all presence of Christ in his holy Supper, and so make it a bare sign and common Bread, and nothing else. My dearly beloved, what is said of me, and what will be, I cannot tell. It is told me that Pendleton is gone down to preach with you, not as he once recanted (for you all know he hath Preached contrary to that he was wont to Preach afore I came amongst you) but to recant that which he hath recanted. How he will speak of me, and report before I come, when I am come, and when I am turned, I much pass not: for he that is so uncertain, and will speak so often against himself, I cannot think he will speak well of me, except it make for his purpose and profit: but of this enough.

Indeed the chief thing which I am condemned for, as an Heretick, is because I deny in the Sacrament of the Altar (which is not Christs Supper, but a plain perverting of it, being used as the Papists now use it) to be a real, natural, and corporal presence of Christs Body and Blood, under the forms and accidents of Bread and Wine, that is, because I deny Transubstantiation, which is the darling of the Devil, and daughter and heir to Antichrists Religion, whereby the Mass is maintained, Christs Supper perverted, his Sacrifice and Cross imperfect, his Priesthood destroyed, the Ministry taken away, Repentance repelled, and all true Godliness abandoned. In the Supper of our Lord, or Sacrament of Christs Body and Blood, I confess and believe that there is a true, and very presence of the whole Christ, God and Man, to the Faith of the receiver (but not of the stander by and looker on) as there is a very true presence of Bread and Wine to the senses of him that is partaker thereof: This Faith, this Doctrine, which consenteth with the Word of God, and with the true testimony of Christs Church, which the Popish Church doth persecute, will I not forsake, and therefore I am condemned as an Heretick, and shall be burned. But, my dearly beloved, this Truth (which I have taught, and you have received, I believed, and do believe, and therein give my life) I hope in God shall never be burned, bound, nor overcome: but shall triumph, have Victory, and be at liberty, maugre the head of all Gods adversaries. For there is no counsel against the Lord, nor can any device of Man be able to defeat the verity in any other then such as be Children of unbelief, which have no love to the Truth, and therefore are given up to believe lies. From which plague the Lord of mercy deliver you and all the Realm, my dear hearts in the Lord, I humbly beseech his mercy, Amen.

M. Bradford
travelled to the County of Lancaster
June.

And to the end you might be delivered from this plague, right dear to me in the Lord, I shall for my farewell with you for ever in this present life, heartily desire you all in the Bowels and Blood of our most merciful Anno Saviour Jesus Christ, to attend unto these things which I now shall shortly write unto you out of the Holy Scriptures of the Lord.

You know an heavy plague (or rather plagues) of Gods manifold plagues upon England in Q. Marys days. God is slain upon us, in taking away our good King, and true Religion, Gods true Prophets and Ministers, &c. And setting over us, such as seek not the Lord after knowledge: whose endeavours God prospereth wonderfully to the trial of many, that his People may both better know themselves, and be known. Now the cause hereof is our iniquities and grievous Sins. We did not know the time of our visitation: we were unthankfull unto God: we contemned the Gospel, and carnally abused it, to serve our Hypocritie, our vain-glory, our viciousness, avarice, idleness, security, &c. Long did the Lord linger, and tarry to have shewed mercy upon us, but we were ever the longer the worse. Therefore most justly hath God dealt with us, and dealt with us: yea, yet we may see that his justice is tempered with much mercy, wherefore let us attribute that we are not utterly consumed. For if the Lord should deal with us after our deserts, alas, how could we abide it? In his anger therefore, seeing he doth remember his mercy undeserved (yea undidest on our behalf) let us take occasion the more frequently to go out to meet him, not with force of arm, (for we are not so able to withstand him, much less to prevail against him) but to beseech him to be merciful unto us, and according to his wonted mercy to deal with us.

Let us arise with David, and say, Ne intres in iudicium cum servo tuo, &c. i. e. Enter not into judgment with thy Servant O Lord; for in thy sight no flesh living shall be justified. Let us send Embassadors with the Centurion, and say, Lord, we are not worthy to come ourselves unto thee: speak the word, and we shall have peace. Let us penitently with the Publican look down on the earth, knock our hard hearts to burst them, and cry out, O God be merciful unto us wretched Sinners: Let us with the lost Son return and say, O Father, we have sinned against Heaven and Earth, and before thee, we are unworthy to be called thy Children. Let us flay on this our fort, that is, heartily repent us of our former evil life, and unthankful Gospelling past, convert and turn to God with our whole hearts, hoping in his great mercy through Christ, and heartily calling upon his holy Name, and then undoubtedly we shall find and feel otherwise then yet we feel, both inwardly and outwardly. Inwardly we shall feel peace of Conscience between God and us, which peace passeth all understanding, and outwardly we shall feel much mitigation of these miseries, if not an utter taking of them away.

Therefore my dearly beloved in the Lord, I your poorest Brother now departing to the Lord, for my Vale in eternum for this present life, pray you, beseech you, and even from the very bottom of my heart, for all the mercies of God in Christ shewed unto you, most earnestly beg and crave of you out of Prison (as often out of your Pulpits I have done) that you will repent you, leave your wicked and evil life, be sorry for your offences, and turn to the Lord, whose arms are wide open to receive and embrace you, whose stretched out hand to strike to death stayeth that he may show mercy upon you. For he is the Lord of mercy, and God of all comfort, he will not the death of a Sinner, but rather that ye should return, convert, and amend. He hath no pleasure in the destruction of Men; his long suffering draweth to repentance before the time of vengeance, and the day of wrath which is at hand, doth come.

Now is the Ax laid to the Root of the Tree utterly to destroy the impatient. Now is the fire gone out before the face of the Lord, and who is able to quench it? Oh therefore repent you, repent you. It is enough to have lived as we have done. It is enough to have played the wanton Gospellers, the proud protestants, Hypocritical and false Christians, as alas, we have done. Now the Lord speaketh to us in mercy and grace: Oh turn before he speaketh in wrath. Yet is there mercy with the Lord, and plentiful redemption: yet he hath not forgotten to shew mercy to them that call upon him. Oh then call upon him while he may be found. For he is rich in mercy, and plentiful to all them that call upon him.

Bradford's Vale in eternum.

The day of Gods wrath at hand.

Wanton Gospellers. Proud Protestants. False Christians.

Anno 1555. So that he that calleth on the Name of the Lord, shall be saved. If your Sins be as red as scarlet, the Lord saith, he will make them as white as snow. He hath sworn, and never will repent him thereof, that he will never remember our iniquities: but as he is good, faithful, and true, so will he be our God, and we shall be his People; his Law will he write in our Hearts, and ingraft in our minds and never will he have in mind our unrighteousness.

Therefore, my dear hearts in the Lord, turn you, turn you to the Lord your Father, to the Lord your Saviour, to the Lord your Comforter. Oh why do you stop your ears, and harden your hearts to day, when you hear his Voice by me your poorest Brother? Oh forget not how that the Lord hath shewed himself true, and me his true Preacher, by bringing to pass these plagues which at my Mouth you oft heard before they came to pass, specially when I intreated of Noahs flood, and when I Preached of the twenty two Chapter of S. Matthews Gospel, on S. Stevens day the last time that I was with you. And now by me the Lord sendeth you word (dear Countrymen) that if you will go on forward in your Impenitency, Carnality, Hypocritie, Idolatry, Covetousness, Swearing, Gluttony, Drunkenness, Whoredom, &c. (where with, alas, alas, our Country floweth:) if I say you will not turn and leave off, seeing me now burned amongst you, to assure you of all sides how God seeketh you, and is sorry to do you hurt, to plague you, to destroy you, to take vengeance upon you, Oh your Blood will be upon your own heads: you have been warned, and warned again, by mein Preaching, by me in Burning.

As I said therefore, I say again, my dear hearts and dearlings in the Lord, turn you, turn you, repent you, cease from doing evil, study to do well, away with Idolatry, flye the Romish God and Service, leave off from Swearing, cut off Carnality, abandon Avarice, drive away Drunkenness, fly from Fornication and Flattery, Murder and Malice, destroy Deceitfulness, and cast away all the works of Darkness. Put on Piety and Godliness, serve God after his Word, and not after Custom, use your Tongues to glorifie God by Prayer, Thanksgiving, and Confession of his Truth, &c. be spiritual, and by the Spirit mortifie carnal affections, be Sober, Holy, True, Loving, Gentle, Merciful, and then shall the Lords wrath cease, not for this our doings sake, but for his mercies sake. Go to therefore (good Countrymen) take this Counsel of the Lord, by me now sent unto you, as the Lords Counsel, and not as mine, that in the day of Judgment I may rejoyce with you, and for you, the which thing I heartily desire, and not to be a witness against you. My Blood will cry for vengeance, as against the Papists Gods enemies (whom I beseech God, if it be his will, heartily to forgive, yes, even them which put me to death, and are the causes thereof, for they know not what they do) so will my Blood cry for vengeance against you (my dearly beloved in the Lord) if ye repent not, amend not, and turn unto the Lord.

Turn unto the Lord yet once more, I heartily beseech thee thou Manchester, thou Ashen-underline, thou Bolton, Bury, Wigmore, Liverpool, Morvins, Steppor, Winsley, Eccles, Priestwich, Middleton, Radelief, and thou City of Weschefer, where I have truly taught and Preached the Word of God. Turn, I say unto you all, and to all the Inhabitants thereof, unto the Lord our God, and he will turn unto you, he will say unto his Angel, it is enough, put up the Sword. The which thing that he will do, I humbly beseech his goodness, for the precious Bloods sake of his dear Son, our Saviour Jesus Christ. Ah good Brethren, take in good part these my last words unto every one of you. Pardon me mine offences and negligences in behaviour amongst you. The Lord of Mercy pardon us all our offences, for our Saviour Jesus Christs sake, Amen. Out of Prison ready to come to you, the eleventh of February, Anno 1555.

To the Town of Walden.

TO the Faithfull, and such as profess the true Doctrine of our Saviour Jesus Christ, dwelling at Walden, and thereabouts, John Bradford a most unworthy Servant of the Lord, now in bands and condemned for the same true Doctrine, witheth Grace, Mercy, and Peace, with the increase of all godliness in knowledge and living, from God the Father of all comfort, through the deserts of our alone and full Redeemer Jesus Christ, by the mighty working of the most Holy Spirit, the Comforter for ever, Amen.

When I remember, how that by the providence and Grace of God I have been a Man, by whom it hath pleased him through my Ministry to call you to Repentance and Amendment of Life, something effectually, as it seemed, and to sow amongst you his True Doctrine and Religion, lest that by my affliction, and storms now arisen to try the Faithful, and to conform them like to the Image of the Son of God, into whose company we are called, you might be faint-hearted; I could not but out of Prison secretly (for my Keepers may not know that I have Pen and Ink) write unto you a signification of the desire I have, that you should not only be more confirmed in the Doctrine I have taught amongst you, which I take on my death, as I shall answer at the day of doom, I am persuaded to be Gods assured, infallible, and plain Truth; but also should after your vocation avow the same by confession, profession, and living. I have not taught you (my dearly beloved in the Lord) fables, tales, or untruths, but I have taught you the verity, as now by my Blood, gladly (praised be God therefore) I do seal the same.

Indeed to confess the truth unto you, and to all the Church of Christ, I do not think of my self, but that I have most justly deserved, not only this kind, but also all kinds of death, and that eternally, for mine Hypocritie, Vain-glory, Uncleaness, Self-love, Covetousness, Idleness, Unthankfulness, and Carnal professing of God sholy Gospel, living therein not to purely, lovingly, and painfully as I should have done. The Lord of mercy for the Bloods sake of Christ pardon me, as I hope, yea, I certainly believe he hath done for his holy Names sake through Christ. But my dearly beloved, you and all the whole World may see, and easily perceive, that the Prelates persecute in me another thing then mine iniquities, even Christ himself. Christ Verity and Truth, because I cannot, dare not, nor will not confess Transubstantiation, and how that wicked Men, yea Mice and Dogs eating the Sacrament, which they term, of the Altar, thereby overthrowing Christs Holy Supper utterly, do eat Christs Natural and Real Body born of the Virgin Mary.

To believe and confess as Gods Word teacheth, the Primitive Church believed, and all the Catholick and good holy Fathers taught 900. years at the least after Christ, that in the Supper of the Lord (which the Mass overthroweth, as it doth Christs Priesthood, Sacrifice, Death, and Passion, the Ministry of his Word, true Faith, Repentance, and all Godliness) whole Christ, God and Man, is present by grace to the Faith of the receivers, but not of the standers by and lookers on, as Bread and Wine is to their senses, will not serve: and therefore I am condemned and shall be burned out of hand as an Heretic. Wherefore I heartily thank my Lord God, that will and doth vouch me worthy to be an Instrument, in whom he himself doth suffer. For you see my affliction and death is not simply, because I have deserved no less, but much more at his hands and justice: but rather because I confess his Verity and Truth, and am not afraid through his gift that to do, that you also might be confirmed in his Truth. Therefore my dearly beloved, I heartily do pray you, and so many as unfainedly love me in God, to give with me and for me most hearty thanks to our Heavenly Father, through our sweet Saviour Jesus Christ, for this his exceeding great mercy towards me and you also, that your Faith waver not from the Doctrine I have taught, and ye have received. For what can you desire more, to assure your Consciences of the Verity taught by your Preachers, than their own Lives?

Go to therefore, my dear hearts in the Lord, waver not in Christs Religion truly taught you, and sit fast in King Edwards days. Never shall the enemies be able to burn it, and Prison it, and keep it in bonds. Us they may Prison, they may bind and burn as they do, and will do, so long as shall please the Lord: but our Cause, Religion, and Doctrine which we confess, they shall never overcome, be able to vanquish and put away. Their Idolatry and Popish Religion shall never be built in the Consciences of Men that love Gods Truth. As for those that love not Gods truth, that have no pleasure to walk in the ways of the Lord, those those I say the Devil shall prevail. For God will give them strong illusion to believe lyes. Therefore dear Brethren, and Sisters in the Lord, I humbly beseech you and pray you in the Bowels and Blood of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ, now going to the death, for the Testimony of Jesus, as oftentimes I have done before this present out of your Pulpit, that you would love the Lords truth; love (I say) to love it, and frame your lives thereafter. Alas, you know the cause of all these plagues fallen upon us, and of the success which Gods adversaries have daily, is for our not loving Gods Word.

Gods Gospel should.

You know how that we were but Gospellers in lips, and not in life. We were carnal, concupiscentious, idle, unthankful, unclean, covetous, arrogant, dissemblers, crafty, subtle, malicious, false, backbiters, &c. and even ghighted with Gods Word, yea, we loathed it, as did the Israelites the Manna in the Wilderness; and therefore as to them the Lords wrath waxed hot, so doth it unto us. So that there is no remedy, but that (for it is better late to turn, than never to turn) we confess our faults even from the bottom of our Hearts, and with hearty repentance (which God work in us all for his mercies sake) we run unto the Lord our God, which is exorable, merciful, and sorry for the evil poured out upon us, and cry out unto him with Daniel, saying, We have Sinned, we have Sinned grievously, O Lord God, against thy Majesty, we have heaped Iniquity upon Iniquity; the measure of our Transgressions floweth over, so that justly is thy Vengeance and Wrath fallen upon us. For we are very miserable, we have contemned thy long suffering, we have not hearkened to thy Voice. When thou hast called us by Preachers, we hardened our Hearts, and therefore now deserve that thou send thy curse hereupon to harden our Hearts also that we should henceforth have eyes and see not, ears and hear not, hearts and understand not, left we should convert and be saved. Oh be merciful unto us, spare us good Lord, and all thy People, whom thou hast dearly bought. Let not thine enemies triumph altogether, and always against thee, for then will they be puffed up. Look down and behold the pitiful complaint of the poorlees the sorrowful fighting of the simple come in thy light, and be not angry with us for ever. Turn us O Lord God of hosts unto thee, and turn thee unto us, that thou mayst be justified in thy sweet Sentences, and overcome when thou art judged, as now thou art of our adversaries. For they say, Where is their God? Can God deliver them now? Can their Gospel serve them? O Lord how long? for the glory of thy name, and for thy honours sake, in the Bowels and Blood of Jesus Christ, we humbly beseech thee, come and help us, for we are very miserable.

He exhorteth to repentance and prayer, and to beware of sin before the Lord our God.

On this sort I say, dearly beloved, let us publicly and privately bewail our Sins; but so that hereto we joyn ceasing from wilfulness and Sin of purpose, for else the Lord heareth not our Prayer, as David saith. And in S. Johns it is written; The impenitent Sinners God heareth not. Now, impenitent are they which purpose not to amend their lives: As for example, not only, such which follow still their pleasures, uncleanness, carnality; but those also which for fear or favour of Men, do against their Consciences consent to the Romish Rags, and resort to the rotten Religion, communicating in Service and Ceremonies with the Papists, thereby declaring themselves to love more the World than God, to fear Man more than Christ; to dread more the loss of Temporal things than Spiritual; in whom it is evident that the love of God abideth not. For he that loveth the World, hath not Gods Word abiding in him, saith S. John: therefore my dear Hearts, and dear again in the Lord, remember what you have professed, Christs Religion and name, and the renouncing of the Devil, Sin, and the World.

He prays for sinners be not heard. Romish Rags and rotten Religion.

The A.B.C. of the Christian was Christs Cross. Forget not that Christ will have no Disciples, but such as will promise to deny themselves, and take up their Cross (mark, take it up) and follow him, and not the multitude, custom, &c. Consider for Gods sake, that if we gather not with Christ, we scatter abroad. What should it profit a Man to win the whole World, and lose his own Soul? We must not forget that this life is a Wilderness, and not a Paradise: here is not our home, we are now in warfare: we mult needs fight, or else be taken Prisoners. Of all things we have in this life, we shall carry nothing with us. If Christ be our Captain, we must follow him as Souldiers. If we keep company with him in affliction we shall be sure of his society in glory. If we forsake not him, he will never forsake us. If we confess him, he will confess us; but if we deny him, he will deny us. If we be ashamed of him, he will be ashamed of us. Wherefore, as he forsook his Father, and Heaven, and all things to come to us, so let us forsake all things and come to him, being sure and most certain that we shall not lose thereby. Your Children shall find, and feel it double, yea treble, whatsoever you lose for the Lords sake; and you shall find and feel peace of Conscience and friendship with God which is more worth than all the Goods of the World.

My dearly beloved, therefore for the Lords sake, consider these things which I now write unto you of love, for my vale, and last farewell for ever in this present life. Turn to the Lord, repent you of your evil and unthankful life, declare repentance by the fruits; take time while ye have it, come to the Lord while he calleth you; run into his lap, while his arms be open to embrace you; seek him while he may be found; call upon him while time is convenient; forsake and flye from all evil, Both in Religion, and in the rest of your life and Conversation. Let your light shine before Men, that they may see your good works, and praise God in the day of his visitation. Oh come again, come again you strange Children, and I will receive you, faith the Lord. Convert and turn to me, and I will turn unto you. Why, will ye needs perish? As sure as I live (sweareth the Lord) I will not your death; turn therefore unto me. Can a Woman forget the Child of her Womb? if she should, yet I will not forget you, faith the Lord your God. I am he, I am he which put away your Sins for mine own sake.

Oh then dear friends, turn I say unto your dearest Father. Cast not these sweet and loving words to the ground, and at your tail; for the Lord watcheth on his word to perform it: which is in two sorts; to them that lay it up in their hearts, and believe it, will he pay all, and eternal joy and comfort. But to them that call it at their backs, and will forget it, to them (I say) will he pour out Indignation and eternal flame. Wherefore I heartily yet once more beseech and pray you, and every of you, not to contemn this poor and simple exhortation, which now out of Prison I make unto you, or rather the Lord by me. Loath would I be a witness against you in the last day; as of truth I must be if ye repent not, if ye love not Gods Gospel, yea, if ye love it not.

Therefore (to conclude) repent, love Gods Gospel, live in it all your conversation, so shall Gods name be praised, his plagues be mitigated, his People comforted, and his enemies ashamed. Grant all this, thou gracious Lord God, to every one of us for thy dear Sons sake, our Saviour Jesus Christ: To whom with thee and the Holy Ghost be eternal glory for ever and ever. Amen. By the Bondman of our Lord, and your afflicted poor Brother, John Bradford.

To my loving Brethren, B.C. &c. their Wives and whole Families, J. Bradford.

I beseech the everliving God to grant you all, my good Brethren and Sisters, the comfort of the Holy Spirit, and the continual sense of his Mercy in Christ our Lord, now and for ever, Amen.

The World (my Brethren) seemeth to have the upper hand, Iniquity overfloweth, the truth and verity seemeth to be oppressed, and they which take part therewith, are unjustly intricated: they which love the truth, lament to see and hear, as they do. The cause of all this is Gods anger, and mercy: his anger, because we have grievously Sinned against him; his mercy, because he here punisheth us, and as a Father murreth us. We have been unthankful for his Word; We have contemned his kindness; We have been negligent in Prayer; We have been so carnal, covetous, licentious, &c. We have not hastened to Heaven.

punished.

Heaven-ward, but rather to Hell-ward. We were fallen almost into an open contempt of God, and all his good ordinances; so that of his justice he could no longer forbear, but make us feel his anger, as now he hath done, in taking his word and true service from us, and permitting Satan to serve us with Antichristian Religion, and that in such sort, that if we will not yield to it, and seem to allow it indeed and outward fact, our Bodies are like to be laid in prison, and our goods given we cannot tell to whom.

Exhortation to repentance and amendment.

This should we look upon as a sign of Gods anger procured by our sins; which my good Brethren, every of us should now call to our Memories oftentimes, so particularly as we can, that we might heartily lament them, repent them, hate them, ask earnestly mercy for them, and submit our selves to bear in this Life any kind of punishment, which God will lay upon us for them. This should we do in consideration of Gods anger in this time. Now his mercy in this time of wrath is seen, and should be seen in us, my dearly beloved, in this, that God doth vouchsafe to punish us in this present Life if he should not have punished us, do you not think that we would have continued in the evils we were in? Yes verily, we would have been worse, and have gone forwards in hardening our hearts by impenitence, and negligence of God and true godliness. And then if death had come, should not we have perished both Soul and Body in eternal fire in perdition? Alas, what misery should we have fallen into, if God should have suffered us to have gone on forward in our evils? No greater sign of Damnation there is, than to live in evil and sin unpunished of God, as now the Papists (my dearly beloved) are cast into Jehabab's Bed of security, which of all plagues is the most grievous that can be. They are Balgars and not Sons, they are not under Gods Rod of Correction.

A great mercy it is therefore, that God doth punish us: For if he loved us not, he would not punish us. Now doth he chastise us, that we should not be damned with the world. Now doth he nurture us, because he favoureth us. Now may we think our selves Gods House and Children, because he beginneth his chastising at us: Now calleth he us to remember our sins past. Wherefore? That we might repent, and ask mercy. And why? That he might forgive us, pardon us, justify us, and make us his Children, and so begin to make us here like unto Christ, that we might be like unto him elsewhere, even in Heaven, where already we are set by Faith with Christ; and at his coming in very deed we shall then most joyfully enjoy, when our sinful and vile Bodies shall be made like to Christs glorious Body, according to the power whereby he is able to make all things subject to himself.

Therefore my Brethren, let us in respect hereof not lament, but laud God, not be sorry, but be merry, not weep, but rejoice and be glad, that God doth vouchsafe to offer us his Cross, thereby to come to him to endless joys and comforts. For if we suffer, we shall reign, if we confess him before Men, he will confess us before his Father in Heaven; if we be not ashamed of his Gospel now, he will not be ashamed of us in the last day, but will be glorified in us, crowning us with Crowns of Glory and endless felicity: For, blessed are they that suffer Persecution for Righteousness sake, for theirs is the Kingdom of Heaven: Be glad (saith Peter) for the spirit of God resteth upon you. After that you are a little afflicted, God will comfort, strengthen and confirm you. And therefore, my good Brethren, be not discouraged for Cross, for Prison, or loss of Goods for confession of Christs Gospel and Truth which ye have believed, and lively taught amongst you in the days of our late good King, and most holy Prince, King Edward. This is most certain, if you lose any thing for Christs sake, and for condemning the Antichristian service, fear up again amongst us: as you for your parts even in prison shall find Gods great and rich mercy, far passing all Worldly wealth; so shall your Wives and Children in this present Life, find and feel Gods Providence, more plentifully than Tongue can tell. For he will show mercifull kindness on thousands of them that love him. The good Mans seed shall not go a begging his Bread. You are good Men, so many as suffer for Christs sake.

For few live godly in Christ Jesus, few regard the Life to come, few remember the day of Judgment, few remember how Christ will deny them before his Father, that do deny him here, few consider that Christ will be ashamed of them in the last day, which are ashamed of his Truth and true service, few cast their accounts, what will be laid to their charge in the day of vengeance, few regard the Condemnation of their own Consciences, in doing that which inwardly they disallow, few love God better than their Goods.

My dearly beloved, look not upon these days and the afflictions of the same here with us, simply as they seem unto you, that is, as dismal days, and days of Gods vengeance, but rather as lucky days, and days of Gods Fatherly kindness towards you, and such as you be, that is, towards such as repent their Sins and evil Life past, and earnestly purpose to amend, walking not after the will of the World, and most part of Men, for the preservation of their pelf, which, will they, nill they, they shall leave sooner or later, and to whom or how it shall be used, they know not. Indeed to such as walk in their wickedness, and wind on with the World, this time is a time of wrath and vengeance, and their beginning of sorrow is but new, because they contain the phylack of their Father, which by this purging time, and cleansing days would work their weal, which they will not; and because they

they will not have Gods blessing, which both ways he hath offered unto them by prosperity and adversity, therefore it shall be kept far enough from them. As when the sick Man will no kind of Physick at the hands of the Physician, he is left alone, and so the malady increaseth, and doth overtaken him at the length. To such Men indeed these days are and should be doleful days, and days of woe and weeping, because their Damnation draweth nigh.

But unto such as be penitent, and are desirous to live after the Lords will (among whom I do not only count you, but as far as a Man may judge, I know ye are) unto such I say this time is and should be comfortable. For first, now your Father chastiseth you as I me for our Sins, for the which if he would have destroyed us, then would he have letten us alone, and left us to our selves, in nothing to take to heart his Fatherly visitation, which here it pleaseth him to work presently, because elsewhere he will not remember our Transgressions, as Paul writeth he chastiseth us in this World, left with the World we should perish. Therefore (my dear hearts) call to mind your Sins to lament them, and to ask mercy for them in his sight, and withal undoubtedly believe to obtain pardon and assured forgiveness of the same, for twice the Lord punisheth not for one thing.

So that, I say, first we have cause to rejoyce for these days, because our Father suffereth us not to lye in Jehabes Beds, sleeping in our own Sins and Security, but as mindful of us, doth correct us as his Children. Whereby we may be certain, that we be no Bastards, but Children; for he chastiseth every Child whom he receiveth. So that they which are not partakers of his chastising, or that contemn it, declare themselves to be Bastards, and not Children, as I know you are, which, as ye are chastised, so do ye take it to heart accordingly. And therefore be glad my dear hearts and folks, knowing certainly even by these visitations of the Lord, that ye are his dear elect Children, whose faults your Father doth visit with the Rod of Correction, but his mercy will he never take away from us, Amen.

Secondly, ye have cause to rejoyce for these days, because they are days of trial, wherein not only ye your selves, but also the World shall know that ye be none of his, but the Lords Dealings. Before these days came, Lord God, how many thought of themselves, they had been in Gods Bosom, and so were taken, and would be taken of the World? But now we see whose they are. For to whom we obey, his servants we are. If we obey the World (which God forbid) and hitherto ye have not done it; then are we the Worlds; but if we obey God, then are we Gods. Which thing (I mean that ye are Gods) these days have declared both to you, to me, and to all other that know you, better than ever we knew it. Therefore ye have no cause to sorrow, but rather to sing, in ticing your selves to be Gods Babels, and in seeing that all Gods Children do so count you.

What though the World repine thereat? What though he kick? What though he seek to trouble and molest you? My dear hearts, he doth but his kind: he cannot love the Lord, which liveth not in the Lord: he cannot brook the Child, that hateth the Father; he cannot mind the fervent, that careth not for the Master. If ye were of the World, the World would love you, ye should dwell quietly, there would be no grief, no molestation. If the Devil dwelt in you (which the Lord forbid) he would not stir up his Knights to besiege your house, to snatch your goods, or suffer his Fiends to enter into your Hogs. But because Christ dwelleth in you (as he doth by Faith) therefore stirreth he up his first-born Son, the World, to seek how to disquiet you, to rob you, to spoil you, to destroy you; and perchance your dear Father, to try and to make known unto you, and to the World, that ye are destinate to another dwelling then here on Earth, to another City than Mans eyes have seen at any time; hath given or will give power to Satan, and to the World, to take from you the things which he hath lent you, and by taking them away, to try your fidelity, obedience, and love towards him (for ye may not love them above him) as by giving that ye have, and keeping it, he hath declared his love towards you.

Satan perchance telleth God (as he did of Job) that ye love God for your goods sake. What now then, if the Lord to try you with Job, shall give him power on your Goods and Body accordingly, should ye be dismayed? Should ye despair? Should ye be faint-hearted? Should ye not rather rejoyce, as did the Apostles, that they were counted worthy to suffer any thing for the Lords sake? Oh forget not the end that happened to Job: for as it hapned to him, so shall it happen unto you. For God is the same God, and cannot long forget to shew mercy to them that look and long for it, as I know ye do, and I pray you so to do still. For the Lord loveth you, and never can nor will forget to shew and pour out his mercy upon you. After a little while that he hath afflicted and tried you (saith Peter) he will visit, comfort, and confirm you. As to Jacob wrestling with the Angel, at the length morning came, and the Sun arose; so, dear hearts, doubtless it will happen unto you. Howbeit, do ye as Job and Jacob did, that is, order and dispose your things that God hath lent you, as ye may, and whiles ye have time. Who knoweth whether God hath given you power thus long, even to that end?

Go to therefore, dispose your goods, prepare your selves to trial, that either ye may stand to it like Gods Champions, or else if you feel such infirmity in your selves that ye be not able, give place to violence, and go where you may with free and safe Conscience serve the Lord. Think not this counsel to come by chance, or fortune, but to come from the Lord. Other Oracles we may not look for now. As God told Joseph in a dream by an Angel, that he should flye, so if you feel such infirmity in your selves, as should turn to Gods dishonour, and your own destruction withal, know that at this present I am as Gods Angel, to admonish you to take time whiles ye have it, and to see that in no case Gods name by you might be dishonoured. Joseph might have objected the omission of his vocation, as perchance ye will do. But (dear hearts) let vocations and all things else give place to Gods name, and the sanctifying thereof.

This I speak, not as though I would not have you rather to tarry, and to stand to it: but I spake it in respect of your infirmity, which if you feel to be so great in you, that you are not certain of this hope, that God will never tempt you above your ability, flye and get you hence, and know that thereby God will have you tried to your selves and to others. For by it you shall know how to take this World, and that your home here is no home, but that ye look for another, and so give occasion to others less to love this World, and perchance to some to doubt of their Religion. Wherein though they be earnest, yet would they not looke so much as ye do for your Religion, which ye do confirm to me and others, by your giving place to violence.

Last of all, ye have cause to rejoyce over these tribulation days, because they be the days of Confirmation, in the which, and by which, God our Heavenly Father maketh us like unto Christs Image here, that we may be like unto of Christ. Reign also with him; if we be buried with him, then we shall rise with him again: if that we company with him in all troubles and afflictions, then we shall rejoyce with him in glory: if we now sow with him in tears, we shall reap with him in gladness: if we confess him before Men, he will confess us before his Father in Heaven: if we take his part, he will take ours: if we leave ought for his names sake, he will give us all things for his truths sake. So that we ought to rejoyce and be glad; for it is not given to every one to suffer loss of country, life, goods, house, &c. for the Lords sake. What can God the Father do more unto us, than to call us into the Camp with his Son? What may Christ our Saviour do more for us, than to make us his Warriours? What can the holy Ghost do to us above this, to mark us with the cognizance of the Lord of hosts?

This cognizance of the Lord, standeth not in forked caps, tippets, shaven crowns, or such other baggage and Antichristian pells, but in suffering for the Lords sake. The World shall hate you, faith Christ. La, there is the cognizance and badge of Gods Children: The World shall hate you. Rejoyce therefore (my dearly beloved) rejoyce that God doth thus vouchsafe to begin to conform you, and to make you like to Christ. By the trial of these days ye are occasioned more to repent, more to pray, more to contemn this

The everlasting Peace of Christ be more and more lively felt in our hearts, by the operation of the Holy Ghost, now and for ever, Amen.

Although I know it to be more than needles to write any thing unto you (good Sister,) being, as I doubt not but you be, diligently exercised in reading of the Scriptures, in meditating of the same, and in hearty prayer to God for the help of his Holy Spirit, to have the sense and feeling, especially of the comforts you read in Gods sweet Book: yet having such opportunity, and knowing not whether hereafter I shall ever have the like, as this bringer can declare, I thought good in few words to take up my farewell in writing, because otherwise I cannot. And now methinks I have done it. For what else can I, or should I say unto you (my dearly Beloved in the Lord) but farewell? Farewell, dear Sister, farewell; howbeit in the Lord, our Lord (I say) farewell. In him shall you farewell, and so much the better, by how much in your self you fare evil, and shall fare evil.

When I speak of your self, I mean also this world, this life, and all things properly pertaining to this life. In them as you look not for your welfare, so be not dismayed, when accordingly you shall not feed it. To the Lord our God, to the Lamb our Christ, which hath born our sins on his back, and is our Mediator for ever, do I send you. In him look for welfare, and that without all wavering, because of his own goodness and truth, which our evils and untruth cannot take away: Not that therefore I would have you to flatter your self in any evil or unbeliev, but that I would comfort you, that they should not dismay you. Yours is our Christ wholly, yours I say he is, with all that ever he hath. Is not this welfare, now you? Mountains shall move, and the Earth shall fall, before you find it otherwise, say that I say Satan what he list.

Therefore, good Sister, farewell, and be merry in the Lord, be merry I say, for you have good cause. If your welfare, joy, and salvation hanged upon any other thing than only Gods mercy and truth, then might you well be sad, heavy, and stand in a doubt, but in that it hangeeth only upon these two, tell Satan he lyeth, when he would have you to stand in a mammering, by causing you to cast your eyes (which only in this case should be set on Christ your sweet Saviour) on your self. In some part indeed look on your self, on your Faith, on your Love, Obedience, &c. to wake you up from security, to stir you up to diligence, in doing the things appertaining to your vocation: but when you would be at peace with God, and have true consolation in your Confidence, altogether look upon the goodness of God in Christ. Think on this Commandment which precedeth all other, That you must have no other Gods but the Lord Jehovah, which is your Lord and God: the which he could not be, if that he did not pardon your sins in very deed. Remember that Christ commandeth you to call him Father for the same intent. And hereto call to mind all the benefits of God, hitherto shewed upon you: and so shall you feel in very deed, that which I wish unto you now, and pray you to with unto me. Farewell, or welfare in the Lord Jesus, with whom he grant us shortly to meet as his Children, for his name and mercies sake, to our eternal welfare, Amen.

To mine own dear Brother, Mr. Lawrence Sanders, Prisoner in the Marshalsea.

A Letter of Mr. Bradford to Mr. Sanders. MY good Brother, I beseech our good and gracious Father always to continue his gracious favour and love towards us, and by us, as by Instruments of his grace, to work his glory and the confusion of his Adversaries. Ex ore Infantium & lactentium fundet laudem ad destrucendum inimicum. &c. id est, Out of the mouth of Infants and Babies, he will shew forth his praise to destroy the Enemy, &c.

I have perused your Letters to my self, and have read them to others. For answer whereof, if I should write what Dr. Taylor and Mr. Philpote do think, then must I say, that they think, the Salt sent unto us by your * Friend, is unseasonable. And I think they both will declare it heartily, if they should come before men. As for me, if you would know what I think (my good and most dear Brother Lawrence) because I am so sinful and so corrupture (the Lord knoweth I lye not) with many grievous sins which I hope are washed away Sanguine Christi nostris, I neither can nor would be consulted withal, but as a Cypher in Agrime. Howbeit, to tell you how and what I mind, take this for a sum: I pray God in no case I may seek my self, and indeed (I thank God therefore) I purpose it not.

*Quod reliquum est Domino Deo meo committo, & spero in illum, quod ipse faciet juxta hoc; Jalsa in Dominum curam, &c. Omnis cura vestra conjeta sit in illum, &c. Revela Domino viam tuam, & spera, &c. Sperantem in Domino misericordia circumdabit: id est, That which remaineth, I commit to my Lord God; and I trust in him, that he will do according to this; Cast thy care on the Lord, &c. Cast all your care upon him, &c. Revel unto the Lord thy way, and trust, &c. Who that trusteth in the Lord, mercy shall compass him about. I did not, nor do not know, but by your Letters, quod cras we shall come coram nobis. Mine own heart, still stick to dabitur vobis.*

Fidelis enim est Dominus, dabit in tentatione eventum quo possumus sustinere. Novus Dominus pius & tentatione eripere, &c. O utinam pius ego essem. Novus Dominus in die tribulationis sperantes in se, &c. id est, It shall be given you, &c. for the Lord is faithful. He will in temptation make a way that ye may be able to bear it. The Lord knoweth how to rid out of temptation the godly, &c. O would God I were godly. The Lord knoweth how to deliver out of temptation such as trust in him, &c. I cannot think that they will offer any kind of indifferent or mean conditions: for if we will not adore Besham, we never shall be delivered, but against their will, think I, God our Father and gracious Lord make perfect the good he hath begun in us.

Faciet mi frater, charissime frater, quem in intimis visceribus habeo ad convivendum & commorandum. O si tecum essem. He will do so my Brother, my dear Brother, whom I have in my inward bowels to live and dye with. O if I were with you. Pray for me my own heart ropt in the Lord.

For ever your own, John Bradford.

Another Letter to Mr. Lawrence Sanders.

Gods Sweet Peace in Christ be with you, my good Brother in the Lord Jesus, and with all your Captives, Amen.

I was letted this morning from musing on that which I was purposed to have thought on by reason of you, against whom I saw my self guilty of negligence, even in this point that I would not write, I should say, that I had not written unto you as yet: therefore out of hand in manner I prepared my self to purge my self hereof, not that I will go about to excuse my fault (for that were more to load me) but by asking both God and you pardon, to get it no more laid to my charge. Now when I was thus purposing, and partly doing, cometh there one with a Letter from you: for the which as I have cause to thank God and you (howbeit not so that you should think, I give not the whole to God) so I see my self more blame-worthy, for this long holding my peace. Howbeit (good Brother) in this I have given a demonstration to you, to behold my negligence in all other things, and especially in praying for you, and for the Church of God, which for my sins and hypocrite (hypocrite indeed even in this writing, God deliver me from it) have deserved to be punished. Just is God, for we have deserved all kind of plagues at his hands: but yet merciful is he that will on this wise chastise us with this World, Ne cum mundo condemnemur. i. That we should not be condemned in this World. He might otherwise have punished us, I mean, he might have for other causes cast us in Prison, as especially, then for his Gospel and Words sake. Praised therefore be his Name, which voucheth us worthy this honour. Ah good

Ah good Brother, if I could always have God, his Majesty, Mercy, Heaven, Hell, &c. before mine eyes, then should I Obdurate, as Paul writeth of Meles, Hebr. 1. 1. Obduravit, inquit, perinde quasi vidisset eum qui est invisibilis. He endured, faith he, as he that saw him which is invisible. Pray for me, as I know you do, and give thanks also: for, In Domino spero, non mutabo. Si amine Lavero per vallem umbrae mortis, non timebo, quia tu Domine mecum es, &c. Amen. In the Lord I trust, I shall not waver. If I walk by the valley of the shadow of death, I will not fear, for thou art with me, O Lord. I think we shall best shortly call forth; for now legem habent, & secundum legem, &c. otherwise will they not reason with us; And I think their shoot-Anchor will be, to have us to subscribe. The which thing if we do, though with this condition (so far as the thing subscribed to, repugneth not against Gods Word) yet this will be offensive. Therefore let us vadere plant, and so sane, I mean, let us all confess that we are no changelings, but reipa, are the same we were in Religion, and therefore cannot subscribe except we will dissemble both with God, our selves, and the world. Hæc tibi scribo, frater mi charissime in Domino.

Another Letter of M. Bradford to Dr. Cranmer, Dr. Ridley, and Dr. Latimer.

Jesus Emmanuel. My dear Fathers in the Lord, I beseech God our sweet Father through Christ, to make perfect the good he hath begun in us all, Amen.

I had thought that every of your staves had stood next the door, but now it is otherwise perceived. Our dear Brother Rogers hath broken the Ice valiantly, as this day (I think) or to-morrow at the uttermost, hearty Hosper, sincere Sander, and trusty Taylor end their course, and receive their Crown. The next am I, which hourly look for the Porter to open me the gates after them, to enter into the desired rest. God forgive me mine unthankfulness for this exceeding great mercy, that amongst so many thousands it pleaseth his Mercy to chuse me to be one, in whom he will suffer. For although it be most true, that juste pator, i. iustly suffer, for I have been a great hypocrite, and a grievous sinner, the Lord pardon me, yea, he hath done it, he hath done it indeed! yet hic auctori quid mali fecit? i. What evil hath he done? Christ, whom the Prelates persecute, his verity which they hate in me, hath done no evil, nor deserveth death. Therefore ought I most heartily to rejoice of this dignation and tender kindness of the Lords towards me, which useth remedy for my sin as a testimonial of his Testament, to his glory, to my everlasting comfort, to the edifying of his Church, and to the overthrowing of Antichrist and his Kingdom. Oh what am I, Lord, that thou shouldst thus magnify me so vile a Man and Miser, as always I have been? Is this thy wont, to fend for such a wretch and an hypocrite as I have been, in a fiery Chariot, as thou didst for Helias? Oh dear Fathers, be thankful for me, that I still might be found worthy in whom the Lord would sanctify his holy Name. And for your part, make you ready: for we are but your Gentlemen-Ussers. Nuptiæ agni paratæ sunt, venite ad nuptias. i. The marriage of the Lamb is prepared, come unto the marriage. I now go to leave my flesh there, where I received it. I shall be conveyed thither, as Ignatius was at Rome, Leopardus; by whose evil I hope to be made better. God grant, if it be his will that I ask, it may make them better by me, Amen.

For my farewell therefore, I write and send this unto you, trusting shortly to see you where we shall never be separated. In the mean season I will not cease, as I have done, to commend you to our Father of Heaven; and that you would so do by me, I most heartily pray every one of you: you know now I have most need. But

John Bradford.

To the Right Honourable Lord Russell, now Earl of Bedford, being then in trouble for the verity of Gods Gospel.

The everlasting and most gracious God and Father of our Saviour Jesus Christ, bless your good Lordship with all manner of heavenly blessings in the same Christ our only comfort and hope, Amen.

Praised be God our Father, which hath vouch'd you worthy, as of Faith in his Christ, so of his Cross for the same. Magnified be his holy Name, who as he hath delivered you from one Cross, so he hath made you willing (I trust) and ready to bear another when he shall see his time to lay it upon you: for these are the most singular gifts of God, given as to few, so to none else but to those few which are most dear to his sight. Faith is reckoned, and worthily, among the greatest gifts of God, yea, it is the greatest gift itself that we may enjoy. For by it, as we be justified and made Gods Children, so are we Temples and workshouses of the Holy Spirit, yea of Christ also. Ephes. 4. And of the Father himself, John 14. By Faith we drive the Devil away, Pet. 5. We overcome the world, 1 John 5. And are already Citizens of Heaven, and Fellow with Gods dear Saints. But who is able to reckon the riches that this Faith bringeth with her unto the Soul the stretch upon? No man nor Angel. And therefore (as I said) of all Gods gifts she may be set in the top, and have the upmost seat. The which thing if men considered, in that she cometh alone from Gods own Mercy (scilicet by the hearing, not of Man or Martins, Dirges, or such doleful words of God in such a Tongue as we can and do understand) as they would be diligent and take great heed for doing or seeing any thing which might cast her down (for then they fall also) so would they with no less care read and hear Gods holy Word, joyning therein most earnest and often Prayer, as well for the more and better understanding, as for the loving, living, and confessing of the same, maugre the head of the Devil, the World, our Flesh, Reason, Goods, Possessions, carnal Friends, Wife, Children, and very life here; if they should pull us back to hearken to their voice and counsel, for more quiet, sure, and longer use of them.

Now notwithstanding this excellency of Faith, in that whilst we read the Apostle to match therewith, yea, as it were) to prefer, suffering persecution for Christs sake, I trow no man will be so fond as to think otherwise, but that I and all Gods Children have cause to glorify and praise God, which hath vouch'd you worthy so great a blessing. For though the reason or wisdom of the world, think of the Cross according to their reach, and according to their present sense, and therefore flieeth from it as from a most great ignominy and shame: Yet Gods Scholars have learned otherwise to think of the Cross, that is like frame-house in the which God frameth his Children like to his Son Christ; the furnace that smelt Gods gold; the high-way to Heaven; the use and Livory that Gods servants are served withal; the

A pithy and effectual Letter of M^r. Bradford to M^r. Warcup.

The time I receive is come wherein the Lords ground will be known, I mean, it will now shortly appear who have received Gods Gospel into their hearts indeed, to the taking of good root therein : for such will not for a little heat or Sun-burning wither, but stiffly will stand and grow on; mauge the malice of all burning flowers and tempests. And forasmuch as (my Beloved in the Lord) I am periwaded of you, that ye be indeed the Children of God, Gods good ground, which groweth and will grow on (by Gods grace) bringing forth fruit to Gods glory after your vocations , as occasions shall be offered, (burn the Sun never so hot) therefore I cannot but so signify unto you, and heartily pray you and every one of you, accordingly to go on forwards after your Master Christ, not sticking at the foul way and stormy weather, which you are to come into, and are like so to do : of this being most certain, that the end of your Journey shall be pleasant and joyful in such a perpetual rest and blissfulness, as cannot but swallow up the shoures that ye now keel and are souled in; if ye often sit it before your eyes, after Pauls counsel in the latter end of the fourth, and beginning of the fifth Chapter of the second Epistle to the Cerinthians. Read it I pray you, and remember it often as a restorative to refresh you, left ye faint in the way.

And befidds this fet before ye also, that though the weather be foul, and florms grow apace, yet go not ye alone, but with your Brothers and Sisters tread the flame-path, as S. Peter telleth us: and therefore company should cause ye to be the more courageous and cheerful. But if ye had no company at all to go freely with you, I pray you tell me, if even from the beginning, the best of God-friends have found any fairer weather and way to the place whither ye are going (I mean Heaven) than ye now are, and are like to do, except ye will with the worldlings, which have their portion in this life, tarry till by the way till the florms be overpast, and then either night will fo approach that ye cannot travel, either the doors will be barred before ye come, and fo ye then lodge within in wonderful and evil lodgings. Read Apocalyp. 22. Begin at Abel and come from him to Noah, Abraham, Isaac, Jacob, Joseph, the Patriarchs, Moses, David, Daniel, and all the Saints of the Old Testament, and tell me whether ever any of them found any fairer way than ye now find.

If the Old Testament will not serve, I pray you come to the New, and begin with Mary and Joseph, and come from them to Zachary and Elizabeth, John Baptist and every one of the Apostles and Evangelists, and search whether they all found any other way into the City we travel towards, than by many tribulations.

Besides thereof, if ye should call to remembrance the Primitive Church, Lord God, ye should see many to have given cheerfully their Bodies to most grievous torments, rather than they would be stopped in their Journey, that there is no day in the year, but I dare say a thousand was the fewest that with great joy left their homes here, but in the City they went unto, have found other manner of homes than Mans mind is able to conceive. But if none of these were, if ye had no company now to go with you, as you have me your poor Brother and Bondman of the Lord who may be called a King, and yet am no other of the Fathers, Patriarchs, Kings, Prophets, Apostles, Evangelists, Martyrs, and other holy Saints and Children of God, that in their Journey to Heavenward, found as ye now find, and are like to find if ye go on forward, as I trust ye will, yet ye have your Master and your Captain Jesu Christ, the dear darling and only begotten and beloved Son of God, in whom was all the Fathers pleasure, joy and delectation, ye have him to go before you, no fairer way, but much fouler into this our City of Jerusalem. I need not (I trust) to rehearse what manner of way he found. Begin at his birth, and till ye come at his burial, ye shall find that every foot and stride of his Journey was no better, but much worse than yours is now.

We must not be so dainty, to look for faster ones, than Christ himself went thorow.

Wherefore (my dearly beloved in the Lord) be not so dainty, as to look for that at Gods hands, your dear Father, which the Fathers, Patriarchs, Prophets, Apostles, Evangelists, Martyrs, Saints, and his own Son Jesus Christ did not find. Hitherto we have had fair way (I trow) and fair weather also: now because we have loitered by the way, and not made the speed we should have done, our loving Lord and sweet Father hath overcast the weather, and stirred up the storms and tempests, that we might with more haste run out our race before night come, and the doors be barred. The Devil standeth now at every Inn door in his City and Country of this World, crying unto us to tarry and lodge in this or that place till the storms be overpast; not that he would not have us wet to the skin, but that the time might overpass us to our utter destruction. Therefore beware of his enticements. Cast not your eyes on things that be present, how this man doth, and how that man doth: but cast your eyes on the gleeve ye run at, or else ye will lose the game. Ye know that he which runneth at the gleeve, doth not look on others that stand by, and go this way or that way, but altogether he looketh on the gleeve, and on them that run with him, that those which be behind overtake him not, and that he may overtake them which be before: even so should we do, leave off looking on those which will not run the race to Heavens bliss by the path of Persecution with us, and cast our eyes on the end of our race, and on them that go before us, that we may overtake them, and on them which come after us, that we may provoke them to come the faster after.

the mark.

He that shooteth, will not cast his eyes in his shooting on them that stand by, or ride by the ways (I trow), but rather at the mark he shooteth at: for else he were like to win the wrong way: Even so, my dearly beloved, let your eyes be set on the mark ye shoot at, even Christ Jesus, who for the Joy felt before him, did joyfully carry his Cross, contemning the shame, and therefore he now sitteth on the right hand of the Throne of God. Let us follow him: for this did he that we should not be faint-hearted. For we may be most assured, that if we suffer with him, we shall undoubtedly reign with him: but if we deny him, surely he will deny us; for he that is ashamed of me, faith Christ, and of my Gospel, in this faithless Generation, I will be ashamed of him before the Angels of God in Heaven. Oh how heavy a Sentence is this to all such as know the Mass to be an abominable Idol, full of Idolatry, Blasphemy and Sacrilege against God and his Christ, (as undoubtedly it is) and yet for fear of men, for loss of life or goods, yea, some for advantage and gain, will honestly it with their presence, dissembling both with God and Man, as their own heart and Conscience doth accuse them. Better it were that such had never known the Truth, than thus wittingly, and for fear or favour of man, whose breath is in his nostrils, to dissemble it, or rather (as indeed it is) to deny it. The end of such is like to be worse than their beginning. Such had need to take heed of the two terrible places to the Hebrews in the 6 and 10. Chapters, left by fo doing they fall therein. Let them beware they play no wily beguile with themselves, as some do I fear me, which go to Mass, and because they worship not nor kneel not, nor knock not as others do, but sit still in their Pews, therefore they think they rather do good to others than hurt.

Differ-encing Golpellers.

But (alas) if these men would look into their own Consciences, there should they see they are very Dissemblers, and in seeking to deceive others (for by this means the Magistrates think them of their sort) they deceive themselves. They think at the elevation time, all mens eyes are set upon them, to mark how they do. They think others, hearing of such men going to Mass, do see, or enquire of their behaviour there. Oh if there were in those men that are so present at the Mass, either love to God, or to their Brethren, then would they for the one or both, openly take Gods part, and admonish the people of their Idolatry. They fear man more than him which hath power to cast both Soul and Body into Hell fire: they haile on both knees: they serve two Masters. God have mercy upon such, and open their eyes with his Eye-salve, that they may see, that they which take no part with God are against God, and that they which gather not with Christ, do scatter abroad. Oh that they would read what St. John faith will be done to the fearful. The counsel given to the Church of Laodicea, is good counsel for such.

Apoc. 3.

But to return to you again (dearly Beloved,) be not ye ashamed of Gods Gospel: It is the power of God to salvation to all those that do believe it. Be therefore partakers of the afflictions, as God shall make you able, knowing for certain, that he will never tempt you farther than he will make you able to bear: and think it no small grace of God to suffer persecution for Gods Truth: for the Spirit of God resteth upon you, and ye are happy as one day ye shall see. Read 2 Thessalonians 1. Hebrews 12. As the fire burneth not gold, but maketh it finer, so shall ye be more pure by suffering with Christ, 1 Pet. 1. The hail and wind hurteth not the wheat, but cleareth it from the chaff. And ye (dearly Beloved) are Gods wheat: fear not therefore the hail: fear not the fanning wind, fear not the Millstone, fear not the Oven: for all these make you more meet for the Lords own Tooth. Sope, though it be black, soileth not the cloth, but rather at the length maketh it more clean: so doth the black Cross help us to more whiteness, if God strike with his Battledore. Because ye are Gods Sheep, prepare your selves to the slaughter, always knowing that in the sight of the Lord our death shall be precious. The Souls under the Altar look for us to fill up their number: happy are we if God have so appointed us. Howsoever it be (dearly Beloved) cast your selves wholly upon the Lord, with whom all the hairs of your heads are numbered, so that not one of them shall perish. Will we, will we, we must drink Gods Cup, if he have appointed it for us. Drink it willingly then, and at the first when it is full, lest peradventure if we linger, we shall drink at the length of the dregs with the wicked, if at the beginning we drink not with his Children: for with them his Judgment beginneth, and when he hath wrought his will on Mount Sion, then will he visit the Nations round about.

Submit your selves therefore under the mighty hand of the Lord. No man shall touch you without his knowledge. When they touch you therefore, know it is your weal. God thereby will work to make you like unto Christ here, that ye may be also like unto him elsewhere. Acknowledge your unthankfulness and sin, and bless God that correcteth you in the world, because you shall not be damned with the world. Otherwise might he correct us, than in making us to suffer for Righteousness sake: but this he doth because we are not of the world. Call upon his Name through Christ for his help, as he commandeth us. Believe that he is merciful to you, heareth you, and helpeth you: I am with him in trouble, and will deliver him, faith he. Know that God hath appointed bounds, over which the Devil and all the world shall not pass. If all things seem to be against us, yet say with Job, if he will kill me, I will hope in him. Read the 1. P. Psalm, and pray for me your poor Brother and Fellow-sufferer for Gods Gospel sake, his Name therefore be praised; and of his mercy he make me and you worthy to suffer with good Conscience for his Names sake. Dye once we must, and when we know not: happy are they to whom God giveth to pay Natures debt. I mean, to dye for his sake.

to Sir James
Hales, knight

THE GOD of Mercy, and Father of all Comfort, plentifully pour out upon you and in you his Mercy, and with his Consolations comfort and strengthen you to the end, for his and our Comforts sake.

Although, right worshipful Sir; many causes might move me to be content with crying for you to your God and my God, that he would give you grace to persevere well, as he hath right notably begun, to the great glory of his Name, and Comfort of all such as fear him; as lack of learning, of familiarity, yea, acquaintance (for I think I am unknown to you, both by face and Name) and other such like things; yet I cannot content my self, but presume something to scribble unto you, not that I think my scribbling can do you any good, but that I might declare my exultation and compassion, love, and affection I bear towards your mastership, which is contented, yea desirous with us poor misers, to confess Christs Gospel in these perillous times and days of tryal. Oh Lord God, how good art thou, which dost thus glean out grapes, I mean Children for thy self, and Brethren for Christ! Look, good Master Hales, on your vocation; not many Judges, not many Knights, not many landed men, not many rich men, and wealthy to live as you are, hath God chosen to suffer for his sake, as he hath now done you. Certainly I dare say you think not so of your self, as though God were bound to prefer you, or had need of you, but rather attribute this as all good things unto his free Mercy in Christ. Again, I dare say that you being a wife man, do judge of things wisely, that is, concerning this your Cross; you judge of it not after the World and People which is magnus erroris magister, nor after the judgment of reason and worldly wisdom, which is foolishness to Faith, nor after the present sense, to which non videtur gaudere, sed moleste. i. e. It seemeth not to be joyous but grievous as Paul writeth; but after the word of God, which teacheth your Cross to be, in respect of your self between God and you, Gods chastising, and your Fathers correction, nurture, school, tryall, path-way to Heaven, Glory and felicity, and the furnace to consume the dross, and mortifie the reliques of Old Adam which yet remain, yea even the Frame-House to fashion you like to the dearest Saints of God here, yea to Christ the Son of God, that elsewhere you might be like unto him.

Psal. 139.

Now concerning your Cross in respect of the World, between the World and you, Gods Word teacheth it to be a testimonial of Gods Truth, of his Providence, of his Power, of his Justice, of his Wisdom, of his anger against Sin, of his Goodness, of his Judgment, of your Faith and Religion, so that by it you are to the World a witness of God one of his Testes, that he is true, he ruleth all things, he is just, wise, and at length will judge the World, and cast the wicked into perdition, but the godly he will take and receive into his eternal habitation. I know you judge of things after Faiths fetch, and the effects or ends of things; and so you see eternum pondus gloriae. i. e. an eternal weight of glory, which this Cross shall bring unto you, dum non scitis ea quae videntur, sed ea quae non videntur. i. e. while ye look not on things which are seen, but on the things which are not seen. Let the worldlings weigh things and look upon the affairs of men with their worldly and corporal eyes, as did many in subscription of the Kings last will, and therefore they did that, for the which they bestrewed themselves; but let us look on things with other manner of eyes, as God be praised you did, in not doing that which you were desired, and driven at to have done. You then beheld things not as a man, but as a man of God, and so you do now in Religion, at the least hitherto you have done, and that you might do so still, I humbly beseech and pray you, say with David, Defecerunt oculi mei in eloquium tuum: quando consolaberis me? i. Mine eyes fail for thy word saying; when wilt thou comfort me? I though you be as uter in fumum. i. like a bottle in the smoke: (for I hear you want health) yet ne obliviscentur assiduationes Dei. i. Do not forget the statutes of the Lord: but cry out, Quot sunt dies servit tui? quando facies de persecutoribus meis iudicium? i. e. How many are the days of thy Servant? when wilt thou execute judgment on them that persecute me? And be certain, Quid Dominus dñiens venit, & non tardabit? Sermonem fecit, expecta illum. i. The Lord will surely come, and not stay; though he tarry, wait for him. For he is but at momentum in via sua, & dominus in voluntate eius. Ad verum peram demerabitur stertus, & ad malum manum letitia. He is but a while in his anger, but in his favour is life weeping may abide at evening, but joy cometh in the morning. Follow therefore Esaie Counsell, Ab condere ad modicum, ad momentum, donec pertinuerit indignatio eius. i. Hide thy self for a very little while, until his indignation pass over, which is not indignatio indeed, but to our sense, and therefore in the six and twentieth Chapter of Esaie, God saith of his Church and People, that as he keepeth night and day: so Non est indignatio mihi. There is no anger in me (saith he.)

The Mother sometime beatech the Child; but yet her heart melteth upon it, even in the very beating; and therefore she casteth the rod into the fire, and collecth the Child, giveth it an apple, and dandleth it most motherly. And to say the truth, the love of Mothers to their Children, is but a trace to train us to behold the love of God towards us; and therefore saith he: Can a Mother forget the Child of her womb? As who should say, No: but if she should so do, yet will not I forget thee, saith the Lord of Hosts. Ah comfortable saying! I will not forget thee, saith the Lord. Indeed the Children of God think oftentimes that God hath forgotten them; and therefore they cry, Ne abscondas faciem tuam a me, &c. i. Hide not thy face from me, &c. Ne derelinquas me Domine, &c. i. Leave me not, O Lord, &c. Whereas in very truth it is not so, but to their present sense: and therefore David saith, Ego dixi in excessu meo projectus sum a facie tua. i. I laid in my agony, I was clean cast away from thy face: but was it for Naught verily. Read his Psalms, and you shall see. So writeth he also in other places very often, especially in the person of Christ: as when he saith, Deus meus, Deus meus; ut quid dereliquisti me? i. My God, my God why hadst thou forsaken me? He saith not, Ne quid derelinquas? i. Why dost thou forsake me? or, derelinquis? i. Why wilt thou forsake me? But, Ut quid dereliquisti? i. Why hast thou forsaken me? Where indeed God had not left him, but that it was so to his sense, and that this Psalm telleth us full well: which Psalm I pray you now and then read; it is the two and twentieth, and thereto joyn the thirtieth, and the hundred and sixteenth, with divers other. The same we read in the Prophet Esaie, the fortieth Chapter, where he reproverth Israel for saying, GOD had forgotten them. Nunquid nescis, saith he? Knowest thou not? An non audivisti? &c. Hast thou not heard? &c. Qui sperant in Domino mutabunt fortitudinem. i. They that trust in the Lord, shall renew their strength. And in his four and fiftieth Chapter, Noli timere, &c. Ad punctum enim, in modico dereliqui te, at in miserationibus magnis congregabo te. In momento indignationis abscondi faciem meam parumper a te, at in misericordia sempiterna misertus sum tui, dicit Redemptor tuus Dominus. Nam istud erit mihi sicut aqua Noe. Vt enim juravi ne intro aqua Noe pervenirent terram, sic juravi ut non introscars tibi & non insepelire te. Montes enim commovebuntur & colles convellentur, misericordia autem mea non recedet a te, & foedus pacis meae non movebitur, dicit miserator tuus Dominus. i. Fear not, &c. For a little while I have forsaken thee, but with great compassion will I gather thee: For a moment in mine anger I hid my face from thee; for a little season: but in everlasting Mercy have I had compassion on thee, saith the Lord thy Redeemer. For this is unto me, as the waters of Noe. For as I have sworn that the waters of Noe should no more go over the earth, so have I sworn that I would not be angry with thee nor rebuke thee. For the mountains shall remove, and hills shall fall down, but my Mercy shall not depart from thee, neither shall the covenant of my peace fall away, saith the Lord that hath compassion on thee.

Psalm 7.

(for many benefices I have received of God by your hands, through the pikes, as they say: so of all service of God, this liketh him the best, to hope assuredly on him, and for his helpways, which is adjuvator in tribulationibus: i.e. An helper in tribulations, and doth more gloriously shew his power by such as be weak, and feel themselves so. For, quo infirmiores sumus, eo sumus in illo robustiores. Sic oculi Domini. i.e. The weaker we are, the more strong we are in him. Thus the eyes of the Lord be on them that tremble and fear. Voluntatem eorum faciet: i.e. he will accomplish their desire, he is with them in their trouble, he will deliver them. Antequam clamaverint, exaudiet eos: i.e. Before they cry, he heareth them, as all the Scriptures teach us. To the reading whereof, and hearty prayer, I heartily commend you, beseeching Almighty God, that of his Eternal Mercy he would make perfect the good he hath begun in you, and strengthen you to the end, that you might have no less hope, but much more of his help to your comfort now against your enemy, than already he hath given you against N. for not subscribing to the Kings will.

Be certain, be certain, good Master Hales, that all the hairs of your head, your dear Father hath numbered, so that one of them shall not perish: your name is written in the book of life. Therefore upon God cast all your care, which will comfort you with his Eternal Consolation, and make you able to go through the fire (if need be) which is nothing to be compared to the fire wherein our enemies shall fall and lye for ever, from the which the Lord deliver us, though it be through temporal fire, which must be conquered according to the end and profit that cometh after it; so shall it then not much fear us to suffer it for our Master Christs cause, the which the Lord grant us for his mercies sake, Amen From the Kings Bench.

Your humble John Bradford.

To my very Friend in the Lord Doctor Hill, Physician.

THe God of mercy and Father of all comfort at this present and for ever ingrain in your heart the sense of his mercy in Christ, and the continuance of his consolation, which cannot but enable you to carry with joy whatsoever Cross he shall lay upon you, Amen.

Hitherto I could have no such liberty, as to write unto you, as I think you know: but now in that through Gods providence I have no such restraint, I cannot but something write, as well to purge me of this suspicion of unthankfulness towards you, as also to signify my carefulness for you in these perilous days, lest you should wax cold in Gods cause (which God forbid) or suffer the light of the Lord once kindled in your heart to be quenched, and so become as you were before, after the example of the World, and of many other, which would have been accounted otherwise in our days, and yet still beguile themselves, still would be so accounted, although by their outward life they declare the Contrary, in that they think it enough to keep the heart pure, notwithstanding that the outward man doth currysavour.

In which doings, as they deny God to be jealous, and therefore requirer the whole man as well Body as Soul, being both create, as to immortality and society with him, so redeemed by the Blood of Jesus Christ, and now sanctified by the Holy Spirit to be the Temple of God, and member of his Son (as I say) by their parting stake to give God the heart, and the World the Body, they deny God to be jealous (for else they would give him both, as the wife would do to her husband whether he be jealous or no, if she be honest) so they play the dissemblers with the Church of God by their fact, offending the godly whom either they provoke to fall with them, or make more careless and conscienceless if they be fallen, and occasioning the wicked and obstinate to triumph against God, and the more vehemently to persecute their malice against such as will not defile themselves in Body or Soul with the Romish rage now received amongst us. Because of this, I mean, left you, my dear Master and Brother in the Lord, should do as many of our Gospellers do for fear of man, whose breath is in his nostrils, and hath power both of the Body, not fearing the Lord, which hath power both of Soul and Body, and not only temporally, but also eternally: I could not but write something unto you, as well because duty doth require it for the which he reward you, for I cannot) as also because charity and love compelleth me; not that I think you have need (for as I may rather learn of you, so I doubt not but you have hitherto kept your self upright from halting) but that I might both quiet my Conscience, calling upon me hereabout, and signify unto you by something, my carefulness for your Soul, as painfully and often you have done for my Body.

Therefore I pray you call to mind, that there be but two Masters, two kinds of People, two ways, and two mansions places. The Masters be Christ and Satan, the People be servants to either of these, the ways be strait and wide, the mansions be Heaven and Hell. Again, consider that this World is the place of trial of Gods People, and the Devils Servants: for as the one will follow his Master whatsoever cometh of it, so will the other. For a time it is hard to discern who pertaineth to God, and who to the Devil: as in the calm and peace, who is a good shipman and warrior, and who is not. But as when the storm ariseth, the expert Mariner is known, and as in war the good Soldier is seen, so in affliction and the Cross, easily Gods Children are known from Satans Servants: for then, as the good Servant will follow his Master, so will the godly follow their Captain, come what will come, whereas the wicked and hypocrite will bid adieu, and desire less of Christs acquaintance. For which cause the Cross is called a probation and trial, because it trieth who will go with God, and who will forsake him. And now in England we see how small a company Christ hath in comparison of Satans Soldiers. Let no man deceive himself: for he that gathereth not with Christ scattereth abroad. No man can serve two Masters; the Lord abhorreth double hearts; the lukewarm, that is, such as are both hot and cold, be spitted out of his mouth. None that halt on both knees doth God take for his Servant. The way of Christ is the strait way, and so strait, that as a few find it, and few walk in it, so no man can halt in it, but must needs go upright: for as the straitness will suffer no reeling to this side or that side: so if any halt: he is like to fall off the bridge into the pit of eternal perdition.

Sirius therefore, good Master Doctor, now you have found it, to enter into it: and if you should be called or pulled back, look not on this side, or that side or behind you, as Lots Wife did, but straight forwards in the end which is set before you (though it be to come) as even now present: like as you do and will your patients to do in purgations, and other your ministrations, to consider the effect that will ensue; where through the bitterness and loathsomeness of the purgation is so overcome, and the painfulness in abiding the working of that is ministered, is so eased, that it maketh the patient willingly and joyfully to receive that is to be received, although it be never so unpleasant: so (I say) set before you the end of this strait way, and then doubtless, as Paul saith, eternum pondus glorie patet, i. It shall bring with it an eternal weight of glory, whilst we look not on the thing which is seen, for that is temporal, but on the thing which is not seen, which is eternal. So doth the Husbandman in plowing and tilling set before him the harvest time; so doth the Fisher consider the draught of his net, rather than the casting in; so doth the Merchant the return of his Merchandise; and so should we in these stormy days set before us not the loss of our goods, liberty, and very life, but the reaping time, the coming of our Saviour Christ to Judgment, the fire that shall burn the wicked and disobedient to Gods Gospel, the blast of the Trump, the exceeding glory prepared for us in Heaven Eternally, such as the eye hath not seen, the ear hath not heard, nor the heart of man can conceive. The more we lose here, the greater joy shall we have there. The more we suffer, the greater triumph. For corruptible doings, we shall find incorruptible treasures for gold glory: for silver, place without end; for riches, robes royal; for earthly Houses, eternal Palaces; without without measure, pleasure without pain, felicity endless; Summa, we shall have God the Father, the Son, and the Holy Ghost.

O happy place! Oh that this day would come. Then shall the end of the wicked be lamentable, then shall they receive the just reward of Gods vengeance, then shall they cry we, woe, that ever they did as they have done.

The way to by your comfort, read Hebrews 11. to see what Faith hath done, always considering the way to Heaven to be by many Tribulations, and that all they which will live godly in Christ Jesus, must suffer persecution. You know this, our Alphabet; He that will be my Disciple, saith Christ, must deny himself, and take up his Cross, and follow me. Not this Bishop nor that Doctor, nor this Emperour, nor that King, but me, saith Christ. For he that loveth Father, Mother, Wife, Children, or very life, better than me, is not worthy of me. Remember that the same Lord saith;
He that will save his life shall lose it. Comfort your self with this, that as the Devils had no power over the Porkets, or over Job's goods without God's leave; so shall they have none over you. Remember also that all the hairs of your head are numbered with God. The Devil may make one believe he will drown him, as the Sea in his furies threateneth to the land; but as the Lord hath appointed bounds for the overpouer which he cannot pass, so hath he done for the other.

On God therefore cast your care, love him, serve him after his Word, fear him, trust in him, hope at his hand for all help, and always pray, looking for the Cross, and whenever it cometh, be assured, the Lord, as he is faithful, so he will never tempt you further the he will make you able to bear, but in the midst of the Temptation will make such an evasion, as shall be most to his glory and your eternal comfort. God for his mercy in Christ, with his Holy Spirit, endue you, comfort you, under the wings of his mercy shadow you, and at his dear Child guide you for evermore. To whose merciful tuition, as I do with my heavy prayer, commend you; so I doubt not but you pray for me, and so I beseech you to do still. My Brother P. tell me you would have the last part of Saint Jeromes works, to have the life thereof for a fortnight. I cannot for these three days well forbear it, but yet on Thursday next I will send it you, if God let me not, and use me and that I love as your own. The Lord for his mercy in Christ direct our ways to his glory.

Out of prison by yours to command,
John Bradford.

To Mistress M. H. a godly Gentlewoman, comforting her in that common heaviness and godly sorrow, which the feeling and sense of sin worketh in Gods Children.

I Humbly and heartily pray the everlasting God and Father of mercy to bless and keep your heart and mind in the knowledge and love of his Truth, and of his Christ, through the inspiration and working of his Holy Spirit, Amen.

Although I have no doubt, but that you prosper and go forward daily in the way of godliness, more and more drawing towards perfection, and have no need of any thing that I can write; yet because my desire is that you might be more fervent and persevere to the end, I could not but write something unto you, beseeching you both often and diligently to call unto your mind, as a mean to stir you herunto, yea, as a thing which God most fruitfully requirith you to believe, that you are beloved of God, and that he is your dear Father, in through, and for Christ and his deaths sake. This love and tender kindness of God towards us in Christ is abundantly herein declared, in that he hath to the godly work of creation of this World made us after his Image, redeemed us being lost, called us into his Church, sealed us with his mark and sign manual of Baptism, kept and conferred us all the days of our life, fed, nourished, defended and in his Fatherly chastised us, and now hath kindled in our hearts the sparkles of his fear, faith, love and knowledge of his Christ and truth, and therefore we lament, because we lament no more our unthankfulness, our frailties, our diffidence and wavering in things wherein we should be most certain.

All these things we should use as means to confirm our Faith of this, that God is our God and Father, and to assure us, that he loveth us as our Father in Christ: to this end (I say) we should use the things before to advised; especially in that, of all things, God requirith this Faith and Fatherly pervasion of his Fatherly goodness, as his chiefest service. For before he ask any thing of us, he saith; I am the Lord thy God, giving himself, and then all he hath to us to be our own. And this he doth in respect of himself, of his own mercy and truth, and not in respect of us, for then were grace no grace. In consideration whereof, when he saith; Thou shalt have none other Gods but me, thou shalt love me with all thy heart, &c. though of duty we are bound to accomplish all that he requirith, and are culpable and guilty if we do not the same, yet he requirith not these things further of us, then to make us more in love, and more certain of this his covenant, that he is our Lord and God. In certainty whereof, as he hath given this whole World to serve to our need and commodity; so hath he given his Son Christ Jesus, and in Christ, himself to be a pledge and gage, whereof the Holy Ghost doth now and then give us some taste and sweet smell to our eternal joy.

Therefore (as I said) because God is our Father in Christ, and requirith of you faithfully to believe it, give your self to obedience, although ye do it not with such feeling as you desire. First must Faith go before, and then feeling will follow. If our imperfection, frailty, and many evils should be occasions whereby Satan would have us to doubt; as much as we can, let us abhor that suggestion, as of all others most pernicious; for so indeed it is. For when we stand in a doubt, whether God be our Father, we cannot be thankful to God, we cannot heartily pray or think any thing we do acceptable to God, we cannot love our Neighbours, and give over our selves to care for them, and do for them as we should do, and therefore Satan is most subtle hereabouts, knowing full well that if we doubt of God eternal mercys towards us through Christ, we cannot please God, or do any thing as we should do to man. Continually casteth he into our memories our imperfection, frailty, falls, and offences, that we should doubt of Gods mercy and favour towards us.

Therefore (my good Sister) we must not be sluggish herein, but as Satan laboureth to loosen our Faith, so must we labour to fasten it by thinking on the promises and covenant of God in Christs Blood; namely, that God is our God with all that ever he hath: which covenant dependeth and hangeth upon Gods own goodness, mercy and truth only, and not on our obedience or worthiness in any point, for then should we never be certain.
Indeed God requirith of us obedience and worthiness, but not that thereby we might be his Children, and he our Father: but because he is our Father and we his Children through his own goodness in Christ, therefore requirith he Faith and Obedience. Now if we want this obedience and worthiness which he requirith, should we doubt whether he be our Father? Nay, that were to make our obedience and worthiness the cause, and so to put Christ out of place, for whose sake God is our Father: But rather because he is our Father, and we feel our selves to want such things as he requirith, we should be stirred up to a shamefulness and blushing, because we are not as we should be: and thereupon should we take occasion to go to our Father in prayer on this manner:

Dear Father, thou of thine own mercy in Jesus Christ hast chosen me to be thy Child, & therefore thou wouldst
I should be brought into thy Church and faithful company of thy Children; wherein thou hast kept me hitherto, thy name therefore be praised. Now I see my self to want faith, hope, love, &c. which thy Children have and thou requirest of me, wherethrough the Devil would have me to doubt, yea utterly to despair of thy Fatherly goodness, favour and mercy. Therefore I come to thee as to my merciful Father, through thy dear Son Jesus Christ, and pray thee to help me good Lord: help me, and give me faith, hope, love, &c. and grant that thy Holy Spirit may be with me for ever, and more and more to assure me that thou art my Father; that this merciful covenant that thou madest with me in respect of thy grace in Christ and for Christ, and not in respect of any my worthiness, is always to me, &c.

On this sort (I say) you must pray and self your cogitations, when Satan would have you to doubt of salvation.

He doth all he can to prevail herein. Do you all you can to prevail herein against him. Though you feel not as you would, yet doubt not, but hope beyond all hope, as Abraham did. For always (I said) goeth faith before feeling. As certain as God is Almighty, as certain as God is Merciful, as certain as God is True, as certain as Jesus Christ was crucified, is risen, and sitteth on the right hand of the Father, as certain as this is Gods Commandment: I am thy Lord thy God, &c. so certain ought you to be that God is your Father. As you are bound to have no other Gods but him, so are ye no less bound to believe that God is your God. What profit should it be to you to believe this to be true; I am the Lord thy God, to others, if you should not believe that his is true to your self? The Devil believeth on this sort. And whatsoever it be that would move you to doubt of this, whether God be your God through Christ, that same cometh undoubtedly of the Devil. Wherefore did he make you, but because he loved you? Might not he have made you Blind, Deaf, Lame, Frantick, &c? Might not he have made you a Jew, a Turk, a Papist, &c? And why hath he not done so? Verily because he loved you? And why did he love you? What was there in you to move him to love you? Surely nothing moved him to love you, and therefore to make you, and so hitherto to keep you, but his own goodness in Christ. Now then in that his goodness in Christ still remaineth as much as it was, that is, even as great as himself, for it cannot be lessened; how should it be but that he is your God and Father? Believe this, believe this my good Sister, for God is no Changing; and them whom he loveth, he loveth to the end.

Consideration of Gods promises and benefits.

Cast therefore your self wholly upon him, and think without all wavering that you are Gods Child, that you are a Citizen of Heaven, that you are the Daughter of God, the Temple of the Holy Ghost, &c. If hereof you be assured as you ought to be, then shall your conscience be quieted, then shall you Lament more and more that you want many things which God loveth; then shall you labour to be Holy in Soul and Body; then shall you go about that Gods Glory may shine in all your words and works; then shall you not be afraid what man can do unto you; then shall you have Wisdom to answer your Adversaries, as shall serve to their shame, and your comfort; then shall you be certain that no man can touch one hair of your head further then shall please your good Father; to your everlasting joy; then shall you be most certain, that God as your good Father will be more careful for your Children, and make better provision for them, if all you have were gone, then you cansthen shall you (being assured I say of Gods favour towards you) give over your self wholly to help and care for others: that be in need; then shall you contemn this life, and desire to be at home with your good and sweet Father; then shall you labour to mortifie all things that would spot either Soul or Body. All these things spring out of this certain persuasion and Faith, that God is our Father, and we are his Children by Christ Jesus. All things should help our Faith herein; but Satan goeth about in all things to hinder us.

Therefore let us use earnest and hearty Prayer; let us often remember this Covenant; I am the Lord thy God; let us look upon Christ and his Precious Blood shed for the obligation and Confirmation of his Covenant; let us remember all the free promises of the Gospel; let us set before us Gods benefits generally in making this World, in ruling it, in governing it, in calling and keeping his Church, &c. let us set before us Gods benefits particularly, how he hath made his Creatures after his Image, how he made us of perfect limbs, form, beauty, memory, &c. how he hath made us Christians, and given us a right Judgment in his Religion; how he hath ever since we were born, blessed, kept, nourished, and defended us; how he hath often beaten, chastised, and fatherly corrected us; how he hath spared us, and doth now spare us, giving us time, space, place, grace. This if you do and use earnest Prayer, and so flee from all things which might wound your Conscience, giving your self to diligence in your vocation, you shall find at the length (which God grant to me with you) a sure certainty of salvation, without all such doubt as may trouble the peace of Conscience to your eternal joy and comfort, Amen, Amen.

Tours to use in Christ, J. Bradford.

Another Letter full of godly comfort, written to the same person.

The good Spirit of God which guideth his Children, be with you my good Sister in the Lord for ever, Amen.

Although, as I to you, so you unto me in prison are unknown, yet to him whom we desire to please, we are not only in persons, but also in hearts known and thoroughly seen: and therefore as for his sake you would by that you sent, of me be perceived how that in God you bear, to me a good will; so that I to you might be seen in God to bear you the like, I send to you these few words in writing, wishing that in all your doings and speech, ye even in your very thoughts you would labour to feel that they are all present and open before the sight of God, be they good or bad. This cogitation often had in mind, and Prayer made to God for the working of his Spirit, thereby, as a mean, you shall at the length feel more comfort and commodity, then any man can know, but such as be exercised therein. Howbeit this is to be added, that in thinking your self, and all that you have and do, to be in the sight of God; this (I say) is to be added, that you think his sight is the sight not only of a Lord, but rather of a Father, which tendereth more your infirmities, then you can tender the infirmities of any your Children. Yea, when in your self you see a motherly affection to your little one that is weak, let the same be unto you a trace to train you to see the unspeakable kind affection of God your Father towards you.

And therefore upon the consideration of your infirmities and natural evils, which continually cleave unto us, take occasion to go to God as your Father through Christ: and before his merciful heart lay open your infirmities and evils, with desire of pardon and help after his good will and pleasure, but in his time, and not when you will, and by what means he will, not by that way you would; in the same season hang on hope of his fatherly goodness, and surely you shall never be ashamed. For if a Woman that is natural cannot finally forget the Child of her womb, be sure God which is a Father supernatural cannot, nor will not forget you. Yea if a Woman could be so forgetful, yet God himself faith, he will not be so.

This opinion, yea rather certain persuasion of God our Father through Christ fee that you cherish, and by all means, as well by diligent consideration of his benefits, as of his loving corrections, whether they be inward or outward, see that you nourish; knowing for certain, that as the Devil goeth about nothing so much as to bring you to a doubt whether ye be Gods Child or no: so whatsoever shall move you to admit that dubitation, be assured the same to come from the Devil, if you feel in your self not only the want of good things, but also plenty of evil; do not therefore doubt whether you be Gods Child in Christ, or no.

For if for your goodness or illness sake, which you feel or feel not, ye should believe or doubt, then should you make Christ Jesus, for whose sake only God is your Father, either nothing, or else but half Christ.

But rather take occasion of your wants in good, and of your plenty in evil, to go to God as to your Father, and to Pray to him, that in as much as he commandeth you to believe that he is your God and Father; so he would give you his good Spirit, that you might feel the same, and live as his Child, to his glory: and cease not upon such Prayers to look for comfort in Gods good time, still hoping the best, and rejecting all dubitation, and so all evil works, words, and cogitations, as the Lord shall enable you by his good Spirit and grace, which I beseech him to give unto you, my good Sister, for ever. And further I pray you, that as he hath made you to be an helper unto your Husband, so you would endeavour your self therein to shew the same as well in Soul as Body; and beg grace of God, that your endeavour may be effectual to both your comforts in Christ, Amen.

John Bradford.

To my well beloved in the Lord, W. P.

Grace and Peace from God the Father, through our Lord Jesus Christ, Amen.

Dear Brother, God most justly hath cast me down into a Dungeon, but much better than I deserve; wherein I see no man but my Keeper, nor can see any except they come to me. Something in the Earth my lodging is, which is an example and memorial of my Earthly afflictions (which God I trust will mortify) and of my Sepulchre, whereunto I trust my Lord God will bring me in peace in his good time. In the mean season he give me patience, lively hope, and his good Spirit. I pray you pray for me, for the Prayer of the godly, if it be fervent, worketh much with God. I thank God my common disease doth less trouble me than when I was abroad, which doth reach me the merciful Providence of God towards me. Use true and hearty Prayer, and you shall perceive God at length will declare himself to see, where now many think he sleepeth.

This disease was attended with a feebleness of stomach, wherewith he was much troubled while he was at liberty.

Out of the Tower, by the Lords Prisoner, John Bradford.

A Letter which he wrote to a faithful Woman in her bewitchment and trouble: most comfortable for all those to read that are afflicted and broken hearted for their sin.

GOD our good Father, for his mercies sake in Christ, with his eternal Consolation so comfort you, as I desire to be comforted of him in my most need: Yea, he will comfort you (my dear Sister) only cast your care upon him, and he never can nor will forsake you. For his calling and gifts be such, that he can never repent him of them. Whom he loveth, he loveth to the end; none of his chosen can perish. Of which number I know you are, my dearly beloved Sister: God increase the Faith thereof daily more and more in you, he give unto you to hang wholly on him and on his Providence and Protection. For whose dwelleth under * that secret thing, and help of the Lord, he shall be cock-sure for evermore. He that dwelleth, I say; for if we be flitters and not dwellers, as was Lot a flitter from Sodom, where God promised him protection, if he had dwelled there still: we shall remove to our loss, as he did into the Mountains.

Rom. II.

* Gods Providence and Protection. Psalm. 119. Gen. 19.

Dwell therefore, that is trust, and that finally unto the end, in the Lord (my dear Sister) and you shall be as Mount Sion. As Mountains compass Jerusalem, so doth the Lord all his People. How then can he forget you, which are as the apple of his Eye, for his dear Sons sake? Ah dear heart, that I were now but one half hour with you, to be a Simon to help carry your Cross with you. God fend you some good Simon to be with you, and help you.

You complain in your Letters of the blindness of your Mind, and the troubles you feel. My dearly beloved, God make you thankful for that which God hath given unto you; he open your eyes to see what and how great benefits you have received, that you may be less covetous, or rather impatient, for so I fear me) it should be called, and more thankful. Have you not received at his hands sight to see your blindness, and thereto a desirous and seeking heart to see where he lieth in the mid-day, as his dear Spouse speaketh of her self in the Canticles? Oh Joy, my good Joy, what a gift is this? Many have some light, but none this fobbing and fighing, none this seeking which you have, I know, but such as he hath married unto him in his mercies. You are not content to kiss his feet with the Magdalen, but you would be kissed even with the kisses of his Mouth, Canticles 1. You would see his face with Moses, forgetting how he biddeth us seek his face, Psalm 27. yea, and that for ever, Psalm 105. Which signifieth no such sight, as you desire to be in this present life, which would see God now face to face, whereas he cannot be seen, but covered under something, yea, sometime it is that which is (as you would say) clean contrary to God; as to see his mercy in his anger. In bringing us to Hell, Faith seeth him to bring us to Heaven; in darkness it beholdeth brightness: in hiding his face from us, it beholdeth his merry countenance. How did Job see God, but as (you would say) under Satans cloak? For who cast the fire from Heaven upon his goods? Who overthrew his house, and stirred up men to take away his Cattel, but Satan? and yet Job pierced through all these, and saw Gods work, saying, The Lord hath given, the Lord hath taken away, &c.

In reading of the Psalms, how often do you see that David in the shadow of death saw Gods sweet love? And so, my dearly beloved, I see that you in your darkness and dimness by Faith do see clarity and brightness: by Faith, I say, because Faith is of things absent, of things hoped for, of things which I appeal to your Conscience, whether you desire not. And can you desire any thing which you know not? And is there of heavenly things any other true knowledge than by Faith?

Therefore (my dear Heart) be thankful, for (before God I write it) you have great cause. Ah, my Joy, how happy is the stay wherein you are? Verily you are even in the blessed state of Gods Children; for they mourn, and do not you so? And that not for worldly wealth, but for spiritual riches, Faith, Hope, Charity, &c. Do you not hunger and thirst for Righteousness? And I pray you, faith not Christ, who cannot lie, that happy are such? How should God wipe away the tears from your eyes in Heaven, if now on Earth ye shed no tears? How could Heaven be a place of rest, if on Earth ye find it? How could ye desire to be at home, if in your Journey you found no grief? How could ye so often call upon God, and talk with him, as I know you do, if your Enemy should sleep all day long? How should you elsewhere be made like unto Christ, I mean in joy, if in sorrow you fobbed not with him? If you will have joy and felicity, you must first needs feel sorrow and misery. If you will go to Heaven, you must sail by Hell, if you will embrace Christ in his robes, you must not think scorn of him in his rags. If you will sit at Christs table in his Kingdoms, you must first abide with him in his temptations. If you will drink of his Cup of glory, forsake not his Cup of ignominy.

Can the Head Corner-stone be rejected, and the other more base Stones in Gods building be in this world left by? you are one of his lively Stones, be content therefore to be hewn and shaped at, that you might be made more meet to be joynted to your fellows which suffer with you. Satans snatches, the Worlds wounds, contempt of Conscience, and threats of the Flesh, where-through they are enforced to cry, Oh Wretches that we are, who shall deliver us? you are of Gods Corn, fear not therefore the Flail, the Fan, Millstone nor Oven. You are one of Christs Lambs, look therefore to be fleeced, haled at, and even slain.

If you were a Market-sheep, you should go in more fat and grassie Pasture. If you were for the Fair, you should be Stall-fed, and want no weal: but because you are of Gods own occupying, therefore you must pasture on the bare Common, abiding the storms and tempests that will fall. Happy, and twice happy are you (my dear Sister) that God now halleth you whither you would not, that you might come whither you would. Suffer a little and be still. Let Satan rage against you, let the World cry out, let your Conscience accuse you, let the Law load you and press you down, yet shall they not prevail, for Christ is Emmanuel, that is, God with us. If God be with us, who can be against us? The Lord is with you, your Father cannot forget you; your Spouse loveth you. If the waves and furies arise, cry with Peter, Lord, I perish; and he will put out his hand and help you. Cast out your anchor of Hope, and it will not cease for the stormy furies, till it take hold on the rock of Gods truth and mercy.

Think not that he which hath given you so many things corporally; as inductions of Spiritual and Heavenly Mercies, and that without your deserts or desire, can deny you any spiritual comfort, desiring it. For if he give to desire, he will give you to have and enjoy the thing desired. The desire to have, and the going about to assure, ought to certify your Conscience, that they be his earnest of the thing which you asking he will give you; yea, before you ask, and whilst you are about to ask he will grant the same, as Isaiah saith, faith, to his glory and your eternal consolation. He that spared not his own Son for you, will not nor cannot think any thing too good for you, my heartily Beloved.

If he had not chosen you, (as most certainly he hath) he would not have so called you, he would never have justified you; he would never have so glorified you with his gracious gifts, which I know, praised be his Name therefore; he would never have so exercised your Faith with Temptations as he hath done and doth; if (I say) he had not chosen you, if he hath chosen you (as doubtless, dear Heart, he hath done in Christ, for in you I have seen his earnest, and before me and to me you could not deny it, I know both where and when) if I say, he have chosen you, then neither can you, nor ever shall you perish. For if you fail, he putteth under his hand; you shall not lie still; so careful is Christ your keeper over you. Never was Mother so mindful over her Child, as he is over you. And hath not he always been so?

Speak Woman, when did he finally forget you? And will he, how true you, in your most need do otherwise, you calling upon him, and desiring, to please him? Ah (my Joy) think you God to be mutable? Is he a changing? Doth not he love to the end them whom he loveth? Are not his gifts and calling such, that he cannot repent him of them? For else were he no God. If you should perish, then wanted he power; for I am certain his will towards you is not to be doubted of. Hath not the Spirit, which is the Spirit of Truth, told you so? And will you now hearken with Eve to the lying Spirit which would have you not to despair (no, he goeth more craftily to work, howbeit to that end, if you should give ear unto it, which God forbid) but to doubt and stand in a maiming, and so should you never truly love God, but serve him of a servile fear, lest he should call you off for your unworthiness and unthankfulness, as though your thankfulness or worthiness were any cause with God, why he hath chosen you, or will finally keep you.

Ah mine own dear Heart, Christ only, Christ only, and his Mercy and Truth. In him is the cause of your Election. This Christ, this Mercy, this Truth of God remaineth for ever, is certain for ever, I say, for ever. If an Angel from Heaven should tell you contrary, accused be he. Your thankfulness and worthiness are fruits and effects of your Election, they are no causes. These fruits and effects, shall be so much more fruitful and effectual, by how much you waver not.

Therefore (my dearly Beloved) arise, and remember from whence you are fallen. You have a Shepherd which never slumbereth nor sleepeth; No Man nor Devil can pull you out of his hands. Night and day he commandeth his Angels to keep you. Have you forgotten what I read to you out of the Psalm, The Lord is my Shepherd, I can want nothing? Do you not know that God spared Noah in the Ark on the outside, so that he could not get out? So hath he done to you (my good Sister, so hath he done to you) Ten thousand shall fall on your right hand, and twenty thousand on your left hand, yet no evil shall touch you. Say boldly therefore, Many a time from my youth up have they fought against me, but they have not prevailed; no, nor never shall prevail, for the Lord is round about his People. And who are the People of God, but such as hope in him? Happy are they that hope in the Lord, and you are one of those, my dear Heart, for I am assured you have hoped in the Lord; I have your words to shew most manifestly, and I know they were written unfeignedly. Indeed need not to say, that even before God you have simply confessed to me, and that oftentimes no less. And if once you had this hope, as you doubtless had it, though now you feel it not, yet shall you feel it again: for the anger of the Lord lasteth but a moment, but his mercy lasteth for ever. Tell me (my dear Heart) who hath so weakened you? Surely not a persuasion which came from him that called you. For why should you waver? Why should you waver, and be so heavy hearted? Whom look you on? On your self? on your worthiness? On your thankfulness? On that which God requireth of you, as faith, hope, love, fear, joy, &c. Then can you not but waver indeed: for what have you as God requireth? Believe you, hope you, love you, &c. as much as you should do? No, no, nor ever can in this life. Ah, my dearly Beloved, have you so soon forgotten that which ever should be had in memory? Namely, that when you would and should be certain and quiet in Conscience, then should your Faith burst throughout all things not only that you have in you, or else are in Heaven, Earth or Hell, until it come to Christ crucified, and the eternal sweet mercies and goodness of God in Christ? Here, here is the resting place, here is your Spouse's bed; creep into it, and in your arms of Faith embrace him, bewail your weakness, unworthiness, your diffidence, & can you shall see he will turn to you. What said I, You shall see? Nay, I should have said, You shall feel he will turn to you. You know that Moses, when he went to the Mount to talk with God, he entered into a dark Cloud, and Helias had his face covered when God passed by. Both these dear Friends of God heard of God, but they saw him not, but you would be preferred before them. See now (my dear Heart) how covetous are we. Ah, be thankful, be thankful. But God be praised, your covetousness is Moses covetousness. Well, with him you shall be satisfied. But when? Forsooth when he shall appear. Here is not the time of seeing, but as it were in a glass. I am deceived, because he was not content with hearing only.

Therefore to make an end of these many words, where-with I fear me I do but trouble you from better exercises; inasmuch as you are indeed the Child of God elect in Christ before the beginning of all times, inasmuch as you are given to the custody of Christ, as one of Gods most precious Jewels; inasmuch as Christ is faithful and hitherto hath all power, so that you shall never perish, no, one hair of your head shall not be lost: I beseech you, I pray you, I desire you, I crave at your hands with all my very heart, I ask of you with hand, pen, tongue and mind, in Christ, through Christ, for Christ, for his Name, Blood, Mercies, Power, and Truths sake, my most entirely beloved Sister, that you admit no doubting of Gods final mercies towards you, howsoever you feel your self; but to complain to God, and crave of him, as of your tender and dear Father, all things, and in that time which shall be most opportune, you shall find and feel far above that your heart or the heart of any Creature can conceive, to your eternal Joy. Amen, Amen, Amen.

The good Spirit of God always keep us as his dear Children; he comfort you, as I desire to be comforted, my dearly Beloved, for evermore. Amen.

I break up thus abruptly, because our Common Prayer time calleth me. The Peace of Christ dwell in both our hearts for ever, Amen.

As for the Report of W. Pa. if it be as you hear, you must prepare to bear it. It is written on Heavens door, Do well, and bear evil. Be content therefore to hear whatsover the Enemy shall imagine to blot you withal. Gods Holy Spirit always comfort and keep you, Amen, Amen. This 8th of August, by him that in the Lord desireth to you, as well and as much felicity as to his own heart.

John Bradford.

Here followeth another Letter of his written to the good Lady Vane, wherein he resolveth certain questions which she demanded. This Lady Vane was a special Nurse, with a great supporter to her power of the godly Saints, which were imprisoned in Q. Maries time. Unto whom divers Letters I have both of Mr. Philpot, Careless, Trabern, Thomas Rose, and of others more, wherein they render unto her most grateful thanks for her exceeding goodness extended towards them, with their singular commendation and testimony also of her Christian zeal towards Gods afflicted Prisoners, and to the verity of his Gospel. She departed of late at Halborn, Anno 1568, whose end was more like a sleep, than any death; so quietly and meekly the deceased and parted hence in the Lord.

Amongst other which wrote unto her, Mr. Bradford also sent these Letters to the said Lady; the tenor whereof here followeth.

To my good Lady Vane.

Commendation on the Lady Vane.

Note how God commonly rewardeth the helpers and friends of his Saints.

A Letter of M. Bradford written to the good Lady Vane, wherein he discuteth doubts concerning things to be done.

Anno 1555. The abominable of the Mass let forth this question were conceived by the Mass where in the deliverance of his Judgment.

are never was seen, nor answered, until the thing whereof they arise be well considered. I mean until it be seen how great an evil the thing is. If it be once indeed in your heart perceived, upon visible and pitiful places gathered out of Gods Book, that there was never thing upon the Earth so great, and so much an Adversary to Gods true service, to Church, to Priest, to Pulpit, to Priesthood, Sacrifice and Kingdom, to the ministry of Gods Word and Sacraments, to the Church of Gods Repentance, Faith, and all true godliness of Life, as that is whereof the questions arise (as most assuredly it is indeed) then cannot a Christian heart but so much the more abhor it, and all things that in any point might seem to allow it, or any thing pertaining to the same, how much it hath the name of Gods service.

Again, your Ladship doth know, that as all is to be discommended and avoided, which is followed or fled from in respect of our selves, in respect of avoiding Christs Cross: so the end of all our doings should be to Godwards: to his glory, to our Neighbours, to edification and good Example, whereof none can be given in allowing any of the three questions by you propounded. But because this which I write now is brief, and needeth the more consideration or explication; as I doubt not of the one in you, so from me by Gods grace you shall receive the other shortly. For I have already written a little Book of it, which I will send unto you, in the which you shall have your questions fully answered and satisfied, and therefore I omit to write any more hereabout presently; beseeching God, our good Father, to guide you as his dear Child with his Spirit of wisdom, power, and comfort, unto eternal life, that you may be strong, and rejoice in him and with his Church, to carry Christs Cross, if he shall so think it need, 1 Per. 1. Which is a thing to be desired, wished, and embraced, if we looked on things after the judgment of Gods Word, and tried them by that Touch-stone.

If you be accustomed to think on the brevity, vanity, and misery of this life, and on the eternity, truth, and felicity of everlasting life; if you look on things after their ends, and not after their present appearance only; if you use your self to let Gods presence, power and mercy always before your eyes, to see them; as God by every Creature would you should; I doubt not but you shall find such strength and comfort in the Lord, as you shall not be shaken with all the power of Satan. Gods mercy in Christ be with you, and his good Spirit guide you for ever, Amen.

Another Letter to the Lady Vane.

Another Letter of M. Bradford to the Lady Vane.

As to mine own Soul, I wish to your Ladship grace and mercy from God our dear Father in Christ our Lord and Saviour.

I thank God that something he hath eased you, and mitigated his Fatherly correction in us both; I would to God he had done so much in the behalf of the grief of the Body to you; as he hath done to me. For as for the Soul, I trust you feel that which I pray God increase in you, I mean his Fatherly love, and grant that I may with you feel the same in such degree as may please him; I will not say as you feel, lest I should seem to ask too much at one time. God doth often much more plentifully visit with the sense of his mercy them that humble themselves under his mighty hand, and are fore exercised as you long have been; than others, which to the face of the World have a more show and appearance.

Therefore I wish as I do, and that not only for mine own commodity, but also that I might occasion you to the consideration of the goodness of God, which I by your Letters do well spy; which is indeed the high-way, whereby as God increaseth his gifts, so sheweth he more lively his salvation, Psal. 50. 107. I have received Gods Blessing from you, the which I have partly distributed unto my three Fellow-Priesters, Mr. Farrar, Mr. Taylor, Mr. Philpot, and the residue I will bestow upon four poor Souls which are imprisoned in the common Gaol for Religion also. As for mine own part, if I had need, I would have served my turn also. But because I had not, nor I thank God have not, I have been and will be your Almoner in such sort as I have already advertized you. God reward you and give you to find it spiritually and corporally. Because otherwise I cannot talk with you, therefore on this sort, as occasion and opportunity will serve, I am ready to shew my good will and desire of your help and furtherance in the Lord to everlasting life, wherunto God bring us shortly for his mercies sake, Amen.

Good Madam, be thankful to God, as I hope you be; be earnest in prayer, continue in reading and hearing Gods Word, and if Gods further Cross come, as therein God doth serve his Providence (for else it shall not come unto you) so be certain the same shall turn to your eternal joy and comfort, Amen.

To my dear Friends and Brethren, R. and E. with their Wives and Families.

The comfort of Christ felt commonly of his Children in their Cross for his sake, the everlasting God work in both your hearts, my good Brethren, and in the hearts of both your Yoke-fellows, especially of good Mary, my good Sister in the Lord, Amen.

If I had not something heard of the hazard which you are in for the Gospels sake, if you continue the profession and confession thereof, as I trust you do and will do, and that unto the end, God enabling you, as he will double for his mercies sake, if you hope in him (for this bindeth him, as David in Christs person witnesseth, Our Fathers hoped in thee, and thou deliverest them, &c. Psal. 22.) yet by conjectures I could not but suppose (though not so certainly) the time of your suffering and probation to be at hand. For now is the power of darkness fully come upon this Realm most justly for our sins, and abusing the Light lent us of the Lord, to the setting forth of our selves more than Gods glory, that as well we might be brought into the better knowledge of our evils, and so heartily repent (which God grant us to do) as also we might have more feeling and sense of our sweet Saviour Jesus Christ, by the humbling and dejecting us, thereby to make us as more desirous of him, so him more sweet and pleasant unto us; the which thing the good Spirit of God work sensibly in all our hearts for Gods holy Names sake.

For this cause I thought it my duty, being now where I have some liberty to write (the Lord be praised) and hearing of you as I hear; to do that which I should have done, if I had heard nothing at all; that is, to desire you to be of good cheer and comfort in the Lord (although in the world you see cause rather to the contrary) and to go on forwards in the way of God wherunto you are entered, considering that the same cannot but so much more and more wax strait to the outward man, by how much you draw nearer to the end of it: even as in the travel of a Woman, the nearer she draweth to her delivery, the more her pains increase; so it goeth with us in the Lords way, the nearer we draw to our deliverance by death to our eternal felicity.

Example whereof we have, I will not say, in the holy Prophets and Apostles of God, which when they were young girded themselves, and went in manner whither they would, but when they waxed old, they went girded of others, whither they would not, concerning the outward man; but rather and most lively in our Saviour Jesus Christ, whose life and way was much more painful to him towards the end, than it was at the beginning. And no marvel, for Satan can something abide a man to begin well, and sit forwards, but rather than he should go on to the end, he will vomit his gorge, and cast out floods to overflow him, before he will suffer that to come to pass.

Therefore as we should not be dismayed now at this world, as though some strange thing were happened unto us, in that it is but as it was wont to be to the godly, in that the Devil declareth himself after his old wont, in that we have professed no less, but to forsake the World and the Devil, as Gods very Enemies, in that we learned no less at the first, when we came to Gods School, than to deny our selves, and take up our Cross and follow our Master, which leadeth us none other way than he himself hath gone before us: as I say, we should not be dismayed, so we should with patience and joy go forwards, if we set before us as present the time to come, like as the wife in her travel doth the deliverance of her Child, and as the Saints of God did, but especially our Saviour and pattern Jesus Christ; for the Apostle saith, He is before him the joy and glory to come, and therefore He is contented the shame and sorrow of the Cross; so if we did, we should find at the length as they found.

For whom would it grieve which hath a long journey to go through a piece of foul way, if he knew that after that the way should be most pleasant, yea the journey should be ended, and he at his resting place most happy? Who will be afraid, or loath to leave a little pelf for a little time, if he knew he should shortly after receive most plentiful riches? Who will be unwilling for a little while to forsake his Wife, Children, or Friends, &c. when he knoweth he shall shortly after be associated unto them inseparably, even after his own hearts desire? Who will be sorry to forsake his life, which cannot but be most certain of Eternal life? Who loveth the shadow better than the Body? Who can love this life, but they that regard not the life to come? Who can desire the dross of this World, but such as be ignorant of the treasures of the everlasting joy in Heaven? I mean, who is afraid to dye, but such as hope not to live eternally? Christ hath promised pleasures, riches, joy, felicity, and all good things to them that for his sake lose any thing, and suffer any sorrow. And is he not true? How can he but be true? for guile was never found in his mouth.

performed.

Alas then, why are we so slack and slow, yea hard of heart to believe him, promising us thus plentifully eternal blissfulness, and are so ready to believe the World promising us many things, and paying us nothing? If we will curry favour now, and halt on both parts, then it promiseth us peace, quietness, and many others things else. But how doth it pay this gear? or if it pay it, with what quietness of conscience? Or if so; how long I pray you? Do not we see before our eyes, men to dye shamefully, I mean as rebels and other malefactors, which refuse to dye for Gods cause? What way is so sure a way to heaven, as to suffer in Christs cause? If there be any way on horse-back to Heaven, surely this is the way; By many troubles (saith the Apostle) we must enter into Heaven. All that will live godly in Christ Jesus, must suffer persecution. For the World cannot love them that are of GOD; the Devil cannot love his enemies; the World will love none but his own: you are Christs, therefore look for no love here. Should we look for fire to quench our thirst? And as soon shall Gods true Servants find peace and favour in Antichrists regiment.

2 Tim. 3.

Therefore (my dearly beloved) be stout in the Lord, and in the power of his might. Put on your armour; stand in the liberty of Christ which you have learned; rejoice that you may be counted worthy to suffer any thing for Gods cause: to all men this is not given. Your reward is great in Heaven, though in Earth ye find nothing. The journey is almost past, you are almost in the Haven. Hail on apace I beseech you, and merrily hoilc up your sails. Cast your selves on Christ, who careth for you. Keep company with him now still to the end; he is faithful, and will never leave you, nor tempt you further than that he will make you able to bear; yea in the midst of the temptation he will make an out-scape. Now pray unto him heartily, be thankful of his indignation, rejoice in hope of the health you shall receive, & be mindful of us which are in the vaward, and by Gods grace trust in Christ to be made able to break the Ice before you, that you following may find the way more easie. God grant it may be, Amen, Amen.

A Letter of
Mr. Bradford
to Mrs. Wilkinjon.

Almighty God our most loving Father, increase in your heart (my good Mother and dear Mistis in the Lord) his true knowledge and love in Christ, to the encouraging and comforting of your faith in these stormy days; as necessary unto us, so profitable if we persist unto the end, which thing God grant to us, Amen.

My right dearly beloved, I know not what other thing to write unto you, than to desire you to be thankful to the Lord, in that amongst the not many of your calling and state, it pleaseth him to give you his rare blessing, I mean to keep you from all the filth wherewith our country is horribly defiled. This blessing assuredly is rare as you see. But now if he shall bless you with another blessing, which is more rare, I mean to call you forth asa Martyr, and a witness aginst this filth, I hope you will become double thankful. For a greater token commonly we have not to judge of our election and salvation, next to Christ and faith in him, than the Cross, especially when it is so glorious, as on this sort to suffer any thing, but chiefly loss of this life, which indeed is never found till it be so lost; except the grain of wheat fall and be dead, it remaineth fruitless.

Ann.
1555.

The Cross
a great token of election.

You know that he which was rapt into the third Heaven, and did know what he wrote, doth say, That as the corn liveth not, except it be dead and cast into the Earth, so shall our bodies. And therefore the Cross should be little fear us, that even Death it self should altogether be desired of us, as the Taylor which putteth off our rags, and arayeth us with the royall robes of immortality, incorruption and glory. Great shame it should be for us, that all the whole creatures of God should desire, yea groan in their kind for our liberty, and we our selves to loath it, as doubtless we do, if for the Cross, yea for Death it self, we with joy swallow not up all sorrow that might let us from following the Lords calling, and obeying the Lords providence; whereby doubtless all Crosses, and Death it self doth come, and not by hap or chance. In consideration whereof, right dear Mother, that this providence stretcheth it self fo into us, and for us, that even the hairs of our heads are numbered with God, not one of them to fall to our hurt; surely we declare our selves very faint in faith, if we receive not such comfort, that we can willingly offer our selves to the Lord, and cast our whole care upon his back, honouring him with this honour, that he is and ever will be careful for us, and all we have, as for his dear Children. Be therefore of good cheer even in the midst of these miseries, be thankful to the Lord, and prepare your self for a further trial; which if God fend you, as I hope, so do you believe, that God therein will help and comfort you, and make you able to bear whatsoever shall happen. And thus much, having this opportunity, I thought good to write, praying God our Father to recompence into your bosome all the good that ever you have done, to me especially, and to many other, both in this time of trouble, and always heretofore.

Your own in the Lord,
John Bradford.

Another Letter written to certain godly persons, incouraging them to prepare themselves with patience to the Cross.

Gracious God and most merciful Father, for Jesus Christs sake, thy dearly beloved Son, grant us thy mercy, grace, wisdom, and Holy Spirit to counsel, comfort, and guide us, in all our cogitations, words and works, to thy glory, and our everlasting joy and peace for ever, Amen.

In my last Letter you might perceive my conjecturing to be no less towards you, than now have learned. But (my dearly beloved) I have learned none other thing, than before have told you would come to pass, if ye call not away that which ye have learned. I do appeal to both your Consciences, whether herein I speak truth, as well of my telling (though not so often as I might and should, God forgive me) as also of your learning. Now God will try you, to make others to learn by you, that which ye learned by others, and by them which have suffered this day ye might learn (if already ye had not learned) that life and honour is not to be set by more than Gods commandment. They in no point for all that ever their ghostly Fathers could do, having Doctor Death to take their part, would consent, or seem to consent to the Popish Mass and Papistical god, otherwise than in the days of our late King they had received. And this their faith they have confessed with their deaths to their great glory, and all our comforts, if we follow them; but to our confusion, if we start back from the same. Wherefore I beseech you to consider, as well to praise God for them, as to go the same way with them, if God so will.

I should have faid, as Mofes did, which fit more by trouble with Gods People, than by the riches of Egypt, and Pharaohs Court. Your house, home, and goods, yea life, and all that ever ye have; God hath given you as love-tokens, to admonish you of his love, and to win your love to him again. Now will he try your love whether ye set more by him than by his tokens, or no. If ye for his tokens sake, that is for your home, house, goods, yea life, will go with the world, left ye should lose them, then be assured, your loves as he cannot but essay it to be a Strumpets love, so will he cast it away with the world. Remember that he which will save his life shall lose it, if Christ be true: but he which adventureth, yea loseth his life, for the Gospels sake, the same shall be sure to find it eternally. Do not ye know that the way to salvation, is not the broad way which many run in, but the straight way which few now walk in?

In King Edwards time the high-way could not be known.

Before Persecution came, men might partly have stood in a doubt by the outward state of the world with us (although by Gods Word it was plain) whether was the high way (for there were as many that pretended the Gospel, as Popery: but now the Sun is risen, and the wind bloweth, so that the corn which hath not taken full root, cannot nor will not abide; and therefore easily ye may see the straight way by the small number that passeth thorow it. Who will now adventure their goods and life for Christ sake, which yet gave his life for our sakes? We are now become Gergesites, that would rather lose Christs than our Porkers. A faithful wife is never tried so to be, but when she rejecteth and withstandeth wooers. A faithful Christian is then found so to be, when his Faith is assaulted.

If ye go to Mafs, and do as the most part doth, then may ye live at rest and quietly; but if ye deny to go to it then shall ye go to prison, lose your goods, leave your Children comfortless, yea lose your life also. But (my dearly Beloved) open the eyes of your faith, and see how short a thing this life is, even a very shadow and smoke. Again, see how intolerable the punishment of hell fire is, and that endless. Last of all, look on the Joys incomprehensible, which God hath prepared for all them world without end, which lose either lands or goods for his Names sake. And then do ye reason thus; If we go to Mafs, the greatest enemy that Christ hath, though for a little time we shall live in quiet, and leave to our Children that they may live by heretics, yet shall we displease God, fall into his hands (which is horrible to hypocrites) and be in wonderful hazard of falling from eternal joy into eternal misery, first of soul, and then of body, with the Devil and all Idolaters.

Again, we shall want peace of Conscience, which surmounteth all the riches of the world: and for our Children, who knoweth whether God will visit our Idolatry on them in this life? yea our house and goods are in danger of losing, as our lives be through many casualties: and when God is angry with us, he can fend always, when he will, one mean or another to take all from us for our sins, and to cast us into care for our own sakes, which will not come into some little trouble for his sake.

On this sort reason with your selves, and then doubtless God will work otherwise with you, and in you, than ye are ware of. Where now ye think your selves unable to abide persecution, be most assured, if so be ye purpose not to forsake God, that God will make you so able to bear his Cross, that therein you shall rejoice. Faithful is God (saith Paul) which will not tempt you further than he will make you able to bear, yea he will give you an out-escape in the Cross, which shall be to your comfort. Think how great a benefit it is, if God will vouch you worthy this honour; to suffer loss of any thing for his sake. He might justly cast most grievous plagues upon you, and yet now he will correct you with that Rod whereby you shall be made like to his Christ, that for ever ye may reign with him. Suffer your selves therefore now to be made like to Christ, for else ye shall never be made like unto him. The Devil would gladly have you now to overthrow that which Godly ye have of long time professed. Oh how would he triumph, if he could win his purpose? Oh how would the Papists triumph against Gods Gospel in you? Oh how would you confirm them in their wicked Popery? Oh how would the poor Children of God be discomforted, if now you should go to Mafs and other Idolatrous service, and do as the world doth?

Hath God delivered you from the fiew to serve him so? Hath God miraculously restored you to health from your grievous Agues for such a purpose? Hath God given you such blessings in this world, and good things all the days of your life hitherto, and now of equity will ye not receive at his hands, and for his sake, some evil? God forbid: I hope better of you. Use prayer, and cast your care upon God; commit your Children into his hands; give to God your goods, bodies, and lives, as he hath given them, or rather lent them unto you. Say with Job; God hath given, and God hath taken away, his name be prais'd forever. Cast your care upon him, say, for he is curd, for ye; and take it amongst the greatest blessings of God, to suffer for his sake. I trust he hath kept you hitherto to that end.

And I beseech thee, O merciful Father, for Jesus Christs sake, that, thou wouldest be merciful unto us, comfort us with thy grace, and strengthen us in thy truth, that in heart we may believe, and in tongue boldly confess thy Gospel, to thy glory, and our eternal salvation, Amen. Pray for me, and I by Gods grace will do the same for you.

John Bradford.

An admonition to certain Professors of the Gospel, to beware they fall not from it, in consenting to the Romish Religion, by the example of other halting and double-faced Gossellers.

The peace of Christ, which is the true effect of Gods Gospel believed (my dearly Beloved) be more and more plentifully perceived of you, through the grace of our dear Father, by the mighty working of the Holy Spirit our comforter, Amen.

Though I have many Letters presently to hinder me from writing unto you, yet being desired, I could not but something signify my ready good will in this behalf so much as I may, when I cannot so much as I would. You hear and see how Satan bestirreth him, raging as a roaring Lion to devour us. You see and feel partly what storms he hath raised up to drown the poor boat of Christ, I mean his Church. You see how terribly he traineth his souldiers, to give a fierce onset on the vaward of Gods battle. You see how he hath received power of God, to molest Gods Children, and to begin at his House. By reason whereof consider two things; one, the cause on our behalf; the other, what will be the sequel on strangers.

For the first, if we be not blind, we cannot but well see that our sins are the cause of all this misery; our sins, I say, which I would that every one of us would apply to our selves after the example of Jenar and David, turning over the waller, that other mens offences might lye behind, and our own before. Not that I would excuse other men, which exteriorly have walked much more grossly than many of you have done; but that I would provoke you all as my self, to more hearty repentance and prayer. Let us more and more increase to know and lament our doubting of God, of his presence, power, anger, mercy, &c.

Let us better feel and hate our self-love, security, negligence, unthankfulness, unbelief, impatience, &c. and then doubtless the Cross shall be less fearful, yea it shall be comfortable, and Christ most dear and pleasant; death then shall be desired, as the dispatcher of us out of misery, and entrance into eternal felicity and joy unspeakable, the which is so much the more longed for, by how much we feel indeed the serpents bites, wherewith he woundeth our heels, that is, our outward Adam and Senses. If we had, I say, a lively and true feeling of his poison, we could not but as rejoice over our Captain that hath bruised his head, so be desirous to follow his example,

Now the second (I mean the fequel, or that which will follow on the strangers) my dearly Be-loved, let us well look upon. For if so be that God justly do thus give to Satan and his feed to vex and molest Christ and his penitent people; Oh what and how justly may he and will he likewise give to Satan to intreat the wretcheles and impenitent sinners? follow on the rest: but without, if they repent not: Certainly forthem is delivered the dregs of Gods Cup, that is Brimstone, fire, and tempest intolerable. Now are they unwilling to drink of Gods Cup of afflictions, which he offereth common with his Son Christ our Lord, left they should lose their Pigs with the Georgistia. They are unwilling to come into the way that bringeth to Heaven, even afflictions: they in their hearts cry, Let us cast the yoke from us; they walk two ways, that is, they fecke to God and Mammon, which is impossible; they will not come nigh the strait way that bringeth to life; they feyfe their eyes to beholde present things only; they judge of Religion after reason, and not after Gods word; they follow the more part, and not the better; they professe God with their mouths, but in their hearts they deny him: or else they would flake him by serving him more than men; they part flake with God, which would have all giving part to the world, to the Komms rout, and Antichristian idolatry now set abroad among us publicly; they will have Christ, but none of his Crofs, which will not be; they will be counted to live godly in Christ, but yet they will suffer no persecution; they love this world, where-through the love of God is driven forth of them; they favour of those things that be of men, and not that be of God: Summa, they love God in their lips, but in their hearts, yea and in their deeds deny him, as well by not repenting their evils past, as by continuing in evil will, and by doing as the world, the flesh, and the Devil willets, and yet still perchance they will pray, or rather prate, Thy will be done in earth, which is generally that every one should take up his Crofs and follow Christ. But this is a hard saying. Who is able to abide it? Therefore Christ must be prayed to depart, left all the Pigs be drowned. The Devil shall have his dwelling again in themselves rather than in their Pigs, and therefore to the Devil they shall go, and dwell with him in eternal perdition and damnation, even in hell fire, a torment endless, and above all cogitations incomprehensible, if they repent not.

To my good Brother John Careles, Prisoner in the Kings Bench.

THe Father of mercy and God of all comfort, visit us with his eternal consolation, according to his great mercies in Jesus Christ our Saviour, Amen.

My very dear Brother, if I shall report the truth unto you, I cannot but signify, that since I came into prison, I never received so much consolation as I did by your last Letter, the Name of God be most heartily praised therefore. But if I shall report the truth unto you, and as I have begun, I speak still the verity, I must confess, that for mine unthankfulness to you-wards, and to God especially I have more need of Gods merciful tidings, than I had ever heretofore. Ab that Satan envious as I so greatly; Ab that our Lord would tread his bead under our feet flurly. Ab that I might for ever both my self beware, and be a goodly example to you and others to beware of unthankfulness. Good Brother Careless, we had more need to take heed, after a lightning of a feu then before. God therefore is to be praised even when he bid th, and that nor of long but cheerful countenance from myself we being not expere how to sife it as we should do, do hurt more our selves thereby, so great is our ignorance and corruption. This my good Brother and right dear to my very heart, I write unto you, as to one whom in the Lord I imbrace, and I thank God that you do me in like manner. God our Father more and more give us both his good Spirit, that as by Faith we may feel our selves united unto him in Christ; so by love we may feel our selves linked in the same Christ onto another, I to you, and you to me, we to all the Children of God, and all the Children of God to us, Amen, Amen.

I heartily praise my God, which hath given him to see his he will be so freely in all his conversation, that his

The Crofs taken without Gods lending.

Worldly Iohns recompensed with endless and perpetual gain by the Crofs.

What commodities the Crofs bringeth.

Promises annexed to the Crofs.

A Almighty God our heavenly Father through Jesus Christ, be with you both, my dearly Beloved, as with his dear Children for ever, and so he bleſs you with his Holy Spirit, that you may in this your Croſs (for his cause doubtleſs) rejoyce and gladly take it up to bear it ſo long as he ſhall think good. I have heard (my good Brother and Siſter) how that God hath brought you both into his School-houſe (whereas both purpoſed by his leave to have played the Trewands) that thereby you might ſee his carefulneſs and love towards you. For if it be a token, of a loving and careful Father for his Children, to prevent the purpoſe, and diſappoint the intent of his Children, purpoſing to depart a while from the School for fear of beating (which thing they would not do, if they did as much conſider the commodity of Learning which there they might get) how ſhould you take this work of the Lord preventing your purpoſe, but as an evident ſign of love and fatherly carefulneſs that he beareth towards you? if he ſhould have winked at your wills, then would you have eſcaped beating, I mean the Croſs; but then ſhould you have loſt the commodity of learning that which your Father will now have you to learn and feel, and therefore hath he ſent you his Croſs. He, I ſay, hath brought you where you be; and though your reason and wit will tell you, it is by chance or fortune, or otherwiſe, yet (my dearly Beloved) know for certain that, whatſoever was the mean, God your Father was the worker hereof, and that for your weal, although otherwiſe your old Adam doth tell you, and you feel: yet I ſay of truth that your duty is to think of this Croſs, that as it is of Gods ſending, and cometh from him; ſo although your deſerts be otherwiſe, it is of love and fatherly affection for your weal and commodities ſake.

What commodity is hereby? you will perchance object. You are now kept to cloſe Priſon, you will ſay, your Family and Children be without good Over-ſeers; your ſubſtance diminiſheth by theſe means; your poverty will approach; and perchance more perils alſo, yea and loſs of life too. Theſe are no commodities, but diſcommodities, and that no ſmall ones; ſo that juſtly you would be glad to know what commodity can come to you by this Croſs, whereby cometh ſo great diſcommodities.

To theſe things I answer, that indeed it is true you ſay of your Bodies, Families, Children, ſubſtance, poverty, life &c. Which things, if you would conſider a while with inward eyes, as you behold them with outward; then perhaps you ſhould find more eaſe. Do not you now by the inward ſenſe perceive that you muſt part from all theſe and all other commodities in the world? Tell me then, have not you this commodity by your Croſs, to learn to loath and leave the world, and to long for and deſire another world, where is perpetuity? You ought of your own head and free will to have (according to your profeſſion in Baptiſm) forſaken the world and all earthly things, uſing the world as though you uſed it not. Your heart ſet only upon your hoard in heaven, or elſe you could never be Christs true diſciples, that is to be ſaved, and be where he is. And throw you (my good hearts in the Lord) throw you, I ſay, that this is no commodity, by this Croſs to be compelled hereto, that you might aſſuredly enjoy with the Lord endleſs glory? How now doth God, as it were, Fatherly pull you by the ears, to remember your former offences concerning theſe things and all other things, that repentance and remiſſion might enſue? How doth God now compel you to call upon him, and to be earneſt in Prayer: Are theſe no commodities? Doth not the Scripture ſay, that God doth correct us in this World, becauſe we ſhall not be Damned with the World? That God chaſtenieth every one whom he loveth? That the end of this correction ſhall be joy and holineſs? Doth not the Scripture ſay, That they are happy that ſuffer for righteousneſs ſakes, as you now do? That the glory and ſpirit of God is upon them? That, as you are now made like unto Chriſt in ſuffering, ſo ſhall you be made like him in reigning? Doth not the Scripture ſay, That you are now going the high and right way to Heaven? That your ſuffering is Christs ſuffering? My dearly Beloved, what greater commodities than thoſe can a godly heart deſire?

Therefore ye are commanded to rejoyce and be glad when ye ſuffer as now ye doſor through the goodneſs of God great ſhall be your reward: Where? Forboth on earth firſt your Children; for now they are in Gods meer and immediate protection: Never was Father ſo careful for his Children; as God is for yours preſently: Gods bleſſing, which is more worth than all the world; you leave indeed to your Children: Though all your Providence for them ſhould be pulled away; yet God is not poor, he hath promiſed to provide for them moſt Fatherly. Caf. thy burthen upon me, ſaith he; and I will bear it. Do you therefore call them, and commend them unto God your Father, and doubt not that he will dye in your debt. He never was found unfaithful, and he will not now begin with you. The good mans ſeed ſhall not go a begging his Bread; for he will ſhew mercy upon thouſands of the poſterity of them that fear him. Therefore (as I ſaid) Gods reward firſt upon earth ſhall be felt by your Children even corporally, and ſo alſo upon you, if God ſee it more for your commodity, at the leaſt inwardly you ſhall feel it by quietneſs and comfort of Conſcience: and ſecondly, after this life you ſhall find it ſo plentifully, as the eye hath not ſeen, the ear hath not heard, the heart cannot conceive how great and glorious Gods reward will be upon your bodies, much more upon your ſouls. God open our eyes to ſee and feel this indeed. Then ſhall we think the Croſs which is a mean hereto to be commendous. Then ſhall we thank God that he would chaſtiſe us. Then ſhall we ſay with David; Happy am I that thou haſt puniſhed me: for before I went aſtray, but now I keep thy Law.

This that we may do indeed (my dearly Beloved) let us firſt know that our Croſs cometh from God: Secondly, that it cometh from God as a Father, that is, to our weal and good. Therefore let us thirdly call to mind our ſins, and ask pardon. Whereto let us fourthly look for help certainly at Gods hand in his good time: help I ſay, ſuch as ſhall make moſt to Gods glory, and to the comfort and commodity of our ſouls and bodies eternally. This if we certainly conceive, then will there iſſue out of us hearty thanksgiving, which God requieth as a moſt precious ſacrifice. That we may all through Chriſt offer this, let us uſe earneſt prayer to our God and dear Father, who bleſs us, keep us, and comfort us under his ſweet Croſs for ever, Amen, Amen.

My dear hearts, if I could any way comfort you, you ſhould be ſure thereof, though my life lay thereon, but now I muſt do as I may, becauſe I cannot as I would. Oh that it would pleaſe our dear Father thoſtly to bring us where we ſhould never depart, but enjoy continually the bleſſed fruition of his heavenly preſence: Pray, pray that it may ſpeedily come to paſs, pray. To morrow I will ſend to you to know your eſtate; ſend me word what are the chiefeſt things they charge you with all. From the Counter.

By your Brother in the Lord,
John Bradford.

To Mrs. Hall, Priſoner in Newgate, and ready to make answer before her Adverſaries.

Our moſt merciful God and Father through Chriſt Jeſus our Lord and Saviour, be merciful unto us, and make perfect the good he hath begun in us unto the end. Amen.

My dear Siſter, rejoyce in the Lord, rejoyce; be glad, I ſay, be merry and thankful, not only becauſe Chriſt ſo commandeth us, but alſo becauſe our ſtate wherein we are preſently, requieth no leſs, for we are the Lords wineſt. God the Father hath vouchſafed to chuſe us amongſt many, to wineſts and reſtiſe that Chriſt his Son is King; and that his Word is true. Chriſt our Saviour, for his loves ſake towards us, will have us to bear record that he is: no the blood uſurper nor deceiver of the people, but Gods Embaſſador, Prophet, and Meſſias; ſo that of all dignities upon earth this is the higheſt. Greater honour had not his Propheſy, of Chriſt Apoſtles, nor deareſt Friends, than to bear wineſts with Chriſt, as we now do. The world, following the counſel Satan, who of their Sire Satan, would gladly condemn Chriſt and his wineſts, ſent to the Lord hath choſen us to be his Champions ſake.

to let this. As foots Soldiers therefore let us stand to our Master, who is with us and standeth on our right hand, that we shall not be much moved, if we hope and hang on his mercy; he is so faithful and true, that he will never tempt us farther than he will make us able to bear.

Therefore be not careful (for I hear say this day you shall be called forth) what you shall answer. The Lord which is true and cannot lye, hath promised, and will never fail nor forget it, that you shall have both what and how to answer, so as shall make his shameless Adversaries ashamed. Hang therefore on this Promise of God, who is an helper at a pinch, and a most present remedy to them that hope in him. Never was it ever heard of, or shall beget any hoping in the Lord was put to foil.

Therefore as I said, I say again, Dear Sister, be not cut, nor careful for your answering, but also be joyful for your cause. Confess Christ, and be not ashamed, and he will confess you, and never be ashamed of you. Though loss of goods and life be like here to ensue; yet if Christ be true (as he is most true) it is otherwise indeed: for he that loseth his life, saith he, winneth it; but he that saveth it, loseth it. Our sins have deserved many deaths. Now if God so deal with us, that he will make our deserved death a demonstration of his Grace, a reversalment of his Verity, a confirmation of his People, and overthrow of his Adversaries; What great cause have we to be thankful? Be thankful therefore good Sister, be thankful. Rejoice and be merry in the Lord; be stout in his cause and quarrel, he is faint-hearted, but run out your race, and let your Captain Christ before your eyes. Behold how great your reward is. See the great glory, and the eternity of felicity prepared for you. Serve and fight lawfully, that you may get the Crown. Run to get the game, you are almost at your journey's end; I doubt not but our Father will with us send to you also, as he did to Helias a fiery Chariot, to convey us into his Kingdom. Let us therefore not be dismayed, to leave our Cloak behind us, that is, our Bodies to suffer, God will one day restore them to us like to the Body of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ, whose coming is now at hand; Let us look for it and lift up our heads, for our redemption draweth nigh, Amen, Amen. The Lord of mercy grant us his mercy, Amen. I pray you, pray for me, and so desire my Brethren which be with you. Gods peace be with us all, Amen. Blessed be the dead that dye in the Lord; then how much more they that dye for the Lord?

Your Brother in bonds, J. Bradford.

To a Woman that desired to know his mind, whether she refraining from the Mass, might be present at the Popish Mass, or no.

I beseech Almighty God our heavenly Father to be merciful unto us, and to increase in you my good Sister, the knowledge and love of his Truth, and at this present give me grace so to write to you something of the same, as may make to his glory and our own comfort and confirmation in him, through Christ our Lord, Amen.

Whether you may come with safe Conscience to the Church now, that is, to the Service used commonly, in part, as at Mattins, or at Even-song, or no, is your desire to have me to write something for your further stay. My dearly Beloved, although your benefits towards me merit perchance make you to think, that in respect thereof I would bear with that which else were not to be born with; yet by Gods grace I am purposed, simply and without all such respect in this matter, to speak to you the truth according to my Conscience, as I may be able to stand unto, when I shall come before the Lord.

First therefore, go about to learn perfectly the first Lesson to be learned of a Christian, that is, to deny yourself, and in nothing to seek your self.

Secondly, learn after this, to begin at the next Lesson to it, which is, to seek God in all things you do, and leave undone.

Thirdly, know that then you seek God, when in his service you follow his Word, and not mans fantasies, custom, multitude, &c. and when with your Brother you follow the rule of Charity, that is, To do as you would be done by. In these is a sum of all the counsel I can give you, if that hereto I admonish you of the Service now used, which is not according to Gods Word, but rather against Gods Word directly, and in manner wholly: So that your going to the Service, is a declaration that you have not learned the first Lesson, nor never can learn it, so long as you go thither; therefore the second Lesson you shall utterly lose, if you cease not the seeking of your self, that is, if for company, custom, father or friend, life or goods, you seem to allow that which God disalloweth. And this that you the better may perceive, I purpose by Gods grace briefly to shew.

First, the Mattins and Even-song is in a Tongue forbidden publicly to be used in the Congregation that perceiveth not the Tongue. Read how Paul affirmeth it, to pray in an unknown Tongue, to be against Gods Commandment. This one (I trow) were enough, if nothing else were. For how can Gods glory be sought, where his Word and Commandment is wilfully broken? How can charity to Man stand, when charity to God, which is obedience to his Word, is overthrowen?

Again, both in Mattins and in Even-song is Idolatry maintained for Gods service; for there is Invocation and Prayer made to Saints departed this life, which robbeth God of that glory which he will give to none other.

Moreover, this Service, and the fetters forth of it condemneth the English Service as Heretic, thereby falling into Gods Curse, which is threatened to all such as call good evil, and evil good; whereof they shall be partakers that do communicate with them.

Besides this, this Latin Service is a plain mark of Antichrists Catholick Synagogue; so that the Communicants and Approvers of it thereby declare themselves to be Members of the same Synagogue, and so cut off from Christ and his Church, whose exterior mark is the true administration of Gods Word and Sacraments.

Furthermore, the example of your going thither to allow the Religion of Antichrist (as doubtless you do indeed, howsoever in heart you think) occasioneth the obfcurity to be utterly intractable, the weak Papists to be more obfolute, the strong Gospellers to be fore weakened, and the weak Gospellers to be utterly overthrowen: which things, how great offences they be, no Pen is able to utter by Letters. All these evils you shall be guilty of, that company with these in Religion exteriorly, from whom you are admonished to fly. If Christ be Christ, follow him: gather with him, left you scatter abroad. Serve God, not only in Spirit, but also in Body. Make not your Body, now a member of Christ, a member of Antichrist. Come out from amongst them, saith the Lord, and touch no unclean thing. Confess Christ and his Truth, not only in heart, but also in tongue, yea in very deed, which few Gospellers do. Indeed they deny him, and therefore had need to tremble, lest that Christ will deny them in the last day: the which day, if it were set before our eyes often, then would the pleasures and treasures of this World be but trifles.

Therefore good Sister, often have it before your eyes, daily set your self and your doings as before the Judgment Seat of Christ now, that hereafter you be not called into Judgment. Think that it will little profit you to win the whole World, and to lose your own Soul. Mark Christs Lessons well, He that will save his life, shall lose it. The Father of Heaven commandeth you to hear Christ, and he saith, Follow me: this can you not do, and follow Idolatry or Idolaters. Fly from such, saith the Scripture.

This God grant to you, to me, and to all Gods Children, Amen. Thus in haste I have accomplished your request. God grant that as you have done me much good bodily, so that this may be a little mean to do you some good spiritually, Amen. If time would serve, I would have written more at large. Anno 1555.
The Pope proves to be the great Antichrist (spoken of by the Apostles).

Worldly and dearly beloved in the Lord) the true fear of God, and the love of his truth, which perceive to be in you; specially, and above all other things do bind me hereunto. This bearer hath told me that your desire is to have something sent to you concerning the underp Authority of the Supremacy of the Bishopp of Rome (which is undoubtedly that great Antichrist, of whom the Apostles do so much admonish us) that you may have as well something the more to stay on, as also wherewith to answer the Adversaries, because you may perchance therein be something appoyed. To satisfie this your desire,
I will briefly go about, and say, that I will by Gods grace fully let forth the fame, to enform you to withstand the Assaults of the Papists herein, if you mark well and read over again that which I now Write.

The Papists do place in preeminence over the whole Church, the Pope, thereby unplacing Christ, which is the head of the Church, that giveth life to the whole Body, and by his Spirit doth make lively every member of the same. This they do without all Scriptures. For where they bring in this spoken to Peter, Feed my Sheep; I would gladly know whether this was not commanded personally to Peter, for that which otherwise they will unto others also. As thou art a Worshipper (and I am) I urge that he spake to Peter by name, if they had any learning, they would easily perceive how that it was not for any such cause as they pretend, but rather by a threefold commandment to refore him to the honour of an Apostle, which head lieth by his threefold denial. And how dare they interpret this word, My Sheep, my Lambs, to be the universal Church of Christ? I trow a man might easily by the like "reason prove that Peter himself had reigned that which Christ had given to him, in exhorting his fellow Pastors to feed the flock of Christ. Is not this pretty flattery? Because Christ saith to Peter, Feed my Sheep, therefore he ought to rule the universal and whole Church of Christ? If Peter do truly Write unto others that they should do the like, that is, Feed Christs flock, either he translateth his right and Authority committed to him upon them, or else he doth participate or communicate with them so that foolishly they go about to establish that which hath no ground. Peter indeed was a shepherd of the Sheep, but such a one as bestowed his labour on them so far as he could stretch himself by his Ministry. But the Papists prate that he had full power over all Churches: Wherein they may fee Paul to improve them, for else he had done unjustly in denying him the superiour place. Howbeit, who ever yet read that Peter did take any thing upon him over Churches committed to other men? Was not he the chief of the Church? sent of one not having rule over the rest? I grant that he was an excellent instrument of God, and for the excellency of his gifts, whenever they met together, place therefore was commonly given unto him. But what is this to the purpose, to make him ruler and head over all the whole Church, because he was so over the Great Congregation?

But be it to that Peter had as much gift as to him, as they do affirm: Who yet will grant, that Peter had no patrimony given for his heirs? He hath left (say the Papists) to his successors the left hand right which he received of Lord God, to turnt his fucceffour be a Statute. O Lord God, thou must himself fucceffour be a Statute for he received no title of Christ himself. I would gladly have the Papists to shew me one place of fucceffion mentioned in the Scriptures. I am fure that when Peter purposely painteth out the whole Administration of the Church, he neither maketh one head, nor any Inheribtable Primacy, and yet he is altogether in commendation of the Church, for he hath made mention of one God the Father, of one Christ, of one Spirit, of one Body of the Church, of one Faith, and of one Baptism, then he doth forbith the mean and manner how unity is to be kept, namely, because unto every Pastor is grace given after the measure, wherwith Christ hath endued them Where I pray you is now any title of Plenitudinis potestatis, of fullness of power? When he calleth home every one unto a certain measure, why did he not forthwith say one Pope? Which he could not have forgotten if the thing had been as the Papists make it.

No cause why any Perpetuity of primacy should be long to was at Rome: This is even like to this, that because Moses the greatest Prophet, and Aaron the first Priest exercised their offices unto their Death in the desert, therefore the principall^e place of the Jewish Church should bein the Wilderness. But grant them their reason that it is good; What should Amos claim? For Peters Chair was there also; wherein Paul gave him a Check, which was unfeinly and unmanerly done of Paul, that would not give place to his President and better.

No, say the Pelagians, Rome must have this Authority because Peter died there. But what if a man should by probable conjectures shew, that it is but a fable which is assigned of Peter Bishoprick at Rome? Read how Faul- doth salute very many private persons when he writeth to the Romans. Three years after his Epistle made, he was brought to Rome prisoner. Luke telleth, that he was received of the Brethren, and yet in all these, is no mention at all of Peter, which then by their stories was at Rome. Belike he was proud, as the Pope and Prelates be, or else he would have visited Paul. Paul being in prison in Rome did write divers Epistles, in which he expresseth the names of many which were in company of Peter, but of Peter he speaketh never a word. Surely if Peter had been there, this silence of him had been suspicious. In the 2 Epistle to Timothy, Peter complaineth that no man was with him in his Defence, but all had left him. If Peter had been then at Rome, as they write, then either Paul had belied him, or Peter had played his Peters part, Luke 22. In another place, how doth he blame all that were with him, only Timothy excepted? Therefore we may well doubt whether Peter was at Rome Bishop as they prate: for all this time and long before, they say that Peter was Bishop there.

But I will not put up coals in this matter. If Rome be the chief fact because Peter died there, why should not Antioch be the second? Why should not James and John, which were taken with Peter to be as Billars? Why, I say, should not their seats have honour next to Peters feet? Is not this gear preposterous, that Alexandria where Marc (which was but one of the Disciples) was Bishop should be preferred before Ephesus where John the Evangelist taught and was Bishop, and before Jerusalem, where not only James taught and died Bishop, but also Christ Jesus our Lord and High Priest for ever, by whom being Master, I hope, honour should be given to his chair, more then to the chair of his Chaplains?

I need to speak nothing how that Paul telleth Peters <sup>Third Apostle</sup> to concern rather Circumcision or the Jews, <sup>which was over the dramatical, and over the Gentile,</sup> and therefore properly persaineth not to us. Neither do I need to bring in Gregorius the firstbith of Rome; which was about the year of our Lord 600. who plainly in his works doth write that this title of Primacy, and to be head over all Churches under Christ, is a title meet and agreeing only to Antichrist, and therefore he calleth it a prophane, a mischiefous, and an horrible title. Whom should we believe now, if we will neither believe Apostle nor Pone?

If I should go about to tell how this name was first gotten by Phocas, I should be too long. I purpose God willing to fit it forth as large in a work which I have begun of Antichrist; if God for his mercies sake give me life to finish it. For this present therefore I shall desire your Ladyship to take this in good part. If they will needs have the Bishop of Rome to be acknowledged for the head of the Church, then will I urge them that they shall give us a Bishop. But they obtrude unto us a butcher rather, or a hitepiece, than a Bishop. They brag of Peters succession, of Christs Vicar, this is always in their mouth. But also how can we call him Christs Vicar that refitteth Christ, oppugneth his verities, persecuteth his People, and like a Pretiate preferreth himself above God and man? How, or wherein doth the Pope and such a one show himself to be Christs Vicar, or the true Successor of Peters Ministry, which is the bequest of his succession? For this conclusion, which I will urge presently for this conclusion, if the Papists will have the Bishop of Rome supreme head of the Church of Christ in Earth, they must, afore they attain this, give us a Bishop in deed, not in name. For whosoever he be that will make this the name this must needs follow, that they do nothing else but teach a most wicked detestation, and departing from Christ.

But of this, if God lend me life, I purpose to speak more at large hereafter. Now will I betake your Ladyship unto the tuition of God our Father, and Christ our only Head, Pastor and Keeper, to whom see that you cleave by true Faith, which dependeth only upon the Word of God; which if you do follow as a lantern to your feet, and a light to your steps, you shall then avoid darkness, and the dangerous deeps whereinto the Papists are fallen by the Judgment of God, and seek to bring us into the same dungeon with them, that the blind following the blind, they both may fall into the ditch: out of the which God deliver them according to his good will, and preserve us for his Names sake, that we being in his light, may continue therein, and walk in it whilst it is day, so shall the night never overpresius, we going from light to light, from verite to verite, from Faith to Faith, from glory to glory, by the governance of Gods good Spirit, which God our Father give unto us all for ever, Amen.

Your Brother in bonds for the testimony of Iesus Christ,
John Bradford.

He wrote also another fruitful Letter to this R. Hopkins, which you may read in the book of Letters of the Martyrs.

Here followeth another Letter of M. Bradford, to one Richard Hopkins, Sheriff sometimes of Coventry, and yet being (as I hear, say) alive. This Hopkins, whom Mr. Bradford commendeth so much in this Letter, during the time of his Sherifalitie was detested and accused, by certain malignant Adversaries, of matter pertaining to Religion. What matter it was, I am not yet certainly informed, unless it were for sending, and lending unto a thiefe, being then in prison ready to be hanged, a certain English Book of Scripture for his Spirituall comfort.

Whereupon, or else upon some such like matter, he being maliciously accused, was sent for and committed to the Fleet, and there endured a sufficient time, not without great peril of life. Notwithstanding, the said Hopkins being at length delivered out of prison, following this Counsel of Mr. Bradford, and minding to keep his Conscience pure from idolatry, was driven with his Wife and eight young Children, to avoid the Realm, and leaving all other worldly respects, with his great loss and damage went into High Germany, where he continued in the City of Basle, till the Death of Queen Mary; being like a good Tobias, to his power a friendly helper, and a comfortable reliever of other English Exiles thereabout him, Gods holy blessing so working with him therefore, that in those far Countries neither he fell in any great decay, neither any one of all his household, during all that time there, miscarried, but so many as he brought out, so many he re-carried home again, yea and that with advantage, and Gods plenty withal upon him. Now the Letter Written to this Richard Hopkins by Mr. Bradford, is this.

A Letter to Master Richard Hopkins, then Sheriff of Coventry, and prisoner in the Fleet, for the faithful and constant confessing of Gods Holy Gospel.

A Letter of M. Bradford to R. Hopkins, who was prisoner the same time for his Conscience.

Dearely beloved in the Lord, I wish unto you, as unto mine own Brother, yea as to mine own heart root, Gods mercy, and the feeling of the same plentifully in Christ our sweet Saviour, who gave himself a ransom for our sins, and price for our redemption, praised therefore be his Holy Name for ever and ever. Amen.

I will not go about to excuse my self for not sending unto you hitherto, suffering for the Lords sake as you do, to the comfort of me and all that love you in the Truth; but rather accuse my self both before God and you, desiring of you forgiveness, and with me to pray to God for pardon of this my unkind forgetting you, and all other of my sins, which I beseech the Lord in his Mercy to do away for his Christs sake. Amen.

Now to make amends to you ward, I would be glad if I could: but because I cannot, I shall heartily desire you to accept that will, and this which I shall now write unto you thereafter; I mean, after my will and not after the deed to accept and take it. At this present, my dear heart in the Lord, you are in a blessed state, although it seem otherwise to you, or rather unto your old Adam, the which I dare now be so bold as to discern from you, because you would have him not only discerned, but also utterly destroyed. For if God be True, then is his Word True.

Now his word pronounceth of your state that it is happy, therefore it must needs be so. To prove this, I think it need not: for you know that the Holy Ghost saith, That they are happy which suffer for Righteousnes sake, and that Gods Glory and Spirit resteth on them which suffer for Conscience to God. Now this you cannot but know, that this your suffering is for Righteousnes sake, and for Conscience to God-wards, for else you might be out of trouble even out of hand. I know in very deed that you have felt and do feel your unthankfulness to God, and other sins, to witness to you, that you have deserved this imprisonment, and lack of liberty, betwixt God and your self, and I would you so would confess unto God in your prayers, with petition for pardon and thanksgiving, for his correcting you here. But you know that the Magistrates do not persecute in you your sins, your unthankfulness, &c. But they persecute in you Christ himself, his Righteousnes, his verity, and therefore happy be you that have found such favour with God your Father, to account you worthy to suffer for his sake in the sight of man; surely you shall rejoyce therefore one day with a joy unspeakable, in the sight of man also.

You may think your self born in a blessed time, that have found this grace with God, to be a vessel of honour to suffer with his Saints, yea with his Son. My beloved, God hath not done so with many. The Apostle saith, Not many noble, nor many rich, nor many wise in the World, hath the Lord God chosen. Oh then what cause have you to rejoyce, that amongst the not many, he hath chosen you to be one? For that cause hath God placed you in your office, that therefore ye might the more see his special dignation and love towards you. It had not been so great a thing for Mr. Hopkins to have suffered as Mr. Hopkins, as it is for Mr. Hopkins also to suffer as Master Sheriff. Oh happy day that you were made Sheriff by the which as God in this World would promote you to a more honourable degree, so by suffering in this room he hath exalted you in Heaven, and in the sight of his Church and Children, to a much more excellent glory. When was it read that a Sheriff of a City hath suffered for the Lords sake? Where read we of any Sheriff that hath been cast into prison for Conscience to God-ward? How could God have dealt more lovingly with you, then herein he hath done? To the end of the World it shall be written for a memorial to your praise, that Richard Hopkins Sheriff of Coventry, for Conscience to do his Office before God, was cast into the Fleet, there kept prisoner along time. Happy and twice happy are you, if hereafter you may give your life. Never could you have attained to this promotion on this sort out of that Office. How do you preach now, not only to all men, but specially to Magistrates in this Realm? Who would ever have thought that you should have been the first Magistrate that for Christs sake should have lost any thing? As I said before, therefore I say again, that your state is happy. Good Brother, before God I Write the Truth unto you, my Conscience bearing me witness that you are in a most happy state with the Lord, and before his sight.

Be thankful therefore, rejoyce in your trouble, pray for patience, prefevere to the end, let patience have her perfect work. If you want this Wisdom and Power, ask it of God, who will give it to you in his good time. Hope still in him, yea if he should slay you, yet trust in him with Job, and you shall perceive that the end will be to find him merciful and full of compassion: for he will not break promise with you, which hitherto did never so with any. He is with you in trouble, he heareth you calling upon him, yea before you call, your desires are not only known, but accepted through Christ. If now and then he hide his face from you, it is but to provoke your appetite, to make you the more to long for him. This is most true. He is coming, and will come, he will not be long. But if for a time he seem to tarry, yet stand you still, and you shall see the wonderful works of the Lord. Oh beloved, wherefore should you be heavy? Is not Christ Emmanuel, God with us? Shall you not find that as he is true in saying, In the World you shall have trouble; so is he in saying, In me you shall have comfort? He doth not swear only that trouble will they that suffer for the Lord. And are not you one of them?

 Yea verily are you. Then, as I said, happy, happy, and now suffer with the Lord, surely you shall be glorified

A Letter of
 Mr. Bradford
 to Mistress Brown now

 Willough.

GOD Sister, God our Father make perfect the good be-hath begun in you unto the end.
 I am afraid to write unto you because you so over charge your self at all times, even whensoever I do but send to you commendations. I would be more bold on you then many others, and therefore you might suspect so great tokens still I should write unto you of my need; which thing doubtless I would do if it urged me. Dear Sister, I see your un-fained love to me waxes in God, and have done of long time, the which I do recompence with the like, and will do by Gods grace so long as I live, and therefore I hope not to forget you, but in my poor prayers to have you in remembrance, as I hope you have me. Otherwise I can do you no service, except it be now and then by my writing to let you from better exercise; where yet the end of my writing is to excite and stir up your heart more earnestly to go onwards in your well begun enterprise. For you know none shall be crowned, but such as strive lawfully, and none receive the glove, but those that run to the appointed mark. None shall be saved but such as persevere and continue to the very end.

1 Tim. 1.
Heb. 10.
 Therefore, Dear Sister, remember that we have need of patience; that when we have done the good will of God, we may receive the promise. Patience and perseverance be the proper notes, whereby Gods Children are known from counterfeiters. They that persevere not, were always but Hypocrites. Many make godly beginnings, yea their progress seemeth Marvellous, but yet after in the end they fall. These were never of us; with Saint John: for if they had been of us, they would have continued unto the very end.

Wholesome lessons of life.
 Go to now therefore mine own beloved in the Lord; as you have well begun, and well gone forward; so well persist, and happily end, and then all is yours: Though this be sharp and sever, yet it is not tedious and long. Do all that ever you do, simply for God, and as to God; so shall never unkindness nor any other thing make you to leave off from well doing; so long as you may do well. Accustom your self now to see God continually, that he may be all in all unto you. In good things behold his mercy, and apply it unto your self. In evil things and plagues behold his judgments, where-through learn to fear him. Beware of Sin, as the Serpent of the Soul, which spoileth us of all our ornament and seemly apparel in Gods sight. Let Christ Crucified be your book to study on, and that both night and day. Mark your Vocation, and be diligent in the works thereof. Use hearty and earnest prayer, and that in Spirit.
 In all things give thanks to God our Father through Christ. Labour to have here life everlasting begun in you:
 for else it will not be elsewhere enjoyed. Set Gods judgment often before your eyes, that now examining your self, you may make diligent just, and obtain never to come into judgment. Uncover your evils to God, that he may cover them. Beware of this Antichristian Traile: defile not your self in Soul or Body therewith, but accomplish believes in the fear of God, and bear no Yoke with unbelievers. Look for the coming of the Lord which is at hand; by earnest prayer and godly life hasten it. God our Father accomplish his good work in you, Amen. Commend me to my good Mother Mistress Willough, and to my very dear Sister Mistress Warcup. I shall daily commend you all to God, and I pray you do the like for me.

John Bradford.

To a Friend of his; instructing him how he should Answer his Adversaries.

MY good Brother, our merciful God and dear Father through Christ, open your eyes effectually to see, and your heart ardently to desire the everlasting joy which he hath prepared for his slaughter-sheep, that is, for such as shrink not from his truth for any such storms sake Amen.

When you shall come before the Magistrates to give an answer of the hope which is in you, do it with all reverence and simplicity. And because you may be sometimes afraid by the power of the Magistrates and cruelty which they will threaten against you, I would you set before you the good Father Moses to follow his example. For he set the invisible God before his eyes of Faith, and with them looked upon God and his glorious Majesty and power, as with his corporal eye he saw Pharaoh and all his fearful terrors. So do you my dearly beloved: let your inward eye give such light unto you, that as you know you are before the Magistrates, so and much more, you and they also are present before the Face of God, which will give such Wisdom to you, fearing him and seeking his praise, as the Enemies shall wonder at; and further, he will so order their hearts and doings, that they shall, will they nill they, serve Gods Providence towards you; which you cannot avoid though you would; as shall be moost to his glory, and your everlasting comfort.

Therefore, my good Brother, let your whole study be only to please God: put him always before your eye, for he is on your right hand lest you should be moved; he is faithful, and never will suffer you to be tempted above that he will make you able to bear. Yea, every hair of your head he hath numbered, so that one of them shall not perish without his good will, which cannot but be good unto you, in that he is become your Father through Christ: and therefore as he hath given you to believe in him (God increase his belief in us all) so doth he now graciously give unto you to suffer for his names sake: the which you ought with all thankfulness to receive, in that you are made worthy to drink of the self same cup, which not only the very Sons of God have drank of before you, but even the very natural Son of God himself hath brought you good luck: Oh be of his mercy make us thankful to pledge him again, Amen.

Because the chiefest matter they will trouble you, and go about to deceive you withal, is the Sacrament, not of Christs Body and Blood, but of the Altar as they call it; thereby destroying the Sacrament which Christ instituted.
 I would you noted these two things: First, that the Sacrament of the Altar which the Priest offered in the Mass and eateth privately with himself, is not the Sacrament of Christs Body and Blood instituted by him, as Christs institution plainly written and set forth in the Scriptures, being compared to their using of it, plainly doth declare.

Again, if they talk with you of Christs Sacrament instituted by him, whether it be Christs Body or no: answer them, that as to the eyes of your reason, so your taste and corporal sense it is Bread and Wine, and therefore the Scripture calleth it after the Consecration: so even so to the eye, taste, and sense of your Faith, which ascendeth to the Right Hand of God in Heaven, where Christ sitteth, it is in very deed Christs Body and Blood, which spiritually your Soul feedeth on to everlasting life in Faith, and by Faith, even as your Body presently feedeth on the Sacramental Bread and Sacramental Wine.

By this mean, as you shall not allow transubstantiation, nor none of their Popish Opinions: so shall you declare the Sacrament to be a matter of Faith, and not of reason, as the Papists make it. For they deny Gods Omnipotency, in the in that they say Christ is not there, if Bread be there:
 but Faith looketh on the Omnipotency of God, as joined with his promise, and doubteth not but that Christ is able to give that be promised us spiritually by Faith, the Bread still remaining in substance, as well as if the substance of Bread were taken away: for Christ faith not in and how.

The Prelates persecute me, I hate the Prelates, not for that they persecute me, but for that they hate me, and I hate them, because they persecute me, and I hate them, because they persecute me, and I hate them, because they persecute me.

loving kindness here, then by praying for you, and after this life, by witnessing your Faith declared to me by your fruits, when we shall come and appear together before the Throne of our Saviour Jesus Christ, whither I thank God I am even now a going, ever looking when Officers will come, and satisfy the Precept of the Prelates, whereof though I cannot complain, because I have justly deserved an hundred thousand deaths at Gods hands by reason of my sins, yet I may and must rejoyce, because the Prelates do not persecute in me mine iniquities, but Christ Jesus and his Verity, so that they persecute not me, they hate not me, but they persecute Christ, they hate Christ.

And because they can do him no hurt (for he sitteth in Heaven, and laugheth them and their devices to scorn, as one day they shall feel) therefore they turn their rage upon his poor sheep, as Herod their Father did upon the Infants Matt. 2. 16. Great cause therefore have I to rejoyce, that my dear Saviour Christ will vouchsafe, amongst many, to choose me to be a vessel of grace to suffer in me (which have deserved so often and justly to suffer for my sins) that I might be most assured I shall be a vessel of honour, in whom he will be glorified.

Therefore, my right dear Brother in the Lord, rejoyce with me, give thanks for me, and cease not to pray, that God for his mercies sake would make perfect the good he hath begun in me. And as for the Doctrine which I have professed and preached, I do confess unto you in writings, as to the whole world I shortly shall by Gods grace in suffering, that it is the very true Doctrine of Jesus Christ, of his Church, of his Prophets, Apostles, and all good men: so that if an Angel should come from Heaven and preach otherwise, the same were accursed.

Therefore waver not, dear heart in the Lord, but be confirmed in it, and as your vocation requirith, when God so will, confess it, though it be perilous so to do. The end shall evidently shew another manner of pleasure for so doing, then tongue can tell. Be diligent in prayer, and watch therein. Use reverent reading of Gods Word. Set the shortness of this time before your eyes and let not the Eternity that is to come, depart out of your memory. Practise in doing, that you learn by reading and hearing. Decline from evil, and pursue good. Remember them that be in bonds, especially for the Lords cause, as members of your body, and fellow heirs of grace. Forget not the afflictions of Sion, and the oppression of Jerusalem, and God our Father shall give us his continual blessing through Christ our Lord, who guide us as his dear Children for ever. Amen.

And thus I take my Vale and farewell with you dear Brother for ever in this present life, till we shall meet in eternal bliss; whither our good God and Father bring us shortly, Amen. God bless all your Babes for ever, Amen. Out of Prison this 8th of February.

Your afflicted Brother for the Cause,
John Bradford.

Almighty God our heavenly Father for his Christ sake, increase in us faith, by which we may more and more see what glory and honour is reposed and safely kept in Heaven, for all them that believe with the heart, and confess Christ and his truth with the mouth, Amen. My dearly beloved, I remember that once heretofore I wrote unto you a Vale, or a farewell upon conjecture: but now I write my farewell to you in this life in deed, upon certain knowledge. My staff standeth at the door, I continually look for the Sheriff to come for me, and I thank God I am ready for him. Now go I to practise that which I have preached. Now am I climbing up the hill, it will cause me to puff and to blow before I come to the cliff: The hill is steep and high, my breath is short, and my strength is feeble: pray therefore to the Lord for me, that as I have now through his goodness, even almost come to the top, I may by his grace be strengthened, not to rest till I come where I should be. Oh loving Lord, put out thy hand, and draw me unto thee: for no man cometh, but he whom the Father draweth. See, my dearly beloved, Gods loving mercy: he knoweth my short breath and great weakness. As he sent for Helias in a fiery Chariot, so sendeth he for me: for by fire my drofs must be purified, that I may be fine gold in his sight. O unthankful wretch that I am! Lord do thou forgive me mine unthankfulness. Indeed I confess (right dear to me in the Lord) that my sins have deserved Hell fire, much more then this fire. But lo, so loving is my Lord, that he converteth the remedy for my sins, the punishment for my transgressions, into a testimonial of his Truth, and a testimony of his Verity, which the Prelates do persecute in me, and not my sins: Therefore they persecute not me, but Christ in me, which, I doubt not, will take my part unto the very end. Amen.

O that I had so open an heart, as could so receive, as I should do this great benefit and unspeakable dignity, which God my Father offereth to me! Now pray for me, my dearly beloved: pray for me that I never shrink. I shall never shrink I hope. I trust in the Lord I shall never shrink: for he that always hath taken my part, I am assured will not leave me when I have most need, for his truth and mercies sake. Oh Lord help me. Into thy hands I commend me wholly. In the Lord is my trust, I care not what man can do unto me, Amen. My dearly beloved, say you Amen also, and come after if so God call you. Be not ashamed of the Gospel of Christ but keep company with him still. He will never leave you, but in the midst of temptation will give you an outscaper: to make you able to bear the brunt. Use hearty prayer, reverently read and hear Gods Word, put it in practice: look for the Cross lift up your hands, for your redemption draweth nigh; know that the death of Gods Saints is precious in his sight. Be merry in the Lord, pray for mitigation of Gods heavy displeasure upon our Country. God keep us for ever, God bless us with his Spiritual blessings in Christ. And thus I bid you farewell for ever in this present life. Pray for me, pray for me, for Gods sake pray for me. God make perfect his good work begun in me, Amen. Out of Prison the 7th of February.

Yours in the Lord, J. Bradford.

In the story of Mr. Bradford it was above rehearsed, how a certain Gentlewoman, being in trouble by her Father and Mother for not coming to Mals, sent her Servant to visit M. Bradford in Prison. Who tending the woful case of the Gentlewoman, to the intent partly to confirm her with counsel, partly to relieve her oppressed mind with some comfort, directed this Letter unto her; the contents whereof are these.

To a certain godly Gentlewoman, troubled and afflicted by her Friends, for not coming to the Mals.

I Wish unto you, right Worlhipful and my dearly beloved Sister in the Lord, as to my self, the continual grace and comfort of Christ, and of his holy Word, through the operation of the Holy Spirit, who strengthen your inward man with the strength of God, that you may continue to the end in the faithful obedience of Gods Gospel, whereto you are called, Amen.

I perceived by your self the last day when you were with me, how that you are in the School-house and trial Parlor of the Lord; which to me is (at the least it should be) a great comfort to see the number of Gods elect by you increased, which is in that state wherof God hath not called many, as Paul saith. And as it is a comfort to me, so should it be a confirmation unto me, that the Lord for his faithfulness sake will make perfect and finish the good he hath begun in you to the end.

If then your Cross be to me a comfort or token of The Cross your Election, and a confirmation of Gods continual favour (my dearly Beloved) how much more ought it to be so unto you? Unto whom he hath not only given to believe, but also to come into the trace of suffering for his sake, and that not commonly of common Enemies; but even of your own Father, Mother, and all your Friends, I mean Kinsfolks, as you told me. By which I see Christs words to be true, How that he came to give his Children such a Peace with him, as the Devil might not, nor may abide, and therefore stirreth up Father and Mother, Sister and Brother, rather than it should continue. But (my dear Sister) if you cry with David to the Lord, Psal. 124. and and complain to him; how that for Conscience to him your Father and Mother hath forsaken you, you shall hear him speak in your heart, that he hath received you, and by this would have you to see, how that he maketh you here like to Christ, that elsewhere (in Heaven) you might be like unto him; whereof you ought to be most assured, knowing that in time, even when Christ shall appear, you shall be like unto him. For he will make your body, which now you defile not with Idolatrical service in going to Mass, like unto his own glorious and immortal Body, according to the power whereby he is able to do all things. He will confess you before his Father, which do not deny his verity in word nor deed before your Father; he will make you to reign with him, that now suffer for him and with him; he will not leave you comfortless, that seek no comfort but at his hand; though for a little time you be afflicted, yet therein will he comfort and strengthen you, and at the length make you to be merry with him in such joy as is infinite and endless. He will wipe all the tears from your eyes; he will embrace you as your dear husband; he will after he hath proved you, crown you with a Crown of glory and immortality, such as the heart of man shall never be able to conceive in such sort as the thing is. He now be- holdeth your steadfastness, and striving to do his good will; and shortly will he shew you how steadfast he is, and will be ready to do your will, after that you have fully re- signed it to his will.

Pledge him in his cup of the Cross, and you shall pledge him in the cup of his Glory. Desire to drink it before it be come to the dregs, whereof the wicked shall drink and all those that for fear of the Cross and pledg- ing the Lord, do walk with the wicked in betraying in fact and deed that which their heart embraceth for ver- ity. The which thing if you should do (which God forbid) then, my dear Mistress and Sister in the Lord, you should not only lose all that I have before spoken, and much more infinitely of eternal joy and glory, but also be a cast-away, and partaker of Gods most heavy dis- pleasure in Hell fire eternally; and so for a little ease, which you cannot tell how long it will last, to lose for ever and ever all ease and comfort. For he that gathereth not with me (saith Christ; as no Mass-Gospieller doth) scattereth abroad. According to that we do in this Body, we shall receive, be it good or bad. If of our words we shall be judged to condemnation or salvation; much more then of our facts and deeds. You cannot be partaker of Gods Religion and Antichrists service, whereof the Mass is most principal. You cannot be a member of Christs Church, and a member of the Popes Church. You must glorify God not only in soul and heart, but also in body and deed. You may not think that God requirith less of you his Wife now, then your Husband did of you. If both Heart and Body your Husband would have, shall Christ have less, throw you, which hath so bitterly and dearly bought it? If your Husband could not admit an excuse how your heart is his only, if he should have taken your Body in bed with another; do you think that Christ will allow your Body at Mass, although your heart consent not to it?

God esteemeth his Children, not only of their hearts, but of their pure hands and works, and therefore in He- lias time he counted none to be his Servants and People, but such as had not bowed their knees to Baal; as now he doth not in England account any other to be his dar- lings, which know the Truth in heart, and deny it in their deeds, as do our Mass-Gospiellers.

We ought to desire above all things the sanctifying of Gods holy Name, and the coming of his Kingdom; and shall we then see his Name blasphemed so horribly as it is at Mass, by making it a Sacrifice propitiatory, and setting forth a false Christ of the Priests and Bakers making, to be worshipped as God, and say nothing? The Jews rent their cloaths afunder in seeing or hearing any thing blasphemously done or spoken against God, and shall we yet come to Church where Mass is, and be mute? Paul and Barnabas rent their cloaths to see the People of Lycaonia to offer Sacrifice unto them, and shall we see Sacrifice and Gods service done to an inanimate Creature, and be mute? What thing helpeth more or so much Antichrists King- dom as doth the Mass? And what destroyeth preaching and the Kingdom of Christ upon Earth more than it doth? And how can we then say, Let thy Kingdom come, and go to Mass? How can we pray before God, Thy will be done on Earth, when we will do our own will, and the will of our Father or Friends? How pray we, Deliver us from evil, which knowing the Mass to be evil, do come to it?

But what go I about to light a Candle in the Noon- day, that is, to tell you that we may not go to Mass, or to the Congregation where it is, except it be to reprove it, in that all men in so doing do but dissemble both with God and Man? And is dissembling now to be allowed? How long will men yet halt on both knees (saith God?) Halting (saith Paul) bringeth out of the way, that is to say, out of Christ, which is the way: so that he which is not in him shall wither away, and be cast into Hell fire. For Christ will be ashamed of them before his Father, which be now ashamed of his Truth before this wicked generation.

Therefore (my good Mistress) take good heed; for it had been better for you never to have known the Truth, and there-through to have escaped from Papistical un- cleanness, then now to return to it, making citizens your members, being members of righteousness, members of unrighteousness, as you do, if you do but go to the Church where Mass is. Be pure therefore, and keep your self from all filth of the spirit, and of the flesh. Abstain not only from all evil, but from all appearance of evil.

And so the God of Peace shall be with you, the glory of God shall govern you, the Spirit of God shall sanctify you, and be with you for ever, to keep you from all evil, and to comfort you in all your distress and trouble; which is but short if you consider the eternity you shall enjoy in glory and felicity in the Lord, which undoubtedly you shall not fail but inherit for ever, if so be you, as the elect Child of God, put your trust in his mercy, call upon his Name unsafely, and yield not unto the end of the wicked world, but stick still against it unto the oed. God for his holy Names sake, which is properly the God of the widows, be your good and dear Father for ever, and help you always, as I my self would be helped at his hands in all things, and especially in this his own cause, Amen, Amen.

To one by whom he had received much comfort and re- lief in his Trouble and Imprisonment.

The mercy of God in Christ, peculiar to his Children, A Letter of thanks to a good Bene- factor at his.

When I consider with my self the benefits which God hath shewed unto me by your means, if I had so good and thankful a heart as I would I had, I could not with dry eyes give him thanks; for certainly they are very many and great. And now being yet still the Lords Prisoner, I receive from him more benefits by you. For the which I think my self so much bound to you, my good Brother, (although you were but the instrument by whom God wrought and blessed me) that I look not to come out of your debt by any pleasure, or service that I shall ever be able to do you in this life. I shall heartily pray unto God therefore to requite you the good you have done to me for his sake: for I know that which you have done, you have done it simply in respect of God and his Word. He therefore give you daily more and more to be confirmed in his Truth and Word, and so plentifully pour upon you the riches of his holy Spirit and heavenly Treasures laid up in store for you, that your corporal and earthly riches may be used of you at Sacraments and significations thereof; the more to desire the one, that is, the heavenly, and the less to esteem the other, that is, the earthly. For Satans solicitation is, so to set before you the earthly, that therein and thereby you should not have access to the consideration of the heavenly, but as one bewitched should utterly forget them, and altogether become a lover and worshipper of the earthly Mammon, and so to fall to covetousness, and a desire to be rich, by that means to Christ bring you into many noisome and hurtful lusts: as now adays I hear of many which have utterly forsaken God and all his heavenly riches, for Antichrists pleasure, and the preserving of their worldly self, which they imagine to leave to their posterity, whereof they are uncertain, as they

To a faithful Friend of his, and his Wife, revealing their doubts, why they ought not to come to auricular Confession.

The merciful God, and Father of our Lord Jesus Christ, which loveth us as a most dear Father, and hath put upon him towards us the affections of a most tender Mother towards her Children, so that he can no less think upon us (although of our selves we be most unworthy, and deserve nothing less) than she can think on her only begotten Child in his distrait; yea, if she should forget her Child, as some unnatural Mother will do, yet will he never forget us, although for a time he seem to sleep, that we might be occasioned to call loud and awake him: this good God keep you, my dear Brother Nathanael, and your good Yoke-fellow, my heartily beloved Sister in the Lord, in all things now and for ever, to his glory and your eternal comfort: and also of his goodness he grant you both the feeling of that hope, which undoubtedly he hath laid up in store for you both, far passing the store and provision, not only which you have made, but all the world is able to make, as I trust already he hath wrought it in you; but I beseech him to increase it more and more, and kindle in you a hearty longing for the enjoying of the summe which once felt and had indeed, then the means by the which we come thereto, cannot be so greatly creased, as most men do dread them, because either they want this feeling (I mean it, of altogether) or else because the sense of this present time and things therein, are as a mist to the hiding of those things from our sight, lest we should run and embrace them by hasty Prayer, the Spirit whereof God grant us, and indeed we should attain enough in this behalf, if we continued therein.

For auricular Confession, wherein you desire my advice for your good Yoke-fellow and Family (my most dear Brother) I am as ready to give it, as you to desire it, yea more glad, so far as half a suspicion was in me (at the least touching my dear Sister your wife) of a bathing of my advice, that too much had been given, where indeed I should lament my too little feeding you spiritually, as both you out of Prison and in Prison have fed me corporally. But as I always thought of her, so I yet think that she is the Child of God, whom God dearly loveth, and will in his good time to her eternal comfort give her her hearts desire in sure feeling and sensible believing of this, which I would she had often in her mind; namely, that he is her God and Father through Jesus Christ our dear Lord and Saviour. A greater service to God she cannot give, than to believe this. If Satan say, the believeth not to answer, not him but the Lord, and to say, yea, Lord help my unbelief, and increase my poor Faith, which Satan faith is no Faith: make him a Liar, Lord as always he hath been, and shall be. Undoubtedly, sooner or later God will graciously hear her groans, and keep all her tears in his Burell, for he is a righteous God, and hath no pleasure in the death of his Creature; he loveth mercy, he will return and shew her his mercy, he will cast all her sins and iniquities into the bottom of the Sea; and the longer that he carrieth (as he doth it but to prove her) to the more liberally will he recompence her long longing, which no less pleaseth him, than it grieveth now her ward Adam. For the mortification whereof God I use this Cross, and therefore if she desire to bear the same, doubtless God will make her able to bear it, and in presumption of his goodness and strength, let me call her self wholly upon him: for he is faithful, and will actually confirm, and bring to a happy end that good which graciously he hath begun in her. The which thing I desire him to do for his own glory and I names sake, Amen.

And now to the matter. Confession auricular, as it was first used and instituted (which was by the way of counsel asking) I take to be amongst the most of Devils which are indifferent, that is, neither unlawful, nor necessarily binding us, except the offence of the weak could not be avoided. But to consider it, as it is now used (I write to you but as I think, and what my mind is; which follow no further, than good men by Gods Word do allow it) to consider it, I say, as it is now used, methinks it is plainly unlawful and wicked, and that for these causes.

First, because they make it a service of God, and a thing which pleaseth God of it self, I will not say meritorious; this bringer my Brother can tell you at large how great evil this is.

Secondly, because they make it of necessity, so that he or she that useth it not, is not taken for a good Christian.

Thirdly, because it requireth of itself an impossibility, that is, the numbering and telling of all our sinfulness, which no man perceiveth, much less can utter.

Fourthly, because it establisheth and confirmeth, at the least alloweth praying to Saints, Præter Sanctos Mariam, you must fly or the Devil for you.

Fifthly, because it is very injurious to the liberty of the Gospel, the which to affirm in example and fact, I take to be a good work and dear in Gods sight.

Sixthly, because (as it is used) it is a new, yea a very new, of the Popish Church, and therefore we should be so far from allowing the same, that we should think our selves happy to live any thing in bearing witness thereagainst.

Seventhly, because instead of counsel, where you should receive poison, or if you refuse it under Sir Jehan Benedicite, you should no it is there be wound in the Briars.

Eighthly, because the end and purpose why we go thither, is for the avoiding of the Cross, that is, for our own cause, and not for Christs cause, or for our Brethrens commodities. For in that they make it so necessary a thing, and a worshipping of God, it cannot but be against Christ, and the freedom of his Gospel, and the same thing teacheth us, that it is against the commodity of our Brethren, which either be weak, either be strong, either be ignorant, either be of estate. If they be weak, by your resorting to it, they be made more weak. If they be strong, you do what you can to diminish their strength. If they be ignorant, thereby you help to keep them by your fact. If they be obstinate, your resorting to it cannot but rock them asleep in their obstinate Error of the necessity of this rite and ceremony. These causes recited do shew you what I think in this: but my thinking must no further bind you than a mans thought should do, except the same be grounded upon Gods Word which bindeth indeed, as I think they do. I doubt not but you weighing these causes, and especially two of the first and the last, if you pray to God for his Spirit to direct you, and thereto ask the advice of thine good Brother and other godly Learned men, I doubt not (I say) but you should be guided to do that which is best in Gods sight, although in the light of the world perhaps you should be counted foolish and precise. But be a point with your selves as the Disciples of Christ, which had forsaken themselves, to follow not your will, but Gods will, as you daily pray in the Lords Prayer.

The Cross of Christ be willing to carry, lest you carry the Cross of the World, the Flesh, or the Devil. One of these four Crosses you must carry. Three of them bring to hell, and therefore the more part gash that way, which is a broad way. Only the fourth is the narrow way, why the but few go that way, as well because the way is thorny, as also because few walk in it lowly, though it be that, that leaden it is but short, and the few are many, if you consider the godly, as the Patriarchs, Prophets, Apostles, Martyrs, Confessors, and Christ Jesus, with all his guard and train.

Think not scorn to come after them which are gone before you, and after them which now go before you, in whole number I trust I am appointed to be one, and I beseech you pray for me, that God would vouch me worthy that honour. Our sins deserve plagues, prison, and the loss of all that ever we have: therefore if God remove our sins out of sight, and send us Prison, and loss of goods and living for his Names sake, Oh how happy are we? My dear hearts in the Lord, consider this gear, and be assured that he which loseth any thing for Christs sake, the same in his posterity shall find it here, and in Heaven elsewhere. As for unbeliefness to answer for your Faith; it shall be enough to will them to dispute with your teachers. Faith standeth not in disputing. I think few, if it came to disputing, could defend the Godhead of Christ and many other Articles; I speak it for the simple sort. Pray for me. Lack of Paper maketh this end. Commend me to my good Brother R. B. and my good Sister his Wife. I pray them to pray for me. I trust by this Bearer to hear how you do.

Another Letter to N. and his Wife.

Another Letter of Mr Bradford
to a dear Friend and his Wife.

Gods mercy in Christ I wish you to feel, my dear Brother, with my faithful Sister your Wife, now and for ever, Amen.

Having this occasion, I could not but write something, as well to put my self in remembrance of my duty to Godwards for you both in thankfulness and prayer, as to put you in remembrance of me: and your duty towards God for me, in praying for me; for I dare not say in thankfulness for me: nor that I would have you to give no thanks to God for his wonderful great and sweet mercies towards me, and upon me in Christ his Son; but because I have not deserved it at either of your hands. For ye both know right well, at least my Conscience doth accuse me, how that I have not only not exhorted and taught you (as both my vocation and your deserts required) to walk worthy of that vocation which God hath made you worthy of, and with trembling and fear to work out your salvation, that is, in the fear of God to give your selves to great vigilance in Prayer for the increase of Faith, and to a wary circumspection in all your conversation, not only in words and words, but also in thoughts; because God is a searcher of the heart, and out of the heart it cometh that defileth us in Gods sight: I have (I say) not only not done this, but also have given you example of negligence in prayer, watching, fasting, talking, and doing, so that two to me for giving such example. Lastly for this cause, dear Brother and Sister, God hath cast me here, that I might repent me and turn to him, and that ye might also by his correction upon me be more diligent to redress these things and others, if they in your Conscience do accuse you.

Antichrist
rejoicing in England.

My dearly Beloved, heavy is Gods anger fallen upon us all; doleful is this day. Now hath Antichrist all his power again. Now is Christs Gospel trodden under foot. Now is Gods People a derision and prey for the wicked. Now is the greatest plague of all plagues fallen, the want of Gods Word: and all these we have, yea I alone have justly deserved. Oh that as I write (I alone) I could with David, 1 Par. 21. and with Jonas in heart say so. But I do not, I do not, I see not how grievously I have sinned, and how great a misery is fallen for mine unthankfulness for Gods Word, for mine hypocrite in professing, preaching, hearing, and speaking of Gods Word: for my not praying to God for the continuance of it, for my not loving of it thoroughly as it requireth, &c. I will speak nothing of my manifest evils, for they are known to you well enough.

He exhort-eth them by his confession to do the like.
His Prayer
to God.

Dear Brother and Sister, with me say ye the like for your own parts, and with me join your hearts, and let us go to our heavenly Father, and for his Christs sake beseech him to be merciful unto us, and to pardon us: Oh good Father, it is we that have deserved the taking away of thy Word, it is we that have deserved the taking away of thy plagues fallen upon us; we have done amiss, we have dealt untruly with thy Ghostly, we have procured thy wrath, and therefore just art thou in punishing us, just art thou in plaguing us, for we are very naughty. But good Lord and dear Father of mercy, whose justice is such, that thou wilt not punish the poor Souls of this Realm, Anno 1555. which yet have not thus sinned against thee, as we have done (for many yet never heard thy Word) for our Trespases; and whose mercy is so great, that thou wilt put our iniquities out of thy remembrance for thy Christs sake, if we repent and believe: grant us we beseech thee, true Repentance and Faith, that we, having obtained pardon for our sins, may through thy Christ get deliverance from the tyranny of Antichrist now oppressing us.

Oh good Father, which hath said, that the Scepter of the wicked should not long lye upon and over the just, lest they should put forth their hands to iniquity also; make us just, we pray thee in Christs Name, and cut asunder the cords of them that hate thee; let not the wicked people say, Where is their God? Thou our God art in Heaven, and dost whatsoever pleaseth thee upon earth.

Oh that thou wouldst in the mean while, before thou dost deliver us, that (I say) thou wouldst open our eyes to see all these plagues to come from thee, and all other that shall come, whatsoever they be, publick or private, that they come not by chance nor by fortune, but that they come even from thy hand, and that justly, and mercifully; justly, because we have and do deserve them, not only by our birth-poyson still sticking and working in us, but also by our former evil life past, which by this punishment and all other punishments thou wouldst have us to call to our remembrance, and to set before us, that thou mightst put them from before thee, where as they stand so long as they are not in our remembrance, to put them away by repentance. Mercifully, O Lord God, dost thou punish, in that thou dost not correct to kill, but to amend; that we might repent our sins, ask mercy, obtain it freely in Christ, and begin to suffer for righteousness sake; to be part of thy house, wherewith thy Judgment is blemished; to be partakers of the afflictions of thy Church, and thy Christ, that we might be partakers of the glory of the same; to weep here, that we might rejoice elsewhere; to be judged in this world, that we might with thy Saints judge hereafter the world; to suffer with Christ, that we might reign with him; to be like to Christ in shame, that we might be like to him in glory; to receive our evils here, that we might with poor Lazarus find rest elsewhere; rest, I say, and such a rest as the eye hath not seen, the ear hath not heard, nor the heart of man is able to conceive.

Oh that our eyes were open to see this, that the Cross cometh from thee to declare thy justice and thy mercy, and hereto, that we might see how short a time the time of suffering is; how long a time the time of rejoicing is to them that suffer here, but to them that will not, how long and miserable a time is appointed and prepared; a time without time in eternal wo and perdition, too horrible to be thought upon. From the which keep us, dear Father, and give us more light in Soul to see this gear, and how that all thy dearst Children have carried the Cross of grievous afflictions in this life; in whose company do they place us, and such a Cross lay upon us, as thou wilt make us able to bear, to thy glory and our salvation in Christ, for whose sake we pray thee to shorten the days of this our great misery fallen upon us most justly, and in the mean season give us patience, repentance, faith, and thy eternal consolation; Amen, Amen, Amen.

And thus dear hearts, I have talked (methinks) a little while with you, or rather we have all talked with God. Oh that God would give us his Spirit of Grace and Prayer. My dearly Beloved, pray for it, as for your selves, so for me, and that God would vouchsafe to make me worthy to suffer with a good Conscience for his Names sake. Pray for me, and I shall do the like for you. This 20. of December, by him whom by this Bringer you shall learn. I pray you give my commendations to all that love me in the Lord. Be merry in Christ, for one day in Heaven we shall meet and rejoice together for evermore, Amen.

To my good Brother Augustine Barneber.

Mine own good Augustine, the Lord of mercy bless thee my dear Brother for ever. I have good hope, that if you come late at night, I shall speak with you, but come as secretly as you can: Howbeit, in the mean season, if you can, and as you can, learn what Mr. G. hath spoken to Dr. Story and others. The cause of all this trouble

This Augustine being a Dutchman, was a servant, and a faithful minister in the time of K. Edward, and in Q. Marys time a singular attendant upon the Lords Petitioners.

Anno 1555. double both to my Keeper and me, is thought to come by him. I have said that I shall be burned in Smithfield, and that flourish. Domini voluntas fiat. Ecce ego Domine, mitte me; I The Lords will be done. Behold here I am Lord, send me. As mine own sweet friend, I am now alone, left I should make you and others worse. If I should live, I would more warily use the company of Gods Children, then ever I have done from Domini portabo quoniam peccavi; I will bear the Lords anger, because I have sinned against him. Commend me to my most dear Sisters, for whom my heart bleedeth; the Lord comfort her and strengthen her unto the end. I think I have taken my leave of her for ever in this life, but in eternal life we shall most surely meet, and praise the Lord continually. I have now taken a more certain answer of death then ever I did: and yet not so certain as I think I should do. I am now as a sheep appointed to the slaughter. As my Gods, the hour is come, glorify thy most unworthy child. I have glorified thee, with this my sweet Father, and I will glorify thee. Amen. As mine own bowels, praise God for me, and pray for me; for I am his hope: I hope he will never forsake me, though I have above all other most deserved it. I am the most singular example of his mercies, praised be his Name therefore for ever. Cause Mrs. Perpoint to learn of the Sheriff Mr. Chelster, what they purpose to do with me, and know if you can, whether there be any writ forth for me. Factus sum sicut Nyctiorax in domicilio, & Passer solitarius in tecto; i. I am like to an Owl in the house, and as a Sparrow alone in the house top. As my Augustine, how long shall Gods enemies thus triumph? I have sent you this of the Baptism of Children to write out; when this is done, you shall have other things. Pray, pray mine own dear heart, on whom I am bold. The Keeper telleth me, that it is death for any to speak with me, but yet I trust that I shall speak with you.

John Bradford.

To these Letters of Mr. Bradford above specified, here is also adjoined another Letter of the said Bradford, written to certain of his faithful Friends, worthy of all Christians to be read; wherein is described a lively comparison between the Old man and the New: Also between the Law and the Gospel, containing much fruitful matter of Divinity, necessary for Christian Consciences to read and understand.

A Letter of Mr. Bradford, describing a Comparison between the Old man and the New, &c.

A Man that is regenerate and born of God, (the which thing that every one of us be, our Baptism, the Sacrament of Regeneration, doth require under pain of damnation, and therefore let every one of us with the Virgin Mary say, Be it unto me, O Lord, according to thy word, according to the Sacrament of Baptism, wherein thou hast declared our Adoption; and let us lament the doubting hereof in us, striving against it, as we shall be made able of the Lord) a man, I say, that is regenerate, consisteth of two men (as a man may say) namely of the Old man, and of the New man. The Old man is like to a mighty Giant, such a one as was Goliath, for his birth is now perfect. But the New man is like unto a little Child, such a one as was David, for his birth is not perfect until the day of his general Resurrection.

The Old man therefore is more strong, lusty, and flourishing than the New man, because the birth of the New man is begun now, and the Old man is perfectly born. And as the Old man is more flourishing, lusty, and stronger than the New man; so is the nature of him clean contrary to the nature of the New man, as being earthly and corrupt with Satans seed, and blessed with the Celestial seed of God. So that one man, inasmuch as he is corrupt with the Seed of the Serpent, is an Old man; and inasmuch as he is blessed with the seed of God from above, he is a New man. And as inasmuch as he is an Old man, he is a sinner and an enemy to God; so inasmuch as he is regenerate, he is righteous and holy, and a friend to God, the seed of God preserving him from sin, so that he cannot sin, as the seed of the Serpent, whereby he is corrupt even from his Conception, inclineth him, yea inclineth him to sin, and nothing else but to sin: So that the best part in man before Regeneration, in Gods sight, is not only an enemy, but enmity it self.

One man therefore which is regenerate, well may be called always just, and always sinful; just in respect of Gods seed, and his regeneration; sinful in respect of Satans seed and his first birth. Betwixt these two men therefore there is continual conflict, and war most dead; The flesh and Old man, by reason of his birth that is perfect, doth often for a time prevail against the New man (being but a child in comparison) and that in such sort, as not only other, but even the children of God themselves think that they be nothing else but Old, and that the Spirit and Seed of God is lost and gone away; where yet notwithstanding the truth is otherwise, the Spirit and the Seed of God at the length appearing again, and dispelling away the clouds which cover the Sun of Gods Seed from shining, as the clouds in the Air do the corporal Sun; so that sometimes a man cannot tell by any sense, that there is any Sun, the clouds and wind so hiding it from our sight: Even so our carnal or blindness, and corrupt affections do often shadow the sight of Gods Seed in Gods Children, as though they were plain Reprobates. Whereof it cometh, that they praying according to their sense, but not according to the truth, desire of God to give them again his Spirit, as though they had lost it, and he had taken it away. Which thing God never doth indeed, although he make us to think so for a time, for always he holdeth his hand under his children in their falls, that they lye not still as other do which are not regenerate. And this is the difference betwixt Gods children which are regenerate and elect before all times in Christ, and the wicked always; that the elect lye not still continually in their sin, as do the wicked, but at the length do return again by reason of Gods Seed, which is in them hid as a sparkle of fire in the ashes, as we may see in Peter, David, Paul, Mary Magdalen, and others. For these (I mean Gods children) God hath made all things in Christ Jesus, to whom he hath given his dignity, that they should be his Inheritance and Spouses.

This our Inheritor Christ Jesus, God with God, Light of Light, coeternal and consubstantial with the Father, and with the holy Ghost, to the end that he might become our husband (because the husband and the wife must be one body and flesh) hath taken our nature upon him, communicating with it and by it in his own person, to us all his children, his Divine Majesty (as Peter saith) and so is become flesh of our flesh, and bone of our bones substantially; as we were become flesh of his flesh, and bone of his bones spiritually, all that ever we have pertaining to him, yea even our sins; as all that ever he hath, pertaineth unto us, even his whole glory. So that if Satan should summon us to answer for our debts or sins, in that the wife is no fusable person, but the husband, we may well bid him enter his Action against our husband Christ, and he will make him a sufficient answer.

For this end (I mean that we might be coupled and married thus to Christ, and so be certain of Salvation, and at godly peace with God in our Consciences) God hath given his holy word, which hath two parts (as now the children of God do consist of two men) one part of Gods word being proper to the Old man, and the other part of Gods word being proper to the New man. The part properly pertaining to the Old man is the Law; the part properly pertaining to the New man is the Gospel.

The Law is a Doctrine which commandeth and forbiddeth, requiring doing and avoiding. Under it therefore are contained all precepts, threatnings, promises upon conditions of our doing and avoiding, &c. The Gospel is a Doctrine which always offereth and giveth, requiring Faith on our behalf, not as of worthiness, or as a cause, but as a certificate unto us, and therefore under it are contained all the free and sweet promises of God; as I am the Lord thy God, &c.

In those that be of years of discretion, it requirith Faith, not as a cause, but as an instrument; whereby we our selves may be certain of our good husband Christs love and his glory, and therefore when the Conscience feel-eth it self disquieted for fear of Gods judgment against sin, the may in no wise look upon the Doctrine pertaining to

How one man may be called al-ways just and always just.

Why the Old man sometimes prevaileth against the New man.

The Old man is so multiply prevaleth sometimes against the New in the Children of God, that the Spirit and Seed of God seemeth to be utterly taken away, as though it were lost.

Which thing God never doth indeed, although he make us to think so for a time, for always he holdeth his hand under his children in their falls, that they lye not still as other do which are not regenerate.

And this is the difference betwixt Gods children which are regenerate and elect before all times in Christ, and the wicked always; that the elect lye not still continually in their sin, as do the wicked, but at the length do return again by reason of Gods Seed, which is in them hid as a sparkle of fire in the ashes, as we may see in Peter, David, Paul, Mary Magdalen, and others.

This our Inheritor Christ Jesus, God with God, Light of Light, coeternal and consubstantial with the Father, and with the holy Ghost, to the end that he might become our husband (because the husband and the wife must be one body and flesh) hath taken our nature upon him, communicating with it and by it in his own person, to us all his children, his Divine Majesty (as Peter saith) and so is become flesh of our flesh, and bone of our bones substantially; as we were become flesh of his flesh, and bone of his bones spiritually, all that ever we have pertaining to him, yea even our sins; as all that ever he hath, pertaineth unto us, even his whole glory. So that if Satan should summon us to answer for our debts or sins, in that the wife is no fusable person, but the husband, we may well bid him enter his Action against our husband Christ, and he will make him a sufficient answer.

the Old man, but on the Doctrine only that pertaineth to the New man, in it not looking-for that which it requir-eth, that is Faith, because we never believe as we should; but only on it which it offereth, and which it giveth, that is, on Gods grace and eternal mercy and peace in Christ. So shall he be in quiet, when the looketh for it, al-together out of her self, in Gods mercy in Christ Jesus: in whose lap if he lay her head with S. John, then is the happy, and shall find quietness indeed. When she feeleth her self quiet, then, in Gods Name, let her look on the Law, and upon such things as it requireth, thereby to bridle and keep down the Old Adam, to say that Goliath; from whom the muft needs keep the sweet Promises, being the bed wherein her Spouse and she meet and lye together. For as the wife will keep her bed only for her husband, although in other things she is contented to have fellow-ship with others, as to speak, sit, eat, drink, go, &c. so our Conscience, which are Christs wives, muft needs keep the bed, that is Gods sweet Promises alone for our selves and our husband, there to meet together, to embrace and laugh together, and to be joyful together. If Sin, the Law, the Devil, or any thing would creep into the bed, and lye there, then complain to thy husband Christ, and forthwith thou shalt see him play Pinces' part. Thus (my dearly beloved) I have given you in few words a sum of all the Divinity which a Christian Conscience cannot want.

A Letter written to his Mother, as a Farewel, when he thought he should have suffered shortly after.

Another Letter or leave-taking to his Mother supposing that he should have suffered shortly.

THe Lord of Life and Saviour of the World, Jesus Christ, bless you and comfort you, my good and dear Mother, with his heavenly comfort, consolation, grace, and spirit, now and for ever. Amen.

If I thought that daily, yea almost hourly you did not cry upon God the Father through Jesus Christ, that he would give me his blessing, even the blessing of his Children; then would I write more hereabouts. But forasmuch as herein I am certain you are diligent, and so I beseech you, good Mother, to continue; I think it good to write something, whereby this your crying might be furthered. Furthered it will be, if those things which hinder it be taken away. Among the which, in that I think my Imprisonment is the greatest and chiefest, I will thereabout spend this Letter, and that briefly, lest it might increase the let, as my good Brother, this bringer, can tell you. You shall know therefore, good Mother, that for my Body, though it be in an House, out of the which I cannot come when I will, yet in that I have conformed my will to Gods will, I find herein liberty enough, I thank God. And for my lodging, bedding, meat, drink, godly and learned company, Books, and all other necessities for mine ease, comfort, and commodity, I am in much better case than I could wish, and Gods merciful Providence here is far above my worthiness. Worthiness, quoth I? Alas, I am worthy of nothing but damnation.

But besides all this, for my Soul I find much more commodity. For God is my Father, I now perceive, through Christ; therefore in prisoning me for his Gospel, he maketh me like to the Image of his Son Jesus Christ here, that when he cometh to Judgment, I might then be like unto him, as my trust and hope is, I shall be. Now maketh he me like to his Friends the Prophets, Apostles, the holy Martyrs and Confessors. Which of them did not suffer at the least Imprisonment or bannishment for his Gospel and Word?

Now Mother, how far am I unmeet to be compared to them? I (I say) which always have been, and am so vile an Hypocrite and grievous a Sinner. God might have caused me long before this time to have been cast into Prison as a Thief, a Blasphemer, an unclean Liver, and an heinous Offender of the Laws of the Realm; but (dear Mother) his mercy is so great upon both you, and all that love me, that I should be cast into Prison as none of these, or for any such Vices, but only for his Christs sake, for his Gospels sake, for his Churches sake, that thereby as I might learn to lament and bewail my ingratitude and sins, so I might rejoyce in his mercy, be thankful, look for eternal joy with Christ, for Anno whole sake, praised be his Name for it, I now suffer, and therefore should be merry and glad. And indeed (good Mother) so I am, as ever I was, yea, never so merry and glad was I, as now I should be, if I could get you to be merry with me, to thank God for me, and to pray on this sort: Ah good Father, which dost vouchsafe that my Son, being a grievous sinner in thy fight, should find this favour with thee, to be one of thy Sons Captains and Men of War to fight and suffer for his Gospels sake, I thank thee, and pray thee, in Christs Name, that thou wouldst forgive him his sins and unthankfulness, and make perfect in him that good which thou hast begun; yea Lord, I pray thee make him worthy to suffer, not only imprisonment, but even very death for thy Truth, Religion, and Gospels sake. As Anna did apply and give her first Child Samuel unto thee, so do I dear Father, beseeching thee for Christs sake to accept this my Gift, and give my Son, John Bradford, grace always truly to serve thee and thy people, as Samuel did, Amen, Amen.

If on this sort (good Mother) from your heart you would pray, as I should be the most merriest man that ever was; so am I certain the lets of your prayer for my imprisonment would be taken away. Good Mother therefore mark what I have written, and learn this prayer by heart, to say it daily, and then I shall be merry, and you shall rejoyce if that you continue, as I trust you do, in Gods true Religion, even the same I have taught you, and my Father Traves I trust will put you in remembrance of: my Brother Roger also, I trust, doth so daily. Go to therefore, and learn apace. Although the Devil cast divers lets in the way, God in whom you trust, will cast them away for his Christs sake, if you will call upon him; and never will he suffer you to be tempted about that he will make you able to bear. But how you should do herein, the other Letter which I have written herewith, shall teach you, which I would have none should read till my Father Traves have read it, and he will give you by Gods grace some Instructions.

Now therefore will I make an end, praying you good Mother, to look for no more Letter after it if were known that I have Pen and Ink, and did write, then should I want all the foreaid commodities I have spoken of concerning my Body, and be cast into some Dungeon in fetters of Iron: which thing I know would grieve you, and therefore for Gods sake, see that these be burned, when this little Prayer in it is copied by my Brother Roger: for perchance your House may be searched for such gear, when you think little of it: and look for no more, sweet Mother, till either God shall deliver me, and send me out, either you and I shall meet together in Heaven, where we shall never part asunder, Amen.

I require you Elizabeth and Margaret my Sisters, that you will fear God, use Prayer, love your Husbands, be obedient unto them, as God willeth you: bring up your Children in Gods fear: and be good Houewives. God bless you both, with both your Husbands, my good Brethren, to whom to do good, because I now cannot, I will pray for them and you. Commend me to your Sister Anne, Mother Pike, Th. Sarrocold and his wife, R. Shalacroff and his wife, R. Bolton, J. Wild, Mr. Vicar, the Parson Mottram, Sir Laurence Hall, with all that love, and I trust, live in the Gospel; and God turn Sir Thomas his heart, Amen. I will daily pray for him. I need not to set my name, you know it well enough.

Because you should give my Letters to my Father Traves to be burned, I have written here a Prayer for you to learn to pray for me, good Mother, and another for all your House in your Evening Prayer to pray with my Brother. These Prayers are written with mine own hand: keep them still, but the Letters give to Father Traves to burn, and give Father Traves a Copy of the later Prayer.

Another Letter to his Mother, at his last Farewel unto her in this world, a little before he was burned.

Gods mercy and peace in Christ, be more and more perceived of us, Amen.
My most dear Mother, in the Bowels of Christ I hear-dearly

A prayer for his Mother to offer unto God in his behalf.

This Letter came next to our hands.

Exhortation to his two Sisters.

Another, and the last Letter of M. Bradford, written to his Mother a little before his death.

Anno 1555. heartily pray and beseech you to be thankful for me unto God, which thus now taketh me unto himself: I dye not, my good Mother; as a Thief, a Murderer, an Adulterer, &c. but I dye as a Witness of Christ's Gospel and Verity, which hitherto I have confessed (I thank God) well by preaching, as by imprisonment, and now even presently I shall most willingly confirm the same by fire. I knowe that God most justly might take me hence simply for my sins (which are many & great; and grievous: but the Lord for his mercy in Christ, hath pardoned them all, I hope) but now dear Mother, he taketh me hence by this death, as a Confessor and Witness, that the Religion taught by Christ Jesus; the Prophets, and the Apostles, is Gods Truth. The Prelates do persecute in me Christ whom they hate, and his Truth which they may not abide, because their works are evil, and may not abide the Truth and Light, lest men should see their Darkness. Therefore my good and most dear Mother, give thanks for me to God, that he hath made the Fruit of your Womb to be a witness of his glory, and attend to the Truth, which (I thank God for it) I have truly taught out of the Pulpit of Manchester. Use often and continual prayer to God the Father through Christ. Hearken, as you may, to the Scriptures: serve God after his Word, and not after Custom: beware of the Romish Religion in England, defile not your self with it: carry Christs Cross as he shall lay it upon your back: forgive them that kill me: pray for them, for they know not what they do: commit my Cause to God our Father: be mindful of both your Daughters, and help them as you can.

I send all my writings to you and my brother Roger, do with them as you will, because I cannot as I would, he can tell you more of my mind. I have nothing to give you, or to leave behind me for you: only I pray God my Father, for his Christs sake, to bless you, and keep you from evil. He give you patience, he make you thankful, as for me, so for your self, that he will take the Fruit of your Womb to witness his Verity: wherein I confide to the whole world. I dye and depart this life in hope of a much better: which I look for at the hands of God my Father, through the Merits of his dear Son Jesus Christ.

Thus, my dear Mother, I take my last farewell of you in this life, beseeching the Almighty and eternal Father by Christ, to grant us to meet in the life to come, where we shall give him continual thanks and praise for ever and ever, Amen. Out of Prison the 24. of June, 1555.

Your Son in the Lord,
John Bradford.

A Letter sent with a Supplication to Queen Mary, her Council, and the whole Parliament.

IN most humble wise complaineth unto your Majesty and Honours, a poor Subject persecuted for the Confession of Christs Verity: the which Verity deserveth at your hands to be maintained and defended, as the thing by the which you reign and have your Honours and Authority. Although we that be Professors, and through the grace of God the constant Confessors of the same, are (as it were) the outswEEPINGS of the world: yet (I say) the Verity it self is a thing not unworthy for your ears to hear, for your eyes to see, and for your hands to handle, help, and succour, according to that the Lord hath made you able, and placed you where you are, for the same purpose. Your Highness and Honours ought to know, that there is no innocency in words or deeds, where it is enough and sufficient only to accuse. It becometh Kings, Queens, and all that be in Authority, to know that in the administration of their Kingdoms they are Gods Ministers. It becometh them to know, that they are no Kings, but plain Tyrants, which reign not to this end, that they may serve and set forth Gods glory after true knowledge: and therefore it is required of them, that they would be wise, and suffer themselves to be taught, so submit themselves to the Lords discipline, and to his their Sovereigns, lest they perish; as all those Potentates with their Principalties and Dominions cannot long prosper, but perish in blood, if they and their Kingdoms be not ruled with the Scripture of God, that is, with his Word; which who so becometh not, honoureth not God, and they that honour not the Lord, the Lord will not honour them, but bring them into contempt, and at the length take his own cause, which he hath most chiefly committed unto them to care for, into his own hands, and so overthrow them, and set up his Truth gloriously; the People also perishing with the Princes, where the word of prophecy is wanting, much more it is suppressed, as it is now in this Realm of England, over which the eyes of the Lord are set to destroy it; your Highness, and all your Honours, if in time you look not better to your office and duties herein, and not suffer your selves to be slaves and hangmen to Antichrist and his Prelates, which have brought your Highness and Honours already to let Barabbas loose, and to hang up Christ: as by the grace and help of God, I shall make apparent, if first it would please your excellent Majesty, and all your Honours, to take to heart Gods Doctrine, which rather through the malice of the Pharisees, I mean the Bishops and Prelates, then your Consciences, is oppressed; and not for our contemptible and execrable state in the sight of the world, to pass the less of it. For if (the Doctrine I mean) is higher, and of more honour and majesty, than all the whole world. It standeth invincible above all power, being not our Doctrine, but the Doctrine of the ever-living God, and of his Christ, whom the Father hath ordained King, to have dominion from Sea to Sea, and from the River unto the ends of the world. And truly so doth he, and will be reign, that he will shake all the whole earth with his iron and brazen power, with his golden and silver brightness, only by the rod of his mouth, to shiver in such sort as though they were pots of clay, according to that which the Prophets do write of the magnificence of his Kingdom. And thus much for the thing, I mean the Doctrine, and your duties to hearken, so propagate, and defend the same.

But now will our Adversaries mainly cry out against us, because no man may be admitted once to write against them, that we pretend falsely the Doctrine and Word of God, calling us the most wicked Contemners of it, and Heretics, Schismatics, Traytors, &c. All which their sayings, how malicious and false they are, though I might make report to that which is written by those men whose works they have condemned, and all that retain any of them, publicly by Proclamation: yet here will I occasion your Majesty and Honours by this my writing, to see that it is far otherwise than they report of us. God our Father for his holy Names sake, direct my pen to be his Instrument to put into your eyes, ears, and hearts, that which most may make to his glory, to the safeguard of your souls and bodies, and preservation of the whole Realm, Amen.

John Bradford.

To certain of his Friends, N. S. and R. C.

I With to you, my good Brethren, the same grace of God in Christ, which I wish and pray the Father of Mercies to give me for his holy Names sake, Amen.

Your Letter, though I have not read my self, because I would not alienate my mind from conceived things, to write to others, yet I have heard the sum of it, that it is of Gods Election; wherein I will briefly write to you my Faith, and how I think it good and meet for a Christian man to wade in it. I believe, that man, made after the Image of God, did fall from that blessed state, to the condemnation of himself, and all his Posterity. I believe that Christ, for man being thus fallen, did oppose himself to the Justice of God, a Mediator, paying the ransom and price of redemption for Adam and his whole Posterity that refuse it not finally. I believe, that all that believe in Christ, I speak of such as be of years of discretion, are partakers of Christ and all his Merits. I believe that Faith, and to believe in Christ (I speak not now of Faith that men have by reason of Miracles, John 2. 11. Acts 8. or by reason of earthly Commodity, Math. 13. Custom and Authority of men, which is commonly seen, the hearts of them that believe, being not right and simple before God: but I speak of that Faith which indeed is the true Faith, the justifying and regenerating Faith) I believe, I say, that this Faith and Belief in Christ, is the work and gift of God, given to none other than to those which be the Children of God, that is, to those whom God the Father before the beginning of the world hath predestinate in Christ unto eternal life.

Evid. 4.

* Thus do I wade in Predestination, in such sort as God hath patched and opened it. Though in God it be the first, yet to us it is last opened. And therefore I begin with Creation, from whence I come to Redemption, so to Justification, and so to Election. On this sort I am sure, that warily and wisely a man may walk in it easily by the light of Gods Spirit, in and by his Word, seeing this Faith not to be given to all men, 2 Thess. 3. but to such as are born of God, predestinate before the World was made, after the purpose and good will of God: which will we may not call into disputation, but in trembling and fear submit our selves to it, as to that which can will none otherwise than that which is holy, right, and good, how far soever otherwise it seem to the judgment of Reason, which must needs be beaten down to be more careful for Gods glory, than for mans salvation, which dependeth only thereon, as all Gods children full well see: for they seek not the glory which cometh of men, but the glory which cometh of God, Jer. 9. John 5. They know God to be a God which doth on earth, not only Mercy, but also Judgment, which is his Justice and most Justice, although our foolish reason cannot see it. And in this knowledge they glory and rejoyce, though others through vain curiosity grudge and murmur there-against. Thus briefly I have sent you my mind and meaning concerning this matter. Hereafter you shall have (I think) your Letter particularly answered by Mr. Philpot; as also, if I have time, and so you require it, I will do.

John Bradford.

Notes upon the same Epistle, and to the matter of Election appertaining.

As touching the Doctrine of Election (whereof this Letter of Mr. Bradford, and many other his Letters more do much intreat) three things must be considered.

1. First, What Gods Election is, and what is the cause thereof.
2. Secondly, How Gods Election proceedeth in working our Salvation.
3. Thirdly, To whom Gods Election pertaineth, and how a man may be certain thereof.

Between Predestination and Election, this difference there is: Predestination is as well to the Reprobate, as to the Elect. Election pertaineth only to them that be saved.

Predestination, in that it respecteth the Reprobate, is called Reprobation: in that it respecteth the saved, is called Election, and is thus defined.

Predestination is the eternal decreement of God, purposed before in himself, what shall befall on all men, either to Salvation or Damnation.

Election is the free mercy and grace of God in his own will, through faith in Christ his Son, choosing and preferring to life such as pleaseth him.

In this definition of Election, first goeth before (the mercy and grace of God) as the causes thereof, whereby are excluded all the works of the Law, and merits of deserving, whether they go before faith, or come after. So was Jacob chosen, and Esau refused, before either of them began to work, &c.

Secondly, In that this mercy and grace of God in this definition is said to be (free) thereby is to be noted the proceeding and working of God not to be bounded to any ordinary place, or to any succession of Chair, nor to state and dignity of person, nor to worthiness of blood, &c. but all goeth by the meer will of his own purpose; as it is written, Spiritus ubi vult, spirat, &c. And thus was the outward race and stock of Abraham after the flesh refused (which seemed to have the preeminence) and another Seed after the Spirit raised up to Abraham of the Stones, that is, of the Gentiles. So was the outward Temple of Jerusalem and Chair of Moses, which seemed to be of price, forsaken, and Gods Chair advanced in other Nations. So was tall Saul refused, and little David accepted: the Rich, the Proud, the Wife of this world rejected, and the Word of Salvation daily opened to the poor and miserable Abjects, the high Mountains cast under, and the low Valleys exalted, &c.

Thirdly, Where it is added (in his own will) by this falleth down the free will and purpose of man, with all his actions, counsels, and strength of Nature; according as it is written, Non est volentis, neque currentis, sed miserantis Dei, &c. It is not in him that willeth, nor in him that runneth, but in God that sheweth mercy. So we see how Israel ran long, and yet got nothing. The Gentiles later began to set out, and yet got the game. So they which came at the first hour did labour more, and yet they which came last, were rewarded with the first, Matthew 20. The working will of the Pharisee seemed better, but yet the Lords will was rather to justify the Publican, Luke 18. The elder son had a better will to tarry by his Father, and so did indeed: and yet the fat Calf was given to the younger son that ran away, Luke 15. Whereby we are to understand, how the matter goeth, not by the will of man, but by the will of God; as it pleaseth him to accept, according as it is written, Non ex voluntate carnis, neque ex voluntate viri, sed ex Deo nati sunt, &c. Which are born, not of the will of the flesh, nor yet of the will of man, but of God. Furthermore, as all then goeth by the will of God only, and not by the will of man: so again here is to be noted, that this will of God never goeth without faith in Christ Jesus his Son.

And therefore, fourthly, is this Clause added in the definition, through faith in Christ his Son. Which faith in Christ to us-ward maketh all together. For first, it certifieth us of Gods Election; as this Epistle of Mr. Bradford doth well expresse. For whosoever will be certain of Election in God, let him first begin with his faith in Christ: which if he find in him to stand firm, he may be sure, and nothing doubt, but that he is one of the number of Gods Elect. Secondly, The said faith, Faith is the

and nothing else, is the only condition and means whereupon Gods mercy, grace, election, vocation, and all Gods promises to salvation do stay, according to the words of St. Paul, Si permaneritis in fide, &c. If ye abide in the faith, Coloss. 1. Thirdly, This faith also is the immediate and next cause of our justification simply, without any other condition annexed. For as the mercy of God, his grace, election, vocation, and other preceding causes do save and justify us upon election, if we believe in Christ: so this faith only in Christ without condition is the next and immediate cause, which by Gods promise worketh our justification; according as it is written, Crede in Dominum Iesum, & salvus eris, tu & domus tua; i. Believe in the Lord Jesus, and thou shalt be saved, thou and thy whole house, Acts 16. And thus much touching the definition of Election, with the causes thereof declared. Which you fee now to be no merits, nor works of man, whether they go before or come after faith, but only the meer mercy of God through faith. For like as all they that be born of Adam, do taste of his malediction, though they tasted not his Apple: so all they that be born of Christ, (which is by faith) take part of the obedience of Christ, although they never did that obedience themselves, which was in him, Rom. 5.

Now to the second Consideration, let us see likewise, how, and in what order this election of God proceedeth in choosing and electing them which he ordaineth to salvation; which order is this. In them that be chosen to life, first Gods mercy and free grace bringeth forth Election; election worketh vocation, or Gods holy calling; which vocation, through hearing, bringeth knowledge and faith of Christ. Faith through promise, obtaineth justification, justification through hope, waiteth for glorification.

Election is before time. Vocation and faith cometh in time. Justification and glorification is without end. Election, depending upon Gods free grace and will, excludeth all mans will, blind fortune, chance and all per-adventures.

Vocation, standing upon Gods election, excludeth all mans wisdom, cunning, learning, intention, power and presumption.

Faith in Christ, proceeding by the gift of the Holy Ghost, and freely justifying man by Gods promise, excludeth all other merits of men, all condition of deserving, and all works of the Law, both Gods Law and mans Law, with all other outward means whatsoever.

Justi-

the certainty of this faith, search your hearts. If you have it, praise the Lord, for you are happy, and therefore cannot finally perish. For then happiness were not happiness, if it could be lost.

When you fall, the Lord will put under his hand, that you shall not fall. But if ye feel not this faith, then know that predestination is too high a matter for you to be disputers of, until you have been Scholars in the school-house of repentance and justification, which is the Grammar School, wherein we must be conversant and learned before we go to the University of Gods most holy Predestination and Providence. Of this matter he writeth more at large in the book of Letters of the Martyrs Fol. 351.

Notes to this epistle added. Difference between Predestination and Election. Definition of Predestination. Election defined.

The parts of the definition examined.

Mercy and Grace.

Free mercy and grace.

Anno 1555.

The free mercy and grace of God in his own will. Rom. 9.

Math. 20.

Luke 18.

Luke 15.

John 1. Gods mercy in saving the elect ever includeth the condition of faith in Christ.

The free mercy and grace of God in his own good will through faith in Christ his Son our Lord.

Faith is the only condition whereupon Gods grace doth save us.

Acts 16. Faith only is the immediate cause of our justifying.

The second consideration.

Grace, Election, Vocation, Faith, Justification, Glorification.

Mans free will blind Fortune.

Mans wisdom, cunning, learning, intention, power and presumption.

Mans merits, Works of the Law excluded from the cause of our salvation.

our salvation, on Christ.

Anno 1555. Justification cometh freely by faith, standeth sure by promise, without doubt, fear, or wavering in this life.

Glorification pertaining only to the life to come, by hope is looked for.

Grace and Mercy preventeth.

Election ordaineth.

Vocation prepareth and receiveth the Word, whereby cometh Faith.

Faith justifieth.

Justification bringeth glory.

Election is the immediate and next cause of Vocation.

Vocation (which is the working of Gods Spirit by the Word) is the immediate and next cause of Faith.

Papists confound the due time of Election.

Faith is the immediate and next cause of Justification. And this order and connexion of Causes is diligently to be observed, because of the Papists, which have miserably confounded and inverted this Doctrine, thus teaching, That Almighty God so far forth as he foreseeth mans merits before to come, so doth he dispense his Election. Dominus prout cujusque merita fore praevidet, ita dispensat electionis gratiam. And again, Nullis precedentibus meritis Dominum rependere electionis gratiam, futuris tamen concedere: that is, That the Lord recompenseth the grace of Election, not to any merits preceding; but yet granteth the same to the merits which follow: As though we had our Election by our Holiness that followeth after, and not rather have our Holiness by Gods Election going before.

Election.

But we, following the Scripture, say otherwise, that the only cause of Gods Election, is his own free mercy; and the only cause of our Justification is our Faith in Christ, and nothing else. As for example; first concerning Election, if the question be asked, Why was Abraham chosen, and not Nachor? Why was Jacob chosen, and not Esau? Why was Moses elected, and Pharaoh hardened? Why David accepted, and Saul refused? Why few be chosen, and the most forsaken? It cannot be answered otherwise but thus, Because it was so the good will of God.

That vocation he meaneth here which is after faith.

In like manner touching Vocation, and also Faith, if the question be asked, Why this Vocation and Gift of Faith was given to Cornelius the Gentile, and not to Tertullus the Jew? Why to the Poor, to the Babes, and little Ones of this world, (of whom Christ speaketh, I thank thee Father, which hast hid this from the wise, &c. Math. 11. Why to the Unwise, the simple Abjects and Outcasts in this world? (Of whom Christ speaketh Saint Paul, 1 Corinthians 1. Ye see your calling my brethren, how not many of you, &c.) Why to the Sinners, and not to the Just? Why the Beggars by the High-ways were called, and the bidden Guests excluded? We can go to no other cause, but to Gods Purpose and Election, and say with Christ our Saviour, Quia, pater, sic complacuit offi ante te; i. Yea Father, for so it seemeth good in thy sight, Luke 10.

Vocation bringeth forth.

Justification by faith only.

And so for Justification likewise, if the question be asked, Why the Publican was justified, and not the Pharisee? Luke 18. Why Mary the sinner, and not Simon the inviter? Luke 11. Why Harlots and Publicans go before the Scribes and Pharisees in the Kingdom? Matthew 21. Why the Son of the Free-woman was received, and the Bond-womans Son, being his elder, rejected? Genesis 21. Why Israel, which so long fought for Righteousness, found it not; and the Gentiles, which fought not for it, found it? Romans 9. We have no other cause hereof to render, but to say with Saint Paul, Because they fought for it by works of the Law, and not by Faith: which Faith, as it cometh not by mans will (as the Papist falsely pretendeth) but only by the Election and free Gift of God; so it is only the immediate cause whereunto the Promise of our Salvation is annexed, according as we read; And therefore of Faith is the Inheritance given, as after Grace, that the Promise might stand sure to every Seed, Romans 4. Item, in the same Chapter, Faith, believing in him which justifieth the wicked, is imputed to righteousness.

And thus concerning the causes of our Salvation, ye see how Faith in Christ, only and immediately, without any Condition doth justify us, being so linked with Gods Mercy and Election, that wherefore Election goeth before, there Faith in Christ must needs follow after. And again, whosoever believeth in Christ Jesus through the Vocation of God, he must needs be partaker of Gods Election.

Whereupon resulteth now the third note or consideration; which is, to consider whether a man in this life may be certain of his Election. To answer to which question, this first is to be understood; That although our Election and Vocation simply indeed be known to God only in himself, a priori; yet notwithstanding it may be known to every particular faithful man, a posteriori; that is, by means, which means is Faith in Christ Jesus crucified. Forasmuch as by Faith in Christ a man is justified, and thereby made the Child of Salvation, Reason must needs lead the same to be then the Child of Election, chosen of God unto everlasting life. For how can a man be saved, but by consequence it followeth, that he must also be elected?

How hath God election before he will save, and so the act of faith is long.

The third consideration is Election known to God simply. Election known to man by Faith in Christ.

Faith is the means whereby we be certain of our election.

And therefore of Election it is truly said, De electis one judicandum est a posteriore; that is to say, We must judge of Election, by that which cometh after, that is, by our Faith and Belief in Christ: which Faith, although in time it followeth after Election, yet this is the proper and immediate cause assigned by the Scripture, which not only justifieth us, but also certifieth us of this Election of God.

De electis one judicandum est a posteriore.

Whereunto likewise well agreeth this present Letter of Mr. Bradford, wherein he saith, Election, albeit in God it be the first, yet to us it is the last opened. And therefore beginning first (saith he) with Creation, I come from thence to the Redemption and justification by Faith, and so to Election. Not that Faith is the cause efficient of Election, being rather the effect thereof, but is to us the cause certificatory, or the cause of our certification, whereby we are brought to the feeling and knowledge of our Election in Christ. For albeit that Election first be certain in the knowledge of God; yet in our knowledge, Faith only that we have in Christ, is the thing that giveth to us our certificate and comfort of this Election.

Election first known to God and last opened to man.

Wherefore, whosoever desireth to be assured that he is one of the elect number of God, let him not climb up to Heaven to know, but let him descend into himself, and there search his Faith in Christ the Son of God: which if he find in him not feigned, by the working of Gods Holy Spirit accordingly; thereupon let him stay and so wrap himself wholly, both Body and Soul, under Gods general Promise, and cumber his head with no further Speculations; knowing this, That whosoever believeth in him shall not perish, John 3. shall not be confounded, Romans 9. shall not see death, John 8. shall not enter into judgment, John 5. shall have everlasting life, John 3.7. shall be saved, Matthew 28. Acts 16. shall have remission of all his sins, Acts 10. shall be justified, Romans 3. Galatians 2. shall have floods flowing out of him of water of life, John 7. shall never dye, John 11. shall be raised in the last day, John 6. shall find rest to his soul, and shall be refreshed, Matthew 11.

Every man to stay himself under Gods general promise.

Now then, forasmuch as we see Faith to be the ground whereupon dependeth the whole Condition of our justifying, let us discuss in like manner what is this Faith whereof the Scripture so much speaketh, for the more plain understanding of the simple. For many kinds there be of Faith: as a man may believe every thing that is true, yet not every truth doth save, neither doth the believing of every Truth justify a man. He that believeth that God created all things of nought, believeth truly. He that believeth that God is a just God, that he is Omnipotent, that he is merciful, that he is true of promise, believeth well, and holdeth the truth. So he that believeth that God hath his Election from the beginning, and that he also is one of the same Elect and Predestinate, hath a good belief, and thinketh well: but yet this belief alone, except it be seasoned with another thing, will not serve to Salvation: as it availed not the old Jews, which so thought of themselves, and yet think to this day to be only Gods elect People.

What is faith? Divers kinds of faith. Every truth hath his faith, but every truth justifieth not, no more doth every faith.

Ch. 11. the verse 2. et Faith
F. an and Christ cor-relatives.

Christ without Faith, Faith not.
Faith without Christ
helpeth not.

Only the Faith which availeth to Salvation is that, whereof Object is the Body and Passion of Jesus Christ crucified. So that in the act of justifying, these two, Faith and Christ, have a mutual relation, and must always concur together; Faith as the action which apprehendeth; Christ as the object which is apprehended.

For neither doth the Passion of Christ save without Faith, neither doth Faith help, except it be in Christ: as we see the body of man sustained by bread and drink, not except the same be received and conveyed into the stomach: and yet neither doth the receiving of every thing sustain mans body, except it be meat and drink, which have power to give nourishment. In like sort it is with Faith; for neither doth the believing of every thing save, but only Faith in the Blood of Christ: neither again doth the same Blood of Christ profit us, except by Faith it be received. And as the Sun, being the cause of all light, shineth not but to them only which have eyes to see; nor yet to them neither, unless they will open their eyes to receive the light: so the Passion of Christ is the efficient cause of Salvation, but Faith is the Condition whereby the said Passion is to us effectual.

And that is the cause why we say with the Scripture, that Faith only justifieth us, not excluding thereby all other external causes that go before Faith, as Grace, Mercy, Election, Vocation, the Death of Christ, &c. all which be external causes, working our Salvation through Faith. But when we say that Faith only justifieth us, the meaning thereof is this; that of all internal actions, motions, or operations in man, given to him of God, there is none other that contenteth and pleaseth God, or standeth before his Judgment, or can help any thing to the justifying of man before him, but only this one action of Faith in Jesus Christ the Son of God.

For although the action of Praying, Fasting, Alms, Patience, Charity, Repentance, the fear and love of God be high gifts in man, and not of man, given of God to man, yet be none of all these actions in man impured of God to Salvation, but only this one action of Faith in man upon Christ Jesus the Son of God. Not that the action itself of believing, as it is a quality in man, doth so deserve, but because it taketh that dignity of the object. For as I said, the act of justifying Faith, as it is an action in man, is not to be effected alone, but must ever go with his object, and taketh his virtue thereof. Like as the looking up of the old Israelites did not of it self procure any health unto them, but the promise made in the object, which was the brazen Serpent, whereupon they looked, gave them health by their looking up: Even so after like sort are we saved by Faith and spiritual looking up to the Body of Christ crucified. Which Faith to define is this.

To believe Jesus Christ to be the Son of the living God, sent into this World, by his death to satisfy for our sins, and so to receive the same.

And thus much touching Election and Faith; which the order and explication of the causes necessary to be considered in our Salvation, whereby may appear how far the pretended Catholicicks do swerve from the right mind of the Scriptures. For where the Scriptures in declaring the causes of Salvation, do send us only to Faith, as the only Condition whereby these causes have their working, these Catholicicks do quite leave out Faith, and in stead thereof, place in other Conditions of Doings, Merits, Will-works, Pardons, Masses, and especially Auricular Confessions, with Penance and Satisfaction for our Sins, &c.

And besides these Letters above specified of Mr. John Bradford, there hath come to our hands certain other Letters of his, not long ago, sent by a certain old Friend of the said John Bradford unto us. Which Letters being written of him in former times before his trouble, as they have not been yet printed nor seen abroad, so I thought it not amiss to communicate the same to the Christian Reader, for the worthiness of the matter, and the goodness of the man, which may redound, I trust, to no small fruit to him, that with godly eyes shall advise the same.

A Letter of Mr. Bradford to Father Traves, Minister of Blackley.

Anno
1555.

The abundant Grace and rich Mercy of God in Christ our only Saviour and high Bishop, be increased in your heart, through the lively worker of all goodness, the holy Spirit, until the day of the Lord, &c.

I have received your two Letters (good Father Traves) since that I did write unto you, whereof though honestly willett to make an excuse, yet truth biddeth me otherwise, and faith, it is better with shame to confess the fault (for therein is, as a man might say, half a deserving of pardon) than without shame to lye. I might have written unto you twice (notwithstanding indeed some business wherein I have something been occupied) but yet I have not. Now the cause is, because I would not. And why would I not? but because I could not, I mean, because my cunning is taken away by sin, for my sins do forbid goodness unto me. Indeed if my sinning were of infirmity, there were good hope of recovery of that which I have lost: But seeing, both willing and knowing I have too much yielded, and yet do yield to my infirmities, justly I do deserve, that because I have cast away, and rejected the word of the Lord behind my back, the Lord should reject me. And because I would not have blessing, I am worthy (as David saith) that it be taken away from me. I have now at length experience, that to bring a man forth of Gods favour, is sooner seen when a man hath received all things abundantly, than when need or the Cross pincheth. Afore it pleased God to work the restitution (you know what I mean) and afore it pleased God to provide for me as he hath done, so that I can say in nothing where any want is, as pertaining to my body: I was another manner of man, than now I am, and yet Gods defects have otherwise bounden me: but the Scripture is true, I have advanced my children, and nourished them, but they have contemned me, I have fed them that they were fat and gross, and they spurned against me. Perchance you will ask me wherein? Oh Father Traves, I warrant you, this is my filie, in carnal, and not in spiritual writing, do something shew unto you; but as for it, in comparison of other things is nothing. For where the life of man is such, that either it pertaineth or amendeth, as Paul saith, The outward man is corrupted day by day, and therefore except the inward man be renewed, the shoe goeth away, every building in Christ doth grow to a holy Temple, as the wicked on the contrary part shall proceed to worse, 2 Tim. 2. I have made a change far otherwise in going back, than I think by Letters I can persuade you: Wherein will you say? For the first, second, and third, and to be brief in all things: As for an example, Gods true fear is flown away from me, love to my Brethren is exiled from me, faith is utterly taken away: In stead whereof is distrust and doubtfulness bearing rule, contempt of Gods honour, and of my Brethren reigning, and in stead of true fear, an imagined fear, according to my brain holding the Principality. For extenuate sin, and I do not consider that in sin, which a Christian ought to consider; that sin being not forgiven, is such a thing for the which God calleth his Creature away, as examples not only of Saul, of Judas, of the Israelites (which were beloved indeed, and yet for sin are rejected) but also of others, on whom lately for my warning God hath visited the same, do admonish me. But it is but my Pen which writes this: For the wicked, saith Solomon, when they come into the depth of their sins, then they grow in security. I am I cannot tell what: I fear, but it is but blindly, or else would I awake otherwise than I do; I fear me, I say, that I am intangled of the Devil, after his desire. Pray for me, that the Lord would give me repentance, that I may escape out of his Snares. Alas, the Spirit of Prayer, which before I have felt plentifully, is taken clean away from me. The Lord be merciful unto me. I am fold under sin, I am the Bond-slave of sin: for whom I obey, his Servant I am, I am ashamed to speak of it, no I shame not at all: for I have forgot to blush, I have given over to weep. And truly I obey, I obey, I say mine own Concupiscences, namely in eating, in drinking, Anno 1555. drinking, in jangling and idleness, I will not speak of vain-glory, envy, disdain, hypocrite, desire of estimation, self-love, and who can tell all? Is this the reward thou renderest to God, O Bradford? It is true, yea too true, thou knowest it, O Lord for thy mercies like pardon me. In your Letters you touch me home, how that there is no mans heart, but that considering the ingratitude of this World, this belly-cheer (wherein you even take me by the Nose) &c. his eyes would tumble out great gulches of Tears. The Lord be praised which worketh so in you, for it is with me as with them of whom you complain. Indeed it may be so again, but oh it is very unlikely: for mine enemies are become old, and are made by custom more than familiar, for they are as it were converted into nature in me. Yet I am not grieved therefore, although I cannot persuade my self that God will help me. O Lord be merciful unto me for thy Christs sake. This day I received the Lords Supper, but how I have welcomed him, this night (which I have spent in lasciviousness, in wantonness, and prodigality, obeying my flesh and belly) doth so declare, that what to say, or write any more, I know not, sleep doth aggravate mine eyes, and to pray I am altogether unapt. All this is come through the occasion of making this bringer a Supper in my Chambers, the Lord pardon me, a trust no more to be so far overleant. But this I write, not that the anger of God, which I have deserved, so feareth me, thou knowest it O Lord. But of this perchance too much.

For Gods sake pray for me, good Father Traves, and write unto me as you may by your weakness, your Letters do me good. By this which I have now written; you may consider more, touch me therefore home in your Letters, and the Lord, I trust, shall and will reward you. If God lend me Life, of which I am most unworthy, I will more trouble you with my Letters than I have done; but bear with me, I do it not out of any evil will, the Lord I take to judge, there is none whose company and talk I more desire than yours, I speak it before God. Prove my Mothers mind how she can bear it, if when I shall come down, I shall shew my self another man outwardly, but alas faintly, than before I have done. Mary, when my coming will be I know not. Indeed two things move me fore, the one for my Mothers Cause, concerning her better instruction, if the Lord would thereto use me his Instrument, the other is to talk with you, and effusions to trouble you, as I have hitherto ever done, but always to my profit. For Gods sake pray for me, for I had never so much need. This Sunday at night, following S. Andrews day, at Pembroke Hall.

The most miserable, hard-hearted, unthankful sinner,
John Bradford.

Another Letter of John Bradford to Sir Thomas Hall, and Father Traves of Blackley.

THE grace of God our most merciful Father, keep Mind and Soul in Christ Jesus, who alone is our full sufficient Saviour, for in him we be compleat, being made through his death and one only oblation made and offered by himself upon the Cross, the Children of God, and fellow heirs with him of the Celestial Kingdom, which is the free gift of God, and cometh not of Merits, but of the meer grace of God, given to none that putteth any manner of hope or trust in any other thing visible or invisible, than in that oblation of sweet favour which Christ himself did offer upon good Friday (as we call it) which oblation is alway recent and new in the sight of God the Father, and maketh intercession for us: as I mean, which think that only Sacrifice then offered, to be sufficient, as it is, hath been, and ever shall be for all the faithful, by the which Sacrifice (if we believe) we have free pardon of all our sins. To him therefore which was both the offerer, and the offering, be all honour and praise, with the Father and the Holy Ghost, blessed for ever, Amen.

Sir Thomas, the occasion of this my long silence, mine old friend John Traves, shall declare unto you, upon the knowledge whereof I doubt not of your pardon. I have sent unto you an English and Latin Testament, both in one print and volume, the which, though it be not not so beautiful without as I can I have seen, yet not less beautiful within, as mine I have seen, and found better for your Eyes, your Eyes I mean not to open. For undoubtedly it giveth light unto the Soul, it doth revive the dead. Whereof take this for an Argument, and a true proof. If your Soul be not delectable in Gods Word, doth hunger for it (I mean not the Book, but the Doctrine in the Book) surely your Soul is dead: for as the Body abhorring meat is not well, even so must the Soul be, for other meat hath she none. Christ, whom we must believe afore all Men, affirmeth this to be true in the 4. of Matthew. Not only in Bread, but in every word of Gods the Soul doth live. Mark well, he saith not, one or two words, as an Epistle, or a Gospel; but he saith, every word. Take heed, believe Christ better than any Man, be he never so holy. For he that is of God, (John 8.) heareth the word of God. Will you have a more plain badge, whether you are the true Christ of God or no, then this Text: Christ saith, He that is of God, heareth the word of God: but other word of God he heareth none, than in the Canon of the Bible: and all things written therein, are written for our learning (2 Tim. 3. 16) whereby he proveth, seeing that it is a cunning, your learning that we must learn it. Therefore were he to all them which either persuade Men, that there is other Doctrine of like Authority, or that dissuade Men from embracing this Word, this Word of God, or that think this Word, especially the New Testament, is not above all others to be loved, to be read, to be chewed. This is the precious stone, which in the Gospel Christ saith, when a Man hath found, he selleth all that ever he hath, and buyeth it. Mark now how necessary and precious Christ maketh that which great learned Men (nay the Devils but no Men) think not necessary, God help them. Christ bade his Disciples sell their Coats, and buy a Sword: which is none other thing then the Word of God: for so S. Paul calleth it, the Sword of the Spirit. Nay say our learned Men, (I lie, they have said so, now they are ashamed) fetch fire and burn it.

This I say, Sir Thomas, to the intent no ungodly Hypocrite should persuade or dissuade you from reading the Holy Word of God, the Gospel of Jesus Christ. Follow you Saint Pauls lesson: Attend I reading, and let the Word of God dwell in you. How much? Pleasantly, faith he. And to what end? To feed the flock of Christ: even as much as in you is, faith Peter, not once a year or once a quarter as a Stawbery, but so much as in you is. This Word of God trieth all Doctrine: for we ought to have our Conscience charged with nothing as touching Religion, except the Word of God in the Canon of the Bible set it out, I mean not only in allegories, but even in plain words. For no other Foundation can any Man lay, besides that which is laid. S. Paul saith, the groundwork is laid already. Even so faith he to the Ephesians; We be his Workmanship to do good Works, which God hath created that we should walk in them. He saith that they were not to be made, but they are made already. What shall we think then of such words as Men will have founded; which yet seem most holy? Let Gods Word be Judge. Read the same diligently and reverently with Prayer (I mean not Latin Service not understood, but with true hearty Prayer) and mark what the Law requireth, even that which we cannot give, the whole heart, and more if it were possible. But to this end that we being our abominable uncleanness and iniquity might despair in our selves, trembling at the justice of God, and his anger which we continually procure, and blaspheme Christ, in whom God the Father is well pleased. Which Christ is the end of the Law to justify all that believe, and continue not in their Jewish ignorance, justifying themselves; and treating Christs Blood under their feet, denying the Lord that bought them. And such, be they never so well learned, never so holy, be nothing but Hypocrites, and plain Antichrists, which may be called the Sword of Gods Mouth. For the Trumpets of the Army (I mean Gods Word) when they blow, the high Walls of Jerusalem, the figure of Hypocrite Alderdown. Embrace therefore Gods holy Word & be not only a reader, but a doer: for your edifying, it is our duty to be apt to teach such proud Hypocritical arrogant babblers, as I am now (which (which if I may use this term, defile Gods Word) God forgive me, and pray you for me, and give God thanks for me, that spareth me thus Lucifer-like, not of a true zeal, but of a foolish bragging, which prate of Gods Holy Word. I wote not what I do to confesse it. So it is I have sent to you other Books which I pray you read. I have written your Name in them. The Holy Ghost keep you with your Brother George, his Wife, and Children, and with your Brother James, &c. Sir Laurence, &c. This 20. of March.

A very painted Hypocrite,
John Bradford. Yours
in Christ for ever.

Pray for me, pray for me, give God thanks for me, and take John Travers help to read this Letter written in haile.

If any thing but good be chanced to John Travers (which God forbid) I pray you burn my Letters out of hand.

Another Letter of Master Bradford, to Father Travers.

Gratia, misericordia, & pax a Deo Patre nostro, & Domino Jesu Christo Domino nostro.

I mine Heart were not altogether adamantine, your kind Letter to me unkindly would cause me from the bottom of the same, to confesse mine ingratitude towards you upon your behalf exempt me so much deserved: but as I am to do, so shew I my self to write, and as I am unable in the one, so am I foolish in the other; In all these unkindnesses, rudeness, &c. whereof you accuse your self, I am informed to acknowledge my self, most justly condemned, not so feignedly by me confessed, as most truly by you experienced. In your Letters as in a glass I may learn, by you in detesting your self, to espy my nakedness, which before I thought clothed Duplicitie, now only laid with false hypocritically guided, of which detestation wrong is in you by the Holy Ghost, be not proud: For what have you that you have not received? but be thankful to the Lord, not only therefore, but also for those surges which you feel now through the cares accompanying marriage, now through education and bringing up of your Children, and Family, now through that Crois of the common accustomed trade of living: For Per multas tribulationes oportet ingredi Regnum Dei: Through many tribulations we must enter into the Kingdom of Heaven, yet they be the cognisances of Gods election, the Letter Thau, the Instruments which work supplicia eterne vite, and therefore to be embraced. Believe me in this the most excellent gift of God, a Man to detest and humble himself, and to feel the Croises of Christ as Croises. But I most hypocritical wretch, not worthy that this earth should bear me, am even a going to Bed with Jelabel, and such as commit fornication with her, which is afflictio maxima. O Lord help me and deliver me for Jesus sake, wint mine eyes with ointment that I may see. O give me not over into a leud mind and reprobate ense, but awake my sleeping Soul that Christ may shine in me. You know the Crois, the Fatherly Crois, the living Lord hath laid upon me: but I am little or nothing moved there-with, I work therein (yet not I but Gods Spirit) not of a repentant Faithful mind, but I cannot tell how of a sloathful blind, wretchedly intent. O Lord forgive me for saying so, (it is thy gift) forgive me mine unthankfulness for Jesus sake, and as herein I blasphemed and dishonestly thy Holy Name, so do thou by thy Holy Spirit glorify by me the same. So be it, So be it.

Since my coming to London, I was with M. Latimer, whose Counsel is as you shall hear, which I purpose by Gods Grace to obey (if it be thy will, O Lord, fiat.) He willed me (as I have done) to write to my Master who is in the Country, and to shew him, that if within a certain time which I appointed, 14. days, he do not go about to make restitution, that I will submit my self to my Lord Protector, and the Kings Majesties Council to confesse the fault, and ask pardon. The life is uncertain and frail, and when time is, it must be deferred. And what should it profit me to win the whole World, and to lose mine own Soul? If, as I justly have deserved, I be put to death for it, Gods will be done. At the least, slander, reproach, rebuke, loss of worldly friends, loss of living, &c. shall ensue. What then? Lord thy will be done, thine I am; if death come, welcome be it, if slander, &c. Even as thou wilt Lord, So be it. Only grant me a penitent loving obedient heart, and of meir love to go forwards herein, and not to shrink, to stand and not to fall, that thy name only be praised herein. Amen. Pray, pray for me, cry for me, and when you shall hear any thing, comfort my Mother, to whom for that this bringer hath not given me an hours warning of his departure, I have not only written nothing, but also have thus prated to you, who (as no Man else would) I think will bear with me. For as God knoweth (whose Grace I commit you and your Bed-fellow, with all your Children and Family) the shortness of time, and thus said brings importance is only the let I neither send you spectacles, the price of the Paraphrases, nor thanks for your choice as by the next that cometh I will, God willing, send the premisses to you, and a godly Testament for Sir Thomas Hall, which is at the binding. But be not acknowyn that I have now written to you, for so I have prayed this bringer. God be with us, and pray for me, and abhor not my rude scribbling, which if it were as well written as it is meant, would deserve pardon. Thus make I an end, imputing to the basiness of this bringer all blame, which you may lay unto me.

From the Temple this Sunday, immediately after M. Latimers famous Sermon, which this bringer, as he saith, did bear.

By your poorest friend,
John Bradford.

It shall not be long, God willing, but you shall both here and bear from me. Keep with you Melanctons Comm places, for I have another.

Another Letter of Master Bradford to Father Travers.

Grace, Mercy, and Peace from God the Father, through our Lord Jesus Christ, with increase of all manner of godly knowledge and living, be with you and all your household, now, and ever, Amen.

To excuse this long silence, within five or six days after my (like foolish) Letters written to you by John Mols; it pleased God to send my Master hither to London (whom as I lately tofore had advertised by Letters) I moved (you know wherein) and prayed him to discharge the same, or else I would submit my self, &c. Whereunto he answered, that if the Books would declare it, he would satisfie, &c. The Books I shewed, whereupon he promised as much as I could ask. But being herein something more moved then he had cause (God be praised therefore, which of his meir good pleasure wrought it) at times as I could, I desired to know how and in what time he would discharge us both. He thinking me to be over curious herein, was not therewith contented, and hearing me to alledge the uncertainty of time, and the fear of Gods justice (which O gracious Lord grant me) he answered me to be scrupulous, and of a superstitious Conscience (for animalis homo non percipit ea quae sunt Dei) and plainly said further, that I should not know, nor by these words have his head so under my girdle. And when I shewed him that (God witnesseth with me) I went about no such thing: He said, that there was no godly Conscience, seeing he promised afore the face of God to discharge me, and to pay the thing, but it ought so to be quieted. And thus at divers and sundry times, moving effoons to know of him the way and time of discharging the debt, & having none other answers then tofore, (doubting worldly wisdom, which useth delays, to reign in him with this Mammon (the which O Merciful God eradicate out of his Heart, mind, and all others) I was something more sharp, and told him, non ego tamen, sed gratia tua Domine, I would obey God more than Man: the which he lightly regarding, as seemed, I departed, and went to Master Latimer to have had him to have brought me to my 4000 my Lord Protector (whose grace then was purposed 1555. shortly to take his journey to visit the Ports) M. Latimer

 I say willed me to stay until his return, which will not be long before Easter. In this mean time I bade my Bedfellow my Masters Son, whom my Master had used as his Instrument to move me carnally, for my Master discharged him of his exhibition, telling him that he could not be able to keep either House or Child, for I purposed to undo both him and all his, (untruly thou knowest good Lord) and bade him to take that as a warning, that both he and his Brethren should provide for themselves as they could, I bade, I say, my said Bed-fellow to shew my Master, as of himself, my further purpose, which thing when he knew, it so moved and feared him, that he began something to relent, and then made fair promises, that look what I should devise, that would he do. I devised, but my devise pleased him not. And thus, but not vainly I trust (as I now do wish you, but I know your gentleness which ever hath born with me) I spent the time in which I have been silent to write, nay babble to you. And he, departing out of London tofore I knew, did send me word by another of his said Sons, not so given to the Gospel, and a good Life according as my Bed-fellow, and therefore more to be suspected (for though pietas non est suspicio) as I should think my self rather impius, yet Christ bade us to be prudentes sicut serpentes (this other Brother I say told me that my Mr. would do all things, only his Anne and Abiliter preserved) (Et quid prodest totum mundum lucrari, animam vero perire) And with the said Brother my Mr. sent me a little billet also, wherein he confessed that he was contented within twelve Months to deliver to my hands the whole Money: which Bill I thinking not so good as it might have been, have devised another, and have sent it down to him in the Country, with request that he will Seal and Sign it. For thus
M. Latimer thinketh sufficient, but as yet I hear not of it, doubting worldly Wisdom, which was the whore that overcame Samson, that moved David to slay Urias, that brought wife, Salomon to Idolatry, that crucified Christ, the which moved me to perpetrate hoc facinus, the which worketh in my Masters Heart, having higher place there than Timor Domini. What say I there? yea, yea, with me, it fitteth in the holy place (the Lord deliver us; doubting
 I say, worldly Wisdom, I remain in that same state now for this matter (though in work for my Soul, which is more to be lamented, pray therefore I beseech you, pray with me, and for me, that I may do so earnestly) that I was in at my last writing unto you. And as I then was pur-posed, so I doubt not (grant it Lord) but that I shall persever, if in the mean season I shall not hear from my Master accordingly. Thus I have (like my self) foolishly but truly declared unto you in many babbling words, which wit (if I had it) would have shortly and briefly comprehended. Arrogant, nay Gods working unthankful wretch, my working in this matter, which is, and was the only cause (as I now do) I troubled you not afore, to the intent I might advertise you some certainty in this thing.
 And though silence had been much better then this foolish prating, yet your Fatherly kindness ever towards me in expecting from you a correction, as I have herein given cause, may though not to you, yet to me be profitable. In hope whereof, I proceed in requiring you to continue your remembrance of me a most unkind wretch to God and you, in your Prayers with the Almighty merciful Lord, that I may more regard his will and pleasure herein, then all honour or shame in this life. But I must confess unto you that my working in this matter is not of love, as I should do, nor of fear of Gods justice (mine unthankfulness, mine unthankfulness, if nothing else were, hath not only deserved it, but doth deserve more then everlasting Damnation, O Lord be merciful unto me.)
 I do not so repent it as I should do. Why say I so?
 as though this were any thing: Oh hypocritical wretch that I am! Alas Father Traves, let me so call you, I am hard-hearted, there was never any so obstinate, so unkind, against so loving, so merciful, so gracious, so good, so beneficial a Lord, yea a Father, as I wretch, and most miserable Sinner am. This I speak, but not of humility, but of Hypocrisie, yet I speak truly. I pray the good Father for Christs sake, I may think it truly, as I write it even of arrogancy, so it is. Therefore pray and cry for me. Here be such godly, godly, and learned Sermons, which these uncircumcised ears of mine hear at the least thrice a week, which were able (the great loving mercy of God offered to me in them, I mean) to burst any Mans heart, to relent, to repent; to believe, to love, and to fear that omnipotent gracious Lord: but my adamantine, obstinate, most unkind, ingrate, unthankful heart, hearing my Lord, which is the Lord over all Lords, so graciously, so lovingly, vouchsafe by so many his Instruments to speak, to call, to cry unto me, now by his laws, now by his threats, now by his Gospel, now by his promises, now by all his creatures, to come, to come even to himself, I hide me with Adam in the Garden. I play not only Samuel running to Hely, but I play Jonas running to the Sea, and there I sleep upon the hatches tumbling in Jesabab Bed, quod est afflictio maxima, until it please God to anoint mine eyes collyrie, until it please him to raise up a tempest, to turn and look upon me, as Luke saith he did on Peter. For O Lord it is thy gift, and cometh of thee, and of thy meek grace; it cometh not of Man, it cometh not of works, to repent, to believe, to fear, and to love.

 Work thou therefore in me for Jesus Christs sake, which am thy Creature and most unthankful hypocritical servant, not when I will, nor as I will but when thou wilt, even that which may be to the glory of thy Name, Amen. What should I write? nay, why do I not pluck these same words and paper in pieces? for I write altogether of hypocrisie and arrogant presumption. I will confess it (thou wicked spirit the Lord judge thee: I will confess it, it is most true, John Traves, I but only write it, for it is not I, it is hypocrisie. Scientia (if I had it) infractis, O Lord grant me thy grace, and leave me not to mine own judgment and reason. Hypocrisie, arrogancy, and obstinate security environ me (yet I feel them not) the Lord deliver me. Pray, pray for me. Give God thanks for me: O Lord, even tua fiat voluntas: Unlock this mine Heart, thou which hast the Key of David, which open-est only, that I may desire to have the desire of the glory of thy name, of repentance, faith, &c. Pray for me, and be thankful for me, O Father Traves, and write to me.
 Your Letters I desire more to see, then any mans living.
 Let me have them therefore as you may, but your Prayers at all times, that God would open mine heart to feed and taste of these comfortable places of Scripture (which to me are locked) memento Jesum Christum resurrexisse ex mortuis. This Text as a Text of most comfort (as it is indeed, and when God will, I shall feed on it) did Paul send to Timothy to be his comfort in all places. For our Salvation (this day of Resurrection) is nearer now then when we believed. Therefore, qui perseveraveris salvus

Thomas Hall, unto whom I have sent a fair Testament both in English and Latin, if this bringer will carry it.
 And I have herewith sent you a Letter, which first peruse and read, and when you have so done, abhor not me, but my wickedness, and pray for me. And as you can see a meet time, seal it, and deliver it to Sir Nicholas Wolf- soner, by such policy as you can think by Gods grace through Prayer. I confess unto you, God is my witness, to my knowledge, I never in my being in the Country this Winter at any time called it to remembrance, the Lord forgive me. I would by some occasion, if any could be had, afore the delivery of the Letter, by some story or communication, that he did know that abomination to be sin, for I fear me he thinketh it to be no sin. The Lord open our eyes, & forgive us, Amen. The peace of God be with you, Amen.

Years in Christ most bounden,
John Bradford

I have sent you three pair of good Spectacles I trow, and other such Books as have your Name written in them, which take in good worth, and pray for me, and give thanks for me.

Another Letter of Master Bradford to Father Traves.

Gratia, misericordia, & pax, &c.

My chance is not by this bringer to have any warning in manner of his farewell, so that I am constrained, time coarcting me, to write not so much of things (which I will omit) as my desire was. Concerning the great matter you know of, it hath pleased God to bring it to this end, that I have a Bill of my Masters hand, wherein he is bound to pay the sum afore Candlemas next coming. This thinks Mr. Latimer to be sufficient. Therefore I pray you to give that gracious Lord thanks, and thanks, and thanks upon it, for me a most wretched ingrate Sinner, which have also in other things no less cause to praise Gods Name: As for that I have and sustain my Masters sore displeasure, he which hath brought me (God I should say through it) unto a more contempt of Worldly things, through the sequestration of such his business, as afore I had adovithal, I call it a contempt, well, take the word even as it is Hypocritically and vaingloriously spoken: for the which fault amongst my others unnumerable, I trust you remember in your Prayer, whereof I have (would I knew how much) need. There is yet another thing, whereof I will advertise you even to this end, that you might pray if it be Gods will, that as I trust shortly to begin, so be may vouchsafe to confirm that he hath begun, as (if I be not deceived) I believe it is his working. If the thing seem by Gods Spirit in you that I presume, then for the Lords sake advertise me: for I am much given to that disease, the Lord deliver me. I have moved my M. therein already by Letters: so see if I shall have any living of him as hitherto I have had, but I have thereof no answer, nor as our Natural speech is, any likelihood of any grant. Yet that I have already, I trust, will suffice me for three years: you look what my purpose meaneth, I am so long afore I come to it. Therefore I do it, because my long babbling should be left tedious. Now shall you have it. If Gods will be (whereunto pray I may be obedient) I am minded afore Midsummer to leave London to go to my Book at Cambridge, and if God shall give me Grace, to be a Minister of his Word. Thus you have of a flye an Elephant. Well, take it in good part though you see my clamor, and not clamor, clamor. A tumbling block gathereth no Mass: so therefore pray for me. Perchance I do foolishly so forsake so good a living as I have. I will say no more thereof, but pray for me. I trust as I said, for three years study I have sufficient, if my Master take all from me: and when this is spent, God will send more. I do not write this that you should think me to be in need of Worldly help, and therefore as Priests were wont, secretly to beg. No, in the Lords Name I require you not to take it so: for I had rather never send Letter, afore I should be herein a crost to you, for sufficient sua dici afflictio, we are more set by then many Sparrows. But if my Mother, or Sir Thomas Hall murmur at it, or be offended with me, as you can, remedy it with your counsel. Howbeit, as yet I will not write to them of it, until such time as I be going. I am something fickle minded and unconstant, therefore pray for me, that my hand being put to the Plough (presumptuously spoken) I look not back. You may gather by my words in this Letter the Heroical heart which lyeth in me.

I have sent you a book of Bucer against Winchester in English lately translated, which I never read, therefore I cannot praise it. And as I call to remembrance, I did send you with the other Books more then you received, at the least one of them I remember, which is called, The Common places, or the Declaration of the Faith by Urbanus Rhegius. Ask for it, or send me word in whom the default is, you have it not. Hereafter, and that shortly by Gods Grace I will send you Primitive laborum meorum, a work or two which I have Translated into English, so soon as they be Printed, which will be afore Whitsuntide. Pray for me, good Father Traves, and God send you health of Soul and Body, as I would mine own or any Mans living. But yet to warn you of that you know not, in writing your Letters to me, you hit me home, and grieve me that I look for. You are deceived, and so is all that know me, I never came to any point of mortification, therefore a little tickling sets me afore, God help me, and give God thanks for me, as all Men be most bounden. Thus when I once begin to write to you, I run as the Priest saith Mattins, for I think I may be bold on you. The Holy Ghost preserve you, your Wife and Family, and persevere his grace in you unto the end. I pray you pray for me, a most (what should I call me) miserable and blasphemous sinner. The peace of God be with us. From the Temple this twelfth of May, 1548.

Sir Thomas Hall hath deceived me, but himself most. I desire to speak with him, as this Winter is my chance, if I discharge not my self of mine Office, so see him. Pray for him, and for me.

A very Hypocrite,

John Bradford.

Another Letter of Master Bradford To Father Traves.

The perseverance of Gods grace, with the knowledge of his good will, increaseth with you unto the end. To declare my self, as I am a Carnal Man, which understandeth not the things that be of the Spirit. These my Letters, though I counterfeit and meddle amongst them the spiritual words, as the Devil did in his temptations to Christ will declare no less. For I begin with carnal things in effect, and no marvel if I do end: for how can a Man gather figs of briars? These words as they seem, so they are spoken for a Cloak to make you think otherwise: but, Father Traves, you cannot think so evil of me as I am. But to the matter. This present day by Gods grace I take my journey towards Cambridge, where I pray God, and so earnestly I pray you to pray for me, that I may circumspectly redeem this time which God hath appointed (to me unknown) to lend me: for alas, I have spent most wickedly the time past, for the which I must account even for every hair breadth as they say: for God hath not given here time to sin. But if I considered this (as I do nothing less, custom of sin and pleasing my self hath so hardened my heart) I should then come to the feeling of my self, then should I hate sin which I now love, then should I fear Gods wrath, which I now contemn, then should I cry out and weep, and continually pray, whereas now I am as dry as a Stone, as dumb as a Nail, as far from praying, as he that never knew any taste of it. Which thing once I felt, (thanks to the Lord) but now for mine unthankfulness I am almost (but most worthily) deprived. I fear me, God will take his grace from me. I am so unthankful. Alas, why do I lye in saying I fear me? Nay, God grant I may do so, for then should I pray and pray: but seeing I cannot, speak you for me, pray for me, that the Lord would remember his old compassions towards me, for his mercies sake draw me, yea compel me to serve, to fear and to love him. Thus may you see how I presume: for my intent was to have been a Minister of Gods Word, to have been his Instrument to call from as I have called to sin, but you see how that God punisheth mine arrogance. Alas, what shall I do? I am an unprofitable and an idle Member, I thought I should have been therein profitable, but Medicus cura te ipsum. How should I see what should I do? I cannot labour with my hands. Well, I trust God will give me grace and knowledge to translate: nothing I fear me, yea I distrust me, that I shall never be Minister of Gods Word: yea, if arrogance were not in me, how should I, of all wretches the greatest, think me to look to the highest room and vocation that is upon Earth? Therefore oftfoons I desire you to pray for me, that Gods will may be done in me whether I live or dye, so that that his name be honoured. My Master which was, hath denied me all his beneficence, but I have for this Life more than enough, thanks be to God. As this Winter I intend by Gods favour to declare more unto you. This Book which I have sent, take it in good part, it is the first, I trust it shall not be the last. God hath appointed me to translate. The priot is very false, I am sorry for it. I pray you be not offended at my babling in the Prologues, &c.

John Bradford.

I will lye, God willing, this Summer at Katherine's Hall in Cambridge: write to me.

Another Letter of Master Bradford, to Father Traves.

THe loving kindnes and abundant mercy of God the Father, poured plentifully upon all the Faithful, in the Blood of that meek Lamb Jesus Christ our only Satisfaction and Mediator, through the working of the most Holy Spirit, be encreased, and perceived in you daily more and more, to the glory of God, &c.

Because I stand both in doubt of the reading and delivery of such Letters as I write and send unto you (dearly beloved Father Traves) I am constrained to leave off such griefs, and spiritual wanes, as, thanks unto the Lord, I unwillingly feel: for the flesh, as you know, loveth nothing so much as security, of all enemies most perilous, and not a little familiar with me: from the which, with vain-glory, hypocrisy, &c. and Worldliness, the Lord deliver me. I had not thought to have written thus much, but these I cannot keep, but commit them to your Prayers. And to the intent I would you should not think any ingratitude in me; as also that I might give you occasion to write to me again, as heretofore I have done, even so do I interurb and trouble you with my babling but yet having this commodity, that I babble not so much as I wont to do. The cause I have declared, which had almost been the cause I had not written at all. I did write unto you from London when I came thither: send me word what Letters you have received, for from you I have received but two, and both by John Mele, and in the latter I perceived that the Lord had visited you with sickness, his Fatherly Rod, whereby he declareth his love upon you, and that he careth for you. Ut in tempore supremo exultes nunc ad breve tempus afflictus, quo exploratio fidei multo pretiosior auro quod perit, et tamen probatur, &c. Siquidem in hoc vocatus es, ut cum Christo patiaris, nam & cum illo glorificaberis. Certus enim sermo est, si sufferimus & con-regnabimus. You know that Christ, est filius Dei erant, tamen ex his quae passus est didicit obedientiam. Patientia opus perfectum habet ut sitis perfecti & integri, nullaque in parte diminuat: and doth not patientia come of probatio, the one then you had, so that you were going a School to learn the other, which learned what want you? The end of all Gods proving is as Paul saith, Ut imperiet nobis sanctimoniam: igitur gratias age Deo Patri qui idoneum te fecit ad participationem fortis sanctorum in lumine, &c. Nam qui parumper affixit, idem instaurat te, succiat, roborat, stabilizat. And that the Lord knoweth how cripere pios & tribulatione, and that in tempore opportuno, even shortly: for haud tardat qui promittit: nam modicum tempus, & videbis me: veniens enim venit, & non tardabit. Itaque qui confortes estis crucis Christi gaudeat, fidei eter, ut in revelatione quoque glorie ejus gaudeatis exultantes. Oh how doth my will over-run my wit. Why Bradford; whom writest thou unto? thou shewest thy self. Thus Father Traves, you may see my rashness to rabble out the Scripture without purpose, time, or reason. I will not blot it out as I thought to have done: for that hereby you shall see my need of your Prayer. Well, I look for a watch-word from you. Write for Gods sake, and pray for me that I may be in something profitable to the Lords Congregation, that I may be no stumbling block, ut confundantur in me qui illum expectant. Send me such counsels as the Lords Spirit shall move you how to study. My desire is in something to be profitable, if it were the Lords will, for to be Minister verbi. Alas I am unwearied, and my time, my time, yea the Lords time, I have hitherto evil, yea most wickedly mispent it, &c. Thus will

I end. The Lord be with you and your Bed-fellow, to whom have me heartily commended, and to all your Children and Family, the which I beseech the Lord to lighten his countenance over, and grant you his peace: pray for me. I long for Winter to speak with you. Refcribe oro. Pray for me. This Assumption-day in Katherine's Hall in Cambridge.

Yours with all I have and care,
John Bradford

Another Letter of Master Bradford to Father Traves.

THe plentiful grace of God the Father, through our only Master and Lord Jesus Christ, increase in us daily to the glory of his Name. Amen.

Forasmuch as I have often written unto you, good Father Traves, and yet have not once heard from you since Pentecost, I cannot now be so bold either in writing much or often as I would have been: Howbeit this I say, that I much marvel that I hear not from you: but not so, for I am so wretched a Sinner, that the Lords Spirit I am certain doth not move you to write to me, yet for Gods sake pray for me; and in the Lords Name I desire you to give thanks to God for me. And when it may please God to move you, write to me; though it be but two words, and counsel me how to study the Word of life, the ministry whereof I desire, if it be the Lords pleasure, to profit, and that I may do it both in living and learning, pray for me. Herum mens omnibus rebus suis abdicavit, & quae prius concesserat, jam solvere renuit, & multa profusa seculis est omnino. I know not when I shall see you in Body, therefore let me hear from you. I write not this that you should think me in exquisite and angustia esse. No Father, the Lord giveth me omnia assatim, and will do I trust I shall shortly here have a fellowship, I am so promised, and therefore I have taken the degree of Master of Art, which else I could not have attained. If I get a fellowship, I shall not need de crassimo sollicitus esse, as heretofore I shall more write to you by Gods grace. I pray you write again, and often pray for me. In haustis apparet, the twenty two of October. Ne sciat mater mea quod herum mens adeo duriter mecum egit, &c.

Miserimus peccator,
J. Bradford

Another Letter of Master Bradford to Father Traves.

THe peace and plentiful Mercy of God our Heavenly Father, in his Christ our only Lord and Saviour, be ever increased in you by the Holy Spirit, qui efficit omnia in omnibus, Amen.

Father Traves, though I might think my self more happy, if you would often write unto me, yet because I ought to have respect to your pains, which now that old Man cannot so well sustain as it might, I had rather lose my happiness in that behalf, then will your grief, for as much as it can be my happiness unto me which turneth to your pain: yet because pain is not painful when it is joyed with gain, I therefore desire you for Gods sake to pray often for me: for if I shall not be worthy of your Prayer, as the Lord who knoweth all things doth rightly well see it, and so my Conscience witnesseth, your good Prayer shall return into your own Bosom. And know this, that who so converteth a Sinner by Prayer, whether it be by Prayer, preaching, or writing Letters, &c. the same hath saved a Soul. Use therefore, for Gods sake I ask it, that pains whereunto is joyed profit, I mean Prayer to God for me, a miserable and most wretched Sinner: and as for the gainless pain in writing to me, ye is yet as you may and surely God for whose sake you do it, in that he will reward a Cup of cold Water, will in something requite you. And I know certainly, that if you did see what spiritual profit I receive by your Letters, I am certain you would not think all your labour lost. For Christs sake therefore begin again to write unto me, and reprove me sharply for my horrible unthankfulness to God. You know how that God hath exonerated my laden Conscience

Conscience of the great weighty burthen, for so I did write to you, yea the Lord hath in a manner unburdened me of the lesser burthen also: for I have an assurance of the payment of the same by Candlemas. Lo thus you see what a good God the Lord is unto me. O Father Traves give thanks for me, and pray God to forgive me my unthankfulness. But what should I rehearse the benefits of God towards me? Alas I cannot. I am too little for all his mercies, yea, I am not only unthankful, but I am too far contumelious against God. For where you know the Sun, the Moon, and the seven Stars did forsake me, and would not shine upon me, yet the Lord hath given me here in the University as good a living as I would have wished. For I am now a Fellow of Pembroke Hall: for the which neither I nor any other for me did ever make any sute: yea there was a contention betwixt the M. of Katherines Hall and the Bishop of Rochester, who is Master of Pembroke Hall, whether should have me, fit hoc tibi dictum. Thus you may see the Lords carefulness for me. My Fellowship here is worth seven pound a year, for I have allowed me 18. pence a week, and as good as thirty three shillings four pence a year in money, besides my Chamber, Launder, Barber, &c. and I am bound to nothing but once or twice a year to keep a Probleme. Thus you see what a good Lord God is to me. But I pray you what do I now to God for all this? I will not speak of the great mercies he sheweth unto my Soul. Surely, Father Traves, I have clean forgotten God, I am all secure, idle, proud, hard-hearted, utterly void of Brotherly love, I am envious, and disdain others, I am a very stark Hypocrite, not only in my words and works, but even in these my Letters to you. I am all sensual without the true fear of God, another manner of Man then I have been since my calling. Alas Father Traves, I write this to put my self in remembrance, but I am without all sense, I do but only write it. For Gods sake pray for me, which am only in name a Christian, in very deed a very Worldling, and to say to you the very truth, the most Worldling of all other. I pray you exhort my Mother now and then, with my Sister Margaret to fear the Lord, and if my Mother had not sold the Fox fur which was in my Fathers Gown, I would she would send it me, he must have your counsel in a piece of Cloath.

Yours for ever,
John Bradford.

Another Letter of Master Bradford to Father Traves.

The self same mercy, grace, and peace, which heretofore I have felt plentifully, though now, through mine unthankfulness and wilful obedience to the pleasure of this outward Man, I neither feel, neither can be persuaded that I possess, yea if I shall truly write, I in manner pass not upon the same, so far am I fallen, the Lord help me, the same mercy, &c. I say, I with unto you as I can, with all increase of godliness. Hypocritically with my Pen and Mouth, beseeching you in your earnest Prayers to God, to be an earnest suter unto God for me which am fallen into such a security, and even an hardness of heart, that neither I sorrow my state, neither with any grief or fear of Gods abjection do write this: before the Lord which knoweth the Hearts of all Men I lye not. Consider for Christs sake therefore, good Father Traves, my necessity though I my self do not, and pray for me, that God cast me not off as I deserve most justly. For where I ought to have well proceeded in Gods School, by reason of the time, I confess it to my shame I am so far gone back, as alas if I came were in me I might be ashamed to write it, but much more to write it, and think it not, such is the reward of unthankfulness. For where God wrought the restitution of the great thing you know of, the which benefit should bind me to all obedience: Alas Father Traves I am too unthankfull, I find no will in Heart (though by my writing it will be hard to persuade you) either to be thankful, either to begin a new life in all things to mortifie this outward Man, and heartily to be well content to serve the Lord in Spirit and verity, and withstand mine affections, and especially my beastly sensuality in meat and drink, where with I was troubled at my being with you, but now through my licentious obeying that affect, I am fallen so, that a whole legion spirituum malorum, posseseth me. The Lord whom I only with mouth (my Heart still abiding both in hardness and wilfulness) call upon, deliver me and help me. And for Gods sake give you hearty thanks for the great benefit of restitution, pray to the Lord that at the length I may once return to the obedience of his good will, Amen. I thank you for your cheefe, and so doth Father Latimer as unknown: for I did give it him, and he saith he did never eat better Cheefe, and so I dare say he did not. I thank him I am as familiar with him, as with you: yea God so moveth him towards me, that his desire is to have me come and dwell with him whensoever I will, and welcome. This do I write yet, once more to occasion you to be thankful for me to the Lord, which by all means sheweth nothing but most high love to me: And again a very obstinate Rebellion. Pray therefore for me in haif.

The sinful.
John Bradford.

William Minge.

The next day after Master Bradford and John Leaf did suffer in Smithfield, Will. Minge Priest, died in Prison at Maidstone being there in Bonds for Religion, and like to have suffered also, if he had continued the fury of his adversaries, whose nature was to spare and favour none that favoured Christs pure Gospel: which W. Minge with as great constancy and boldness yielded up his life in Prison, as if it had pleased God to have called him to suffer by the fire, as the other good and godly Men had done at the Stake, as he himself was ready also so to do, if it had pleased God to have called him thereunto.

James Trevifam buried in the fields.

Upon the third of July 1555. died one James Trevifam in the Parish of Saint Margarets in Lathbury upon a Sunday, who being impotent and lame kept his Bed: for he could not rise out of it a long time. This Trevifam had a Servant, one John Smal, which read on the Bible, and as he was in reading, Berd the Promoter came to the House, and would needs go up the Stairs, where he found four persons besides him and his Wife, to wit, the young Man that read, and two Men and a Woman. All which folks, the said Berd the Promoter there being apprehended and carried to the Counter, where they remained about a fortnight, for all the friends they could make. Moreover the said Berd would have had also James the lame Man himself to Newgate in a Cart (and brought the Cart to the door) but for neighbours. Nevertheless, the poor Man was faine to put in two shillings for his forthcoming, for he could not go out of his Bed, being not only impotent, but also very sick the same time. So within a few days, the said James lying in extremity, the Parson of the Church named M. Farthing, came to him, and had communication with him and agreed well, and so departed. It happened after the Priest was come down into the street, there met him one Toller a Founder. Yea, saith he, be ye agreed? I will accuse you, for he denieth the Sacrament of the Altar. Upon that the Parson went to him again, and then the Priest and he could not agree. And so the Parson went to the Bishop of London and told him. The Bishop answered, that he should be burnt, and if he were dead, he should be buried in a Ditch. And so when he died the Parson was against his Wife as much as he could, neither would let her have the Coffin to put him in, nor any thing else, but was faine to bear him upon a Table to Morefield, and there he was buried. The same night the Body was cast up above the ground, and his sheet taken from him, and he left naked. After this the owner of the field seeing him buried him again, and a fortnight after the Summer came to his Grave, and summoned him to appear at Pauls before his Ordinary, to answer to such things as should be laid against him. But what more befell upon him, I have not certainly to say.

The History of Mr. John Bland, Preacher and Martyr, Constantly suffering for the Gospel of Jesus Christ.

July 12.
John Bland,
J. Frankish,
Martyrs.

The 12th day of July, John Bland, John Frankish, Nicholas Sberden, and Humphrey Middleton, were all four burned at Canterbury together for our Cause: Of the which number, Frankish and Bland were Ministers and Preachers of the Word of God, the one being Parson of Adgham, the other the Vicar of Rolvinton. This Mr. Bland was a man so little born for his own Commodity, that no part of his life was separated from the common and publick utility of all men. For his first doings were there employed to the bringing up of Children in learning and virtue. Under whom were trained divers towards young men, which even at this present do handsomely flourish. In the number of whom is Dr. Sands, a man of singular learning and worthiness, as may well becom a Scholar meet for such a Schoolmaster, whom I gladly here name for his singular gifts of virtue and erudition.

Mr. Bland
Schoolmaster to Dr. Sands, sometimes Bp. of Worcester, now Archbishop of York.

After this, he coming to the Ministry in the Church of GOD, or rather being called thereto, was inflamed with incredible desire to profit the Congregation, which may appear by this, that whereas he was cast into Canterbury Prison for the preaching of the Gospel, and delivered once or twice from thence at the suit of his Friends, yet would he needs preach the Gospel again as soon as he was delivered. Whereupon he being the third time apprehended, when his Friends yet once again would have found the means to have delivered him if he would have promised to abstain from preaching; he stood in it earnestly, that he would admit no such Condition, notably well expressing unto us the manner and example which we read in the Apostle Paul; Who shall separate us from the love of Christ? Tribulation, or anguish, or hunger, or nakedness, or danger, or persecution, or the sword, &c. But to express the whole life and doings of this godly Martyr, seeing we have his own testimony concerning the same, it shall be best to refer the Reader to his own report, writing to his Father of the whole Discourse of his troubles, from the beginning almost to the later end, in order and manner as ye shall hear.

Mr. Bland
offered by his friends to be delivered, refused.

A Discourse of the whole process and doings of Mr. Bland, written and reported by himself to his Father in his own Letter, as followeth.

Dear beloved Father in Christ Jesus, I thank you for your gentle Letters. And to satisfy your mind, as concerning the troubles whereof you have heard, these shall both declare unto you all my vexations that have chanced me since ye were with me, and also since I received your last Letters. God keep you ever.

Your Son, John Bland.

First, the 3d of Septemb. being Sunday, after Service ended, ere I had put off my Surplice, John Austen came to the Table (commonly called the Lords Table) and laid both his hands upon it, saying, Who set this here again? Now they say they took the Table down the Sunday before, which I knew not, neither do I know who set it up again. The Clerk answered, that he knew not. Then Austen said, he is a Knave that set it here. I was then going down the Church, marvelling what he meant, and said, Goodman Austen, the Queens Highness hath set forth a Proclamation, that ye may move no Sedition. And ere I could speak any more, he said, thou art a Knave: And said, well Goodman Austen, that I have said, I have said. By Gods Soul (quoth he) thou art a very Knave. Then my Clerk spake to him, but what I am not free. But he said, ye are both Heretick Knaves, and have deceived us with this fustion too long, and if he say any Service here again, I will lay the Table on his face; and in that rage he with other took up the Table, and laid it on a Chalk in the Chancel, and set the Tressels by it. Wherefore I rode by and by to Mr. Isaacs, and shewed him the cause, both how sedition he had spoken, and performed it with a like deed. Mr. Isaacs directed a Warrant to the Constable or Bosholder, which was incontinently served, so that he was brought before him the same night and was bound by Recognizance, with Sureties, to appear if he were called. But we agreed so well then, that it was never called for, the Table was brought down, and was permitted, as before.

The 26th of Novemb. being Sunday, Richard Austen and his brother Thomas came to the foresaid Table after the Communion was done, and as I was going by them, Richard said unto me, Mr. Parson, we have to speak to you. And I said, what is your will? And he said, you know that you took down the Tabernacle or Sealing wherein the Rood did hang, and such other things: we would know what recompence you will make us. For the Queens proceedings are (as you know) that such must up again.

Quoth I, I know no such proceedings as yet; and as for that I did, I did it by Commandment.

No, said Thomas Austen, ye will not know the Queens proceedings.

Yes, said I, I refuse not to know them.

Then said Richard, Ye are against the Queens proceedings; for you say there are abominable uses and devilishness in the Mass.

Goodman Austen, said I, if I so said, I will say it again, and God willing, stand to the proof of it.

Masters all, quoth Richard Austen, bear record of these words, and went his way.

Quoth Thomas Austen, thou wilt as soon eat this Book as stand to them. No quoth I, not so soon. Tell us, quoth he, what devilishness is, that is in the Mass.

I often preached it unto you, said I, and ye have not believed it, nor born it away, nor will now neither, though I should tell you.

Thou (quoth he) hast told us always, like an Heretick as thou art. Now ye lye, Goodman Austen, quoth I, by your leave. Marry, quoth he, thou liest. And I said, and you lye, for I have taught you Christ and his Truth.

Quoth he, thou art an Heretick, and hast taught us nothing but Heresie: for thou canst say nothing that is true.

Yes, Goodman Austen, I can say that God is in Heaven, and ye will say (I trow) that it is true, and so have I taught you truly.

Quoth he, thou hast taught us like an Heretick, and hast said, that there is no Devil in Hell.

Well, said I, lye on; me think you can say little truth. Many other taunts he gave, too long to write. And at the last he said, ye pulled down the Altar; will ye build it again? No (quoth I) except I be commanded; for I was commanded to do that I did.

Well, if you will not, said he, then will I. For I am Churchwarden.

I charge you, said I, that you do not except you have Authority. I will, said he, not let for your charge. For we will have a Mass here on Sunday, and a Preacher, that shall prove thee an Heretick, if thou dare abide his coming.

Yes, quoth I, God willing, I will abide and hear him; for sure I am, that he cannot disprove any Doctrine that I have preached.

Yes, quoth he, and that thou shalt hear, if thou run not away ere then.

No, Goodman Austen, I will not run away.

Marry, quoth he, I cannot tell; thou art as like yeas nay: with many other words we came out of the Church door, and so departed.

When the Sunday came, I looked for our Preacher, and at the time of Morning Prayer I said to the Clerk, why do ye not ring? ye forget that we shall have a Sermon to day. No, quoth he, M. Miles's Servant hath been here this morning, and said, his Master hath Letters from my L. Chancellor, that he must go to London, and cannot come. That day I did preach to them a Sermon in his stead. Now have they slandered me, that I had prepared a company from divers places to have troubled him; but they agreed not in their lye. For some said, I had them at Adgham, and that Richard Austen had knowledge, and sent to the Kings Constable to let the Peace keep, which is found a lye. Other said, I had them living in wait for him between Canterbury and Adgham. Other said, I had them in both places, that if the one mist, the other should not. God forgive them all. The behaviour of John Bland Parson of Adelham, in the County of Kent, the Sunday, the third day of December last past, containing the words which he there spake unto the people.

Mr. Bland
Parson of Adelham, cleareth himself of false slander.

Whereas upon certain Communication had between the said Parson and Richard Austen, and Thomas Austen in the presence of all the Parish of Adelham, the Sunday before S. Andrew's day last, the said Austen then declared, That the said Parson had taught there in times past great Heresies, which to confound, they would prepare a Preacher against the next Sunday following, if it be the said Parson would abide, and not run away: Upon which rumour, divers and sundry persons resorted out of the County unto the said Parish Church, at the said same day appointed, there to hear the Preacher; and at the time in which the Sermon ought to be made, no man appeared there to preach. But it was reported unto the Parson, that the Preacher appointed, had urgent business, and could not come. So that the multitude being now come together, the same Parson perceiving that the peoples expectation was defrauded, said, Forasmuch as you are come willingly to hear some good advertisement of the Preacher, which cannot be now present, I think it not convenient to permit you to depart without some Exhortation for your edifying. And so further declaring that he had no Licence to preach, said, That he would not meddle with any matter in Controversie. And then he began the Epistle of the day, desiring the Audience to mark three or four places in the same Epistle, which touched quietness and love one to another: and there briefly reading the Epistle, he noted the same places, and so making an end thereof, desired all men to depart quietly and in peace, as they did, without any manner of disturbance, or token of evil.

Another matter of trouble wrought against John Bland, as appears by his own Narration.

The third matter against Mr.
Bland.
A Popish
Malt-Priest brought to say Malt
at Adelham.

Upon the Innocents day, being the 28th day of December, they had procured the Priest of Stodmarsh to say them Malt; he had nigh made an end of Martins ere I came; and when he had made an end of Martins, he said to me, Mr. Parson, your Neighbour hath desired me to say Martins and Malt; I trust ye will not be against the Queens proceedings: No (quoth I) I will offend none of the Queens Majesties Laws, God willing. What say ye, quoth he, and made as he had not heard? And I spake the same words to him again, with an higher voice; but he would not hear, though all the Chancel heard: So I cried the third time (that all the Church heard) that I would not offend the Queens Laws, and then he went to Malt; and when he was reading the Epistle, I called the Clerk unto me, with the beckning of my finger, and said unto him, I pray you desire the Priest when the Gospel is done, to tarry a little, I have something to say to the people; and the Clerk did so.

Mr. Bland
again exhorteth the people in his Parish Church.

And the Priest came down into the Stall where he sat; and I stood up in the Chancel door, and spake to the people of the great goodness of God, always shewed unto his people, unto the time of Christs coming; and in him and his coming, what benefit they palt, we present, and our Successors have; and among other benefits, I spake of the great and comfortable Sacrament of his Body and Blood. And after I had declared briefly the institution, the promise of life to the good, and damnation to the wicked, I spake of the Bread and Wine, affirming them to be Bread and Wine after the Consecration, as yonder Malt-Book, saying,

Bland speaketh of the right institution of the Sacrament at the Lords Supper.

Panem sanctum vite eterne, & Calicem salutis perpetue, &c. Holy Bread of Eternal Life, and the Cup of perpetual Salvation. So that like as our bodily mouths eat the Sacramental Bread and Wine, so doth the mouth of our Souls (which is our faith) eat Christs Fleth and Blood. And when I had made an end of that, I spake of the mislife of the Sacrament in the Malt; so that I judged it in that use no Sacrament, and shewed how Christ bade us all eat and drink; and one only in the Malt eateth and drinketh, and the rest kneel, knock, and worship: and after these things ended, as briefly as I could, I spake of the Benefactors of the Malt, and began to declare what men made the Malt, and recited every mans name, and the patch that he put to the Malt; and ere I had rehearsed them all, the Churchwarden and the Borholder, his Son in law, violently came upon me, and took my Book from me, and pulled me down, and thrust me into the Chancel, with an exceeding roar and cry. Some cried, Thou Heretic! some, thou Traitor; some, Thou Rebel; and when every man had said his pleasure, and the rage was something past; be quiet good Neighbours, said I, and let me speak to you quietly. If I have offended any Law, I will make answer before them that are in Authority to correct me. But they would not hear me, and pulled, one on this side, and another on that, and began again. Then Richard Austen said, Peace, Masters, no more till Malt be done, and they ceased. Then said I to the Churchwarden and the Borholder, either holding me by the arm: Masters, let me go into the Church yard till your Malt be done. No quoth the Churchwarden, thou shalt tarry here till Malt be done. I will not, quoth I, but against my will. And they said, Thou shalt tarry, for if thou go out, thou wilt run away. Then said I to the Borholder, Lay me in the Stocks, and then ye shall be sure of me, and turned my back to the Altar. By that time Richard Austen had devised what to do with me, and called to the Borholder and the Churchwarden, and bade them put me into a side Chappel, and shut the door to me, and there they made me tarry till Malt was ended. When the Malt was ended, they came into the Chappel to me, and searched what I had about me; and found a Dagger, and took it from me. Then said Thomas Austen, Churchwarden, after many brablings that they made with me, Thou keepst a Wife here amongst us, against Gods Law and the Queens. Ye lye, Goodman Austen, said I, it is not against Gods Law, nor, as I suppose, against the Queens. Thus they brought me out of the Church, and without the door they railed on me, without pity or mercy: but anon the Priest came out of the Church, and Ramsay that of late was Clerk, said unto him, Sir, where dwell you? And therefore Thomas Austen took him by the arm, and said, Come on Sirra, you are of his Opinion, and took his Dagger from him, and said, he should go with him. I am content, said he, and a little mocked them in their envious talk. By this time there came in at the Church Style, one John Gray of Wingham, Servant to John Smith, and seeing them hold Ramsay by the arms, said to him, How now Ramsay, have you offended the Queens Laws? No quoth he. Then there is no Transgression. Therewith Thomas Austen took him, and said, Ye are one of their Opinion, ye shall go with them for Company, and took his Dagger from him, and then demanded what he did there? But after (I think) for very shame they let him go again. But they carried me and Ramsay to Canterbury, with eighteen persons weaponed: A sheet of paper will not hold the talk that we had that night with Mr. Hardest Justice, Mr. Oxenden, Mr. Spilman, and Mr. Tust-Jam.

He speaketh of the abuse of the Sacrament in the Malt.

He declared how the Malt was searched and seized together, and by what means Mr. Bland violently plucked down in his Sermon by the Churchwarden.

Mr. Bland and Ramsay carried to Canterbury.

Mr. Hardest Justice, Mr. Oxenden, Mr. Spilman, and Mr. Tust-Jam.

The next day they made a Bill against me, but it served not their purpose, which was, that they would have had me to Prison. But James Chapman, and Bartholomew Joyes, were bound in Twenty pounds either of them, for my appearance at the next General Sessions, or I, Sureties for Mr. Bland. The Worshipful and Simon Barre, Sureties for Ramsay.

Now

Anno Now the 23. or 24. of February Sir Thomas Finch, Knight, and Master Hardey, sent for me and my Sureties, to Master Finches place, and took me from my Sureties, and sent me to the Cattle of Canterbury, by Sir Thomas Moyles commandment (they said,) where I lay ten weeks, and then was bayled, and bound to appear at the next Sessions holden at Canterbury; but after, they changed it to be at Ashford on the Thursday in Whitsun-week, being the Nineteenth of May: but in the mean time the matter was exhibited to the Spiritual Court.

The first Examination of Mr. John Bland in the Spiritual Court, before Dr. Harpsfield Archdeacon of Canterbury, and Mr. Collins Commissary.

The 18 day of May, Mr. Harpsfield Archdeacon of Canterbury, made the Maors Serjeant to bring me before him and Mr. Collins Commissary, into Christs Church, and they went with me into a Chamber, in the Suffragan of Dovers House. Then the Archdeacon said, Art thou a Priest? And I said, I was one. And he said, Art thou any Graduate of any University? And I said, Yea. What degree (said he) hast thou taken? The degree (quoth I) of a Master of Art. The more pity (quoth he) that thou shouldst behave thy self as thou hast done. Thou hast been a common Preacher licensed, hast thou not? And I said, I have been so. Marry (quoth he) so I understand.

What hast thou preached?

And I said, Gods Word, to the edifying (I trust) of his people.

No, no, quoth he, to the destroying of their Souls and thine both, except the mercy of God be all the greater. I pray thee, what hast thou preached? tell me.

I told you, quoth I, what I have preached.

Nay, but tell me, quoth he, what one matter hast thou preached to the edifying of the people, as thou sayest? I will tell you no particular matter; for I perceive you would have some matter against me.

No, by my faith, quoth he, but that only I would win thee from Heresies that thou art bewrapt in, and hast infected others withal. For thou hast preached, as I am informed, that the blessed Sacrament of the Altar is not the very Body and Blood of Jesus Christ after the Consecration. Tell me, hast thou not preached? and is not this thine opinion?

Sir, quoth I, I perceive (as I said) that ye seek matter against me. But seeing that I am bound in the Sessions to my good behaviour for preaching, which may be broken with words, and well I know not with what words; and also both mine authority to preach, and my living are taken from me, I think I am not bound to make you an answer.

Collins. Mr. Bland, do you not remember, that S. Peter biddeth you make answer to every man that asketh you a reason of the faith that is in you?

Bland. I know that, and am content so to answer as that Text biddeth: but I know that Mr. Archdeacon doth not ask me after that manner, but rather to bring me into trouble. Then they said, No, ye shall not be troubled for any thing that ye say here.

Bland. I am content for knowledge sake to commune with you in any matter, but not otherwise. And so they fell in reasoning more than the space of an hour, of the Sacrament, both against me. At the last Mr. Collins said, Mr. Bland, will ye come and take in hand to answer such matter on Monday next, as shall be laid to you?

Bland. Sir, ye said I should not be troubled for any thing that should be said here for Learnings sake. And they said, ye shall not, but it is for other matters.

Bland. Sir, I am bound to appear, as some tell me, on Thursday next at Ashford, I am in doubt whether I can or no: yet I have purposed to be there, and so to go to London to Mr. Wiseman, for an Obligation that he hath, whereby I should receive certain money to pay my Debts withal. Then said Mr. Archdeacon, I will write to Mr. Wiseman, that ye shall sustain no loss.

Bland. That shall not need: for I can sustain no great loss, if I go not. But I pray you to let me have a longer day. No, quoth he.

Bland. Sir, I cannot well come on Monday.

Harps. Wilt thou not come, when he so gently speaketh to thee, where he may command thee?

Bland. I do not deny to come, but I desire a longer day.

Harps. * Thou shalt have no other day; I charge thee to come on Monday.

Bland. Sir, I perceive it shall be for this or like matters: will it please you or Mr. Collins, for Gods sake, to confer Scriptures privately with me in this matter, seeing ye say ye would so gladly win me?

Harps. With all my heart will I take the pains, and I will also borrow my Lord of Dovers Library, to have what Books thou wilt: and thus they departed. Now the 17 of May at Ashford I could not be released, although I was called to the Spiritual Court for the same matter, but was bound to appear at the Sessions holden at Crambrook, the third of July.

Another Appearance of Mr. Bland before the Archdeacon and his Fellows.

The 21 day of May I appeared in the Chapter-house, where was a great multitude of people, unlooked for of me, and Mr. Archdeacon said thus to me: Ye are come here according as ye were appointed; and the cause is, that it hath pleased the Queens Highness, herte to place me, to see Gods holy Word set forth, and to reform those that are here fallen into great and heinous Errors, to the great displeasure of God, and the decay of Christs Sacraments, and contrary to the faith of the Catholick Church, whereof thou art notably known to be one that is sore poysoned with the same, and hast infected and deceived many with thy evil Preaching, which if thou wilt renounce, and come home again to the Catholick Church, both I and many other more would be very glad; and I for my part shall be bright glad to shew you the favour that lieth in me, as I said unto you when you were appointed hither, because ye then refused to satisfie again the people that ye had deceived. And whereas it is feigned by you, that I should openly dispute the matter with you this day; although I did neither so intend nor appoint, yet I am content to dispute the matter with thee, if thou wilt not without disputeation help to heal the Souls that are brought to Hell-ward by thee? What sayest thou?

Bland. I do protest before God and you all, that neither is my Conscience guilty of any Error or Heresie, neither that I ever taught any Error or Heresie willingly. And where your Mastership saith, That I have feigned an open Disputation with you, it is not true, as I can thus approve: Upon Saturday I was at Ugdens and there Mr. Bingham laid it to my charge, that such an open Disputation, as ye have here offered, should be this day between you and me: Whereat I much marvelled, and said to him, That before that present I never heard any such word; neither would I answer nor dispute: and to this can Mr. Vaughan, Mr. Oxenden, Mr. Setb of Overland, and Mr. Ugen witness; and further I said to them, that I never spake to you of any Disputation, nor you to me. Now if your Mastership have any thing to say to me by the Law, I will make answer to it.

Harps/Hear ye what he saith? His Conscience is cleare: I pray thee whercon groundest thou thy Conscience? let me hear what thy faith is?

Bland. I know not why ye should more ask me a reason of my faith, than any other man in this open Audience?

Harps. Why thou Heretic, art thou ashamed of thy faith? if it were a Christian belief, thou needest not to be ashamed of it.

Bland. I am not ashamed of my faith. For I believe in God the Father Almighty, maker of Heaven and Earth, and in Jesus Christ his only Son our Lord &c. with all the other Articles of the Creed; and I do believe all the holy Scriptures of God to be most certain and true.

Mr. Bland wanted to speak again before them.

* Note here the extreme dealing of the great-fellows.

The second appearance of Mr. Bland, Mr. Harpsfield words to Mr. Bland.

He said further, that he presented against Mr. Bland.

The answer of Mr. Bland to Mr. Harpsfield words.

Mr. Bland cleared himself briefly of the same repute of Mr. Harpsfield.

To believe the Articles of our Christian Faith never so well, as will not suffice the Papists.

Harpf. Wilt thou declare no more than this?
Bland. No.

The People
Fie of Dr.
He is blind.

Harpf. Well, I will tell thee whereon I ground my faith: I do believe and ground my faith and conscience upon all the Articles of the Creed, and upon all the holy Scriptures, Sacraments, and holy Doctors of the Church, and upon all the general Councils that ever were since the Apostles time. Lo, hereupon ground I my faith; with many words more, which I well remember not. And when he could get no other answer of me, than I had said before, he called for a Scribe to make an act against me. And after much communication, I said, By what Law and Authority will ye proceed against me. Mr. Collins said, By the Canon Law.

Mr. Bland
requeth to have his Counsellor.

Bland. I doubt whether it be in strength or no. Yet I pray you let me have a Counsellor in the Law, and I will make answer according to the Law.

Harpf. Why thou Heretick, thou wilt not confesse thy faith to me, that have Authority to demand it of thee, and yet I have confessed my faith to thee before all this Audience. As concerning the blessed Sacrament of the Altar, thou hast taught, that after the Consecration it is Bread and Wine, and not the Body and Blood of our Saviour Jesus Christ. How saist thou, hast thou not thus taught?

The People ever call him a foolish.

Bland. Sir, as concerning this matter of the Sacrament, when I was with you and Mr. Collins, ye said then it was for other matters that I should come hither: and further, that ye would be content at my desire, to confer Scriptures with me, to see if ye could win me; and ye said, ye would borrow my Lord of Dover's Library, that I should have what Book I would; and now ye require me thus to answer, contrary to your promise, ere any Conference be had, and seek rather to bring me into trouble, than to win me.

Harpf. I will, as God shall help me, do the best to thee that I can, if thou wilt be any thing conformable; and I trust to dissolve all thy doubts, if thou be willing to hear. And I also will desire thee two worshipful men, my Lord of Dover, and Mr. Collins, to hear us.

Bland. No, ye shall pardon me of that: there shall be no such witness. But when we agree, set to our hands. Heretofore made the people a noise against me, for refusing the witness: and here had we many more words, then I can rehearse. But at the last I said, Sir, will ye give me leave to ask you one question? And he said, yea, with all my heart. For in that thou askest any thing, there is some hope that thou maist be won.

Mr. Bland
question to
D. Harpf.

Bland. Sir, when it pleased Almighty God to send his Angel unto the Virgin Mary to salute her, and said, Hail full of Grace, &c. came any substance from God our Father into the Virgins womb to become man? whereat as well Mr. Archdeacon, as my Lord of Dover, and Mr. Collins said. But my Lord spake the first, and said, The Holy Ghost came to her; and ere he had brought out his sentence, Mr. Syrac Peters said, Verum alijssim obumbravit. Truth, said Mr. Archdeacon, it was the power of God, sent by the Holy Ghost. They had forgotten, that genitus fuit ex substantia patris; Or else they perceived whereunto this question tended: and so both I and they left it; by what words I cannot tell. But I said, Sir, shall I ask one other? And he said, Yea. Is there in the Sacrament, after the Consecration, Christs natural Body, with all the qualities of a natural Body, or no?

Another question of Mr. Bland to
D. Harpf.

Harpf. Hark, said Mr. Archdeacon; hear ye this Heretick? He thinks it an absurdity to grant all the quantities of Christs natural Body to be in the Sacrament. But it is no absurdity: For even that natural Body that was born of the Virgin Mary is glorified, and that same Body is in the Sacrament after the Consecration. But perceive ye not the arrogancy of this Heretick, that will put me to answer him, and he will not answer me? he thought to put me to a pinch with his question; for I tell you it is a learned question.

Bland. So if ye be so much discontented with me, I will say no more; yet I would all men heard, that ye say the glorified Body of Christ is in the Sacrament, after the Consecration.

Harpf. I may call thee gross ignorant. Thou gross ignorant, is not the same body glorified, that was born of the Virgin Mary? Is it then any absurdity to grant that to be in the Sacrament? And whiles he spake many other words, I said to Mr. Petit, That the Sacrament was instituted, delivered, and received of his Apostles, before Christs Body was crucified; and it was crucified before it was glorified; which saying Mr. Petit partly recited to Mr. Archdeacon.

Harpf. Thou art without all learning. Was not Christs Body given to his Apostles, as in a glorified act? and yet no inconvenience, although his natural Body was not crucified; for when he was born of the Virgin Mary without pain, was not that the act of a glorified Body? And when he walked on the water, and when he came into the house to his Apostles, the doors being shut fast, were not these acts of a glorified Body?

Dover. Then my Lord of Dover helped him to a better place, and said, When Christ was in Mount Thabor, he was there glorified in his truth, my Lord, he was glorified in the sight of three of his Apostles.

Harpf. Ye say truth, my Lord, he was glorified in the sight of three of his Apostles.

Bland. This me think is new Doctrine.

Harpf. Well, seeing he will by no other way be reformed, let the people come in and prove these matters against him. And therewith the Archdeacon brought forth a Copy of the Bill of Complaint that was put against me at Christmas, and about that we talked a little. And then Mr. Archdeacon rose up, and said, See ye good people that know this matter, that ye come in, and prove it against him. Whereunto answered Thomas Aulfen, I pray you, said he, let us be no more troubled with him. And then spake John Aulfen, and Heath with one eye, and began to accuse me; but no answer they could have of me, but do to me what ye can by Law, and I will answer it. Then said Thomas Aulfen, Bland, ye were once abjured.

Bland. Ye say not truly, Goodman Aulfen, I was never abjured. Either, said he, ye were abjured, or else ye had the Kings pardon. Neither of both; ye speak this of malice; with many other railing words more. Then Mr. Archdeacon departed, and Mr. Collins to command me to appear the next day. Howbeit, for certain other urgent business that I had, I did not appear, but wrote a Letter to Mr. Commissary, desiring him to respite the matter till my coming home again; and if he would not, I would be content to submit my self to the Law when I came home.

Now about the 28 day of June I came to Mr. Commissary to shew him of my return, and offered my self to satisfy the Law, if it were proceeded against me, before Mr. Cocks of Surry, and Marks the Apparitor; but Mr. Commissary said gently, he had done nothing against me. And so appointed me to appear before him the Friday seven-night after. Now in the mean time was the Sessions holden at Crambrooke, where I was bound to appear; and carrying Surety with me to be bound again, for I looked for none other, did appear the third day of July.

And Sir John Baker said, Bland, ye are, as we hear Sir J. Bakers say, a Scot; where were ye born and brought up? And I said I was born in England. And he said, where? And I said, in Sedber, and brought up by one Dr. Lupton, Provost of Easton College. Well, said he, I know him well. Remain to your Bond till Afternoon.

Then said Sir Thomas Moyle, Ah Bland, thou art a stiff-necked Fellow. Thou wilt not obey the Law, nor his word, answer when thou art called. Nor will, quoth Sir John Baker? Mr. Sheriff, take him to your Ward: and the Bailiff set me in the Stocks, with other, and would not hear me speak one word; and so we remained in the Goal of Maidstone, till a fortnight before Michaelmas, or thereabout; and then we were carried to Rocheester, to the Assize holden there, where we were among the Prisoners two days: and when we were called, and the Judges of Assize asked our causes, when my cause was rehearsed, Mr. Barrow, Clerk of the Peace, said, That I was an excommunicate person.

Then Mr. Koper of Lincoln talked with the Judges, but what I am not able to say. But the Judges of Assize said, Take them to Maidstone again, and bring them to the Sessions that shall be holden next at the Town of Maldin: Howbeit, the Sheriff did not fend for us, so that we tarried at Maidstone till the Sessions holden at Green.

Another Examination of Mr. Bland before Sir John Baker.

Baker. Bland, wherefore were ye cast into Prison?

Bland. I cannot well tell. Your Mastership cast me in.

Baker. Yea, but wherefore were you in before that time?

Bland. For an unjust Complaint put upon me.

Baker. What was the Complaint?

Bland. I told him as truly and briefly as I could?

Baker. Let me see thy Book; and I took him a Lastine Testament.

Baker. Will ye go to the Church, and obey and follow the Queens proceedings, and do as an honest man should do.

Bland. I trust in God to do no otherwise but as an honest man should do.

Baker. Will ye do as I said?

Bland. Will it please your Mastership to give me leave to ask you a question?

Baker. Yea.

Bland. Sir, may a man do any thing that his Conscience is not fastidied in to be good?

Baker. Away, away, and threw down the Book, and said, It is no Testament. And I said, Yes. And Mr. Webb took it up, and said unto me marvellous gently; Mr. Bland, I knew you when ye were out of this Opinion: I would to God ye would reform your self; with better words then I will write. And I said; If ye have known me of another Opinion then I am of now, it was for lack of knowledge.

Baker. Yea, said thou so? by St. Mary, and thou hold thee there, I will give six Fagots to burn thee withal, ere thou shouldst be unborn: hence Knave, hence. And so were we reprieved into our place again within the Bar. And at night, when Judgment of Felons and all was done, we were called, and the Judge said to the Jaylor, Take them with you, and deliver them to the Ordinary, and if they will not be reformed, let them be delivered to us again, and they shall have Judgment and Execution. And one of our Company said, My Lord, if we be killed at your hands for Christs sake, we shall live with him for ever.

Another Appearance of Mr. Bland in the Spiritual Court.

Mr. Bland brought again to the Castle of Canterbury. The Bishop of Dover, Mr. Collins, Mr. Mills, with other; and then went to them Mr. Oxenden, Mr. Petit, Mr. Web and Mr. Hardes, Justices. And when I was called, Mr. Web said, Here we present this man unto you, as one vehemently suspected of Heresie.

Bland. And I said; Mr. Web, ye have no cause to suspect me of Heresie. I have been a Prisoner this whole year, and no matter proved against me. I pray you, wherefore have I been so long kept in Prison?

Web. Leave your arrogant asking of questions, and answer to that that is laid to your charge.

Bland. I do so; for I lay you have no cause to suspect me of Heresie.

Web. Yes; ye denied to Sir John Baker, to be conformable to the Queens proceedings.

Bland. Is it a just cause to suspect me of Heresie, for asking a question with leave? So we had more words there then I well remember.

Then stood up Master Petit, and said, Ye were cast into Prison, because ye fled away from your Ordinary.

Bland. Then have I had wrong. For I never fled, nor disobeyed mine Ordinary, nor did any thing contrary to the Law. Let them now say if I did; but they said nothing. And when I saw they held their peace, I said, Mr. Commissary, have you been the cause of this mine imprisonment? No, quoth he; ye know that when ye went from me, ye were appointed to appear the Friday after the Sessions. Here I was suffered to speak no more, but shut up in a corner till my Companions were likewise presented, and then we were sent to Wesgate into Prison, and were put in several close Holdes, that never one of us could speak to another, nor any man was permitted to come to us. We were four times at this appearance: but one they dispatched, by what means I cannot tell: whose name was Cornwall, a Tanner.

And thus hitherto passed the talk between Bland and the Justices, and certain Gentlemen of the Shire. Now followeth the order of the reasoning between him and the Clergy-men, before whom he was examined. But forasmuch as the chiefest doer and judge against him was the Bishop of Dover or Suffragan of Canterbury, called Doctor Richard Thornton, to the intent it may appear what little truth or constancy is in these Catholick Persecutors; I thought here to exhibit by the way a certain Popish Letter, written of a Papist unto him. Wherein is declared what a Gospeller the laid Richard Thornton was in King Edward's time, which now turning with the world, sheweth himself such a bitter Persecutor against Gods Servants in Queen Maries time. The Copy of this Letter here followeth.

A Copy of a Popish Letter written to the Bishop of Dover, by one Thomas Goldwell a Priest, declaring what a Professer he was in King Edward's time.

Right Reverend, and my good Lord, after my hearty thanks for your good cheer at my last being with your Lordship, this shall be to certify you, that as soon as I arrived with my Lords Grace, I gave him your Letters, but I had much work to obtain any thing of him for you. For there hath been given very evil informations of you, and it hath been said, that you have concurred with all manner of evil proceedings, the which hath these years past been in England, as well against the holy Sacrament of the Altar, and against the Supreme Authority of Christs Vicar in Earth, as with the use of the abominable late Communion, and with the Marriage of Priests, as well Religious as Secular; and that you have given Orders to (I cannot tell how many) base, unlearned, and evil disposed people, by reason of the which they have taken upon them to preach, and to do much hurt in Ken. So that men think that yet if any new mutation, the which God forbid, should chance, you would be as ready to change as any other. And indeed it maketh me to fear the same, by reason that notwithstanding it hath pleased Almighty God to provide, that your Absolution was sent unto you (not looking, I dare say, for any such thing) of all manner of matters past, yet your Lordship (more regarding the vanity of the World, then the offence of God, the which he only knoweth how much it grieves me, for the due love I bear unto you) presumed to sing Mass in Pontificalibus, the holy days immediately following, and also to ministrare to Children the Sacrament of Confirmation, because that one (being a Member of the Devil) did somewhat comfort you so to do.

Oh my Lord, what honour should it have been both to God and your self, and also edification to all good people, (though all worldly men and Hereticks would therefore have laugh'd you to scorn) if you considering your great offences toward God, and his goodness again toward you, would like as you have offended in the face of the world, to the damnation of many, likewise have shewed your self penitent in the face of the world, to the edification of many, and not only to have celebrate for vanity Pontificaliter; but also for a time to have abstained for reverence retaliator from the Altar, according to the old custom of the Church. The which I have also seen observed of some honest men, not being thereto incited of any man. But that which is past cannot be called again. And I thought it not my part to leave your Lordship mine old Friend and Master in the mire. What have I created not to solicit your cause with my Lords Grace, till at the last I obtained of his Grace for your Lordship all the faculties of the which I send you a Copy here inclosed, partly for your own consolation, and partly for other, desiring your Lordship to use them to the honour of God, that there come to me thereof no rebuke: not publishing them to any person, but to such that you know will gladly receive them. For hitherto there is never a Bishop in England, who hath granted him so great authority concerning those which be under his Cure. Only Mr. Archdeacon hath the like, and in one thing more great then be these your Lordships. Wherefore your Lordship shall do well to remit unto him all such Priests as have Cure of Soul, whether they be Beneficed men, or Parish Priests. For he hath not only authority to absolve them, as you have, but also to give them authority to absolve such as he underneath their Cures. And thus I commit your Lordship to the protection of Almighty God. Written at Brussel the 16. of June, 1554.

Your Lordships Beadman,

Thomas Goldwell.

And thus much concerning the Bishop of Dover, by way of digestion. Now to return again to the examinations of Mr. Bland, let us hear his own Report of his Answers, as followeth.

How followeth mine Answer, as nigh as I can call to remembrance, every word, and sentence; yet if any that was present can help to perfect it, I would be glad. But just as dare I say, that there is never one sentence, but it was openly spoken the ninth of March in the Chapter-house of Creechurch, in the presence of as many as they had chosen, the Mayor of the City being called to be assistant, and all other stout out.

The Answer of Mr. Bland in his Appearance before the Commissary, and other in the Spiritual Court.

After Collins said; Mr. Bland, ye know that ye are presented unto us as one suspected of Heresie. How say ye, be ye contented to reform your self to the Laws of this Realm, and of the holy Church?

Bland. I deny that I am suspected justly of Heresie, and that ye heard when I was presented, that I denied the Suspension to be just, but to defend the unjust punishment that I have suffered: neither can ye prove that any occasion hath been given by me, whereby any man should suspect me therein. But if you have any Law or Authority to proceed against me for any thing done for a whole year ago and more, I will answer to it.

Collins. Ye were convented before Mr. Archdeacon and me, and matter of Heresie laid to your charge.

Bland. That matter was done and said a whole year ago, and for that I have been in Prison this year and more. If ye have any thing against me by any Law, I desire you to let me know the Law and the Matter, and I will answer according to the Law.

Then said my Lord Suffragan; but that I am one of the Judges, I would rise, and stand by thee, and accuse thee to be a Sacramentary, and bring witness to prove it; yea, and further, that thou hast called the Mass an abominable Idol.

Bland. You, my Lord, never heard me say so: But I heard you once say, That in your Confidence ye had abhorred the Mass three years. Thou thyself, quoth he, I never said so.

Bland. My Lord, if they might be heard, I can bring witness to approve it, with the day, time, and place; and I once did hear Mr. Collins at a Visitation in Wingham say, That Christ was a full Satisfaction for all sin present, past, and to come, contrary to that he said now.

And here we had more words of this matter, which I let pass for lack of good remembrance.

Mr. Collins said, this is but a shift. You were better answer now; for else you shall be in Prison again, and be called on Monday, and have Articles laid to you, and if ye then answer not directly, ye shall be condemned pro contemptu, and that will be worse for you.

Bland. Sir, I do not now, nor will not then deny to answer to any thing that ye can lay to my charge by the Law; wherefore I trust ye will let me have the benefit of the Law.

Collins. This is the Law, that if ye be required of the Ordinary, Reddere rationem fidei, then may ye not deny it. And that we do now.

Bland. To that then will I answer. For I believe in God the Father Almighty, Maker of Heaven and Earth, and in Jesus Christ his only Son our Lord, with all the other Articles of the same Creed: And I believe all the Articles contained both in the Creed called the Mass Creed, and in the Creed of Athanasius: And I do believe, that all the holy Scriptures, and all things therein contained, are most true.

Collins. This will not serve you: ye must answer to all such Articles in all these as shall be laid to you, or asked of you.

Bland. Let me know the Law that it is in that force (without any just cause of suspicion proved against me) and I will answer.

Collins. How say ye, will ye answer?

Bland. Sir, I have answered you. Have him away, said my Lord of Dover; he had better have answered.

Bland. My Lord, I am ready to answer, if ye have any thing against me by the Law.

B. Dover. Ye have preached many Heresies in Adeham, where I am Parson now; and therefore ye must make answer to them.

Bland. Lay them to my charge by the Law, and I will answer them, if ye can approve that I am bound to answer to that was done a year or more ago; for if ye may do that, ye may also lay to my charge, and compel me to answer to all things done in all my life, I trow.

Collins. It is not a year ago since you were before Mr. Archdeacon and me.

Bland. It is truth, it is a year and ten weeks since the words were spoken; and I have been a Prisoner ever since, and have been at five Sessions, and never could have my cause tried. Me think your Charities should think it punishment enough, if I had been guilty.

Collins. All this will not serve you; you must needs answer, and it will be better for you to answer now, then another time. Will ye reform your self, and go to the Church, and worship Christ in the blessed Sacrament of the Altar; and be obedient unto all the Queens Laws?

Bland. I pray you wherefore am I brought hither?

Collins. To answer to such things as are demanded of you.

Bland. Sir, I thought ye had some matters against me by the Law.

Collins. Well, on Monday at 9. of the Clock ye shall see the Law, and have Articles laid unto you.

Then they had spied Mr. Cox the Lawyer, and called him in, and said; Here is a Lawyer can tell you are bound by the Law to answer: and he said, as they had said.

Collins. Do ye not believe, that after the Consecration of the blessed Sacrament of the Altar, there remaineth no substance of Bread, but the substance of Jesus Christ, both God and Man?

Bland. Master Commissary, I know not by any Law why ye should ask me that question more then any other man here. And after a little talk, my Lord of Dover asked me this question; Doest not thou believe, after the Consecration, that it is the Body of Christ? And I said, No, I do not so believe: for the Scriptures do not teach me, that there should remain the Flesh of Christ, to eat as a man should eat mans Flesh.

Then Mr. Glaister said, That was the Opinion of the Capernaites: there is no man here of that Opinion, and spake long of cutting of Christs Body, as men cut Fleesh in the Shambles.

Then Mr. Doctor Faucet said; Master Bland, forasmuch as you and I were brought up both in one House, and born both in one Parish, I would be as glad as any man alive to do you good: but ye may not thus stand against the Church. For Christ faith; Ye must humble your self, and take up his Cross, and follow him. And to humble your self in this place, is to be content, and not stick to your

Anno 1555.

Mr. Bland confessed all the Articles of his Creed, if the faith of the Sacrament be in the Scripture, and so necessarily a thing, why did not the Apostles then put it in the Creed, and make three Articles? It is here in the Scripture, not yet put in the Creed, why then do the Pope so extremely bind us as unto it?

Mr. Bland appeared at five Sessions, and could not have his cause tried.

Mr. Bland called before the Spiritual Judges, not for any matter they had, but that they would have against him.

Mr. Bland desired the reality of Christs Presence in the Sacrament. The Capernaites took Christ to speak literally of his Body, and so do the Papists, and not the Protestants.

The Officers of Mr. Bland, as the Clergy-men Mr. V. and unjustly suspected of Heresie, and more unjustly punished.

The Bishop of Dover once advised the Mass.

Collins the Commissary proceeded before the true Doctors of free judgment by Christ.

Anno your own Judgment, but to humble yourself to the Holy Church, which hath determined, that after the Consecration there remaineth no Bread, but the Natural Body and Blood of Christ.

Bland. Master Doctor, if ye take humbling of our selves in that place, to admit the Determination of the Church, then must we know by the Scriptures, that the same Church determined nothing but according to the Scriptures, as this is not: and therefore I do not believe any such Transubstantiation; nor never will, God willing. Then (quoth he) I have done with you: I will no more pray for you then for a dog.

Then said Master Glasier; How think ye? Did Paul when he said; Is not the Bread that we break a partaking of the Body of Christ? Did he mean Bakers Bread?

Bland. Though he did not mean Bakers Bread, that doth not prove that he brake Natural and Real Flesh. Glasier. No, by Saint Mary, we say not so, but we say it is the Natural Body glorified, under the forms of Bread and Wine.

Bland. Then the Apostles had it not as we have; or else his glorified Body was crucified for us.

Glasier. Tush, ye do not understand the Scriptures. For Christ's Body was ever glorified, in that it was so marvellously united to the Godhead: yea, and he shed his Body divers times glorified, as in the Mount Thabor: And when he walked on the Water, we see he was light, and had no weight in him. Was not that then a glorified Body?

Bland. Then belike Peter's Body was glorified, if walking on the Water was the deed of a glorified Body: and the Iron that Elizeus made to swim upon the Water.

Dover. Tush, quoth my Lord of Dover, that was done by Prayer. But they made such a noise with laughing, that I heard no more what my Lord said.

Bland. Masters, I know that it availeth us nothing to reason with you, no more then it booted you in the time of the Gospel. For then neither the reason of Devilias, Cochlens, nor yet of detection of the Sophistry of my Lord Chancellors doing, could take any place. And it is known to some that be here, that something I can say in them.

Dover. No, you know Oecolampadius, Zwinglius, and such other.

Bland. Indeed, my Lord, I have seen part of their doings.

Dover. That is seen by thee to day.

Glasier. I was glad, when I heard you say ye believed the Catholick Church; and now go you from it?

Bland. No that I do not.

Glasier. Ye know that Christ saith; If thy Brother have offended thee, go and reconcile him between thee and him. If he hear thee not, take two or three witnesses all things may be established. If he hear not them, Dic Ecclesie; If he hear not the Church, take him as an heathen. I pray you where could ye have found this Church of yours fifty years ago?

Bland. Ye know that the true Church did not at all times Hourih, but was wonderfully perfected.

Dover. Then my Lord cried; No more, I command you to hold your peace. Have him away and bring in Another.

Collins. Ye shall come again on Monday, at nine of the Clock, and in the mean time ye shall have whom ye will to confer withal: your friend D. Faucet, or Mr. Glasier, if ye desire them.

Bland. I will refuse to talk with no Man: as for any conference of your part, it is but weak Laws, established as they are. But when there was no Law, I did desire conference. And so for that time I departed.

The Monday after we were brought forth to the same place again; and then Master Collins began to speak to me, but after what manner, it is clean out of my mind: but the end was, that I would reform my self. But as I did before, I demanded what they had to lay to my charge, and to see the Law, which they said before I should see.

Dover. What needs that? we have enough against you. * For ye denied to me Transubstantiation in the Sacrament.

Bland. I did refuse to answer, till ye promised that I should see the Law, whereby ye may compel me to answer.

Dover. My Lord took the Scribes Book, and read the answer that I made to Doctor Faustus, which I knew not that they had written.

Bland. My Lord, I made you no such answer when ye asked me. I take M. Collins and M. Glasier to witness. Then they brought forth a Decretal, a Pook of the Bishop of Romes Law; to bind me to answer, which my Heart abhorred to look upon. The chief was, that the Ordinary had authority to examine, and that they so examined must needs answer. But I said, that it meant of such as were justly suspected, as I was not. And here we had much Communication. For I charged them with unjust Imprisonment, which they could not avoid.

But Mr. Oxenden would have helped them, and said, the Justices put me in Prison for a Sermon seditionously spoken, and for troubling a Priest at Mass.

Bland. That is not true. For after I had been ten weeks in prison, I was bayled, till I was cast in again, and (as the Justice said) for the disobeying mine Ordinary, which I never did.

Collins. Will ye be content to confer with some? It will be better for you; now we offer it you, because ye would not desire it.

Bland. As I did not refuse before, no more will I now. But I did not perceive before, but that one thing might have come, without any leave-taking, to confer the Scriptures: and therefore I looked that Doctor Faustus would have come to me without desiring, if any commodity to me had been in conference; for though I was never able to do him good; yet once I was his Tutor.

Collins. Are ye content to come to his Chamber at afternoon?

Bland. Sir, I am a Prisoner, and therefore it is meet that I obey, and come whither you will, and ye departed. At this time we were three. But they took another to appear before them the Tuesday seven-night after. And when he came, I knew not what was done; but that I hear they excommunicated him, and let him go. His name was Miller a Clothier.

Here followeth a certain confutation of Master Bland against false and manifest absurdities, granted by Mr. Milles, Priest of Christ's Church in Canterbury.

Milles. We say, that Christ is in or under the Sacrament really and corporally, which are the forms of Bread and Wine, and that there is his Body contained invisibly, and the qualities which we do see, as whiteness and roundness, be there without substance by Gods power, as quantity and weight be there also by invisible measure.

Bland. This is your own Divinity, to make accidents the Sacrament, and Christs real Body invisibly contained in them, and so to destroy the Sacrament. And yet the Doctors say; * Materia Sacramenti est panis & vinum. And God by his power worketh no miracles with Hoc est corpus meum, so to change the substance of Bread and Wine into his Body and Blood, in that he maketh accidents to be without their substance by invisible measure. I am ashamed to see you so destroy Christs Sacrament, contrary to your own Doctors, and trifle with Gods Work.

Milles. To Christ is given all power in Heaven and in Earth, so that by the omnipotent power of his Godhead he may be, and is where he listeth, and is in the Sacrament really and corporally without occupying of place; for a glorified Body occupieth no place.

Bland. Mark your own Reason. All power is given to Christ both in Heaven and Earth; by the omnipotent power of his Godhead he may be where he listeth; he is in the Sacrament really and corporally, without occupying of place.

I deny your Argument; for it followeth neither of your Major nor Minor. And first I would learn of you, how you know that Christ listeth to be present at every Priest list. For if the Priest list not to say your Mass, then Christ listeth not to be there,

Again, ye say, all power is given unto Christ both in Heaven and in Earth, so that that is the cause by your reason, that by the omnipotent power of his Godhead he may be where he list: and by that reason he had no power of his Godhead, till he had his humane Body, and then he was not equal with the Father in Divinity: for all power was not given to Christ, before the humanity and the Godhead were knit together, neither was he Filius. Here is more danger then ye are ware of; if ye would stand to it with just Judges.

Mills. We eat Christs Flesh and Blood spiritually when we receive it with Faith and Charity. And we also do eat it corporally in the Sacrament; and the Body that we to receive hath Life. For the Godhead is annexed thereto: which although it be received with the Body of Christ, yet it is not vile after a gross sort, and the Flesh of Christ that we receive is lively; for it hath the Spirit of God joynted to it. And if a Man be drunken, it is not by receiving of the Blood of Christ: for it is contrary to the nature of Christs Blood. If he be drunken, it is by the qualities and (a) quantities, without substance of Blood.

f Bland. I am glad that you are so much against all Men, to say that Christs Body is alive in the Sacrament; it may fortune to bring you to the truth in time to come. Me think it is evil to keep Christs Body alive in the Pix, or else must ye grant, that he is alive in receiving, and dead in the Pix. And ye say truth, that it is (b) not the Natural receiving of Christs Blood that maketh a Man drunken; for it is the nature of Wine that doth that, which ye deny not.

And a more truth ye confess then ye did think, when ye said; If a Man be drunken, it is by the qualities and quantities, without the substance of Blood; for indeed Blood hath no such qualities with it: by which it is evident that there is no Natural Blood.

If a Man be drunken with Wine Consecrated, it must be a miracle, as I think you will have it, that the said accidents should be without their Natural Substance, and work all the operations of both Substance and Accidents: and so it followeth, that a Man may be drunken by miracle. The Body that ye receive, ye say, is alive, because it is annexed to the Godhead, and the Flesh that ye receive is lively, because it hath the Spirit of God joynted to it.

This division is of your New Inventions, to divide the Body and the Flesh, the one alive by the Godhead, the other lively by Gods Spirit; and both one Sacrament: ye make of it a thing so fantastical, that ye imagine a Body without Flesh, and Flesh without a Body, as ye do qualities and quantities without substance, and as ye do a living Body without qualities and quantities.

Mills. If case so require, and there be a godly intent in the Minister to Consecrate, after the Consecration thereof, there is present the Body and Blood of Christ, and no other substance, but accidents without substance to a true believer.

Bland. Ye grant three absurdities, e that in a Tun of Wine Consecrated is nothing but accidents: and to increase it withal, ye have brought in two Inconveniences; First, that it is not the Word of God that doth consecrate, but the intent of the Priest must help it; and if that lack, ye seem to grant no Consecration, though the Priest speak the Word; and yet your Doctors say, that the wickedness of the Priest minnifieth not the Sacrament.

And to an unbeliever ye seem to say, that it is not the same, that it is to the true believer; and then must the believer have something to do in the Consecration. Incidit in scyllam qui vult vitare charibdim.

Mills. The substance of Christs Body doth not fill the Mouses Belly. For although he doth receive the outward forms of Bread and Wine, yet he doth not receive the substance inwardly, but without violation. And a Mousse doth not eat the Body of Christ, to speak properly; for it doth not feed him spiritually or corporally, as it doth Man, because he doth not receive it to any inducement Anno of immortality to the Flesh.

Bland. Ye make not your Doctrine plain to be understood: we must know how a Mousse can receive the substance inwardly and outwardly. Ye say, he doth not receive the substance d inwardly, but without violation: Erge, with violation he receiveth the substance inwardly. Ye say that the Mousse cannot violate Christs Body; but he violateth the substance that he eateth. And this your proper speech doth import as much as that the Mousse should eat the Sacrament to as great effect, and the same thing, as doth the unworthy receiver. For if that be the cause that the properly eateth not the Body of Christ, because he doth not feed upon it spiritually nor corporally, nor receiveth it to any inducement of immortality, as ye say; then it followeth, that the unbeliever and the e Mousse receive both one thing. And yet it cannot be denied, but the f Mousse will live with consecrated Bread, and then ye must grant this absurdity, that a substance is nourished and fed only with accidents.

Mills. Mens Bodies be fed with Christs Body, as with immortal meat, by reason of the Godhead annexed to eternal life; but mens Bodies be corporally nourished with qualities and forms of Bread and Wine: and we deny that by the Sacramental eating any gross humour turned into Blood, is made miraculously in the Body.

Bland. Where it cannot be denied that a Man may live, and naturally be nourished in his Natural Body with the Sacramental Bread and Wine consecrated; ye cannot avoid that: but then ye turn to the spiritual nourishing of Mans Body, by Christs Body and Godhead annexed, which is nothing to put away the absurdity, that either a Mans Natural Body should be fed naturally with accidents, or else to have them changed into gross humours. But ye say, Mens Bodies be corporally nourished with qualities and forms of Bread and Wine; and then must ye needs grant, that qualities and quantities must be made substance in Man. For ex eisdem sunt & nutritur mixta, or else is all that is the nutriment in Man accidents and no substance.

Mills. If the forms of Bread and Wine be burned or Worms ingendered, it is no derogation to the Body of Christ, because the presence of his Body ceaseth to be there, and no substance cometh again.

Bland. Ye grant here, that a substance may be made of accidents, as ashes or worms: but I think you will have it by your miracles, and this I count a more absurdity then the other, that Christs Body should cease to be there, and no substance to come again; for no word in all the whole Bible seems to serve you for the ceasing of his presence, though we granted you, which we do not, that it were there. God Almighty open your Heart, if it be his Will and Pleasure, to see the truth. And if I thought not my death to be at hand, I would answer you to all the rest, in these and all other my doings. I submit my self to our Saviour Jesus Christ, and his holy Word, desiring you in the Bowels of Christ to do the same.

Your Orator in the Lord,
John Bland.

The last appearance and examination of Master Bland.

Hitherto you have heard the troublesome handling of this Faithful and Blessed Servant of God, John Bland, toft to and fro, from Prison to Prison, from Session to Session. At last he was brought before the Bishop of Dover, the Commissary, and the Archdeacon, at Canterbury the 13 day of June. The name of this Bishop was Richard Thornton. The Commissary was Robert Collins, whom the Cardinal by his Letters Patents had substitute to his factor, before his coming over to England. The Archdeacon was Nicholas Harpsfield. Under theea great sort of innocent Lambs of Christ were cruelly intreated and slain at Canterbury, amongst whom this forefaid Master a Case being put that the Priest taking a great quantity in the Chalice, he made drunk, wench of these three hundred maketh him drunk: the nature of Wine? he said: the accidents only of Wine create the true substance of Wine? he said: any reasonable Man Judge.

e Three Inconveniences granted by the Popish. 1. That a Tun of Wine being Consecrated, nothing remaineth but accidents: which is false by the operation thereof. 2. Where he saith, that the Word of God doth not Consecrate without the intent of the Priest, which is against their own Doctrine, saying, that the wickedness of the Priest minnifieth not the Sacrament. 3. Where he saith, that the unbeliever is not the substance as the Popish say, that the wicked receive the Body.

Argument. A contrario sensu. 4 The Mousse receiveth not the Body inwardly, but without violation. 5 Erge, with violation he receiveth the Body inwardly. Argument. The Mousse violateth not the Body of Christ. The Mousse violateth the substance which he eateth. Erge, The Mousse eateth no substance of Christs Body. 6 The Mousse and the unbeliever receive the Body of Christ both alike, by the Epiphila doctrine. f Argument. No Mousse can live with accidents only without substance. A Mousse may live with consecrated hosts. Erge, consecrated hosts have not only accidents, but the Substance of Bread.

Another absurdity, that substance is made of accidents, when ashes or worms be made of the forms of bread and Wine.

Richard Thornton the Bloody Bishop of Dover, op of Dover.

Anno 1555 Master Bland was one of the first; who, as it is said, being brought before the said Bishop, and Colleagues, which were John Frankesh, Nicholas Sheterden, Thomas Thacker, Humphrey Middleton, William Coker, was examined of Articles. To whom it was objected by the Commissary, whether he believed that Christ is really in the Sacrament, or no, &c. To this he answered and said, that he believed that Christ is in the Sacrament, as he is in all other good Bodies; so that he judged not Christ to be really in the Sacrament.

The words of St. Paul at his examination.

Another appearance.

The last appearance of Mr. Bland before the Bishop of Dover, and others.

Whereupon the day being on Monday, he was bid to appear again upon Wednesday next, and from thence he was deferred again to Monday following, being the twentieth of June, in the same Chapterhouse, then to hear further what should be done, in case he would not relent to their mind. The which day and place he, appearing as before, was required to say his mind plainly and fully to the foresaid Articles, being again repeated to him. Which Articles, commonly and in course they use to object to their Examinees which be brought before them, as there now followeth, and need not much hereafter, specially for that Country of Kent, to be repeated.

Articles Ministring by Richard Bishop of Dover, to Mr. Bland, and likewise to the rest following after him.

Articles of course ministered against Mr. Bland.

1. Ist, that thou art of the Diocess of Canterbury, and so subject to the jurisdiction of the Archbishop there.

2. Item, that thou art a Christian Man, and dost profess the Laws of God, and Faith of Christs Catholick Church, and the determination of the same.

3. Item, That all Parsons which teach, preach, believe, affirm, hold, maintain, or say within the Diocess of Canterbury, otherwise then our Holy Mother the Church doth, are Excommunicate Persons; and Hereticks, and as Excommunicate and Hereticks ought to be named, reputed, and taken.

4. Item, that thou, contrary to the Catholick Faith, and determination of our Mother Holy Church, within the Diocess of Canterbury, hast openly spoken, maintained, holden, affirmed, and believed, and yet dost hold, maintain, affirm, and believe, that in the blessed Sacrament of the Altar, under the forms of Bread and Wine, there is not the very Body and Blood of our Saviour Jesus Christ in substance, but only a token, sign, and remembrance thereof, and that the very Body and Blood of Christ is only in Heaven, and no where else.

5. Item, that thou, contrary to the Catholick Faith, and determination of our Mother Holy Church, hast within this Diocess of Canterbury openly spoken, said, maintained, holden, affirmed, and believed, and yet dost hold, maintain, affirm and believe, that it is against Gods Word, that the Sacrament of Christs Church should be Ministring in an unknown Tongue; and that no Man safely and with a safe Conscience, or without peril of sin, receiveth any Sacrament Ministring in any Tongue that he understandeth not.

6. Item, that thou, contrary to the Catholick Faith of our Mother Holy Church, hast, and yet dost hold opinion, and say, that it is against Gods Word, that the Sacrament of the Altar should be Ministring in one kind; and that no Man may with a safe Conscience so receive it.

7. Item, that the premises be true, and that there is a common fame upon them within the Diocess of Canterbury.

The Answers of Master Bland to the foresaid Articles

Answer to the first Article, as of the Register. The Catholick Church or Christ. The Catholick Church or Christ.

1. TO these Articles Mr. Bland, answering again in order as they were objected to him, saith to the first, granting the same, that he was a Priest, and of the Diocess of Canterbury.

2. To the second also he answereth affirmatively.

3. Item, to the third he answereth, that the Article is true, maintaining the Catholick Church to be Christs Church.

4. Item, in the fourth Article, as touching the first part of the Article, he doth confess, that he hath preached and taught it, as it is contained in the same. And as touching the second part of the Article, he doth confess, that he doth now also hold and say, as he preached and taught before.

5. Item, to the fifth Article he granteth:

6. To the sixth he preached, held, and doth hold, as it is contained in the Article.

7. Item, to the last Article he granteth the same, &c. This done, and his Answers and Confession taken, despite was given him yet a few days to deliberate with himself. So the 25. day of the said Month of June he making his appearance again in the said Chapterhouse, there openly and boldly withstood the authority of the Pope, whereupon his Sentence was read, and so he condemned and committed to the secular power. Touching the form and tenor of the sentence, because all their sentences of course agree in one, read before in the History of M. Rogers.

M. Bland denieth the Pope, M. Bland condemned.

The Prayer of Mr. Bland before his death.

THE Lord Jesus, for whose love I do willingly leave this Life, and desire rather the bitter death of his Cross, with the loss of all Earthly things, then to abide the Blasphemy of thy holy Name, or else to obey Man in breaking of the Commandments; thou seest, O Lord, that whereas I might live in Worldly Wealth to worship false Gods, and honour thy enemy, I chose rather the torments of this Body, and loss of this my Life, and have counted all things but vile dust and dung, that I might win thee: Which death is more dear unto me, than thousands of Gold and Silver. Such love, O Lord, hast thou laid up in my breast, that I hunger for thee, as the Deer that is wounded desireth the foal. Send thy holy comfort, O Lord, to aid, comfort, and strengthen this weak piece of Earth, which is void of all strength of it self. Thou rememberest, O Lord, that I am but dust, and not able to do any thing that is good. Therefore, O Lord, as thou of thy accustomed goodness hast bidden me to this banquet, and counted me worthy to drink of thine own Cup amongst thine elect; give me strength against this Element, that as it is to my sight most irksome and terrible, so to my mind it may be at thy commandment, as an obedient servant, sweet and pleasant; and through the strength of thy Holy Spirit, I may pass through the strength of this fire into thy Bosom, according unto thy promise, and for this mortality to receive immortality, and for this corruptible to put on incorruptible. Accept this burnt offering & Sacrifice, O Lord, not for the Sacrifice it self, but for thy dear Sons sake my Saviour; for whose testimony I offer this freewill offering with all my heart and with all my Soul. O Heavenly Father, forgive me my Sins, as I forgive the whole World. O sweet Saviour, spread thy wings over me. O God, grant me thy Holy Ghost, through whose merciful inspiration I am come hither. Conduct me unto everlasting Life. Lord, into thy hands I commend my Spirit; Lord Jesus receive my Soul. So be it.

A Prayer of Mr. Bland.

The History of John Frankesh, Humphrey Middleton, Nicholas Sheterden.

HAVING now passed over the Examinations of Mr. Bland, let us further proceed to the rest of his fellows conceptives, being joynted the same time with him in the like cause and like affliction. The names of whom were John Frankesh, Nicholas Sheterden, Humphrey Middleton, Thacker, and Coker, of whom Thacker only gave back. The rest constantly standing to the truth, were altogether condemned by the Suffragan of Canterbury, the 25. day of June, the year above expressed. Touching whole Examinations I shall not need long to stand, for so much as the Articles ministered against them were all one; so in their answers they little or nothing disagreed, as hereafter (by the Lords help) you shall hear. In the mean time, because Nicholas Sheterden in his Examinations had a little more large talk with the Archdeacon and the Commissary, I will first begin with the same.

July 12. John Frankesh, Humphrey Middleton, Nicholas Sheterden, Mary.

The

The first Examination or reasoning of Nicholas Sheterden with M. Harpsfield Archdeacon, and M. Collins the Commissary for the which they sent him to Prison.

First, the Archdeacon and Commissary affirmed, that the very words of Christ, when he said, This is my Body, did change the substance, without any other interpretation or spiritual meaning of the words.

Sher. Then belike when Christ said, This Cup is my Blood, the substance of the Cup was changed into his Blood, without any other meaning, and so the Cup was changed, and not the Wine.

Arch. Not so; for when Christ said, This Cup is my Blood, he meant not the Cup, but the Wine in the Cup.

Sher. If Christ spake one thing, and meant another, then the bare words did not change the substance; but there must be a meaning sought as well of the Bread, as of the Cup.

Arch. There must be a meaning sought of the Cup otherwise then the words stand. But of the Bread it must be understood only as it standeth without any other meaning.

Sher. Then do ye make one half of Christs institution a figure, or borrowed speech, and the other half a plain speech, and so ye divide Christs Supper.

Arch. Christ meant the Wine, and not the Cup, though he said, This Cup is my Blood.

Sher. Then shew me whether the words, which the Priest do speak over the Cup, do change the substance, or whether the mind of the Priest doth it?

Arch. The mind of the Priest doth it, and not the words.

Sher. If the mind of the Priest doth it, and not the words, if the Priest then do mind his harlot, or any other vain thing, that thing so minded was there made, and so the People do worship the Priests harlot in stead of Christs Blood: and again, none of the People can tell when it is Christs Blood, or when it is not, seeing the matter standeth in the mind of the Priest. For no Man can tell what the Priest meaneth, but himself; and so are they ever in danger of committing Idolatry.

Then was the Archdeacon somewhat moved, and fate him down, and said to the Commissary; I pray you Mr. Commissary speak you to him another while; for they are unreasonable and perverse answers, as ever I heard of. Then stood up the Commissary, and said:

Com. Your Argument is much against you self; for ye grant that the Bread is a figure of Christs Body; but the Cup can be no figure of his Blood nor yet his very Blood; and therefore Christ did not mean the Cup, but the Wine in the Cup.

Sher. My Argument is not against me at all; for I do not speak it to prove that the Cup is his Blood, nor the figure of his Blood, but to prove that the bare words being spoken of the Priest do not change the substance no more of the Bread, then they do change the Cup into Blood.

Commiss. It could not be spoken of the Cup, when he said, This Cup is my Blood; but he meant the Wine in the Cup.

Sher. Then it remaineth for you to answer my question to the Archdeacon, that is, whether the mind of the Priest when he speaketh over the Cup, doth change it into Blood, or the bare words?

Commiss. Both together doth it, the words and the mind of the Priest together; yea the intent and the words together doth it.

Sher. If the words and intents together do change the substance, yet must the Cup be his Blood, and not the Wine, forasmuch as the words are, This Cup is my Blood, and the intent ye say, was the Wine; or else the words take none effect, but the intent only.

After, the Commissary in his Chamber, said, it was the intent of the Priest before he went to Mass, without the words; for the Priest did intend to do as holy Church had ordained, then the intent made the Sacrament to take effect.

Sher. If the Sacraments take effect of the intent of the Priest, and not of Gods Word, then many Parishes having a Priest that intendeth not well, are utterly deceived, both in Baptizing, and also worshipping that thing to Anno be God, which is but Bread, because for lack of the Priests intent, the words do take none effect in it; so that by this it is ever doubtful, whether they worship Christ, or Bread, because it is doubtful what the Priests do intend.

Commiss. Then the Commissary would prove to me, Christs Body, whether it may be in two places at once.

Sher. This place and other must needs be understood for the unity of the person, in that Christ was God and Man, and yet the matter must be referred to the Godhead, or else ye must fall into great error.

Commiss. That is not so. For it was spoken of the manhood of Christ, forasmuch as he said, the Son of Man which is in Heaven.

Sher. If ye will needs understand it to be spoken of the Son of Man, then must ye fall into the error of the Anabaptists, which deny that Christ took Fleish of the Virgin Mary; for if there be no Body ascended up, but that which came down, where is then his incarnation? For then he brought his Body down with him.

Commiss. Lo how you seek an error in me, and yet see not how ye err your self. For it cannot be spoken of the Godhead, except ye grant that God is passible, for God cannot come down, because he is not passible.

Sher. If that were a good Argument, that God could not come down, because he is not passible, then it might be said by the like Argument, that God could not sit, and then Heaven is not his seat, and then say as some do, that God hath no right hand for Christ to sit at.

Com. Then the Commissary affirmed plainly, that it was true, God hath no right hand indeed.

Sher. Oh what a spoil of Christs Religion will this be, that because we cannot tell how God came down, therefore we shall say, that he came not down at all; and because we cannot tell what manner of hand he hath, to say that he hath no hand at all; and then he cannot reach the utmost part of the Sea. O misery! at length it will come to pass, that God cannot sit, and then how can Heaven be his Seat; and if Heaven be not his Seat, then there is no Heaven, and then at length I doubt ye will say there is no God, or else no other God, but such as the Heathen Gods are, which cannot go nor feel.

Commiss. Why, doth not the Scripture say, that God is a Spirit? and what hand can a Spirit have?

Sher. Truth it is, God is a Spirit, and therefore is worshipped in Spirit and Truth; and as he is a Spirit, so hath he a Spiritual Power, so he hath a Spiritual Seat, a Spiritual Hand, and a Spiritual Sword; which we shall feel, if we go this way to work, as we begin. Because we know not what God hath, therefore if we say he hath none, then it may as well be said, there is no Christ.

Then the Commissary said, he would talk no more with me, and so departed; and also the Commissary was compelled to grant, that Christs Testament was broken, and his institution was changed from that he left it: but he said they had power so to do.

My first answering, after their Law was established.

BECAUSE I know ye will desire to hear from me some Declaration of the first Examination of the chief Priests, and examination of certain Articles and then I required to see their Commission.

They shewed it to me, and said, there it is, and the King and Queens Letters also. Then I desired to have it read: and in reading I perceived, that on some notable suspicion he might examine upon two Articles; whether Christs real presence were in the Sacrament; and whether the Church of England use Christs Catholick Church.

To that I answered, that I had been a Prisoner three quarters of a year, and as I thought wrongfully: reason would therefore that I should answer to those things wherefore I was Prisoner.

Suff.

The talk of Nicholas Sheterden with the Archdeacon and Commissary about the Sacrament of the Body and Blood of Christ.

The Rector's Catholicks cannot deny a figure in the Cup and yet will not grant the same in the Bread.

If the mind and not the words of the Priest doth it: how then is it that Saw and his fellows say, that the words be the form and formal cause only that maketh the Sacrament? Can the Comm. say taketh the Marry in hand.

The Commissary brought to an absurdity.

The intent of the Priest maketh not the Sacrament.

1555.

Christs Body, whether it may be in two places at once.

The Commissary brought to another inconvenience.

Gods hand is spiritual.

Gods hand is spiritual.

Sheterden required to see the Commission. Sheterden three quarters of a year in Prison before the Law took place.

Anno 1555. Suff. The suffragan said, his Commission was, I must answer directly, yea or no.

Sher. This Commission, said I, was not general to examine whom he will, but on just suspicion.

Suff. He said, I was suspected, and presented to him.

Sher. Then I required that the accusation might be shewed.

Suff. He said, he was not bound to shew it; but he commanded me in the King and Queens Name to answer directly.

Sher. And I as a Subject do require of you Justice: for that I have done I ask no favour.

Suff. He said I was suspected.

Sher. I bade him prove that suspicion, or what cause he had to suspect.

Suff. Thou wast callt into Prison for that cause.

Sher. That was a pretty suspicion, because I had suffered Imprisonment contrary to Gods Law and the Realm, that therefore I must now for amends be examined of suspicion without cause, to hide all the wrong done to me before.

Suff. For when I was callt into Prison, there was no Law but I might speak as I did: therefore in that point I could be no more suspect, than you which Preached the same your self not long before.

Suff. That was no matter to thee what I Preached.

Sher. Well, yet in the King and Queens Name I must answer directly: and therefore I require as a Subject, that ye do not extend beyond your Commission, but prove me suspect, more than you your self.

Mills. Then said M. Mills, I had written to my Mother, and he did see the Letter, wherein I perfwaded my Mother to my opinions.

Sher. In that I did but my duty to certify her, I was not in Prison for any evil. And that was before the Law also, and therefore no more suspicion was in me, than was in them which taught the like.

Mills. Well, ye are required here to answer directly, or no.

Sher. First then I require of you to prove this suspicion; and thus we tosted it to and fro. At last the Bishop said he himself did suspect me. I asked whereby?

Suff. Well, said he, I my self did suspect thee, and it is no matter whereby.

Sher. But your Commission doth not serve you to do without cause of suspicion.

Suff. Well, yet did I suspect you.

Sher. It is not meet for you to be my accuser, and my judge also, for that is too much for one Man. And thus many words were multiplied, and they were much grievous.

Mills. If you were a Christian Man you would not be ashamed of your faith being required.

Sher. I am not ashamed indeed, I thank God, and if any Man did come to me, either to teach or learn, I would declare it; but forasmuch as I perceive you come neither to teach nor to learn, I hold it best not to answer you.

Mills. If you will not, then will we certify the Kings Council.

Sher. I am therewith content that you should certify that I had suffered three quarters Prison wrongfully, and therefore I desire to be justified or condemned, first for that I suffered such Imprisonment; and then I will not refuse to answer your Articles, though they were a bundle of them. But to say that I would answer, whereby you should heal all your wrong done to me against the Law of God and the Realm, I will not.

Here much ado there was to prove that he had no wrong, and again, that it was not they that did it. But said he, the Commissary was one of them. He answered, No, it was the Archdeacon. He said, you fate with him, and he asked your Counsel in it, and yet if it were he, it was your Church, except the Archdeacon, and you be divided one from another. Well said they, Will ye now deny that ye said then, and promise here to submit your self henceforth, and ye shall be delivered?

Sher. I am not so much bound to you to grant any such promise: and again you shall well know that I would not promise to go cross the Street for you: but if I did at any time offend your Law, let me have the punishment.

Then said they, that it was obstinacy in him, that he would not answer, and a token that his faith was nought, seeing he was ashamed to utter it.

Sher. Nay said he, you shall well know I am not ashamed of my Faith: but because you do so greedily seek Blood, I will answer only to that you have against me.

Suff. Nay, you shall answer to the Articles, or else be Condemned upon Suspicion.

Sher. I am content with that, yet all Men shall know that as ye suspect and can prove no cause, so shall ye Condemn me without a matter, and then shall all Men know ye seek my Blood, and no justice.

Suff. No, we seek not thy Blood, but thy conversion.

Sher. That we shall see. For then shall you prove my perversion first, before you condemn me on your suspicion without proof of the same: and by that I shall know whether you seek Blood or no. Many other words were between them.

At last stept up one Lovells a Lawyer, which would prove his Imprisonment not to be wrong, but right, by old Statutes of Edward the fourth, and Henry, &c. but at last he was compelled to forsake those Statutes from Michaelmas to Christmas, and then he said it was no wrong.

To this Nicholas said, if he could prove that Men might wrongfully imprison before a Law, and in the mean while make Laws, and then under that hide the first wrong, then he said true, or else not.

Thus he kept the Bandogs at staves end, not as thinking to escape them, but that I would see, said he, the Foxes leap above the ground for my Blood if they can reach it (so it be the will of God) yet we shall see them gape, and leap for it. From Westgate in haste.

By yours, Nicholas Shetelden.

Notes of Nicholas Shetelden, against the false worship and oblation of the Sacrament.

The Holy sign in stead of the thing signified is servile servitude, as Saint Augustine termeth it, when the Bread in the Sacrament is by common and solemn error worshipped in stead of the Flesh assumed of the Word of God.

There was no mention of worshipping the Creatures at the feast or first supper that Christ did celebrate: therefore the saying of Christ concerning divorce, may well be applied to them; it was not so from the beginning, nor shall be to the end.

The once made oblation of Christ is hereby derogate, when this Sacramental oblation and offering of thanksgiving is believed to be propitiatory, and that it purgeth the Soul as well of the living as of the dead, against this saying to the Hebrews, With one only oblation he hath made perfect for ever those that are sanctified. Again, Where is remission, there is no more oblation for sins, making us clean by him.

This word (by himself) hath a vehemency and pith, that driveth all Priests from authority to enterprise such oblation, whereas what he himself doth by himself, he leaveth not for other to do. So seemeth our purgatory already past & done, not to come & remaining to be done.

His Examination before the Bishop of Winchester, then Lord Chancellor.

I was called into a Chamber before the Lord Chancellor, the Suffragan, and other, Priests I think for the most part. He standeth to the table, called me to him, and because I saw the Cardinal was not there, I bowed my self and stood near.

Then said he, I have sent for you, because I hear you are indicted of heresie; and being called before the Commissioners, ye will not answer nor submit your self.

I said, if it like you, I did not refuse to answer; but I did plainly answer, that I had been in Prison long time, and reason it was that I should be charged or discharged for that, and not to be examined of Articles to hide my wrong Imprisonment, neither did I know any Indictment against

against me. If there were any, it could not be just, for I was not abroad since the Law was made.

Winch. Well, yet if such suspicion be of you, if you be a Christian, ye will declare that it is not true, and so purge your self.

Sher. I thought it sufficient to answer to mine offences, &c. trusting that they would lay no such burthen upon me, whereby the wrong done to me might be covered, but I would be proved to have wrong or right.

Winch. He said, if thou wilt declare thy self to the Church to be a Christian, thou shalt go, and then have a writ of wrong Imprisonment, &c.

Sher. I said I was not minded to sue now, but require to have right justice; but to make a promise I will not: but if I offend the Law, then punish me accordingly. For it might be that my Conscience was not persuaded, nor would be, in Prison; seeing these things which I have learned, were by Gods Law openly taught and received by authority of the Realm. And he said it was never received, that I might speak against the Sacrament, I said against some opinion of the Sacrament it was openly taught.

Winch. By no Law, and that was not able to confider, that all that while God preferred that, so that no Law could pass against it.

Sher. I said their Law did not only persuade me, but this most; when they Preached unto us, they took pain to set out the Word of God in our Tongue, so that we may read and judge whether they say true or no, but now they take the light from us, and would have us believe it, because they say so, which is to me a great persuasion.

Winch. It was not a few that could be your guide in understanding; but the Doctors and all the whole Church, now whom wouldst thou believe? either the few or the many?

Sher. I did not believe for the few, nor for the many, but only for that he bringeth the word, and sheweth it to me to be according to the process thereof.

Winch. Well said he, then if an Arrian come to thee with Scripture, thou wilt believe him, if he shew this Text, My Father is greater than I.

Sher. I answered no, my Lord, he must bring me also the contrary place, and prove them both true, where he saith, My Father and I am one.

Winch. Yea, said he, that is by charity, as we be one with him.

Sher. I said that gods would not stand with the rest of the Scripture, where he said; I am the very same, that I say to you; He said the Truth, and the Truth was God, &c. with much such like. And here he made many words (but very gently) of the Sacrament: Likewise Christ said (quoth he) it was his Body; yea, (that is to say) a figure of his Body, and how Men did not consider the Word was God, and God the Word, and so provoked me with such temptation; but I let him alone, and said nothing.

So after many words he came to the Churches faith and comely orders of Ceremonies and Images. And then I joynted to him again with the Commandments.

Winch. He said, that was done that no false thing should be made, as the Heathen would worship a Cat, because she killed Mice.

Sher. I said that it was plain that the Law forbade not only such, but even to make an Image of God to any manner of likeness.

Winch. Where find ye that?

Sher. Forsooth in the Law where God gave them the Commandments: for he said, Ye saw no shape, but heard a voice only: and added a reason why? left they should after make Images, and marry themselves: So that God would not shew his shape, because they should have no Image of him which was the true God, &c.

Winch. He said, I made a goodly interpretation.

Sher. I said no, it was the Text.

Then was the Bible called for, and when it came, He bade me find it, and I should find it be confounded with mine own words, so that if there were any grace with me, I would trust mine own wit no more; and when I looked, it was Latin.

Winch. Why, said he, can ye read no Latin?

Sher. No. Then was the English Bible brought. He bade me find it; and so I read it aloud, and then he said; lo here thou mayst see; this is no more to forbid the Image of God, than of any other Beast, Fowl or Fish (the place was Deut. 4.) I said it did plainly forbid to make any of these as an Image of God, because no Man might know what shape he was of. Therefore might no Man say of any Image, this is an Image of God.

Winch. Well, yet by your leave, so much as was seen we may, that is, of Christ, of the Holy Ghost; and the Father appeared to Daniel, like an old (a) Man &c.

Sher. That is no proof that we may make Images contrary to the Commandment: for though the Holy Ghost appeared like a Dove, yet was he not like in shape, but in certain qualities, and therefore when I saw the Dove which is Gods Creature, indeed I might remember the Spirit to be simple and loving, &c. and with that he was somewhat moved, and said, I had learned my Lesson, and asked who taught me, with many words; and he said he would prove how good and profitable Images were to teach the unlearned, &c.

Sher. At the last I said, my Lord, although I were able to make never so good a gloss upon the Commandments, yet obedience is better than all our good intents, and much ado we had: at last he saw, he said, what I was, and how he had sent for me for charity sake to talk with me, but now he would not meddle, and said my wrong imprisonment could not excuse me, but I must clear my self.

Sher. I said that was ease for me to do, For I had not offended.

Winch. He said I could not escape so, there I was deceived.

Sher. Well, then I am under the Law, &c.

Arch. The Archdeacon was there called in for me, and he laid to me, that with such arrogance and stoutness, as never was heard, I behaved my self before him, whereas he was minded with such mercy towards me, &c. and many lies he laid to me, that I was sent home till another time; and I would not be contented, but went out of the Church with such an out-cry as was notable.

Sher. I declare, that he falsely herein reported me, and brought in the Laws then in the Realm, and the Queens Proclamation that none of her subjects should be compelled till the Law were to compel, and that I rehearsed the same in the Court for me, and I did use him then (said I) as I use your grace now, and no otherwise.

Winch. He said that I did not use my self very well now.

Sher. I said, I had offered my self to be bailed, and to confer with them, when and where they would.

Winch. He said, I should not confer, but be obedient. I said, let me go, and I will not desire to confer neither: and when I offended, let them punish me, and so departed.

By your Brother, Nicholas Sheterden, prisoner for the truth in Westgate.

The last Examination with the Condemnation of Master Bland, John Frankesh, Nicholas Sheterden, and Humfrey Middleton.

And thus much touching the particular, and several Examinations of Nicholas Sheterden, and of Mr. Bland. Now to touch something also of the other Martyrs, which the same time were examined, and suffered with them together, to wit, Humfrey Middleton of Albford and John Frankesh, Vicar of Rolovenden in the Diocese of Kent above mentioned, here first would be declared the Articles which publicly in their last examinations were joyntly and severally ministred unto them by the foresaid Torbarn Bishop of Dover. But forasmuch as these Articles, being ordinary and of course, are already expressed in the Story of M. Bland, as may appear before; It shall not therefore be needful to make any new rehearsal thereof.

To these seven Articles then being propounded to the five persons above named, to wit, John Frankesh, John Bland, Nicholas Sheterden, Humfrey Middleton, and one Thacker, first answered John Frankesh somewhat doubtfully, desiring further respite to be given him of fourteen days

To the fourth, and fifth, and sixth, touching the Real presence, and the Sacrament to be ministrified in the Latin Tongue, and in one kind, they refused utterly to answer. Sheterden said, he would not answer thereto be-

Middleton added moreover and confessed, that he believed in his own God, saying, My living God, and no dead God, &c. Thacker only relented, and was content to take Penance. O Lord my God and Saviour, which art Lord in Heaven and Earth, maker of all things visible and invisible, I am the Creature and work of thy hands; Lord God look upon me, and other thy People, which at this time are oppressed of the worldly minded for thy Laws sake: yea Lord, thy Law it self is now trodden under foot, and mens inventions exalted above it, and for that cause do Land many thy Creatures, refuse the glory, praise and commodity of this life, and do chuse to suffer adversity, and to be banished; yea to be burnt with the Books of thy Word, for the hopes sake that is laid up in store. For Lord thou knowest, if we would but seem to please men in things contrary to thy Word, we might by their permission enjoy these commodities that others do, as Wife, Children, Goods and Friends, which all I knowledge to be thy gifts, given to the end I should serve thee. And now Lord, that the World will not suffer me to enjoy them, except I offend thy Laws, behold I give unto thee my whole Spirit, Soul and Body, and lo, I leave here all the pleasures of this life, and do now leave the use of them for the hopes sake of eternal life purchased in Christs Blood, and promised to all them that fight on his side, and are content to suffer with him for his Truth, whensoever the World and the Devil shall persecute the same.

O Father, I do not presume unto thee, in mine own righteousness, no, but only in the merits of thy dear Son my Saviour. For the which excellent gift of salvation I cannot worthily praise thee, neither is my sacrifice worthy, or to be accepted with thee, in comparison of our sacrifice of Bodies mortified, and obedient unto thy will: and now Lord, whatsoever rebellion hath been, or is found in my Members, against thy will, yet do I here give unto thee my Body to the death, rather than I will use any strange worshipping, which I beseech thee accept at my hand for a pure sacrifice: let this torment be to me the last enemy destroyed, even Death, the end of misery, and the beginning of all joy, peace and solace; and when the time of Resurrection cometh, then let me enjoy again these members then glorified, which now be spoiled and consumed by the fire. O Lord Jesus receive my Spirit into thy hands. Amen.

After my humble and bounden duty remembered, well-beloved Mother, this shall be to wish you increase of grace and godly wisdom, that ye may see and perceive the crafty bewitching of Satan our mortal Enemy, which, as I have divers times declared unto you, doth not openly shew himself in his own likeness, but under colour of devotion deceiveth them that keep not a diligent eye upon him; but having confidence in mens traditions and customs of the World, leaving the Commandments of God, and Testament of his Son Christ Jesus our Lord, do grow more into superstition and hypocrisie, than into wisdom and true holiness. For this is most true, that Satan, the enemy of Souls, doth by his Ministers make many believe, that those things, which they compel us unto for their Bellies sake, have many godly significations, although they be most contrary to Gods will, as doubtless they be, even as did the Serpent in Paradise to our first Mother Eve. What (said he) hath God commanded ye an Apple, shall not eat of all the Trees in the Garden? The Woman said, of the fruits of the Trees in the Garden we may eat: but of the Tree in the midst of the Garden, said God, see ye eat not lest ye die. Even so our Ministers new-dayes, say, Hath God commanded ye shall not make you any Image or likeness of any thing? Yea forsooth. Truly, say they, what harm can they do? May we not remember God the better when we see his Image or Picture? For they are good Books for the Lay-men; but indeed they be better for the Priests, because they receive the offering.

And looke how truly the promise of the Serpent was kept with Eve, so is the persuasion of our Priests found true to us. For as Adam and Eve did become like God in knowing good and evil, so are we in remembering God by his Image. For Adams eyes were so open, that he left both innocency and righteousness, and was become most miserable of all Creatures: and even so we remember Christ so well by Images, that we forget his Commandments, and count his Testament, confirmed in his Blood, for stark madness or heresie; so miserably have we remembered him, that of all People we are most blind: and this doth follow upon our presumption, when we remember God by breaking of his Law: and therefore surely except we repent, shortly God will remember us in his wrath, and reward us with his plagues, as sure as there is a God it will come to pass.

But I know the craftiness of them herein (I thank God) which will say; Where went he to School? Is he wiser than our great Doctors that studied all their life? And looke they say that it is good Hay; although we smell it musty our selves, yet must we believe it is sweet, and then pay them well for their so saying, and all is safe. But I might say again, What Sir, be ye wiser than Christ, and God his Father, or the Holy Ghost? What, wiser than the Prophets, and the holy Apostles, and all the holy Martyrs? I pray you Sir, where had you your high Learning? Is it higher than God (being in Heaven) is able to reach, or have ye let it lower in Hell than ever Christ durst to venture? For it is some strange Learning helike, that Christ and his Apostles could never attain to the knowledge of it. But vain men are never without some shift: for peradventure they will not be ashamed to say, that Christ coming on his Fathers message, did forget half his Errand by the way. For I dare say, the greater half of their Ceremonies were never commanded by Christ: Yea, I doubt it would be hard to find one in the Church perfectly as he left it: so Romishly hath Antichrist turned the Church upside-down for lucre sake.

Beloved Mother, as I have aftenimes said unto you, even so now I beseech you from my very heart-root in Christ, to consider your own Souls health is offered you, do not cast it off: we have not long time here. Why should we deceive our selves either for ease of our flesh, or for the winning of this worlds Treasure: I know that some will say to you, Why should we condemn our Fathers that loved thus: God forbid that we should condemn any that did according to their knowledge. But let us take heed that they condemn us for if they had heard the Word as we have, and had been warned as we have, it is to be thought that they would more thankfully have received it than we do: yea, they were more faithful in that they knew, than many now are. Therefore they shall be our condemnations, if we do not embrace this grace offered us. And surely looke how many of them God will accept and save, those shall we never see, nor have any part among them: for our disobedience is more great than their ignorance. Wherefore if we will meet our Fathers in bliss and joy, let us not refuse his mercy offered more largely to us than to them, even according to Christs promise, which said, after such great ignorance as to seek him from Country to Country, and find him not; Yet shall the Gospel (saith he) be preached in all the world, and then shall the end come.

And now let us know the time of our visitation, and not turn back again, seeing we are once delivered: for surely God will not bear it at our hands to turn backward. O remember Lots Wife. God must needs punish out of hand our shameful backsliding, either with indignation and hardness of heart, so that they shall pericute his Church and his true Servants, or else reward it with open vengeance and plagues. And therefore, good Mother, accept this my simple Letter as a fruit of my love and obedience to you. Would God we might be so knit in Faith and trust in Gods Word and Promises here in this life, as we might together enjoy the bliss and consolation of eternal Life; which I desire, and seek above all worldly treasure, as ye partly know. If I should seek the good will of Men contrary to my Conscience, I could make some my Friends: which now peradventure are jealous over me amidst. But I thank God, let them weigh the matter between God and their Conscience, and they have no just cause so to do: Nevertheless I would they would yet refrain and put their matter and mine into the ballance of Gods most holy Word, there to be weighed by the mind of the holy Ghost, expressed unto us by the holy Patriarchs, and Prophets, and by Jesus Christ our only Saviour and Mediator, and by his holy Apostles; and then I doubt not, but our matter shall be ended with peace, and joyfulness of heart; which God grant us for his mercy sake. Amen.

Your own Child, Nicholas Sheterden, Prisoner for the Truth in Westgate, 1555

A Letter to his Brother, Walter Sheterden.

Wish you health in Christ, true knowledge of his Word, and a faithful obedient heart unto the same. It is answered me, my Brother, that ye would me by a Letter made to a Friend of yours to persuade with me, that I should be ruled by mine Uncle, which saith, he will bestow his goods very largely upon me, if I should not stand too high in mine own conceit. But, my good Brother, trust ye do not judge so evil of me, that I should have a Faith to sell for money. For though he or you were able to give me the treasure of the whole County, yet I thank my Lord God, I do judge it but an heap of dungs, in respect of the treasure hid within; yet I do esteem a Buckle of your shoes, if it come with good will. And for to be comforted and ruled by him or you, or any other my Friends, I do not, neither have refused it, if they require more of me than my power, and that which belongeth to mortal men. But if they require of me any thing which pertaineth to God duly, there is neither high nor low, Friend nor Foe, I trust in God, shall get it of me, nor yet the Angels in heaven.

For though I be not learned (as the vain men of the world call Learning) yet, I thank my Lord God, I have learned out of Gods Book to know God from his Creatures, and to know Christ from his Sacraments, and to put a difference between the merits of Christs Passion and his Supper, and a difference between the Water of Baptism, and the Holy Ghost, and not to mix and mingle all things confusedly together: so that if one ask me a question or a reason of my Faith, I must say thus; I believe as the holy Church believeth: if he ask me what is the order of that Faith, I should be so ignorant that I could not discern God from his Creatures, nor Christ from his Sacraments; If I should so monstrously utter my Faith, that I were not able to judge between Christs birth and his burial, nor which were first, of his mortification, and his glorification, who would believe that my Faith were sound?

For some affirm that Christ did not give to his Apostles a mortal and a passible Body, but an immortal and glorified Body, so that he should have a glorified Body before his Death, and so his Glorification was before his Resurrection; and that he was risen before he was crucified, and crucified before his Baptism, and then they may as well say, he was baptised before his birth, and born before he was conceived, and conceived before he was promised, and that were even right. Antichrist to turn all things backward, and then say, Oh, ye must believe, for God is Almighty, he can do all things, &c. Truth it is, that God is almighty indeed, and yet I may not believe things contrary to his Word, that Christs Body was glorified before he died: for Gods Omnipotency doth not stand in things contrary to his will, but in performing his will at his pleasure in time. Neither doth he require of us to judge or believe of his Almighty power, that he hath made the end of the world to come before the beginning, or yet the fruit to come before the blossom, and yet it be nevertheless Almighty.

But if peradventure you shall think with your self, Why, they are Learned, it were marvel but they should know what is the Truth, as well as other which never kept any such study, &c. To that I answer, that if they had studied Images more profitable Books than our Lay-men.

Experience how Gods Martyrs seek not this World.

My Uncle hath been with me, I said made great Promises and great threats.

So should we have two Bodies at once, one glorified, and another mortal.

Gods

Anno 1555. Gods word, the Author of Truth, as they have done Logick, and Duns, with the Legend of Lier, they should have been as expert in the Truth, as they be now in bald Reasons. But thus hath God fulfilled his promise, that such should be deluded with Lies, which would not believe nor walk in his Truth.

And again; this is a good cause to make us think surely, that this was the cause that God gave them over at the first to error, after the Apostles time by little and little, as they grew in sin. For seeing we had his Truth now among us a few years, because we did not obey unto it, we see what a sudden change God hath brought upon us for our sins sake. And why should not we think that this and such like disobedience was the cause that God took his word from all Christendom at the first, and cast a darkness upon them that would not walk in his light? For it is evident enough to see how unlike their doings be to Christs and his Apostles: and that seen, either we must judge Christs doings very slender, and theirs good, or else that indeed they be the very Antichrists, which should come and turn all things out of frame. Thus I have been bold to trouble you, which I trust shall not be altogether in vain. Pray for me as I do for you.

The witness of Truth.

God, which is the giver of all goodness, and that freely for his love to us (not only without our deserts, but contrary to the same) grant you my Brother, such increase of godly knowledge and love unto the virtues thereunto belonging, as may give you such a talk in heavenly things, that all treasures of earthly things may favour to you, as indeed they are, most vain and uncertain, so shall ye never take them for better than they be. Yea, whether God take them from us, or give them unto us, we shall know our selves neither richer nor poorer before God. But if we lay up in our hearts the treasure of his Word, we shall not only enrich our selves against the time of need, but also arm our selves against the battle with weapons and harness, which is invincible, and cloath our selves against the marriage. For behold, the Lord hath called us of long time to the feast, and blown the Trumpet to prepare the battle. Let us know the time of our visitation, lest the Lord sitting on his mount, bewail our destruction, which he desireth not, but because he is just to punish such as continue in sin, even as he is merciful to forgive the repentant that turn in time; for so is God that cannot deny himself.

Let us therefore in this day, while it is called to day, hear his voyce, and not harden our hearts by resistance of his will, lest he swear in his wrath, that we shall not enter into his rest. Let us count it sufficient, that we have spent the time past (as S. Peter faith) after the will of the Gentiles, in eating and drinking, chambering and wantonness, and in abominable Idolatry, &c. And now let us assay a new life, and trade our members in virtue another while, lest peradventure we might run past any return in the contrary. But if we now return and lay hand of his word in deed and verity, as we have long time done in talk and liberty, then will God heap upon us such certificate of Conscience, as shall kindle our consolation in him, so that all treasure shall be dung to the excellent knowledge of our Saviour. Dear Brother, my hearts desire and and Prayer to God is, that we may together enjoy the bliss of eternal inheritance by one spiritual regeneration and new birth, as we are joyed by nature. But alack the way and mean thereunto hath been much neglected of me (I will not say of you) for I had rather ye should accuse your self: for no doubt the best of us both hath not fought for wisdom in Gods Word, as some in the world whom we know have fought for money: therefore they shall be our Judges, if we do not learn by them: yea the very Emmer, as Solomon faith, doth teach us to provide for the time to come; for she provideth in Summer against Winter.

This is the best token I have for you now, which though it be simple, yet shall it declare partly my hearts desire to you ward, which is even as to mine own Soul. Let nothing dismay you for my cause: but be ye sure I shall have victory in the Truth, which Truth is stronger than Kings, Wine, or Women. For as Zorobabel faith; Wine is unrighteous, the King is unrighteous, Women are unrighteous; yea all the Children of men are unrighteous, but the Truth endureth, and is always strong, and conquereth for ever without end: Therefore this is to desire you and all other my Friends that with me good, to pray that God will always keep me in his Truth, as he hath begun, which prayer, if it be of such a mind as laboureth to depart from evil, shall be to me the greatest pleasure under Heaven. For I desire nothing in comparison of Gods Truth, I thank him of his mercy, which so hath wrought: for I take it as a sure seal of the endless Joy which shall hereafter follow; which God bring us unto, when his will and pleasure is, Amen. Another Letter of Nicholas Sheterden to his Mother.

O My good Mother, whom I love with reverence in the Lord, and according to my duty, I desire your favorable blessing and forgiveness of all my misdeeds towards you. Oh my good Mother, in few words, I will you the same salvation, which I hope my self to feel, and partly talt of before this come to you to read; and in the resurrection, I verily believe to have it more perfectly in Body and soul joyed together for ever: and in that day God grant you to see my face with joy: but, dear Mother, then beware of that great Idolatry, and blasphemous Mass. Oh let not that be your God, which mice and worms can devour. Behold I call Heaven and Earth to record, that it is no God, yea the fire that consumeth it, and the moistness that causeth it to mould, and I take Christs Testament to witness, that it is none of his ordinances, but a meer invention of men, and a snare to catch innocents Blood; and now that God hath shewed it unto you, be warned in time. Oh give over old customs, and become new in the Truth. What state soever your Father be in, leave that to God; and let us follow the counsel of his Word. Dear Mother, embrace it with hearty affection, read it with obedience, let it be your pastime; but yet cast off all carnal affections, and Love of worldly things: so shall we meet in Joy at the last day, or else I bid you farewell for ever more: O farewell my Friends and lovers all, God grant me to see your faces in Joy. The Copy of a Letter written to his Wife.

I Wrote unto you as one that longed more to hear of your health, than of all worldly treasure, willing you to intreat Elau the elder Brother by nature gently, giving to him his own, yea, and offer him one of the droves, and say they be Jacobs, and are sent for a present to my Lord Elau, but he will not take it, &c. Now my Beloved ye know the blessing of our Father is, that the elder shall serve the younger, and wisdom our Mother hath taught us the same, and I know ye do complain of your "servant" the flesh, that he is rebellious, disobedient, and unward; like he unruly and crookedly ye think he doth his service: but yet behold, how shall ye plead your cause before an indifferent Judge? For if it be true that his service be not according to his duty, as it is many times found in Servants; yet, I say, can you shew your cause to no indifferent Judge, but he shall object against you that he is not kept like a servant, but he lacketh both meat and drink, and other necessities meet and due for a servant: so shall ye take more shame of your own complaint, than remedy or vengeance against your servant, and it shall be a cloak for him to hide all his rebellion and unward service; because ye have misused him.

Though he be but a stranger in the life that is in God; yet be good to strangers for we are all strangers in darkness, and Capives in sin, as well soul and spirit, being in Egypt, as now the flesh is yet unbaptized with the terrible Red Sea of death, and remember that one law abideth for the stranger, I mean one reward abideth both for Body and soul in the land of everlasting rest. And (1) therefore intreat him gently, and deal with him justly now: for the time will come that the yoke of Bondage shall be taken from his neck, and he shall be a fellow heir with your younger Brother.

Circumcise him therefore, but do not misuse him, nor keep him from his own, but deal mercifully with the stranger, that he may say, Ob of what understanding heart is this people: Who hath God? Or where is God so nigh as to these? God make you wise and polstick in heart, victorious in the field of this world, to rule the Nations with a rod: but kill not the Gibconites, with whom peace is taken; but let them draw Water, and hew wood, but give them their meat and drink due for Labourers, and be glad because your disease is so remedied: for it is better and easier for a thirsty labouring man to drink, then for a drunken man to tell a sober tale. Yea, it is a token that ye have earnestly followed your labour, and not kept company with drunkards and belly-gods: and therefore be glad I say, yea, and glad again; for great is your reward in heaven; yea blessed shall they be, that in this your zeal shall meet you, and with draw your hand from revenging your self upon that churlish Nabal: which thing I hope to doe now with these sweet Reasons, and frails of Figs, I bring of one house with your servant Nabal, I dare say to you that churlishness is his name: but revenge not, for the Lord shall do it in his due time. Farewell mine own Heart.

Yours in bonds at Westgate,

The next day after the condemnation of these foresaid, which was the 26. day of July, were also condemned for the same Articles, W. Coker, W. Hopper of Cambrook, Henry Lawrence, Richard Wright of Ashford, W. Stere of Ashford. But because the execution of these Martyrs pertaineth not to this month, more shall be said, the Lord willing, of them, when we come to the month following of August.

Nicholas Hall, and Christopher Waid, Martyrs.

July 19.
N. Hall and Christopher Waid, Martyrs.

The same month of July next after the suffering of the Kentishmen above named followed the death and Martyrdom of Nicholas Hall Bricklayer, and Christopher Waid of Dartford, which both were condemned by Maurice, Bishop of Rochester, about the last day of the month of June. The six Articles ministered to them were of the same ordinary course and effect with the Articles of the other Martyrs before specified, the brief sum whereof were these.

A brief sum of their Articles.

Articles objected against N. Hall and Christopher Waid.

1. Ifst, that they were Christian men and professed the Catholick determinations of our Mother holy Church.
2. That they which maintain or hold otherwise then our holy Mother the Catholick Church doth, are Hereticks.
3. That they hold and maintain, that in the Sacrament of the Altar, under the forms of Bread and Wine, is not the very Body and Blood of Christ. And that the said very Body of Christ is verily in heaven only, and not in the Sacrament.
4. Item, that they have and do hold and maintain, that the Mass, as it is now used in the Catholick Church, is naughty and abominable.

5. Item, that they have been and be amongst the people of that Jurisdiction vehemently suspected upon the premises, and there upon Indicted, &c.

Their Answers.

To these Articles they answered, as commonly others used to do, which stand with Christ and his truth against these pretended Catholicks, and their sinister Doctrine. First granting themselves Christian men, and acknowledging the determinations of the holy Church, that is, of the Congregation or Body of Christ; Save that Hall denied to call the Catholick and Apostolick Church his Mother, because he found not this word, Mother, in the Scripture.

To the second they granted. To the third Article as touching the very Body and Blood of Christ to be under the forms of Bread and Wine in substance they would not grant, only affirming the very Body of him to be in Heaven, and the Sacrament to be a token or remembrance of Christs death; Nicholas Hall adding moreover, and saying, That whereas before he held the Sacrament to be but only a token or remembrance of Christs death, now he said, that there is neither token nor remembrance, because it is now misused and clean turned from Christs institution, &c. And concerning the Mass in the fourth Article, to be abominable, Christopher Waid with the other answered, that as they had confessed before, so would they now not go from that they had said. To the fifth Article, for the peoples suspicion they made no great account nor sticking to grant to the same.

And thus much concerning the Articles and Answers of these good men. Which being received, immediately sentence of Condemnation was pronounced by the said Maurice the Bishop against them, the copy of which sentence as it runneth much what after the common course in condemning all other like Servants of Christ, so the same being exemplified before in the story of Master Rogers, shall not greatly need here again to be repeated, but rather may be referred over to the place above noted. Nicholas Hall was burned at Rochester about the 19. day of July.

Furthermore, with the foresaid Hall and Waid, in the same month of July, three other more were condemned by Maurice, Bishop aforesaid, whose names were Joan Beach Widow, John Harpel of Rochester, and Margery Polley. Of which Margery Polley, touching her examination and condemnation here followeth in story.

The Condemnation and Martyrdom of Margery Polley.

Margery Polley widow, Wife some time of Richard Polley of Peppingbery, was accused and brought before the said Maurice, Bishop of Rochester, about the beginning of the month of June. Which Bishop according to the Pontifical solemnity of that Church, rising up out of the Chair of his Majesty, in the high swelling stile after his ordinary fashion to dash the silly prur Woman, beginning in these words.

We Maurice, by the sufferance of God, Bishop of Rochester, proceeding of our mer office in a cause of Heresie, against thee Margery Polley, of the parish of Peppingbery, of our Diocess and Jurisdiction of Rochester, do lay and object against thee all and singular these Articles ensuing. To the which, and to every parcel of them, we require of thee a true, full, and plain answer by vertue of thine Oath thereupon to be given, &c.

Thus the Oath first being ministered, and the Articles commenced against her, which Articles were the same that were ministered to Nicholas Hall and Waid before, the so framed her Answers again, especially answering to the third and fourth Article, that she neither allowed the Deity of their Sacrament, nor the absurdity of their Mass. For the which, Sentence was read against her about the beginning of June, and the condemned for the same. But because her death followed not upon the same, we will therefore defer the tractation thereof to the due place and time, first setting down in order of history the execution of Christopher Waid above mentioned.

The Execution and Martyrdom of Christopher Waid.

Christopher Waid of Darford, in the County of Kent, Linnen-Weaver, was condemned by Maurice, Bishop of Rochester, and appointed to be burned at Darford aforesaid. At the day appointed for his execution, which was in the month of July, there was betimes in the morning carried out of the Town, in a Cart, a Stake, and therewith many bundles of reeds, to a place a quarter of a mile out of the Town, called the Brimth, into a gravel pit thereby, the common place of the execution of Felons. Thither also was brought a load of Broom-faggots, with other Faggots and Tall-wood. Unto which place resorted the people of the Country in great number, and there tarried his coming. Inasmuch as thither came divers Fruiters with horse-loads of Cherries, and sold them. About ten of the Clock cometh riding the Sheriff, with a great many of other Gentlemen, and Retinue, appointed to assist him therein, and with them Waid, riding pinioned by him one Margery Polley of Tunbridge, both singing of a Psalm; which Margery, as soon as she espied afar off the multitude gathered about the place where he should suffer, waiting his coming, she said unto him very loud and cheerfully; Thou mayst rejoice Waid to see such a company gathered to celebrate your marriage this day.

And so passing by the place, which joyed hard to the high-way, they were carried straight down to the town, where the was kept until the Sheriff returned from Waid's execution. And Waid being made ready, and tripped out of his clothes in an Inn, had brought unto him a fair long white shirt from his wife, which being put on, and he pinioned, was led up on foot again to the forefaid place. And coming straight to the stake, he took it in his arms, embracing it, and kissed it, setting his back unto it, and standing in a Pitch-barrel, which was taken from the Beacon, being hard by; then a Smith brought a hoop of Iron, and with two staples, made him fast to the stake under his arms.

As soon as he was thus settled, he spake, with his hands and eyes lifted up to Heaven, with a cheerful and loud voice, the last verse of the lxxxvi. Psalm; Shew some good taken upon me, O Lord, that they which hate me, may see it, and be ashamed; because thou Lord hast helped me, and comforted me. Near unto the stake was a little hill, upon the top whereof were pitched up four staves, quadrangle wise, with a covering round about like a Pulpit: into the which place, as Waid was thus praying at the stake, entered a Friar with a Book in his hand; whom when Waid espied, he cried earnestly unto the people, to take heed of the doctrine of the whore of Babylon, exhorting them to embrace the Doctrine of the Gospel preached in King Edwards days. whom the Sheriff thus speaking to the people, often interrupted, saying, Be quiet Waid, and die patiently. I am (said he) I thank God, quiet, Master Sheriff, and so trust to die. All this while the Friar stood still looking over the Coverlet, as though he would have uttered somewhat: but Waid very mightily admonished the people to beware of that Doctrine; which when the Friar perceived, whether he were amazed, or could have no audience of the people, withdrew himself out of the place immediately, without speaking any word, and went away down to the Town. Then the Reeds being set about him, he pulled them, and embraced them in his arms, always with his hands making a hole against his face, that his voice might be heard, which they perceiving that were his Tormentors, alway cast faggots at the same hole, which, notwithstanding, he still, as he could, put off, his face being hurt with the end of a Faggot cast thereat. Then fire being put unto him, he cried unto God often, Lord Jesus receive my soul; without any token or sign of impatience in the fire, till at length, after the fire was once thoroughly kindled, he was heard by no man to speak, still holding his hands up over his head together towards heaven, even when he was dead and altogether roasted, as though they had bin staid up with a prop standing under them.

This sign did God shew upon him, whereby his very Enemies might perceive, that God had according to his prayer shewed such a token upon him, even to their shame and confoundment. And this was the order of this godly Martyrs execution, this was his end. Whereby God seemed to confound and strike with the spirit of dumbness the Friar that Lookt which was risen up to have spoken against him; and also no less wonderfully sustained those hands which he lifted up to him for comfort in his torment.

The apprehension, examination, condemnation, and burning of Dirick Carver and John Lauder, who suffered Martyrdom for the testimony of Christs Gospel.

The 22. day of this month of July, was burned at July 22 and Leves, within the County of Suffex, one Dirick Car- 23. Dirick ver, late of the parish of Brightbamsted in the same Carver and County. And the next day (being the 23 day of the John Lau-same month) was also burned at Stening, another named der-Martyr, John Lauder, late of Godstone in the County of Surrey. Edu Gage, Which two then were (with others) about the end of the Gentleman, month of October, Anno 1554. apprehended by Ed- Tene. ior.
ward Gage, Gentleman, as they were at prayer within the dwelling-house of the said Dirick; and by him were sent up unto the Queens Council. Who, after examination, sent them as prisoners to Newgate, there to attend the leisure of Boner Bishop of London. From whence (upon the Bishops receipt of a Letter from the Lord Marquess of Winchester now Lord Treasurer) they were brought by the Keeper of the Prison the 8. of June next after, into the Bishops Chamber at his house in London; and there (being examined upon divers points of Religion) they made their several confessions, subscribing and signing them with their own hands. Which being read, the Bishop objected unto them certain other Articles, causing them to swear truly and directly to answer the same; which Articles they confessed to be true, referring themselves chiefly to their former Confessions.

This done, after long persuasions and fair exhortations, they were demanded whether they would stand to their Answers. To whom Lauder said, I will never go from these Answers so long as I live. The other also confirmed the same, and therefore they were commanded to appear again before the Bishop in the Consistory at Paris, the tenth day of the same month next following. Which Articles and Confession, with the aforementioned Letter do here ensue.

A Letter from the Marquess of Winchester, Lord Treasurer, unto Boner Bishop of London, touching the examination of the said Prisoners.

After my right hearty Commendations to your good Lordship, I shall not forget your livery of Black against this time; no more I shall Mr. Dean, to whom I wrote to make the Sermon, who must now assuredly do it: for my Lord of Chichester cannot attend it. To whom I have given like knowledge by my Letter now sent, and of Spain. your Lordship must command the Sextons of your Church to be in a readiness for ringing in the time of service. And if ye be not furnished with Black apparel for the Altar, and for the Priest, Deacon and Subdeacon, I must have knowledge thereof, that it be taken of the Queens stuff, whereof I pray you let me be advertised.

And ye have sent Bradford to Newgate, as a man convicted of heresie before you: but as I perceive ye have not sent me a Significavit, and therefore you must send me one, that I may proceed with him, and that shall I do, as soon as I am answered of you.

There be divers like Prisoners that came from Suffex, that be not yet examined before you, lying now in Newgate, which must be examined by you, since they be come to London, and so I pray they may be, and I certified of your proceedings, that I may follow, which I shall do, thanking your Lordship heartily for my Conies.

Dirick Carver Beer-Brewer of Brighthamſted, in ſince Albalewne day laſt paſt, being examined concerning his faith and belief in the Sacrament of the Altar, faith, that he hath, and doth believe, that the very ſubſtance of the Body and Blood of Chriſt is not in the ſaid Sacrathe ſaid Sacrament after the words ſpoken by the Prieſt, but only the ſubſtance of Bread and Wine.

Item, Being examined concerning the Maſſ in Latin there is no Sacrifice in the ſaid Maſſ, and that there is in it no ſalvation for a Chriſtian man, except it ſhould be ſaid in the Mother Tongue, that he might underſtand it;

and concerning the Ceremonies of the Church, he faith and believeth, that they be not profitable to a Chriſtian man.

the abſolution of the Prieſt, laying his hand upon any Item, Concerning the Faith and Religion now taught, anſwereth and believeth, that the Faith and Doctrine now taught, ſet forth, and uſed in the ſaid Church of England, is not agreeable to Gods Word. And furthermore he faith, that Biſhop Hooper, Cardmaker, Rogers, and others of their Opinion, which were of late burned, the Keeper hearing thereof, did take them away; and faith alſo, that about a Twelve-month now paſt, he had the Engliſh Proceſſion ſaid in his Houſe, with other Eng-at Brighthamſted, as they were hearing of the Goſpel, then read in Engliſh, a little before Albalewne day laſt

John Launder Husbandman of the Pariſh of Godſtone, in the County of Surrey, of the Age of 25 years, born at Godſtone aforeſaid, being examined, doth confeſs and ſay, that about two days next before Albalewne laſt paſt, this Examinee and one Dirick Carver, Thomas Iweſon, William Veſte, with divers other Perſons to the number of twelve, (being altogether in their Prayers, ſaying the Service in Engliſh, ſet forth in the time of King Edward the Sixth, in the Houſe of the ſaid Dirick, ſchewate at Brighthamſted in Suffex) were apprehended by one M. Edw. Gage, and by him ſent up hither to London, to the King and Queens Council, and by them (upon his examination) committed to Newgate, where he with his Anno ſaid other Fellows, hath ever ſince remained in Priſon. 1555.

And further being examined, he doth confeſs and ſay, that the occaſion of his coming to the ſaid Brighthamſted was upon certain buſineſſ there to be ſped for his Father: and ſo being there, and hearing that the ſaid Dirick was a man that did much favour the Goſpel, this Examinee did reſort to his houſe and company, whom before that time he did never ſee or know, and by reaſon of that his reſort, he was apprehended as before: And further doth confeſs and believe, that there is here in Earth one whole and Uniſverſal Catholick Church, whereof the Members be diſperſed through the World; and doth believe alſo, that the ſame Church doth ſet forth and teach only two Sacraments, Fidelities, the Sacrament of Baptiſm, and the Sacrament of the Supper of our Lord.
And whoſoever doth teach or uſe any more Sacraments, or yet any Ceremonies, he doth not believe that they be of the Catholick Church, but doth abhor them from the bottom of his heart: And doth further ſay and believe that all the Service, Sacrifices and Ceremonies, now uſed in this Realm of England (yea and in all other parts of the world, which hath been uſed after the ſame manner) be erroneous and naught and contrary to Chriſts inſti-

Alſo he doth confeſs and believe, that in the Sacrament now called the Sacrament of the Altar there is not really, and truly contained, under the forms of Bread and Wine,
the very natural Body and Blood of Chriſt in ſubſtance;
but his belief and faith therein is as followeth, videlicet, that when he doth receive the material Bread and Wine
he doth receive the ſame in a remembrance of Chriſts death and paſſion, and ſo receiving it, he doth eat and drink Chriſts Body and Blood by faith and none other ways as he believeth.

The real

And moreover he doth confeſs, ſay, and believe, that the Maſſ now uſed in the Realm of England, or elſewhere in all Chriſtendom, is naught and abominable, and directly againſt Gods Word, and his Catholick Church; and that there is nothing ſaid or uſed in it good and profitable.
For he faith, that albeit the Gloria in excelsis, the Creed, Sanctus Paternoſter, Agnus, and other parts of the Maſſ be of themſelves good and profitable, yet the ſame being uſed amongſt other things that be naught and ſu-perfluous in the Maſſ, the ſame good things do become naught alſo, as he believeth.

The Maſſ abominable.

Alſo he doth believe and confeſs that auricular Con-feſſion is not neceſſary to be made to any Prieſt, or to any other creature, but every perſon ought to acknowledge and Confeſs his ſins only to God; and alſo that no perſon hath any authority to abſolve any man from his ſins and alſo believeth that the right and true way (according to the Scripture) after a man hath ſaln from grace to ſin, to ariſe to Chriſt again, is to be ſorry for his offences, and to do the ſame or the like no more; and not to make any auricular Confefſion of them to the Prieſt, either to take abſolution for them at the Prieſts hands. All which his ſaid Opinions he hath believed by the ſpace of theſe ſeven or eight years paſt, and in that time hath divers and many times openly argued and defended the ſame, as he faith, &c.

2. Item, I do object againſt you, and every of you, Sacraments that ye and every of you, ſince your firſt coming and entering into the ſaid priſon, and during your abode there, both there and in ſundry places within this City and Dioceſs of London, have holden, maintained, and defended ſundry opinions againſt the Sacraments of the Church, eſpecially

Sacraments of Penance, and the Altar.

Anno especially against the Sacrament of Penance, and also against the Sacrament of the Altar.

1555. 3. Item, I do likewise object that ye, and every of you, in all or some of the said places, have (as concerning the Sacrament of the Altar) holden, maintained and defended, to the best of your power, that in the said Sacrament of the Altar there is not the very substance of the Body and Blood of our Saviour Christ, but that in the Sacrament there is only the substance of natural Bread and Wine, and no other substance.

The Laune 4. Item, I do likewise object that you, and every of Maid. you, in all or some of the said places, have, concerning the Mass in Latin now used in the Church, and the sacrifice of the same, holden, maintained, and likewise defended, that the said Mass is not good or profitable, and that there is no sacrifice in the same.

Ceremonies. 5. Item, I do likewise object, that you and every of you, in all or some of the places, have concerning the ceremonies of the Church, holden, maintained, and likewise defended, that the said ceremonies are not profitable to a Christian man, but hurtful and evil.

Auricular 6. Item, I do likewise object, that you and every of confession. you, in all or some of the said places, have concerning the Sacrament of Penance, holden, maintained, and likewise defended, that auricular Confession (being a part thereof) albeit it may be made unto a good Priest for counsel, yet the absolution of the Priest, laying his hand upon any mans head, and doing as is now usually done in the Church, is nothing profitable to any mans salvation, and that therefore ye neither have been confessed to the Priest after the usual manner of the Church, nor yet received the said Sacrament of the Altar since the coronation of the Queens Majesty, which is more then the space of one whole year and a half.

The Faith 7. Item, I do likewise object, that ye and every of and doctrine of the Church of England. you, in all or some of the said places, concerning the Faith and Religion now taught, set forth, used and believed in the Church of this Realm of England, and the Doctrine of the same, have holden, believed and said, that it is not agreeable to Gods Word, but clean contrary to the same.

Defending 8. Item, I do likewise object, that ye and every of you, in all, or some of the said places, have believed, spoken, and said, and to your power upholden maintained, and said, that Bishop Hooper, Cardmaker, Rogers, and others of their Opinion, which of late within this Realm were burnt for Heresie, were good Christian men, in speaking and holding against the said Sacrament of the Altar and that they did preach nothing but the true Doctrine of Christ, shedding their Blood for the maintenance of the said Doctrine.

English Service 9. Item, I do likewise object, that ye and every of you, have earnestly laboured and travelled, to the best and utmost of your power, to have up again the English Service, and the Communion in all points, as was used in the later days of K. Edward the Sixth, here in this Realm of England.

10. Item, I do likewise object, that ye and every of you, have thought and do think firmly and steadfastly, and so have and do believe, that the Faith, Religion, and Doctrine, set forth in the said time of the fore said King Edward, was in all points good and godly, containing in it the true Faith and Religion of Christ, in every part.

11. Item, I do likewise object and say, that ye, and every of you (for your misbelief, offence, transgression, and misbehaviour in the premises, and for that also that you would not come to your several Parish Churches, and hear your divine Service there, as other Christian people did and do; but absent your selves from the same, and have your private Service in your houses, especially in the house of Dirick Carver) were sent up unto the King and Queens Majesties privy Council, and by them or some of them sent afterward into the Prison of Newgate aforesaid, having there by their Authority remained as Prisoners, during all the time ye have been there.

12. Item, I do likewise object and say, that I the said Bishop of London was commanded by the Authority of the said Council, to make process against you, and every of you, so that it was not my procuring or searching that ye should be commanded or called before me in this matter of Heresie, but partly by your demerits, and partly the commandment enforced me to call and send for you, to make answer herein, and hereof to shew you the said Letters.

Their Answers to the Articles.

Upon Monday, being the tenth day of June, these two persons (with other,) were brought by the Keeper unto the Bishops Consistory, as it was before commanded at one of the Clock in the Afternoon, where the Bishop first beginning with the said Dirick Carver, caused his Confession with the Articles and Answers to be openly read unto him (which order he kept at the condemnation of every Prisoner) asking him whether he would stand to the same. To whom the said Dirick answered, that he would: for your Doctrine, quoth he, is payson and sorcery. If Christ were here you would put him to a worse death then he was put to before.

You say that you can make a god; ye can make a pudding as well. Your Ceremonies in the Church be beggary and payson. And further I say, that auricular Confession is contrary to Gods Word, and very payson: with divers other such words.

The Bishop seeing his constancy, and that neither his accustomed flatteries, nor yet his cruel threatnings could once move this good man to incline to their Idolatry, pronounced his usual and general blessing, (as well towards this Dirick as also upon the said John Launder, although severally) who (after the like manner of process used with him) remained in the same constancy, as did the others, and therefore were both delivered unto the Sheriffs, who were there present, but afterwards were conveyed to the places above named, and there most joyfully gave their bodies to be burned in the fire, and their souls into the hands of Almighty God, by Jesus Christ, who hath assured them to a better hope of life.

This Dirick was a man whom the Lord had blessed as well with temporal riches, as with his spiritual treasures; which riches yet were no clog or let unto his true profiting of Christ, (the Lord by his grace so working in him) of the which, there was such havock made, by the greedy ravens of that time, that his poor wife and Children had little or none thereof. During his imprisonment, although he was well stricken in years (and as it were, past the time of learning) yet he so spent his time, that being at his first apprehension utterly ignorant of any letter of the Book, he could before his death read perfectly any Printed English. Whose diligence and zeal is worthy no small commendation, and therefore I thought it good not to pass it over in silence, for the good encouragement and example of others.

Moreover, at his coming into the Town of Lewes to be burned, the people called upon him, beseeching God to strengthen him in the Faith of Jesus Christ. He thanked them, and prayed unto God, that of his mercy he would strengthen them in the like Faith. And when he came to the sign of the Starr, the people drew near unto him, where the Sheriff said, that he had found him a faithful man in all his Answers. And as he came to the stake, he knelt down and made his prayers, and the Sheriff made halt.

Then his Book was thrown into the Barrel, and when he had stript himself (as a joyful member of God) he went into the Barrel himself. And as soon as ever he came in, he took up the Book and threw it among the people, and then the Sheriff commanded in the King and Queens name, on pain of death, to throw in the Book again. And immediately, that faithful Member spake with a joyful voice, saying:

Dear Brethren and Sisters, witness to you all, that I am come to seal with my blood Christs Gospel, because I know that it is true: it is not unknown unto all you, but that it hath been truly preached here in Lewes, and in all places of England, and now it is not. And because that I will not deny here Gods Gospel, and be obedient to mans Laws, I am condemned to dye. Dear Brethren and Sisters, as many of you as do believe upon the Father, the Son, and the holy Ghost, unto everlasting life, see you do the works appertaining to the same. And as many of you as do believe upon the Pope of Rome, or any of his Laws, which he sets forth in these days, you do believe to your utter condemnation, and except the great mercy of God, you shall burn in Hell perpetually.

And he said further in his Prayer, Oh Lord my God, thou hast written, He that will not forsake Wife, Children, House, and all that ever he hath, and take up thy Cross and follow thee, is not worthy of thee. But thou Lord knowest, that I have forsaken all, to come unto thee: Lord have mercy upon me, for unto thee I commend my Spirit; and my Soul doth rejoyce in thee. Thomas Iveson, Martyr.

The Iveson, or Iveson, apprehended with Dirick Carver, and others, and suffered at Chichester.

At Chichester, about the same Month was burned one Thomas Iveson of Godstone in the County of Surrey, Carpenter; whose apprehension, examination and condemnation (for as much as it was at one time, and in one form with Dirick Carver, and Jobu Launder) I do here omit, referring the Reader to their History and Process before-mentioned, saving only this his several Confession and private Answers made before Bishop Boner at his last examination in the Consistory, I thought not to pretermitt, who being examined upon the foresaid Articles, answered as followeth.

The Answers of Thomas Iveson to the Objections of Bishop Boner of London, in a Chamber at his House, in the Month of July.

Answers of Tom. Iveson.

1. First, That I believed, that there is but one Catholic, Universal, and whole Church of Christ throw the whole World, which hath and boldeth the true Faith, and all the Sacraments of Christian belief, and all the Sacraments of Christ, with the true use and administration of the same.

2. Item, That he is necessarily bounden to believe and give credit, in all the said Faith, Articles of the Belief, Religion, and the Sacraments of Christ, and the administration of the same.

3. Item, That that Faith, Religion, and administration of Sacraments, which now is believed, used, taught, and set forth in this our Church of England, is not agreeing with the Truth and Faith of Christ, nor with the Faith of the said Catholic and Universal Church of Christ.

4. Item, Concerning the Sacrament of the Altar, he believeth, that it is a very Idol, and detestable before God as it is now ministrifed.

5. Item, That the Mass is naught, and not of the institution of Christ, but that it is of Mans invention: and being demanded whether any thing used in the Mass be good, he said that he would answer no further.

6. Item, That he had not received the Sacrament of the Altar, since it had been ministrifed as now it is in England, neither was confessed at any time within these seven years; nor he hath not heard Mass by the same space.

7. Item, That auricular Confession is not necessary to be made to a Priest; for that he cannot forgive, nor absolve him from sins.

8. Item, Concerning the Sacrament of Baptism, that it is a sign and token of Christ, as Circumcision was, and none otherwise, and he believeth that his sins are not washed away thereby, but his Body only washed: for his sins be washed away only by Christs Blood.

9. Item, That there be in the Catholic Church of Christ only two Sacraments, that is to say, the Sacrament of Baptism, and the Sacrament of the Supper of the Lord, and no more, which are not rightly used at this present time in England, and therefore be unprofitable.

10. Item, He believeth, that all the Ceremonies now used in the Church of England, are vain, superfluous, superstitious and naught.

Furthermore, The said Iveson being earnestly travelled wital to recant, said in this wise, I would not recant and forsake my opinion and belief for all the goods in London: I do appeal to Gods mercy, and will be none of your Church, nor submit my self to the same: and that I have said, I will say again. And if there came an Angel from Heaven, to teach me any other Doctrine then

He meant not by the mere virtue of the Element.

John Ale-

in Prison.

IN the latter end of this Month of July, John Aleworth died in Prison, at the Town of Reading, being there in bonds for the cause and testimony of the truth of the Lords Gospel. Whom although the Catholick Prelates (according to their usual solemnity) did exclude out of there Catholick burial, yet we see no cause why to exclude him out of the number of Christs holy Martyrs, and heirs of his holy Kingdom.

James Abbes
Martyr.

Among many that travelled in these troublesome days to keep a good Conscience, there was one James Abbes, a young man, which through compulsion of the tyranny then used, was enforced to have his part with his Brethren in wandering, and going from place to place, to avoid the peril of apprehending. But when time came, that the Lord had another work to do for him, he was caught by the hands of wicked men, and brought before the Bishop of Norwich, D. Hopton. Who examining him of his Religion, and charging him therewith very sore, both with threats and fair speech, at the last the said poor James, did yield and relented to their naughty persuasions, although his Conscience contented not thereto.

James Abbes
relented.

Now when he was dismissed, and should go from the Bishop, the Bishop calling him again, gave him a piece of Money, either lx. d. or xxx. d. whether I know not; which when the said James had received, and was gone from the Bishop, his Conscience began to throb, and inwardly to accuse his fact, how he had displeased the Lord by consenting to their beastly Illusions: In which combat with himself (being piously vexed) he went immediately to the Bishop again, and there threw him his said Money, which he had received at his hand, and said, It repented him that he ever gave his consent to their wicked persuasions, and that he gave his consent in taking of his Money.

Now this being done, the Bishop with his Chaplains did labour afresh to win him again, but in vain: for the said James Abbes would not yield for any of them all, although he had played Peter before through infirmity, but stood manfully in his Masters quarrel to the end, and abode the force of the fire, in the consuming of his Body into ashes, which tyranny of burning was done in Bury, the second day of August, Anno 1555.

A discourse of the Apprehension, Examination, and Condemnation of John Denley, Gentleman, John Newman, and Patrick Packingham, martyred for the Testimony of Christs Gospel.

IN the midst of this tempestuous rage of malignant Adversaries, persecuting and destroying the poor flock of Christ, many there were, which though they were not Spiritual men, yet thought to help forward, for their parts, and as one would say, to heap up mo Coals to this furious flame of Persecution, whether of a blind zeal or a parasitical flattery, I know not. Amongst which, one was Edmund Tyrel Esquire, and at that time a Justice of Peace within the County of Essex, an Assister (as it seemeth) to cruel murderers of Gods Saints. Who as he came from the burning and death of certain godly Martyrs, met with John Denley, Gentleman, and one John Newman (both of Maidstone in Kent) travelling upon the way, and going to visit such their godly Friends, as then they had in the said County of Essex. And upon the sight of them as he yet braggeth, first upon suspicion apprehended, and searched them; and at last, finding the confessions of their Faith in writing about them, sent them up unto the Queens Commissioners, directing also unto one of the same Commissioners, these his favourable Letters in their behalf. The Copy whereof here may appear as followeth.

A Copy of Edmund Tyrels Letter, to one of the Queens Commissioners.

SIR, with most hearty Commendations unto you, these shall be to advertise you, that I have received a Letter from Sir Nicholas Hare and you, and other of the King and Queens Majesties Commissioners, by a Servant of the King and Queens, called John Failes, for certain business about S. Ojythes, the which I could not immediately go about, for that I had received a Letter from from the Council, to assist the Sheriff for the execution of the Hereticks, the one at Raleigh, and the other at Rochford, the which was done on Tuesday last.

And as I came homeward, I met with two men: Even as I saw them I suspected them, and then I did examine them, and search them, and I did find about them certain Letters which I have sent you, and also a certain writing in Paper, what their Faith was. And they confessed to me, that they had forsaken and fled out of their Country for Religions sake; and since they have been in many Countries, by their confession, which I have sent you: for the which I thought it good (for that they came from London, and that there might be more had of them than I yet have understood) to send them to you, whereby you and others of the King and Queens Commissioners there might try them so that their lewdness might be thoroughly known; for I think these have caused many to trouble their Consciences. So this hath been some let to me, wherefore I could not go about those matters expressed in your Letters: but to morrow at Noon I intend by Gods grace to accomplish your Letters, with as much diligence as I may. And thus the holy Trinity have you ever in his keeping. I beseech you to be so good (Mister) to discharge these poor men that bring these Prisoners up, as soon as may be. And thus most heartily farewell. From Rainesden Park the 12. of June 1555.

By your assured to command,
Edmund Tyrel.

Forasmuch as in this Letter mention is made of a certain Writing in paper found about them of their Faith; what this Writing was, and what were the contents of it, the Copy thereof here ensueth.

Certain Notes collected and gathered out of the Scriptures by John Denley Gentleman, with a Confession of his Faith, touching the Sacrament of Christs Body and Blood, found about him ready written, at his Apprehension.

of the Sacrament.

Figuratively, Spiritually, Really.

The difference of Doctrine between the Faithful and the Papists concerning the Sacrament is, that the Papists say, that Christ is corporally under or in the forms of Bread and Wine; but the Faithful say, that Christ is not there, neither corporally nor spiritually; but in them that worthily eat and drink the Bread and Wine, he is spiritually, but not corporally.

For figuratively he is in the Bread and Wine, and spiritually he is in them that worthily eat and drink the Bread and Wine; but really, carnally, and corporally he is only in Heaven, from whence he shall come to judge the quick and the dead.

AS concerning the Sacrament of the Body and Blood of our Saviour Jesus Christ, my belief is this, that the Bread and Wine is appointed unto a Sacrament; and that after thanks be given to God the Father, then it doth represent unto me the very Body and Blood of our Lord. Now Bread Saviour Jesus Christ; not that the Bread is the Body, or the Wine the Blood, but that I in Faith do see that blessed Body of our Saviour broken on the Cross, and his precious Blood plentifully shed for the redemption of my sins. Also in faith I hear him call us unto him, saying, Come unto me all ye that labour and are laden, and I will refresh you, Matth. 11. 28. In Faith I believe that all that do come unto the Table of the Lord in this faith, fear, and love, being sorry for their offences, intending earnestly to lead a godly conversation in this vale of misery, do receive the fruit of the death of Christ, which fruit is our salvation.

I do understand (Spiritually) that as the outward man doth eat the material Bread which comforteth the Body, so doth the inward man (through Faith) eat the Body of Christ, believing that as the Bread is broken, so was Christs Body broken on the Cross for our sins; which comforteth our Souls unto live everlasting, and signifying thereby, that even as that Bread was divided among them, so should his Body and fruit of his Passion be distributed unto as many as believed his words. But the Bread broken and eaten in the Supper, monetheth and putteth us in remembrance of his death, and so exciteth us to thanksgiving, to laud and praise God for the benefits of our Redemption.

And thus we there have Christ present; in the inward eye and sight of our Faith we eat his Body, and drink his Blood; that is, we believe surely that his Body was crucified for our sins, and his Blood shed for our salvation.

Christs Body and Blood is not contained in the Sacramental Bread and Wine, as the Papists have said, and as some yet do say, as ye read in these Scriptures following: First read in 8. Matth. 9. Luke 5. Matth. 24. and 26. Mark. 16. Luke 24. John 13. Luke 23. in the end, *John 14. 15. 16. 17. Acts 1. 3. 9. Rom. 8. Psal. 8. 1. Corin. 10. 11. Exod. 12. Coloss. 1. Ephes. 1. 4. Phil. 2. 1. 1. Christs material Body is not in all places, as these Scriptures do testify hereafter.

First, read St. Matthew the last, Mark the last, Luke the last, John 11. 2. 3. 21. These places of the Scriptures do plainly declare, that his Body, that was born of the Virgin Mary, cannot be in more places than one, and that is in Heaven, on the right hand of God, and not in the Sacrament, nor in all places, as the Papists have affirmed, and yet do affirm.

Christs Body is not in all places at once.

Therefore whosoever they be that do worship the Creatures of Bread and Wine, do commit Idolatry, and make abominable Idols of them, and take the glory from God, and give it to his Creatures, which is contrary to the mind of God, as these Scriptures hereafter do testify, first in *Exod. 20. 22. 23. 24. John Denley.

Now to return to the Commissions again: they receiving these Prisoners afore-mentioned, after they saw they could little prevail with their own persuasions, sent them unto Bishop Boner to be handled after his fatherly and charitable discretion. Which how discreet and favourable it was, as well the history of others, as also the sequel of this doth manifestly declare. For the 28. of June then next following, he caused the said Denley and Newman, with one Patrick Packingham, to be brought into his Chamber within his house or palace, there examining them upon their Confessions (which Tyrel had found about them) objecting also unto them certain other Articles of his own. To the which they all answered in effect one thing, although Denley answered more largely than the others, and therefore I thought it enough only to manifest his, as sufficient, and in no part differing from the others, except that Packingham had one Article of no great force objected to him, which the rest had not.

This done, the Bishop used with them his accustomed persuasions, to the which Master Denley said; God save me from your counsel, and keep me in the mind that I am in, for that you count heretic, I take to be the Truth: and thereupon they were commanded to appear in the Bishops Consistory the fifth of July then next coming, in the afternoon, where these Articles were objected against them.

Alſo he ſaith, Even ſo likewiſe when ye ſpeak with Tongues, except ye ſpeak words that haue ſignification, how ſhall it be underſtood what is ſpoken? for ye ſhall but ſpeak in the Air; that is as much to ſay, in vaine. Alſo he ſaith, Thou wouldeſt greeſt themſelues well, but the other is mended. I thank ye God, I ſpeak with Tongues more than ye all: yet I had rather in the Congregation ſo ſpeak for your words with underſtanding, to the information of others than ten thouſand words with the Tongue. Alſo he ſaith, Let all things be done to edification.

To this fifth Article I answer, that I do believe as I have afore-said, that unclean Confession is not good, as it is now used. Touching my sins, whereto I have offended God, I must look to him for remission thereof, for our Saviour Christ faith in the 11. of S. Mark v.
Come unto me all ye that labour and are laden, I will ease you. The righteous Son, Luke 15. faith, I will give to my Father, and will, as to him, Father, I have given against Heaven and before thee, and I am none worthy to be called thy Son. Psalm 31. I laid I will knowledge mine iniquities, and acle my self unto the Lord, and thou shalt forgive me the wickedness of my sin, Ec. Job 13. But I will remove mine own ways from fight: He shall make me whole, and there may no hypocrite be before him. Synach 34. faith, Who can be cleansed of the unclean? And there was but one of the ten Lepers that were cleansed, that came to Christ to give him thanks. Healed for the other nine. But if I have offended my Neighbour, I must reconcile my self to my Neighbour; and if he be a notorious Sinner, as the 15. and 24. admonition, it ought to be declared to the Congregation, and the Minister of the Congregation hath power by
the

the Word to excommunicate me, and I am to be taken as an Heathen person, not for a day, or 40. days, but unto such time as I do openly in the Congregation knowlege my fault, then the Minister hath power by the Word to preach to me or them the remission of our sins in the Blood of Jesus Christ, as it is written in the 13. of the Acts of the Apostles, and Mat. 18. Other confession I know none.

To this sixth Article, I the said John Denley have answered in the fifth.

To the seventh Article I answer, that as touching the Sacrament of Baptism, which is the Chriftening of Children, it is altered and changed; for S. John used nothing but the preaching of the Word and the Water, as it doth appear, when Christ required to be baptized of him, and others also which came to John to be baptized, as it appeareth, Matth. 3. Mark 1. Luke 3. and Acts 8. the Chancery said; See here is Water, what letteth me to be Baptized? It appeareth here that Philip had preached unto him; for he said Here is Water. We do not read that he asked for any Cream, nor Oyl, nor for Spittle, nor Conjured Water, nor conjured Wax, nor yet Croyson, nor Silt, for it seemeth that Philip had preached no such things to him; for he would as well have asked for them as for Water: and the Water was not Conjured, but even as it was afore. Also Acts 10. Then answered Peter Can any man forbid Water that these should not be Baptized? &c. Acts 16. And Paul and Silas preached unto him the Word of the Lord, and to all that were in his house: and he took them the same hour of the night, and washed their wounds, and so was he Baptized, and all they of his household straightway. Where ye see nothing out preaching the Word and the Water. The like also is to be said of the rest of the Ceremonies of your Church.

The Reformation good a Sacrament as forer of the Popish Sacraments.

To the eighth Article I answer shortly, that there be Sacraments no more but two; Baptism, and the Sacrament of the Body and Blood of Christ, except ye will make the Rite now a Sacrament: for there is no Sacrament but hath a promise annexed unto it.

To the ninth Article I do answer you, that ye have my mind written already. For it was found about me when I was taken, and also ye know my mind in the fourth Article, plainly expressed concerning the Bodily presence: For Christs body is in heaven, and will not be contained in so small a piece of Bread. And as the words which Christ spake are true indeed, so must they also be understood by other of the Scriptures which Christ spake himself, and also the Apostles after him. And thus I make an end, &c.

By me John Denley.

The first day of the month of July, the said three prisoners were brought into the Consistory in Pauls Church, where he proceeded against them after the usual form and manner of Law, reading first their Confessions, Articles, and Answers, and then tempting them, sometime with fair promises, otherwhiles with threatnings, which were alwayes his chiefest arguments and reasons to persuade withall. In the end, seeing their unmovable constancy, upon the fifth of July he condemned them as Hereticks, and gave them unto the Sheriffs of London, as to his common executioners, who kept them until they were commanded by Writ to send them to their several places of suffering; which was for Mr. Denley, Usbridge: where the 8. day of August he was burned. And being set in the fire with the burning flame about him, he sing in it a Psalm.

The anger of the Lord kindled against him, and he left his fingering, and clapt both his hands on his face. Truly, quoth Dr. Story to him that hurried the Faggot, thou hast made a good old Song.

The said John Denley being yet still in the flame of the fire, put his hands abroad, and sung again, yielding at the last his spirit into the hands of God through his Son Jesus Christ.

The Martyrdom of Mr Denley at Usbridge, which was the 8 of August, suffered also not long after Patrick Packingham at the same Town of Usbridge, about the 28 of the said Month. This Packingham was charged

After the Martyrdom of Mr Denley at Usbridge, which was the 8 of August, suffered also not long after Patrick Packingham at the same Town of Usbridge, about the 28 of the said Month. This Packingham was charged of Boner (as ye heard in the tenth Article before) for his behaviour shewed in the Bishops Chappell, who at the Mass time there standing, would not put of his Cap, which was taken for a heinous offence. The said Packingham also being much laboured by Boner to recant, protested in these words to the Bishop, that the Church which he believed was no Catholick Church, but was the Church of Satan, and therefore he would never turn to it, &c.

Furthermore, as touching the other, which was John Newman Pewterer, dwelling at Maidstone in Kent, he was burned the last of August, at Saffron Walden in the County of Essex, whole examination and confession of his Faith and Belief, for the which he was cruelly burnt and persecuted, hereunder followeth.

The Examination of John Newman, Martyr.

John Newman first was apprehended in Kent dwelling in the Town of Maidstone, and there was examined before Dr. Thornton Suffragan, and others, at Tenterden. From thence he was brought to Boner, and there condemned with Mr. Denley and Packingham, and burned at Saffron Walden, as is before storied. But because his Examination and Answers before the Suffragan came not then to my hands I thought here in this place to bestow them, rather than they should utterly be suppressed. And first what his answer was by writing to the said Suffragan, after his apprehension, you shall hear by the tenor of his own words, as follow.

I may please you to understand, that for the space of all the time of King Edward's reign, we were diligently instructed with continual Sermons, made by such men, whose faith, wisdom, learning, and virtuous living, was commended unto all men under the Kings Hand and Seal and under the hands of the whole Council. These men taught diligently a long time, persuading us by the allegations of Gods Word, that there was no Transubstantiation, nor Corporal presence in the Sacrament. Their Doctrine was not believed of us suddenly, but by their continual preaching, and also by our continual prayer unto God, that we might never believe it. We weighed that they laboured with Gods Word, and we asked the advice of our friends, neither could we find that they preached false Doctrine. We considered also, as we did learn, that the Kings Grace and his Council, and the most part of the whole Realm believed as they taught, because no man preached the contrary. Also we knew that the Preachers were commanded by the King and Laws of the Realm, to preach unto us such Doctrine, as was to the authority of Gods Word agreeable, and no other, and by their diligent setting forth of it by the Kings commandment, and the whole consent of the whole Council, and by the authority of the Parliament, we embraced it, and received it as a very infallible Truth, taught unto us for the space of seven years. Wherefore, until such time as our Consciences are otherwise taught and instructed by Gods Word, we cannot with safeguard of our Consciences take it as many suppose at this time. And we trust in God that the Queens merciful highness, neither yet her most honourable counsel will in a matter of Faith use compulsion nor violence, because Faith is the gift of God, and cometh not of man, neither of mans Laws, neither at such time as men require it, but at such time as God giveth it.

The Examination and Answers of John Newman Martyr before Dr. Thornton, and others.

First, one of the Doctors, or one of the Bench, either the Archdeacon or Pewterer, or some other, whose name John Newman doth not express, beginneth asking in this wise.

Doctor. How say you to this: This is my Body which is given for you.

Newman. It is a figurative speech, one thing spoken, and another meant, as Christ saith; I am a Vine, I am a Door I am a Stone, &c. Is he therefore a material Stone, a Vine, or a Door?

Doff. This is no figurative speech. For he saith; This is my Body which is given for you, and so saith he not of the stone, vine, or Door; but that is a figurative speech.

New. Christ saith, This Cup is the New Testament in my Blood. If ye will have it so meant, then let them take and eat the Cup.

Doff. Nay, that is not so meant; for it is a common phrase of speech among our selves: We say to our friend drink a Cup of Drink, and yet we meant he should Drink the Drink in the Cup.

New. Why, if ye will have the one so understood, ye must so understand the other.

Doff. Nay, it is a common use of speech, to say, Drink a Cup of Ale or Beer. And therefore it is no figurative speech.

New. The often using of a thing doth not make that thing otherwise than it is; but whosoever one thing is spoken, and another meant, it is a figurative speech.

D. Well, we will not stand hereabout. How say ye of the real presence? Is not Christ's natural Body there that was born of the Virgin Mary?

New. No, I do not so believe, neither can I so believe; for the Soul of man doth not feed upon natural things as the Body doth.

Doff. Why, how then doth it feed?

New. I think the Soul of man doth feed as the Angels in Heaven, whose feeding is only the pleasure, joy, felicity, and delectation that they have of God: and so the Soul of man doth feed and eat, through Faith, the Body of Christ.

Collins. Yea, but if the Body do not feed upon natural things, the Soul cannot continue with the Body: therefore the Body must needs feed upon natural things, that both may live together.

New. I grant it to be true; but yet the Soul doth live otherwise than the Body which doth perish: therefore natural things do but feed the Body only. I pray you what did Judas receive at the Supper?

Col. Marry, Judas did receive the very Body of Christ, but it wato his damnation.

New. Why? was the Devil entered into him before? Then he had not the Devil and Christ in him at one time.

Col. Nay, the Devil did enter into him afterward.

New. Yea, and before too: what do ye think? Had he but one Devil? Nay, I think he had rather a legion of Devils at the latter end.

Col. Well, put case it be so: what say you to that?

New. Marry, if Christ and the Devil were both in Judas at once, I pray you how did they two agree together?

Col. We grant that they were both in Judas at that time: for Christ may be where the Devil is, if he will; but the Devil cannot be where Christ is, except it please Christ.

New. Christ will not be in an unclean person that hath the Devil.

Thornton. Why, will ye not believe that Christ was in Hell? and ye will grant that the Devil is there; and so might he be in Judas, if it pleased him.

New. Christ would not suffer Mary Magdalen to touch him which sought him at his grave, and did love him intirely; much less he will suffer an ungodly man to receive him into his unclean Body.

Thornt. Yes, seeing God may do all things, he may do what he list, and be where he will. And doth not the Psalm say; He is in Hell, and in all places? Why should we then doubt of his being there?

New. Though his Godhead be in all places, yet that is not sufficient to prove that his Humanity is in all places.

Thornt. No, do you not believe that God is Omnipotent, and may do all things?

New. I do believe that God is Almighty, and may do all that he will do.

Thornt. Nay, but if he be Omnipotent, he may do all things, and there is nothing unpossible for him to do.

New. I know God is almighty, and can do all that he will: but he cannot make his Son a liar, he cannot deny himself, nor can he restore Virginity once violated and defiled.

Thornt. What is that to your purpose? God doth not defile Virginity; we speak but of things that God doth.

New. Why, will ye have the Humanity of Christ in all places as the Deity is?

Thornt. Yea, he is in all places as the Deity is, if it please him.

New. I will promise you that seemeth to me a very great Heresie, for Heaven and Earth are not able to contain the Divine Power of God, for it is in all places, as here and in every place: and yet ye say, that where-ever the Deity is, there is also the Humanity, and so ye will make him no Body, but a fantastical Body, and not a Body indeed.

Thornt. Nay, we do not say he is in all places as the Deity is, but if it please him he may be in all places with the Deity.

New. I promise you, that seemeth to me as great an Heresie as ever I heard in my life, and I dare not grant it, lest I should deny Christ to be a very Man, and that were against all the Scriptures.

Thornt. Tush, what shall we stand reasoning with him? I dare say he doth not believe that Christ came out of his Mother, not opening the matrice. Do you believe that Christ rose from death, and came thorow the stone?

New. I do believe that Christ rose from death; but I do not believe that he came thorow the stone, neither doth the Scripture so say.

Thornt. Lo, how say you? he doth not believe that Christ came through the stone; and if he doth not believe this, how shall he believe the other? If he could believe this, it were easie for him to believe the other.

New. The Scripture doth not say he went thorow the stone, but it saith the Apostle of God came down, and rolled away the stone, and for fear of him the Keepers became even as dead men.

Thornt. Ah fool, fool, that was because the woman should see that he was risen again from death.

New. Well, the Scripture maketh as much for me, as it doth for you, and more too.

Thornt. Well let us not stand any longer about this. Back again to the real Presence. How say ye, is the Body of Christ really in the Sacrament, or no?

New. I have answered you already.

Thornt. Well, do ye not believe that it is there really?

New. No, I believe it not.

Thornt. Well, will ye stand to it?

New. I must needs stand to it, till I be perswaded by a further Truth.

Thornt. Nay, ye will not be perswaded, but stand to your own Opinion.

New. Nay, I stand not to mine own Opinion, God I take to witness, but only to the Scriptures of God, and that can all those that stand here witness with me, and nothing but the Scriptures: and I take God to witness, that I do nothing of presumption, but that that I do, is only my Conscience, and if there be a further Truth than I see, except it appear a Truth to me, I cannot receive it as a Truth. And seeing Faith is the gift of God, and cometh not of man; for it is not you that can give me Faith, nor no man else: therefore I trust ye will bear the more with me, seeing it must be wrought by God, and when it shall please God to open a further Truth to me, I shall receive it with all my heart, and embrace it.

Thornt. had many other questions which I did not bear away; but as I do understand, these are the chiefest: as for Taunts, foolish and unlearned, he lacked none. Praise God for his gifts, and God increase in us strength.

The Arguments of John Newman.

If the Body of Christ were really and bodily in the Sacrament, then whosoever received the Sacrament, received also the Body.

The wicked receiving the Sacrament, receive not the Body of Christ.

Ergo, the Body of Christ is not really in the Sacrament.

Argument.

Ca- They which eat the Flesh, and drink the Blood of Christ, dwell in him, and be in them.
mes- The wicked dwell not in Christ, nor he in them.
res. Ergo, the wicked eat not the Flesh, nor drink the Blood of Christ.

Argument.

Ca- They that have Christ dwelling in them, bring forth much fruit, John 15. He that dwelleth in me, and, I in him bringeth forth much fruit.
mes- The wicked bring forth no fruit of goodness.
res. Ergo, they have not Christ's Body dwelling in them.

Argument

Da- Where remembrance is of a thing, there is imported the absence thereof.
ti- Remembrance of Christ's Body is in the Sacrament, Do this in remembrance of me, &c.
fi- Ergo, Christ's Body there is imported to be absent.

Marry they will say, we see him not with our outward eyes, but he is commended under the forms of Bread and Wine, and that we see is nothing but a quality or an accident: But let them shew me a quality or an accident without a substance, and I will believe them. And thus much concerning Newman's Examinations and Arguments.

The Lord of John Newman, dwelling at Maidston in Kent, who was by Occupation, a Pewterer.

The Lord is the Protector of my life. The just shall live by Faith, and if he withdraw himself, my soul shall have no pleasure in him.

MY Faith is, that there is one God, which is without beginning, and without ending. This God created all things visible and invisible. And after that he had made both Heaven and Earth, with all other Creatures, he made Man, and set him in the place which he had prepared for him, which place he called Eden: he gave to Adam his commandments and Precepts, and said, Whensoever thou dost the thing which I forbid, thou shalt surely die the death; yet did Man for all this disobey God his Creator, and after his sin, he fled from God, and himself, and was in a miserable desperate case. But God seeing man in his miserable estate, because he and all posterity should not continue in death, promised Adam that the woman's Seed should break the Serpents head, whereby is meant, that the Son of God should become man, and destroy the devil, which by his subtle persuasions had deceived Adam. Then did Adam, by Faith, take hold of God's promise, and became the servant of righteousness, through the Faith which he had in the promise of the Woman's Seed. So did Abel, Seth, Henoch, and Noah, with Faithful Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob, and the rest of the faithful until Christ's time, as St. Paul saith; They did eat of one spiritual meat, and did all drink of one spiritual drink, they did drink of that spiritual rock that followed them, which rock was Christ that saveth us. And when the time was full come, God sent his Son, made of a woman, that is, he took flesh of the virgin Mary, and became man; not the shadow of a man, nor a fantastical man, as some falsely sign, but a very natural man in all points, sin only excepted, which God and man is Christ the promised Woman's Seed. This Christ was here conversant among men for the space of 30 years & more; and when the time was come that he should go to his Father, he gave unto us the mystery of our Redemption, that we through Faith should eat his Body, and drink his Blood, that we might feed on him through Faith to the end of the world. After this Christ offered up his Body on the Cross to pacify his Father, and to deliver us from the thralldom of the Devil, in the which we were through sin original and actual. And with that one sacrifice of his Body once offered on the Cross, he hath made perfect for ever all them that are sanctified. He descended into hell, the third day he rose again from death, and was conversant at certain times with his Disciples for the space of 40 days after he rose from death. Then in the sight of all his Disciples he ascended into Heaven: and as his Disciples stood looking upward, and beholding him how he went into Heaven, two men stood by them in white apparel, which also said; Ye men of Galilee, why stand ye gazing up into Heaven? This Jesus which is taken up from you into Heaven, shall so come even as ye have seen him go into Heaven. St. Peter also saith, that the Heavens must receive him, until the time that all things which God hath spoken by the mouth of all his Prophets since the world began, be restored again, which is the latter day, when he shall come to judge the quick and the dead. I do Believe in the Holy Ghost, which is the Spirit of God, proceeding from the Father and the Son, which Holy Spirit is one God with them. I believe that there is an Holy Church, which is the company of the faithful and elect People of God, dispersed abroad throughout the whole world, which Holy Church or Congregation doth not look for Christ here, nor Christ there, neither in the desert, nor in the secret places whereof Christ warneth us, but as St. Paul saith, in Heaven; where he sitteth on the right hand of the Father; they set their affections on things that are above, and not on things that are on earth. For they are dead concerning the things of this world, and their life is hid with Christ in God: and when Christ, which is their life shall shew him self, then shall they also appear with him in glory. I believe that there is a communion of Saints, even the fellowship of the Faithful People which are dispersed abroad throughout all the whole world, and are of one mind: they follow Christ their Head, they love one another as Christ loved them, and are knit together in one, even in Christ; which Church or Congregation hath forgiveness of Sins through Christ, and shall enter without spot before the face of God into his glory. For as Christ, being their Head, hath entered pure and clean, so they entering by him, shall belike him in glory. And I am certain and sure, that all they which do die, shall rise again and receive their Bodies. In them shall they see Christ come in his glory, to judge the quick and the dead. At whose coming all men shall appear and give a reckoning of their doings: he shall separate the good from the bad, he shall say to them which are his elect; Come ye blessed of my Father, inherit the Kingdom prepared for you from the beginning; but to the other that have always resisted his will, he shall say; Depart from me ye cursed into everlasting fire which is prepared for the Devil and his Angels.

Thus have I briefly declared my Faith, which were no Faith at all if I were in doubt of it. This Faith therefore I desire God to increase in me. Praise God for his gifts.

And thus have ye the Martyrdom with the Confession of the blessed man, and witnesses of the Lord's Truth, who for that gave his life, as is before declared.

The Examinations, Answers, and condemnation of William Coker, William Hooper, Henry Laurence, Richard Collier, Richard Wright, William Stere, before the Bishop of Dover, and Harpsfield Archdeacon of Canterbury.

Mention was made a little before in the story of Mr. Bland and Nicholas Sberden, of certain other Kentish-men, who being the same time with them called forth and examined by Thornton Bishop of Dover, Nich. Harpsfield, Rich. Fauces, and Robert Collins: yet notwithstanding, because the condemnation and execution of them was deferred a little longer, till the latter end of the month of August; coming therefore now to the time of suffering, we will briefly touch some part of their Examinations and Answers as we find them in the Register.

Six Martyrs in Kent, Harpsfield, Rich. Fauces, Nich. Collins, Perfection.

Anno Regis. The Names of these were William Coker, Wil. Hopper, Henry Lawrence, Rich. Colliar, Rich. Wright, 1555. Wil. Stere. What the Articles objected to Master Bland and them were, ye heard before. To the which Articles they answered for themselves severally, in effect as followeth.

The burning of Six Godly Martyrs in one fire.

The Martyrdom of 6 Martyrs. M. Coker W. Hopper, Hen. Lawrence Rich. Colliar Rich. Wright. Wil. Stere. at Canterbury, A.D. 1555. Aug.

W. Coker condemned. First William Coker said, he would answer no otherwise then he had already answered; and being offered to have longer respite of six days after, he refused to take it, and so upon the same, sentence of condemnation was read against him, the eleventh of July.

W. Hopper condemned. William Hopper first seemed to grant to the faith and determination of the Catholick Church, after calling himself better to mind, constantly sticking to the truth, he was condemned the next week after, the 16. of July.

The words of Hen. Lawrence. Henry Lawrence examined the said 16 of July, and partly deferred to the 2 of August, answered to the Articles objected against him, first denying auricular confession, and that he neither had nor would receive the Sacrament, because, faith he, the order of the Holy Scriptures is changed in the order of the Sacrament.

Ex Wright. Moreover, the said Lawrence was charged for not putting off his cap, when the Suffragan made mention of the Sacrament, and did reverence to the same: the said Lawrence answering in these words, What? said he, ye shall not need to put off your cap: for it is not so holy that you need to put off your cap thereunto.

Christ gave his Body, as he said he was a Door. Further, being opposed concerning the verity of the Sacrament given to Christs Disciples, he affirmed, that even as Christ gave his very Body to his Disciples, and confessed it to be the same; so likewise Christ himself said, he was a Door, &c. adding moreover, that as he had said before so he faith still, that the Sacrament of the Altar is an Idol, and no remembrance of Christs passion, and contrary he knoweth not. At last required to put to his hand in subscribing to his answers, he wrote these words under the bill of their examinations, Te are all of Antichrist, and him ye fol. And here is hand was stayed to write any further: like he would have written out follow, &c. And so upon the same, sentence was given against him the second of August.

Richard Colliar of Ashford.

Rich. Colliar above mentioned, having the 16 of August to appear, examined of the Sacrament of the Popish Altar; answered and said, that he did not believe, The words of Rich. Colliar. that after the Consecration there is the reall and substantial Body of Christ, but only Bread and Wine, and that it is most abominable, most detestable, and most wicked to believe otherwise, &c. Upon this the sentence was read against him, and he condemned the 16 of August. After his condemnation he sang a Psalm. Wherefore the Priests and their Officers railed at him, saying, he was out of his wits.

Richard Wright.

Richard Wright the same place and day, being the 16 of August, appearing, and required of the Judge what he believed of the reall presence in the Sacrament, answered again, that as touching the Sacrament of the Altar and the Mass, he was ashamed to speak of it or to name it, and that he allowed it not, as it was used in the Church. Against whom the sentence was also read the day and place aforesaid.

William Stere.

William Stere of the aforesaid Parish of Ashford, likewise detected and accused, was brought to appear the said 16 day of August, where he in the said Chapterhouse of Canterbury, being required to make answer to the positions laid unto him by the judge, made answer again, that he should command his dog, and not him: and further declared, that Dick of Dover had no Authority to sit against him in judgement, and asked where his Authority was? Who then shewed him certain Buls and Writings from Rome, as he said. William Stere denying that to be of sufficient force, the said Dick said also he had Authority from the Queen. Then the Martyr alleadging that the Bishop of Canterbury (who then was in prison) was his Diocesan, urged him to shew his Authority from the Archbishop, or else he denied his Authority to be sufficient. And as touching the Sacrament of the Altar, he found it not (he said) in the Scripture; and therefore he would not answer thereunto.

And

And moreover, the Judge speaking of the Sacrament of the Altar, with reverence thereof, and putting off his cap, he said, That he needed not to reverence that matter so highly. And thus (saying to the Judge, that he was a Bloody man, &c.) the sentence was pronounced against him; after which sentence being read, he said, that the Sacrament of the Altar was the most blasphemous Idol that ever was, &c.

And thus these six heavenly Martyrs and Witnesses-bearers to the truth, being condemned by the bloody Suffragan and Archdeacon of Canterbury, Master Collins, and Master Faucet, were burned all together in the same Town of Canterbury, at three stakes and one fire, about the later end of August.

The copy of their sentence condemnatory, you may find above in the story of John Rogers; for the Papists in their condemnations follow one manner of sentence of course commonly against all that be condemned through their unmerciful Tyranny.

Ten Martyrs sent up together to Boner.

Salute of the Pope making.

Ten Martyrs sent by the Commissioners.

After the burning of these six above named, next followeth the persecution of ten other true Servants and Saints of the Lord, not such Saints as the Pope maketh, or which are mentioned in Legenda Sanctorum, or in Vita Patrum, or in the fabulous book De vita Sanctorum Wallensium, &c. but such as are spoken of in the Holy Apocalypsi, of whom it is written, Hi sunt qui sequuntur Agnum quocunque jerit, quique lavaverunt stolam suam in sanguine Agni. These be they that follow the Lamb whithersoever he goeth, and which have washed their stoles in the Blood of the Lamb, &c. Thus these Saints be not of the Popes making, or rather, to say the truth, they are of the Popes making; of the Popes making (I say) in this respect, not that the Saints of God are made by the Pope, but that the Saints of God are tried and declared by the Pope: so, as by afflictions of Satan Job's patience was proved, by Pharaoh's Gods power declared, and by Salinator Tarentum was won (as Tully writeth,) for except he had lost it before, Q. Fabius could not have recovered it, so in like manner, unless by Antichrist good men had been destroyed, otherwise they had not been true Martyrs of Christ. The names of these were.

The History of Elizabeth Warne Widow, burnt at Stratford Bow.

Anno 1555.

Now severally to prosecute the stories of these ten Martyrs aforesaid: first we will begin with the history of Elizabeth Warne, who in this Month of August was burnt at Stratford Bow, nigh unto London, Widow, late the Wife of John Warne Upholster, and Martyr, who also was burned in the end of the Month of May last past, as before in his storie is recorded. This Elizabeth had been apprehended amongst others, the first day of January, in a house in Bow Churchyard in London, as they were gathered together in prayer, and at that present was carried to the Counter (as is also above specified) where she lay as prisoner until the 11. day of June. At which time she was brought into Newgate, and remained there in the like case unto the second day of July. Then she was sent by the King and Queens Commissioners unto Boner Bishop of London, who the sixth day of the same month caused her with divers others (as Robert Smith, George Tankerfield, &c.) to be brought before him into his Palace, and there examined her upon sundry articles, such as of common order be ministred unto the poor Saints and Martyrs of God, as you may more plainly perceive by other more large and ample processe, as well before, as hereafter mentioned.

Elizabeth Warne, Martyr.

Elizabeth Warne brought to examination.

The chiefest objection that he used either towards her, or the most of those, was touching the real and corporal presence of the Body and Blood of Christ in the Sacrament of the Altar, as the chiefest ground and profitable foundation for their Catholicic dignity. Many other matters he objected against them, as for not coming to the Church, for speaking against the Mass, for despising their ceremonies and new found Sacraments, with divers other fond and trifling toys, not worthy any mentioning.

In the end, when he had been divers times brought before him and other his adherents, and there earnestly exhorted to recant, she said, Do what ye will. For if Christ were in an error, then am I in an error. Upon which answer, he was the 12. day of the same month of July adjudged and condemned as an Heretic, and so delivered unto the secular power, as they term it, to be by them (yet at the Clergies appointment) put to death, which thing was accomplished in her the same above mentioned.

The words of Elizabeth Warne at her examination.

The chief procurer of this her death was Doctor Story, being (as it is thought) of some alliance either to her the said Elizabeth, or else to her late Husband. Who, though he was at the first apprehension of his said kinswoman, a very earnest suter for her deliverance to Doctor Martin, then one of the King and Queens Commissioners in matters of Religion (himself being as yet not made Commissioner) and had by his sute obtained her deliverance for that present, as Doctor Martin himself (the author hereof) hath reported, yet afterwards, upon what occasion God only knoweth, except upon some burning charity, the said D. Story obtaining now the room of one of the Commissioners, caused not only the said John Warne but also his Wife, and afterwards his daughter to be again apprehended, never leaving them until he had brought them all to ashes. Such was the rage of that devout Catholic, and white Child of the Mother Church, that neither kindred nor any other consideration could prevail with him, although it did (at his request) with others, who in respect of him were but strangers unto them. The Lord, if it be his will, turn his heart, or else rid his poor Church from such an Hydra, as thanked be the Lord, now he hath.

A story of Doctor Story written upon the report of D. Martin's own words.

George Tankerfield, a faithful Martyr and Witness of the Gospel, constantly suffering for the testimony of the same.

George Tankerfield of London, Cook, born in the City of York, about the age of 27. or 28. years was in King Edwards dayes a very Papist, till the time Queen Mary came in, and then, perceiving the great cruelty used of the Popes side, was brought into a misdoubt of their doings, and began (as he said) in his heart to abhor them. And as concerning the Mass, whereof he had but a doubtful opinion before, and much striving

The story of George Tankerfield, Martyr.

Anno 1555. Tankerfield purposed to go to know whether the Mass be good, or no. Tankerfield how he was first called to the knowledge of the Gospel.

with himself in that case; at length he fell to prayer, desiring God in mercy to open to him the truth, that he might be thoroughly persuaded therein, whether it were of God, or no: If not, that he might utterly hate it in his heart, and abhor it: which according to his prayer the Lord mercifully heard, working daily more and more in him to detest and abhor the same: and so he was moved to read the Testament, whereby (as is said) the Lord lightened his mind with the knowledge of the truth, working lively Faith in him to believe the same, and utterly to detest all Popishry, and so he came no more to their doings: And not only that, but also this lively Faith, faith he, kindled such a flame in him, as would not be kept in, but utter it self by confession thereof, reproving his own former doings to his Friends, exhorting them likewise to convert and turn to the truth with him, and thus he began to be smelled out among them, till at the last he was sent for, as followeth.

The order and manner how Tankerfield was first apprehended by Beard.

It pleased God to strike him with sickness, whereby he lay long sick and on a certain day to take the ay abroad, he rose up, and went and walked into the Temple fields to see the shooters. In the mean season came Beard home to his House, and inquired for him, pretending to his Wife, that he came only to have him to come and dress a Banquet at the Lord Pages. The Wife, because of his apparel (which was very brave) took him to be some honest Gentleman, and with all speed prepared her self to fetch her Husband, having a good hope he should now earn some Money: and left this Gentleman should be noyed with tarrying; she fetch him a cushion to sit him soft, and laid a fair napkin before him, and set bread thereon, and came to her Husband; who when he heard it, said; A Banquet Woman? Indeed it is such a Banquet as will not be very pleasant to the flesh, but Gods will be done. And when he came home he saw who it was, and called him by his name, which when his Wife perceived, and wherefore he came, like a tall Woman would play Peters part, and instead of a Sword, took a Spit, and had run him thorow, had not the Confitable, which Beard had sent for by his man, come in withal, who refused him; yet he sent a Brickbat after him, and hit him on the back. And so Tankerfield was delivered to the Confitable, and brought to Newgate about the last day of February, Anno 1555. by the sayd Beard Yeoman of the Guard, and Simon Ponder Pewterer, Confitable of Saint Dunstons in the West, sent in by Roger Chomley Knight, and by Doctor Marlin.

A fifth Judge part of Beard.

Tankerfield thus being brought to prison by his Adversaries, at length with the other above named was brought to his examination before Boner. Who, after his accustomed manner, ordered his Articles and positions unto him; the copie and tenor of which his ordinary Articles ye may read above expressed.

Articles ordinary.

To these Articles, as above rehearsed, he answered again, constantly declaring his mind both touching Auricular confession, and also the Sacrament of the Popish Altar, and likewise of the Mass, &c. First, that he was not confessed to any Priest five years past, nor to any other but onely to God: and further denying that he would hereafter be confessed to any Priest, for that he found it not in Christs book, and took it only to be a Council.

Sacrament of the Altar.

And concerning the Sacrament, commonly called here in England of the Altar, he confessed that he neither had nor did believe, that in the said Sacrament there is the Reall Body and Blood of Christ, because that the Body is ascended into Heaven, and there doth sit at the Right Hand of God the Father.

The Mass abominable.

And moreover he said, that the Mass now used in the Church of England was naught, and full of Idolatry and Abomination, and against the Word of God; affirming also, that there are but two Sacraments in the Church of Christ, Baptism and the Supper of the Lord, &c. And to these Assertions, he said, he would stand: and so he did to the end.

Two Sacraments.

And when at last the Bishop began to read the sentence, exhorting him before with many words to revoke his professed opinion (which they called Damnable and Heretical) he notwithstanding resisted all contrary persuasions, answering the Bishop again in this form of words; I will not, said he, forsake mine opinions, except you (my Lord) can refresh them by Scriptures; and I care not for your Divinity: for you condemn all men, and prove nothing against them. And after many fair words of exhortation, which Boner then used (after his ordinary manner) to convert, or rather pervert him, he answered boldly again, saying moreover; That the Church, whereof the Pope is supreme head, is no part of Christs Catholick Church: and adding thereunto, and pointing to the Bishop, spake to the People saying, good People beware of him, and such as he is, for these be the People that deceive you, &c.

These with other words more he spake; whereupon the Bishop, reading the sentence of his Popish condemnation, gave him to the secular power.

And so this blessed Servant of God was had to St. Albans, and there with much patience and constancy ended his life, the 26. day of August, for the defence of the truth, which at length will leave the Victorie.

The words of Tankerfield as his condemnation/ Tankerfield gives the People warning of Boner. Tankerfield, condemned. The Martyrdom of George Tankerfield at St. Albans. an. 1555. Aug. 26.

Certain notes concerning George Tankerfield, after he came to suffer Martyrdom at Saint Albans.

Item, he was brought unto St. Albans by the high Sheriff of Hertfordshire, Master Edward Brackets Esquire, and one Fulter of Hitchen, which was under Sheriff.

Item their Inn was the cross-keyes, whereas there was great concourse of People to see and hear the prisoner: among the which Multitude some were fery to see so godly a man brought to be burned, others praised God for his constancie and prefeverance in the truth. Contrariwise, some there were which said, it was pity he did stand in such opinions; and others, both old Women and Men cried against him; one called him Heretick, and said it was pity that he lived. But George Tankerfield did speak unto them so effectually out of the Word of God, lamenting of their ignorance, and protesting unto them his unpotted Conscience, that God did mollifie their hardened hearts, inasomuch that some of them departed out of the Chamber with weeping eyes.

Item, there came unto him a certain School-master (which retained unto Sir Thomas Pope Knight) this man had a certain communication with George Tankerfield the day before he was coming towards St. Albans, as touching their Sacrament of the Altar, and other points of Popish Religion: but as he urged Tankerfield with the Authority of the Doctors, wresting them after his own will; so on the other side Tankerfield answered him mightily by the Scriptures, not wrested after the mind of any man, but being interpreted after the will of the Lord Jesus, &c. So that as he would not allow such allegations as Tankerfield brought out of the Scriptures without the opinions of the Doctors; so again Tankerfield would not credit his Doctrine to be true, except he could confirm it by the Scriptures. In the end Tankerfield prayed him that he would not trouble him in such matters, for his Conscience was established, &c. and so he departed from him, wishing him well, and protesting that he meant him no more hurt than his own Soul.

Item, when the hour drew on apace that he should suffer, he desired the wine-drawer, that he might have a pint of Malmsey and a loaf, that he might eat and drink that in remembrance of Christs Death and Passion because he could not have it ministered unto him by others in such manner as Christ commanded, and then he kneeled down, making his confession unto the Lord with all which were in the chamber with him; and after that he had prayed earnestly unto the Lord, and had read the institution of the Holy Supper by the Lord Jesus out of the Evangelists, and out of St. Paul, he said; O Lord, thou knowest it, I do not this to derogate Authority from any man, or in contempt of those which are thy Ministers, but only because I cannot have it ministered according to thy word, &c. and when he had spoken these and such like words, he received it with giving of thanks.

Item, when some of his Friends willed him to eat some meat, he said he would not eat that which should do others good that had more need, and that had longer time to live than he.

Item, he prayed his Host to let him have a good fire in the chamber; he had so, and then he sitting on a form before the fire, put off his shoes and hose, and stretched out his leggs to the flame, and when it had touched his foot, he quickly withdrew his leggs, shewing how the flesh did perswade him one way, and the Spirit another way. The flesh said, O thou fool, wilt thou burn and needst not? The Spirit said, Be not afraid, for this is nothing in respect of fire eternal. The flesh said, Do not leave the company of thy Friends and acquaintance which love thee, and will let thee lack nothing. The Spirit said, The company of Jesus Christ and his glorious presence doth exceed all fleshly Friends. The flesh said, Do not shorten thy time, for thou mayest live if thou wilt much longer. The Spirit said, This life is nothing unto the life in heaven which lasteth for ever, &c. And all this time the Sheriffs were at a certain Gentlemans house at dinner, not far from the Town, whither also resorted Knights and many Gentlemen out of the Country, because his Son was married that day, and until they returned from dinner the prisoner was left with his Host to be kept and looked unto. And George Tankerfield all that time was kindly and lovingly intreated of his Host; and considering that his time was short, his saying was, That although the day was never so long, yet at the last it ringeth to evening song.

Item, about two of the Clock, when the Sheriffs were returned from dinner, they brought George Tankerfield out of his Inn unto the place where he should suffer, which is called Romeland, being a green place night unto the west end of the Abby Church: unto the which when he was come, he kneeled down by the stake that was set up for him, and after he had ended his prayers he arose, and with a joyful Faith he said, that although he had a sharp dinner, yet he hoped to have a joyful Supper in Heaven.

Item, while the Fagots were set about him, there came a Priest unto him, and perswaded him to believe on the Sacrament of the Altar, and he should be saved. But George Tankerfield cried out vehemently, and said; I defie the Whore of Babylon, I defie the Whore of Babylon: Fie of that abominable Idol: Good People do not believe him, good People do not believe him. And then the Maior of the Town commanded to set fire to the Heretick, and said, If he had but one load of Fagots in the whole World, he would give them to burn him. There was a certain Knight by, who went unto Tankerfield, and took him by the hand, and said, Good Brother, be strong in Christ, this he spake softly; and Tankerfield said, O Sir, I thank you, I am so, I thank God. Then fire was set unto him, and he desired the Sheriff and all the People that they would pray for him; the most part did so. And so embracing the fire, he bathed himself in it, and calling on the name of the Lord Jesus he was quickly out of pain, &c.

After the Martyrdom was ended, and that he was fallen asleep in the Lord, there were some superstitious old Women who did blasphemously say, that the Devil was so strong with him and all such Hereticks as he was, that they could not feel any pain almost, nor yet be sorry for their sins.

Art of painting.

Robert Smith was brought unto Newgate the fifth of November, in the first and second year of the King and Queen, by John Matthew Yeoman of the Guard of the Queens side, by the commandment of the Council. This Smith first gave himself unto Service in the house of Sir Thomas Smith Knight, being then Provost of Eaton: from thence he was preferred to Windsor, having there in the Collegiate a Clerkship of ten pound a year. Of stature he was tall and slender, active about many things, but chiefly delighting in the Art of painting, which many times, rather for his minds sake than for any living or lucre, he did practise and exercise. In Religion he was fervent, after he had once tasted the truth; wherein he was much confirmed by the preachings and readings of one Master Turner of Windsor, and others. Whereupon at the coming of Queen Mary he was deprived of his Clerkship by her Visitors, and not long after he was apprehended, and brought to examination before Boner, as here followeth, written and testified with his own hand.

The first Examination of Robert Smith before Bishop Boner.

About 9. of the Clock in the Morning, I was among the rest of my Brethren brought to the Bishops house; and I first of all was brought before him into his chamber, to whom the Bishop said as followeth, after he had asked my name.

Boner. How long is it ago since the time that ye were conficted to any Priest?

Smith. Never since I had years of discretion. For I never saw it needful, neither commanded of God to come to shew my faults to any of that sinful number, whom ye call Priests.

Boner. Thou shewest thy self even at the first chop to be a rank Heretick, which being weary of painting, art entred into Divinity, and so fallen, through thy departing from thy Vocation, into Heresie.

Smith. Although I have understanding in the said occupation, yet (I praise God) I have had little need all my life hitherto to live by the fame, but have lived without the same in mine owne house as honestly in my Vocation, as ye have lived in yours, and yet used the same better than ever you used the Pulpit.

Boner. How long is it ago since ye received the Sacrament of the Altar, and what is your opinion in the same?

Smith. I never received the same since I had years of discretion, nor never will, by Gods grace; neither do esteem the same in any point, because it hath not Gods ordinance, neither in name, nor in other usage, but rather is set up and erected to mock God withall.

Bon. Do ye not believe that it is the very Body of Christ that was born of the Virgin Mary, naturally, substantially, and really, after the words of Consecration?

Smith. I shewed you before it was none of Gods ordinances, as ye use it; then much less to be God, or any part of his substance, but only Bread and Wine erected to the use aforesaid: yet nevertheless, if ye can approve it to be the Body that ye spake of by the Word, I will believe it; if not, I will, as I do, account it a detestable Idol; not God, but contrary to God and his truth.

Bon. Then after many raging words and vain objections, he said, there was no remedy but I must be burned.

Smith. Ye shall do no more unto me, then ye have done to better men than either of us both. But think not thereby to quench the Spirit of God, neither thereby to make your matter good. For your fore is too well feen to be healed so privily with Blood. For even the very Children have all your deeds in derision; so that although ye patch up one place with Authority, yet shall it break out in forty to your shame.

Bon. Then after much ado, and many railing sentences, he said, throwing away the paper of mine examination; Well, even now, by my troth, even in good earnest, if thou wilt go and be shirven, I will tear this paper in pieces.

Smith. To which I answered; it would be too much to his shame to shew it to men of discretion.

After which Answer, I was carried down to the garden with my jayler, and there remained until my Brother Harwood was examined; and then being again brought up before the said Boner, he demanded if I agreed with Harwood in his confession, upon these Articles following.

Bon. What say you to the Catholick Church? Do ye not confess there is one in Earth?

Smith. Yes verily, I believe that there is one Catholick Church, or faithful congregation, which as the Apostle saith, is builded upon the Prophets and Apostles, Christ Jesus being the head cornerstone; which Church in all her words and works maintaineth the word, and bringeth the same for her Authority, and without it doth nothing, nor ought to do, of which I am assured I am by grace made a member.

ANNO 1555. Ben. Ye shall understand, that I am bound when my Brother offendeth, and will not be reconciled, to bring him before the congregation: now if your Church be the same, where may a man find it, to bring his Brother before the same?

Smith. It is written in the Acts of the Apostles, that when the Tyrannie of the Bishops was so great against the Church in Jury, they were faine to congregate in houses and privie places, as they now do; and yet were they nevertheless the Church of God: and seeing they had their matters redressed being shut up in a corner, may not we do the like now adays?

Ben. Yea, their Church was known full well. For S. Paul writ to the Corinthians, to have the man punished and excommunicate, that had committed evil with his Fathers Will. Whereby we may well perceive it was a known Church; but yours is not known.

Smith. Then could you not persecute it as ye do: but as ye lay the Church of God at Corinth was manifest both to God, and Paul; even so is this Church of God in England, whom ye persecute, both known to God, and also even to the very wicked, although they know not, nor will not know their truth nor conversation; yea, and your sinful number have professed their veritie, and maintained the same a long season.

Ben. Well, thou sayest that the Church of God was only at Corinth, when Paul writ unto them, and so will I put in writing, shall I?

Smith. I do marvel greatly, my Lord, that ye are not ashamed to lay snares for your Brethren on this manner. This is now the third snare you have layed for me. First, to make me confesse that the Church of England is not the Church of Christ. Secondly, to say, it is not known. Thirdly, to say the Church of God is not universal, but particular: and this is not the office of a Bishop. For if an innocent had come in your way, you would have done your best, I fee, to have intangled him.

Harp. Well Friend, quoth one of my Lords Chaplains, you are no innocent, as it appeareth.

Smith. By the grace of God, I am that I am; and this grace in me, I hope, is not in vain.

Ben. Well, quoth my Lord, laughing; tell me, how sayest thou of the Church?

Smith. I told you whereupon the true Church is builded, and I affirm in England to be the Congregation of God, and also in enim terram, as it is written; Their found is gone forth into all lands, and that this is the afflicted and persecuted Church, which ye cease not to imprison, slay, and kill. And in Corinth was not all the Congregation of God, but a number of those holy and elect People of God. For neither Paul nor Peter were present at Corinth when they wrote, and yet were they of the Church of GOD as many thousands more, which also communicate in that Holy Spirit.

Ben. What call ye Catholic, and what call you Church?

Smith. Catholic is universal, and Church is a Congregation knit together in unity.

Then after much like vain talk, it was laid to my charge, that my fellow and I spake one thing. Whereof I praised God and was sent again to a garden. Where after a while as my Brother Harwood and I had been together, cometh one of my Lords Chaplains, that much desired to commune with me, demanding first if I were a prisoner.

Smith. I am in this flesh a prisoner, and subject to my Master and yours; but I hope yet the Lords free man through Christ Jesus.

Doct. I do much desire to talk with you lovingly, because ye are a man that I much lament, with many other sweet words.

To which I answered; Sub melle later venenum. And after much ado about his god, I compelled him to say, that it must needs enter into the belly, and so fall into the draught. To which he answered.

Doct. What Derogation was it to Christ, when the Jewes spit in his face?

Smith. If the Jewes, being his enemies, did spit in his face, and we being his Friends throw him into the draught, which of us have deserved the greatest damnation? Then by your argument, he that doth injury to Christ, shall have a most plenteous Salvation.

Doct. Then that he away, and would have his humanity incomprehensible, making a comparison between our Soul and the Body of Christ, bringing in to favell turn, which way Christ came in among his Disciples, the Doors being shut?

Smith. Although it be said, that when he came the Doors were shut, yet have I as much to prove, that the Doors opened at his coming, as ye have to prove he came through the Door. For that mighty GOD that brought the Disciples out of prison, which yet when search came, were found shut, was able to let Christ in at the Door although it were shut: and yet it maketh not for your purpose; for they saw him, heard him, and felt him, and so can we not say ye do, neither is he in more then in one place at once. At which answer when he had made many scoffings, he departed away from me, and we were carried unto my Lords hall, where we were bailed of my Lords band, almost all the day, until our Keeper seeing their misorder, shut us up all in a fair chamber, while my Lord went into his Synagogue to condemn Master Denly and John Newman.

Then brought they up my Lord Mayor to hear our matter above in the chamber, and I first of all was called into the chamber, where my Lord intended to Sup. Where my Lord Mayor being set with the Bishop and one of the Sheriffs, wine was walking on every side: I standing before them as an out-cast, which made me remember how Pilar and Herod were made Friends, but no man was sorry for Josephs hurt. But after my Lord had well drunk, my Articles were sent for and read, and he demanded whether I said not, as was written?

Smith. That I have said, I have said, and what I have said, I do mean utterly.

Boner. Well, my Lord Mayor, your Lordship hath heard somewhat, what a stout Heretick this is, and that his Articles have deserved Death: Yet nevertheless for-much as they report me to seek Blood, and call me Bloody Boner, whereas God knoweth, I never sought any mans Blood in all my life, I have stayed him from the Confistory this day, whither I might have brought him justly: and yet here before your Lordship I desire him to turn, and I will with all speed dispatch him out of trouble; and this I profess before your Lordship and all this audience.

Smith. Why, my Lord, do ye put on this fair vifor before my Lord Mayor, to make him believe that ye seek not my Blood, to cloak your Murthers through my stoutness, as ye call it? Have ye not had my Brother Tomkins before you, whose hand when you had burned most cruelly, ye burnt also his Body; and not only of him but of a great many of the members of Christ, men that feared God, and lived virtuously, and also the Queens Majesties most true Subjects, as their goods and Bodies have made manifest? and seeing in these Saints ye have shewed so little mercy, shall it seem to my Lord and this audience, that ye shew me more favour? No, no, my Lord: But if ye mean as ye say, why then examine ye me of that I am not bound to answer you unto?

Boner. Well, what saist thou by the Sacrament of the Altar? is it not the very Body of Christ, flesh, Blood, and bone, as it was born of the Virgin?

Smith. I have answered, that it is none of Gods order, neither any Sacrament, but mans own vain invention; and shewed him the Lords institution. But when he was so earnest before the audience, declaring that we knew nothing, bringing out his Hoc est corpus meum, to lay in my dish, I proved before the audience, that it was a dead god, declaring the destination appointed between the two creatures of Bread and Wine, and that a Body without Blood hath no life. At which Harpsfield found himself much offended, and took the tale out of my Lords mouth saying,

Harp. I will approve by the Scriptures, that ye blaspheme God in so saying: for it is given in two parts, because there is two things shewed, that is to say, his Body and his passion, as saith Saint Paul: and therefore is the Bread his Body, and the Wine the representation of his Death and Bloodshedding.

Christ's face, and lips, which let him fall into the draught. Note one Catholick difference, which assemblith the Body of Christ, to the incomprehensible Sacrament, but what Christ is able to do in the Sacrament, but what he doth therein.

Robert Smith brought again before the Bishop and the Lord Mayor.

Boner examineth himself of Bloodiness.

Boner proved to be cruel and bloody.

By this question it may appear whether the Body of Christ be dead god, having Body without Blood.

Smith.

Smith. Ye falsitie the Word, and rack it to serve your purpose. For the wine was not only the shewing of his passion, but the bread also: for our Saviour saith, So oft as ye do this, do it in remembrance of me. And Saint Paul saith, So oft as ye eat of this bread, and drink of this cup, ye shall shew the Lords death till he come. And here is as much reverence given to the one, as to the other.

Even as the bread is the Body, so is the cup the Blood.

Wherefore if the bread be his Body, the cup must be his Blood, and as well ye make his Body in the cup, as his Blood in the bread. Then up rose my Lord, and went to the Table, where my Lord Mayor desired me to save my Soul. To whom I answered, I hope it was a ved through Christ Jesus, desiring him to have pity on his own Soul, and remember whole fword he carried.

Robert Smith committed of these into a Libbo.

At which I was carried into the garden, and there abode until the rest of my Friends were examined, and so were we sent away with many foul farewells to Newgate again, my Lord Bishop giving the Keeper a charge to lay me in Limbo.

Another examination of Robert Smith before the said Bishop.

Another examination of R. Smith.

I Pon Saturday at eight of the Clock, I was brought to his chamber again, and there by him examined, as followeth.

Boner beginneth with an untruth.

Bon. Thou Robert Smith, &c. saist that there is no Catholick Church here on earth.

Smith. Ye have heard me both speak the contrary, and ye have written as a witness of the same.

Bon. Yes, but I must ask thee this question: how saist thou?

The Church.

Smith. Must ye of necessity begin with a lie? it maketh manifest that ye determine to end with the same. But there shall no liars enter into the Kingdom of God. Nevertheless, if ye will be answered, ask mine Articles that were written yesterday, and they shall tell you that I have confessed a Church of God, as well in earth as in Heaven, and yet all one Church, and one mans members, even Christ Jesus.

Bon. Well, what saist thou to auricular confession? is it not necessary to be used in Christs Church, and wilt thou not be shiven of the Priest?

Auricular confession is but a pick-purse matter.

Smith. It is not needful to be used in Christs Church, as I answered yesterday. But if it be needful for your Church, it is to pick mens purses. And such pick-purse matters is all the whole rabble of your ceremonies: for all is but money matters that ye maintain.

Boner. Why, how art thou able to prove that confession is a pick-purse matter? Art thou not ashamed to say?

The incon- veniencies of Auricular confession:

Smith. I speak by experience. For I have both heard and seen the fruits of the same. For first it hath been, we see, a bewrayer of Kings secrets, and the secrets of other mens consciences; who being delivered, and glad to be discharged of their sins, have given to Priests great sums of money to absolve them, and sing Masses for their Souls health.

And for example, I began to bring in a Pageant, that by report was played at Saint Thomas of Acres, and where I was sometime a Child waiting on a Gentleman of Norfolk, which being bound in conscience through the perswasion of the Priest, gave away a great sum of his goods, and forgave unto Master Gresham a great sum of money, and to another as much. The Priest had for his part a sum, and the House had an annuity to keep him, the which thing when his Brother heard, he came down to London, and after declaration made to the Council, how by the subtilty of the Priest he had robbed his Wife and Children, recovered a great part again, to the value of two or three hundred pounds of Master Gresham and his other Friend; but what he gave to the House, could not be recovered. This tale began I to tell. But when my Lord saw it favored not to his purpose, he began to revile me, and said; By the Mass, if the Queens Majesty were of his mind, I should not come to talk before any man; but should be put into a sack, and a dog tied unto the same, and so should be thrown into the water.

Smith. To which I answered again, saying; I know you speak by practice, as much as by speculation: for both you and your predecessors have fought all means possible to kill Christ secretly; record of Master Hunne, whom your predecessor caused to be thrust in at the nose with hot burning needles, and then to be hanged, and said the same Hunne to have hanged himself: and also a good Brother of yours, a Bishop of your profession, having in his prison an innocent man, whom because he saw he was not able by the Scriptures to overcome, he made him privily to be hanged, and his flesh to be torn and plucked away with a pair of pinfers, & bringing him before the People said, the Rats had eaten him. Thus according to your Oath is all your dealing, and hath been; and as you, taking upon you the office, do not without Oaths open your mouth, no more do you without murder maintain your traditions.

Boner. Ah, ye are a generation of liars; there is not one true word that cometh out of your mouths.

Smith. Yes, my Lord, I have said that Jesus Christ is dead for my sins, and risen for my justification, and this is no lie.

Boner. Then made he his man to put in my tale of the Gentleman of Norfolk, and would have had me recite it again: which when I would not do, he made his man to put in such fumes as he imagined. At the end of this cometh in Master Mordant Knight, and late do to hear my examination. Then said my Lord, how saist thou Smith to the seven Sacraments? Believest thou not that they be Gods order, that is to say, the Sacrament of &c.

Smith. I believe that in Gods Church are but two Sacraments, that is to say, the Sacrament of Regeneration, and the Sacrament of the Lords Supper: and as for the Sacrament of the Altar, and all your Sacraments, they may well serve your Church, but Gods Church hath nothing to do with them, neither have I any thing to do to answer them, nor you to examine me of them.

Boner. Why, is Gods order changed in Baptism? In what point do we dissent from the Word of God?

Smith. First, in hallowing your water; in conjuring of the same; in Baptizing Children with anointing and spitting in their mouths, mingled with salt, and with many other lewd ceremonies, of which not one point is able to be proved in Gods order.

Boner. By the Mass this is the most unflattering'd Heretick that ever I heard speak.

Smith. Well sworn my Lord, ye keep a good watch.

Boner. Well, Mr. Controller, ye catch me at my words: but I will watch thee as well, I warrant thee.

Mordant. By my troth, my Lord, quoth Mr. Mordant, I never heard the like in all my life. But I pray you my Lord, mark well his answer for Baptism. He disalloweth therein holy oymntment, salt, and such other laudable ceremonies, which no christian man will deny.

Smith. That is a shameful blasphemy against Christ, so to use any mingle mangle in Baptizing young Infants.

Boner. I believe, I tell thee, that if they die before they be Baptized, they be damned.

Smith. Ye shall never be saved by that belief. But I pray you my Lord, shew me, are we saved by water, or by Christ?

Boner. By both.

Smith. Then the water died for our sins; and so must ye say, that the water hath life, and it being our Servant, and created for us, is our Saviour: this (my Lord) is a good Doctrine, is it not?

Boner. Why, how understandest thou the Scriptures? Except a man be born of water and of the Spirit, he cannot enter into the Kingdom of God.

And again, Suffer (saith our Saviour) these Children to come unto me: and if thou wilt not suffer them to be Baptized after the laudable order, thou testest them to come unto Christ.

Smith. Where ye alledge Saint John, Except a man, &c. and will thereby prove the water to save, and so the deed or work to save and put away sins, I will fend you to Saint Paul, which asketh of the Galatians, Whether they received the Spirit by the deeds of the Law or by the preaching of Faith? and there concludeth, that the Holy Ghost accompanieth the preaching of faith, and and with the word of faith entrench into the heart. So now if Baptism preach to me the walking in Christs Blood, so doth the Holy Ghost accompany it, and it is unto me as a Preacher, and not a Saviour. And where ye say, I let the Children to come unto Christ, it is manifest by our Saviours words, that ye let them to come, that will not suffer them to come to him without the necessity of water. For he saith, Suffer them to come unto me, and not unto water, and therefore if ye condemn them, ye condemn both the merits and words of Christ. For our Saviour saith, Except ye turn and become as Children, ye cannot enter into the Kingdom of God. And so brought I out many other examples, to make manifest, that Christ hath cleansed original sin, bringing in examples out of Scriptures for the same.

Boner. Then thou makest the water of none effect, and then put away water.

The element

the Holy

ed of some tism.

Smith. It is not (saith Saint Peter) the washing away of the filth of the flesh, but in that a good conscience contenteth unto God. And to prove that water onely bringeth not the Holy Ghost, it is written in the 8 of the Acts, that Simon received water but would have received the Holy Ghost for money. Also that the Holy Ghost hath come before Baptism; it is written that John had the Holy Ghost in his Mothers womb. Cornelius, Paul, and the Queen of Candace, servant, with many others, received the Holy Ghost before Baptism. Yea, and although your generation have set at naught the Word of God, and like swine turned his Words upside down; yet must his Church keep the same in that order which he left them, which his Church dare not break; and to judge Children damned that be not baptized, it is wicked.

Mord. By our Lady, Sir, but I believe that if my child die without water, he is damned.

Boner. Yea, and so do I, and all Catholick men, good Master Mordant.

Smith. Well, my Lord, such Catholick, such salvation.

Boner. Well Sir, what say you to the Sacrament of Orders?

The Sacrament of Orders.

Smith. Ye may call it the Sacrament of misorders: for all orders are appointed of God. But as for your shaving, anointing, greating, pollings, and rounding, there are no such things appointed in Gods Book, and therefore I have nothing to do to believe your orders. And as for you, my Lord, if ye had grace and intelligence, ye would not so disgrace your self as ye do.

Zeev sheweth

Boner. Saith thou so? now by my troth I will go shave my self to anger thee withall: and so sent for his Barber, which immediately came. And before my face at the Door of the next chamber he shaved himself, desiring me before he went, to answer to these Articles.

Holy Bread,
Holy water,
Anointing

Boner. What say you to Holy Bread and Holy Water, to the Sacrament of anointing, and to all the rest of such ceremonies of the Church?

Smith. I say, they be bables for fools to play withall, and not for the Children of God to exercise themselves in; and therefore they may go among the refuse. Then went away Master Mordant, and my Lord went to shaving, leaving there certain Doctors, as he called them, to assay what they could do, of whom I was baited for half an hour: of whom I also asked this question, Where were all you in the days of King Edward, that ye spake not that which ye speak now?

Talk between Zeev
Smith and the Doctors

Doct. We were in England.
Smith. Yea, but then ye had the faces of men, but now ye have put on Lions faces again, as saith S. John, Te shew your selves as full of malice as ye may be. For ye have for every time a vizor; yea, and if another King Edward should arise, ye would then say, Down with the Pope, for he is Antichrist, and so are all his Angels.

Then was I all to reviled, and so sent away, and brought in again to come before these men; and one of them that baited me before, asked me if I disallowed confession?

Smith. To whom I answered, Look in mine Articles, and they shall shew you what I allow.

Doct. Your Articles confess that you allow not auricular confession.

Smith. I allow it not, because the word alloweth is not, nor commandeth it.

Doct. Why, it is written, thou shalt not hide thy sins and offences.

Smith. No more do I when I confess them to almighty God.

Doct. Why, ye cannot say that ye can hide them from God, and therefore you must understand the words are spoken to be uttered to them that do not know them.

Smith. Ye have made a good answer, then must the Priest confess himself to me, as I to him. For I know his faults and secrets no more then he knoweth mine. But if ye confess you to the Priest, and not unto God, ye shall have the reward that Judas had: for he confessed himself to the Priest, and yet went and hanged himself by and by; and so as many as do not acknowledge their faults to God, are said to hide them.

Doct. What did they that came to John to be Baptized?

Smith. They came and confessed their sins unto almighty God.

Doct. And not unto John?

Smith. If it were unto John, as ye are not able to prove; yet was it to God, before John and the whole congregation.

Doct. Why, John was alone in the Wilderness.

Smith. Why, and yet the Scriptures say he had many Disciples; and that many Pharisees and Sadducees came to his Baptism. Here the Scriptures and you agree not. And if they confessed themselves to John, as ye say, it was to all the Congregation, as Saint Paul doth to Timothy, and to all that read his Epistle, in opening to all the hearers, that he was not worthy to be called an Apostle, because he had been a Tyrant. But as for ear-confession, ye never heard it allowed by the Word. For the Prophet David maketh his confession unto God, and saith, I will confess my sins unto the Lord. Daniel maketh his confession unto the Lord; Judith, Toby, Jeremy, Manasseh, with all the forefathers did even so. For the Lord hath said, Call upon me in the time of trouble, and I will deliver thee. Knock, ask, seek, with such like; and this is the Word of God; Now bring some what of the Word to help your self withal. Then they raged, and called me dog, and said I was damned.

Smith. Nay, ye are dogs, that because holy things are offered, will slay your Friends. For I may say with Saint Paul, I have fought with beasts in the likeness of men. For here I have been baited these two days, of my Lord and his great Bulls of Basan, and in his Hall beneath have I been baited of the rest of his band. With this came my Lord from shaving, and asked me how I liked him?

Smith. Forsooth, ye are even as wise as ye were before ye were shaved.

Boner. How standeth it, Master Doctors, have ye done any good?

Doct. No by my troth, my Lord, we can do no good.

Smith. Then it is fulfilled which is written, How can an evil tree bring forth good fruit?

Boner. Nay, naughty fellow, I fet these Gentlemen to bring thee home to Christ.

Smith. Such Gentlemen, such Christs; and as truly as they have that name from Christ, so truly do they teach Christ.

Boner. Well, wilt thou neither hear them nor me?

Smith. Yes I am compelled to hear you; but ye cannot compel me to follow you.

Boner. Well thou shalt be burnt at a stake in Smithfield if thou wilt not turn.

Smith. And ye shall burn in hell, if ye repent not: but my Lord, to put you out of doubt, because I am weary, I will strain courtly with you: I perceive you will not with your Doctors come unto me, and I am not determined to come unto you, by Gods grace. For I have hardened my face against you as hard as brass. Then after many railing sentences I was sent away. And thus have I left the truth of mine answers in writing (gentle Reader) being compelled by my Friends to do it: that ye may see how the Lord hath according to his promise given me a mouth and wisdom to answer in his cause, for which I am condemned, and my cause not heard.

The last

of R. Smith before S.
Boner, with his condemnation in the Confi-tory.

THe twelfth of July I was with my Brethren brought into the Confistory, and mine Articles read before my Lord Mayor and the Sheriffs, with all the assistants; to which I answered, as followeth, Boner. By my Faith, my Lord Mayor, I have shewed him as much favour as any man living might do: but I perceive all is lost, both in him and all his company.

Smith. At this word which he coupled with an Oath, came I in, and taking him with the manner, said, My Lord, it is written, Te must not Swear.

Boner. Ah Master controller, are ye come? Loe, my Lord Mayor, this is Master Speaker, pointing to my Brother Tankerfield, and this is Master Controller, pointing to me. And then beginning to read my Articles, he perlevered till he came at my Tale of the Gentleman of Norfolk, and then demanded of my Lord Mayor, if he heard of the same before. To which he answered, no. To whom I answered:

Smith. My Lord Mayor, will it please you to hear me recite it, as I heard it, and I told it, and then shall you hear the truth. For this tale that my Lord hath told, is untrue.

Boner. How say you good Master Mordant, spake he not this is here, as it is written? were ye not by?

Mord. Yes, my Lord, that it is: I heard him say it.

Smith. How heard you me say it, and were not present when I spake it? should such a man make a lie? it is manifestly proved that the Prophet saith; Even as the King saith, so saith the Judge, that he may do him a pleasure again. And so was brought out my goaler for trial therof, who there openly protested, that neither Mr. Mordant nor the Doctors before mentioned were present when I spake it. At which Master Mordant with blushing cheeks, said, he heard them read, and heard me affirm the same, which was also not true. Then proceeded my Lord with the rest of mine Articles, demanding of me, if I said not as was written. To which I answered, No:

and turning to my Lord Mayor, I said, I require you, my Lord Mayor, in Gods behalf, unto whom pertaineth your sword and justice, that I may herebefore your presence answer to these objections that are laid against me, and have the probation of the same; and if any thing that I have said or will say, to be proved (as my L. saith) Herein, I shall not onely with all my heart forsake the same, and cleave to the truth, but also recant wheresoever ye shall assign me, and all this audience shall be witnesses to the same.

Mayor. Why Smith, thou canst not deny, but this thou saidst.

Smith. Yes my Lord, I deny that which he hath written, because he hath both added to, and diminished from the same: But what I have spoken, I will never deny.

Mayor. Why, thou spakest against the blessed Sacrament of the Altar,

Smith. I denied it to be any Sacrament, and I do stand here to make probation of the same; and if my Lord here or any of his Doctors be able to approve either the name or usage of the same, I will recant mine error. Then spake my Brother Tankerfield, and defended the probation of things, which they called Herein: to the which the Bishop answered.

Bon. By my troth, Master Speaker, ye shall preach at a stake.

Smith. Well sworn, my Lord, ye keep a good watch.

Boner. Well, Master Controller, I am no Saint.

Smith. No, my Lord, nor yet good Bishop. For a Bishop, saith S. Paul, should be faultless, and a dedicate vessel unto God; and are ye not altham to sit in judgment, and be a blasphemer, condemning Innocents?

Bon. Well, Master Controller, ye are faultless.

Smith. My Lord Mayor, I require you in Gods Name, that I may have Justice. We be here to day a great many of Innocents that are wrongfully accused of Herein. And I require you, if you will not seem to be partial, let me have no more favor at your hands, then the Apostles had at the hands of Festus and Agrippa, which being Heathen and Infidels, gave him leave onely to speak for himself, but also heard the probation of his cause. This require I at your hands, which being a Christian Judge, I hope will not deny me that right, which the Heathen have suffered: if ye do, then shall all this audience, yea, and the Heathen speak shame of your fact. For a City (saith our Saviour) that is builded on a hill cannot be hid: if they therefore have the truth, let it come to light. For all that will do, come to the light, and they that do evil hate the light.

Then my Lord Mayor hanging down his head, said nothing, but the Bishop told me, I should preach at a Stake, and so the Sheriff cryed, with the Bishop, away with me.

Thus came I in before them four times, desiring Justice, but could have none: and at length my Friends requiring with one voyce the same, and could not have it, we had sentence, and then being carried out, were brought in again, and had it every man severally given. But before the Bishop gave me sentence, he told me in derision of my Brother Tankerfield, a tale between a Gentleman and his Cook. To which I answered, My Lord, ye fill the Peoples eares with fantasies and foolish tales, and make a laughing matter at Blood; but if ye were a true Bishop, ye should leave these railing sentences, and speak the words of God.

Boner. Well, I have offered to that naughty fellow, M. Speaker, your companion the Cook, that my Chancellor should here instruct him, but he hath here-with great disdain forsaken it. How sayest thou, wilt thou have him instruct thee, and lead thee in the right way?

Smith. My Lord, if your Chancellor shall do me any good, and take any pains, as ye say, let him take mine Articles in his hands, that ye have objected against me, and either prove one of them Herein, or any thing that you do to be good: and if he be able so to do, I stand here with all my heart to hear him; if not, have noneed, I praise God, of his Sermon: for I come to answer for my life, and not to hear a Sermon.

Then began the sentence, In Dei nomine. To which I answered, that he began in a wrong name, requiring of him, where he learned in Scriptures to give sentence of death against any man for his conscience sake. To the which he made no answer, but went forward to the end, and immediately cried, Away with him. Then I turned me to the Mayor, and said, Is it not enough for you my Lord Mayor, and ye that are the Sheriffs, that ye have left the straight way of the Lord, but that ye must condemn Christ causeless?

Boner. Well, Master Controller, now ye cannot say, but I have offered you fair, to have instruction. And now I pray thee, call me Bloody Bishop, and say, I seek thy Blood.

Smith. Well, my Lord, although neither I, nor any of this congregation do report the truth of your fact, yet shall these stones cry it out, rather then it shall be hidden.

Boner. Away with him, away with him.

Woodroffe. Away with him, take him away.

Smith. Well, good Friends, ye have seen and heard the great wrong that we have received this day, and ye are all records that we have desired the probation of our cause by Gods Book, and it hath not been granted: but we are condemned, and our cause not heard. Nevertheless, my Lord Mayor, for as much as here ye have excused Gods sword causeless, and will not hear the right of the poor. I commit my cause to Almighty God, that shall judge all men according unto right, before whom we shall both stand without Authority; and there will I stand in the right, and have true judgment, to your great confusion, except ye repent, which the Lord grant you to do, if it be his will. And then was I with the rest of my Brethren carried away to Newgate.

Thus, gentle Reader, as near as I can, I have set out the truth of my examination, and the verity of mine unjust condemnation for the truth, requiring God that it may not be laid to the charge of thee, O England, requiring your hearty prayers unto God for his grace and

Robert Smith.

Thus hast thou (good Reader) not only to note, but also to follow in this man a singular example of Christian fortitude, which so manfully and valiantly did stand in the defence of his Masters cause. And as thou seest him here boldly stand in examination before the Bishop and Doctors; so was he no less comfortable also in the Prison among his fellows. Which also is to be observed no less in his other Prison fellows, who being there together cast in an outward house within Newgate, had godly conference with themselves, with daily praying and publick readings, which they to their great comfort used in that house together; amongst whom this forefaid Smith was chief doer. Whose industry was always sollicitous, not only for them of his own company, but also his diligence was careful for other Prisoners, whom he ceased not to dehort and dissuade from their old accustomed iniquity; and many he converted unto his Religion. Divers Letters he wrote there in Prison to sundry his Friends, partly in metre, and partly in prose. And first in metre as followeth.

The godly behaviour of Robert Smith, and his Fellowes
in Prison.

O ye that love the Lord, see that ye hate the thing that is evil.

THe God that giveth life and light,
And leadeth into rest:
That breaketh bonds and bringeth out
The poor that are oppressed.

And keepeth mercy for the meek,
His treasure and his store:
Increase thy life in perfect love,
Both now and evermore.

That as thou hast begun to ground
In faith and fervent love:
Thou maiest be made a mighty Mount,
That never may remove.

That thou ensample may be stored
Among all thine increase:
That they may live and learn the like,
And pass their time in peace.

Thy salutations that were sent,
I heartily retain:
And send thee seventy times as much,
To thee and thine again.

And now because I know the goal,
That thou dost most desire:
I send thee here a paper full,
Is signed in the fire:

In hope thou wilt accept it well,
Although it be but small:
Because I have no other good,
To make amends withal.

For all thy free and friendly faiths,
Which thy good will hath wrought,
I send thee surely for a sinne

The thing that cost me nought.

Abstain from all ungodliness,
In dread direct your days:
Possess not sin in any wise,
Beware of wicked ways.

Hold fast your Faith unfeignably,
Build as you have begun:
And arm your self in perfect Faith,
To do as ye have done.

Left that the wicked make a mock,
That ye have taken in hand,
In leaving of the perfect Rock,
To build upon the Sand.

Beware these filthy Pharisees,
Their building is in Blood:
Eat not with them in any wise,
Their Leaven is not good.

Their Salt is all unseasonable:
And under good intents
They maintain all their knavery,
And murder innocents.

They seek to sit in Christ his seat,
And put him out of place:
And make all means that may be made
His doings to deface.

They keep him down with bills and bats,
That made the blind to see:
They make a god for Mice and Rats,
And say the same is he.

They shew like Sheep, and worst like Wolves,
Their baits be all for blood:
They kill and slay the simple Soules,
And rob them of their good.

And

The dark illusions of the Devil
Have dimmed so their eyes,
That they cannot abide the Truth,
To stir in any wise.

And if ye keep the perfect path,
(As I have hope you do)
Ye shall be sure to have such shame,
As they may put you to.

For, all that lead a godly life,
Shall surely suffer loss:
And eke the world will seek their shame,
And make them kiss the Cross.

Ye shall be killed all faith Christ,
Your sorrows shall not cease:
And yet in your afflictions,
I am your perfect peace.

For in the world ye shall have wo:
Because ye are unknown:
And eke because ye hate the world,
The world will love his own.

Be fervent therefore to the death,
Against all their decrees:
And God shall surely fight for thee Against thine Enemies.

Commit your cause unto the Lord,
Revenge not any evil:
And thou shalt see the wicked want,
When thou shalt have thy will.

For all afflictions that may fall,
That they can say or do:
They are not sure of the wealth,
That we attain unto.

For I have seen the Sinners spread Their branches like a Bay:
And yet ere one could turn his head,
Were withered clean away.

Beware that many make ye not
In riches to arise
Against the goodness of the Lord,
Among the worldly wise.

For many mischief it hath made,
That may not be exprest:
And many evils it hath begun,
Which may not be redrest.

For money maketh many a one,
In riches to rebel:
And he that maketh Gold a god,
He hath a Soul to sell.

It maketh Kings to kill and slay,
And waste their wits in war:
In leaving of the Wolf at home,
To hunt the Fox afar.

And where they should see justice done,
And set their Realm in rest:
By money they be made a mean
To see the poor oppressed.

It maketh Lords obey the Laws,
That they do ill and nought:
It maketh Bishops suck the Blood,
That God hath dearly bought.

And where they should be faithful friends,
And Fathers to their flock:
By money they do turn about,
Even like a Weather-cock.

The Priest doth make a money mean,
To have again his whores,
To put away his wedded Wife,
And Children out of doors.

It holdeth back the husbandman,
Which may not be forborn:
And will not suffer him to sow,
And cast abroad his Corn.

In like case it doth let again,
When that the seed they sow:
It choaketh up the Corn again,
So that it cannot grow.

The husband be would have a wife,
With Nobles new and old:
The wife would have the husband hang'd,
That she might have his gold.

It maketh murderers many a one,
And beareth much with blood:
The Child would see the Parents slain,
To seize upon their good.

And though it be a blessed thing,
Created in the kind:
It is a necessary evil,
Annexed to the mind.

For whose playeth with the Pitch,
His fingers are defiled:
And he that maketh Gold a god,
Shall surely be beguiled.

Be friendly to the fatherless,
And all that are oppressed:
Assist them always out of hand,
And see them set at rest.

In all your doings and your deeds
Let mercy still remain:
For with the measure that ye mete,
Shall ye be met again.

Be always lowly in your life,
Let love enjoy her own:
The highest Trees are seldom sure,
And soonest overthrown.

The Lions lack and suffer sore,
In hunger and in thirst:
And they that do oppress the poor,
Continue still accursed.

The Bee is but a little beast
In body or in sight:
And yet he bringeth more increase,
Than either Crow or Kite.

Therefore beware in any wise,
Keep well your watch always:
Be sure of Oil within your lamp,
Let not your light decay.

For Death despoileth them that lack,
And hateth them that have:
And treadeth down the rich and poor
Together in the grave.

Exhort your Children to be chaste,
Rebuke them for their ill:
And let them not at any wise
Be wedded to their will.

Laugh not with them, but keep them low,
Shew them no merry cheer:
Left thou do weep with them also,
But bring them up in fear.

And let your light and living shine,
That ye be not suspect:
To have the same within your self,
For which they are correct.

Be meek and modest in a mean,
Let all your deeds be done:
That they which are without the Law,
May see how right ye run.

Keep well the member in your mouth,
Your Tongue see that ye tame:
For out of little sparks of fire
Proceedeth out a flame.

And as the posson doth exprest,
The naivres of the Toad:
Even so the Tongue doth manifest
The heart that feareth God.

For therewith blest we God above,
And therewith curse we men:
And thereby murders do arise,
Through women now and then.

And seeing God hath given a Tongue,
And put it under power:
The surest way it is to set
A hatch before the door.

For God hath set you in a seat,
Of double low degree:
First unto God, and then to man,
A subject for to be.

I writenot that I see in you
These things to be suspect:
But only set before your face,
How sin should be correct.

For flesh and blood I know ye are,

Anno
1555.

As other women be:
And if ye dwell in flesh and blood,
There is infirmity.
Receive a warning willingly;
That to thy teeth is told:
Accomp the gift of greater price
Than if he gave thee gold.
A wise man, saith Solomon,
A warning will embrace:
A fool will sooner (as saith he)
Be smitten on the face.
And as your members must be dead
From all things that are vain:
Even so by baptism ye are born
To live with Christ again.
Thus farewell free and faithful friend:
The Lord that is above
Increase in thee a perfect faith,
And lead thee in his love.
And as I pray with perfect love,
And pour out bitter tears
For you and all that are at large Abroad among the briers:
Even so I pray thee to prefer
My person and my hands,
Unto the everlasting God
That hath me in his hand.
That I may pass out of this pond,
Wherein I am oppress'd:
Inclosed in a clod of clay,
That here can have no rest.
That as he hath begun in me
His mercies many one,
I may attain to overtake,
My brethren that be gone.
That when the death shall do his worst
Where he shall point a place,
I may be able like a man
To look him in the face.
For though he catch away my cloak,
My body into dust:
Yet am I sure to have a soul,
When death hath done his worst.
And though I leave a little dust Dissolved without blood:
I shall receive it safe again,
When God shall see it good.
For my Redeemer I am sure
Doth love for evermore,
And sitteth high upon the heavens,
For whom I hunger sore.
Even as the Deer with deadly wounds
Escaped from the snail,
Doth hast by all the means he may
To seek unto the foyl.
Of whom I hope to have a crown,
That always shall remain:
And eke enjoy a perfect peace,
For all my woe and pain.
The God that giveth all increase,
And seeketh still to save,
Abound in thee that perfect peace,
Which I do hope to have.
And I beseech the living God
To hold thee in his hands:
And with thee even with all my heart,
The blessing of my hands.
Which I esteem of higher price
Than pearl or precious stone:
And shall endure for evermore,
When earthly things are gone.
For though the fire do consume
Our treasure and our store:
Yet shall the goodness of the Lord
Endure for evermore.
And where thou art a friend to him
That is to me full dear,
That God of might make thee amends,
When all men shall appear.
That hath shewed mercy to the meek,
And rid them out of pain.

And thus the Lord possess thy spirit,
Till we do meet again.

If thou wilt have a recompence,
Abide still in obedience.

The Exhortation of Robert Smith unto his Children, commonly set out in the name of Mr. Rogers.

Give ear my Children to my words,
Whom God hath dearly bought:
Lay up my Law within your heart,
And print it in your thought.
For I your Father have foreseen
The frail and fleshy way,
Which flesh and blood would follow fain
Even to their own decay.
For all and every living beast,
Their cry do know full well:
But Adams heir, above the rest,
Are ready to rebel:
And all the creatures on the earth,
Full well can keep their way:
But man above all other beast,
Is apt to go astray.
For earth and ashes is his strength,
His glory and his reign:
And unto ashes at the length,
Shall he return again.
For flesh doth flourish like a flower,
And grow up like a grass,
And is consumed in an hour,
As it is brought to pass.
In me the image of your years,
Your treasure and your trust:
Whom ye do see before your face,
Dissolved into dust.
For as you see your fathers flesh Converted into clay:
Even so shall ye my children dear,
Consume and wear away.
The sun and moon, and eke the stars,
That serve the day and night:
The earth and every earthly thing
Shall be consumed quite.
And all the worship that is wrought
That have been heard or seen,
Shall clean consume and come to nought
As it had never been.
Therefore that ye may follow me,
Your father and your friend,
And enter into that same life,
Which never shall have end.
I leave you here a little book,
For you to look upon:
That you may see your fathers face,
When I am dead and gone.
Who for the hope of heavenly things,
While he did here remain,
Gave over all his golden years,
In prison and in pain.
Where I among mine iron bands,
Enclosed in the dark,
Not many days before my death,
Did dedicate this work
To you mine heirs of earthly things
Which I have left behind:
That ye may read and understand,
And keep it in your mind.
That as you have been heirs of that Which once shall wear away:
Even so ye may possess the part
Which never shall decay.
In following of your fathers foot:
In truth and eke in love:
That ye may also be his heirs
For evermore above.
And in example to your youth,
To whom I wish all good,

I preach you here a perfect faith,
And seal it with my blood.
Have God always before your eyes,
In all your whole intents :
Commit not sin in any wise,
Keep his Commandements.
Abhor that arrant whore of Rome,
And all her blasphemies :
And drink not of her decretals,
Nor yet of her decrees.
Give honour to your mother dear,
Remember well her pain :
And recompence her in her age,
In like with love again.
Be always aiding at her hand,
And let her not decay :
Remember well your fathers fall,
That should have been her stay.
Grove of your portion to the poor,
As riches doth arise :
And from the needy naked soul
Turn not away your eyes.
For he that will not bear the cry
Of such as are in need :
Shall cry himself and not be heard
When he would hope to speed.
If God have given you great increase,
And blessed well your store :
Remember ye are put in trust,
To minister the more.
Beware of foul and filthy lust,
Let whoredom have no place :
Keep clean your Vessels in the Lord,
That he may you embrace.
Ye are the Temples of the Lord,
For ye are dearly bought :
And they that do defile the same,
Shall surely come to nought.
Possess not pride in any case,
Build not your nests too high :
But have always before your face,
That ye be born to dye.
Defraud not him that hired is,
Your labour : to sustain :
But give him always out of hand,
His penny for his pain.
And as ye would that other men
Against you should proceed :
Do ye the same again to them,
When they do stand in need.
And part your portion with the poor,
In money and in meat :
And feed the famished feeble soul,
With that which ye should eat.
That when your members lacketh meat
And clothing to your back :
Ye may the better think on them
That now do live and lack.
Ask counsel also at the wife,
Give ear unto the end :
Refuse not you the sweet rebuke
Of him that is your friend.
Be thankful always to the Lord,
With prayer and with praise :
Desire you him in all your deeds,
Eke to direct your ways :
And sin not like that swinish sort,
Whose bellies being fed,
Consume their years upon the earth
From belly unto bed.
Seek first I say the living God ;
Set him always before :
And then be sure that he will bless
Your basket and your store.
And thus if you direct your days
According to this book,
Then shall they say that see your ways,
How like me you do look.
And when you have so perfectly,
Upon your fingers ends,
Possessed all within your book,

Then give it to your friends.
And I beseech the living God,
Replenish you with grace,
That I may have you in the heavens,
And see you face to face.
And though the sword have cut me off
Contrary to my kind,
That I could not enjoy your love,
According to my mind :
Yet I do hope when that the heavens
Shall vanish like a smoke :
I shall receive your perfect shape,
In body and in soul.
And that I may enjoy your love,
And ye enjoy the land,
I do beseech the living God
To hold you in his hand.
Farewel my children from the world
Where ye must yet remain :
The Lord of Hosts be your defence,
Till we do meet again.
Farewel my love, and loving wife,
My children, and my friends :
I hope to God to have you all,
When all things have their end.
And if you do abide in God,
As ye have now begun :
Your course I warrant will be short,
Ye have not far to run.
God grant you so to end your years
As ye shall think it best :
That ye may enter into heaven,
Where I do hope to rest.

Written at the Request of a Lady in her Book.

If you will walk the way
That Christ hath you assign'd :
Then learn this little verse,
Which I have left behind.
Be fervent in the truth,
Although it bear the blame :
And eke apply your youth,
To stick unto the same.
That when old age is come,
And death begins to call :
The truth may be your staff,
To stay you up withal.
And though it bring rebuke,
And cause you kiss the cross :
Yet is it a reward,
To all that suffer loss.
For here we do lay out
The thing : that be but vain :
But we are sure to reap
The thing : that do remain.
For all that ye do lose,
Is but a sinful slime,
And like unto a rose,
That tarrieth but a time.
But if ye carry Christ,
And walk the perfect way,
Ye shall possess the gold,
That never shall decay.
And all your fathers goods
Shall be your recompence :
If ye confess the word,
With double diligence.
Not only for to bear
His pure and perfect word,
But also to embrace
The fire and eke the sword.
And if ye keep this path,
And do not run a crook,
Then shall ye meet the man
That writ this in your Book.
In that eternal joy,
That always shall remain :
Thus farewel faithful friend,
Till we do meet again.

Teach me, O Lord, to walk thy ways,
My living to amend,
And I shall keep it all my days,
Even to my lives end.

Give me a mind to understand,
So shall I never start:
But I shall keep all thy precepts,
Even wholly with my heart.

Make me to go a perfect pace
In that I have begun:
For all my love and my delight,
Is in thy ways to run.

Encline my heart unto thy ways,
Set thou thereon my thoughts:
And let me not consume my days,
To cover that is naught.

O quicken me in all thy ways,
The world now to despise:
And from all fond and foolish toys,
Turn thou away mine eyes.

O plant in me thy perfect Word,
Which is to me so dear:
Lay up thy Law within my heart,
To keep me still in fear.

And rid me of that great rebuke
Which I do fear full sore:
For all thy judgments and thy law
Endure for evermore.

Behold, O Lord, in thy precepts,
Is all my whole delight:
O quicken me in all thy ways,
That I may walk aright.

To his Brother.

AS Nature doth me bind,
Because thou art my blood,
According to my kind
To give thee of my good.

That thou maist have in mind
How I have run my race,
Although thou bidst behind
But for a little space.

I give thee here a pearl,
The price of all my good,
For which I leave my life,
To buy it with my blood.

More worth then all the world,
Or ought that I can note,
Although it be yelad
In such a simple coat.

For when I had obtained
This pearl of such a price,
Then was I sure I gained
The way for to be wise.

It taught me how to fight,
My self for to despise,
To stick unto the light,
And eke to leave the lies.

In sending out my seed
With bonds and bitter tears,
That I might reap with joy
In everlasting years.

And have for all my loss
My travail and my pain,
A thousand times and more
Of better goods again.

And for because the good
That hath been got and gained,
And that the Lords elect Hath evermore obtained,

Is closed in this book
Which I do give to thee:
Wherein I have my part,
As thou thy self maist see.

In which I hope thou hast
A stock also in store:
And wilt not cease to sail

Till God hath made it more.

I will thee to beware,
Be sure thou keep it well:
For if thou do it lose,
Thy part shall be in hell.

And here I testify
Before the living God,
That I desire to do
The things that are forbid.

And as my judgment is,
My body to be brent,
My heart is surely set Thereunto to be consent.

And sith it is his will,
To put in me his power,
Upon his holy hill
To fight against this whore,

Full well I am content,
If be allow it so,
To stand with all my might
The whore to overthrow.

Even with a willing mind,
The death I will outface:
And as I am assured,
The battle to embrace.

That they which hear the truth,
How I have past the pike,
May set aside their youth,
And learn to do the like.

And though it be my lot, to let her suck my blood,
Yet am I well assured, it shall do her no good.

For she is set to kill the things she thinks accurst,
And shall not have her fill of blood until she burst.

And when as thou shalt see, or hear of my decease,
Pray to the living God, that I may pass in peace.

And when I am at rest, and rid out of my pain:
Then will I do the like for thee to God again.

And to my woful wife, and widow desolate,
Whom I do leave behind, in such a simple state,

And compassed with tears, and mournings many one;
Be thou her staying staff when I am dead and gone.

My mouth may not express the dolors of my mind:
Nor yet my heaviness to leave her here behind.

But as thou art my bone, my brother and my blood,
So let her have thy heart if it may do her good.

I took her from the world, and made her like the cross:
But if she hold her own, she shall not suffer loss.

For where she had before a man unto her make,
That by the force of fire was strangled at a stake,

Now shall she have a King to be her helping hand:
To whom pertain all things that are within the land.

And eke my daughter dear, whom I bequeath to thee,
To be brought up in fear, and learn the A B C.

That she may grow in grace, and ruled by the rod:
To learn and lead her life within the fear of God.

And always have in mind, thy brother being dead,
That thou art left behind a father in my stead.

And thou my brother dear, and eke my mothers son,
Come forth out of all fear, and do as I have done,

And God shall be thy guide, and give thee such increase,
That in the flames of fire thou shalt have perfect peace.

Into eternal joy, and pass out of all pain:
Where we shall meet with mirth, and never part again.

If thou wilt do my daughter good,
Be mindful of thy brothers blood.

To all which love God unfeignedly, and intend to lead a godly life according to his Gospel, and to persevere in his Truth unto the end: grace and peace from God the Father, and from our Lord Jesus Christ, Amen.

BE not afraid, most dearly beloved in our Saviour Jesus Christ, at these most perilous days, wherein by the sufferance of God, the Prince of darkness is broken loose, and rageth in his Members against the Elect of God with all cruelty, to set up again the Kingdom of Antichrist: against whom, see that ye be strong in faith to resist his most devilish doctrine with the pure Gospel

pel of God, arming your selves with patience, to abide whatsoever shall be laid to your charge for the Truths sake, knowing that thereunto ye be called, not only to believe in him, but also to suffer for him. Oh how happy are ye that in the sight of God are counted worthy to suffer for the testimony of Christ? Quiet therefore your selves, O my loving Brethren, and rejoyce in him for whom ye suffer: for unto you do remain the unspeakable joyes, which neither the eye hath seen, nor the ear hath heard, neither the heart of man is able to comprehend in any wife. Be not afraid of the bodily death, for your Names are written in the Book of Life. And the Prophets do record, that in the sight of the Lord, precious is the death of his Saints. Watch therefore and pray, that ye be not prevented in the day of temptation. Now cometh the day of your trial, wherein the waters rage, and the stormy winds blow. Now shall it appear, whether ye have builded upon the fleeting Sand, or upon the unmoveable Rock Christ, which is the Foundation of the Apostles and Prophets: whereon every house that is builded, groweth into an holy Temple of the Lord, by the mighty working of the Holy Ghost. Now approacheth the day of your battel, wherein it is required that ye shew your selves the valiant Souldiers of Christ Jesus, with the armour of God, that ye may be able to stand fast against all the crafty assaults of the Devil. Christ is your Captain, and ye be his Souldiers, whose cognifance is the Crofs, to the which he willingly humbled himself even unto the death, and thereby spoiled his enemies, and now triumpheth he over them in the glory of his Father, making intercession for them that here do remain to suffer the afflictions that are to be fulfilled in his Mystical Body. It behooveth therefore every one that he be counted his Scholar, to take up his own Crofs, and follow him, as ye have him for example: and I assure you that he being on your side, nothing shall be able to prevail against you. And that he will be with you even to the worlds end, ye have his promise in Matthew 28. He will go forth with his host as a Conqueror to make a conquest. He is the man that sitteth on the white horse, crowned with immortality, and ye Brethren, are his fellowship, whereof he is the Head. He hath your heart in his hand as a Bow bent after his godly will; he shall direct the same according to the riches of his glory, into all spiritual and heavenly cogitations. He is faithful and will not suffer you to be further assaulted, then he will give you strength to overcome, and in the most danger he will make a way, that ye may be able to bear it.

Shrink not therefore dear hearts, when ye shall be called to answer for the hope that is in you: for we have the Comforter, even the Spirit of Truth which was sent from the Heavens to teach us: He shall speak in us; he shall strengthen us: what is he then that shall be able to confound us? Nay, what Tyrant is he that now boasteth himself of his strength to do mischief, whom the Lord shall not with the same Spirit, by the mouth of his Servants, strike down to Hell fire? Yea, suddenly will the Lord bring down the glory of the proud Philistines, by the hands of his servant David. Their strength is in the spear and shield, but our help is in the name of the Lord which made both Heaven and Earth. He is our budder and wall, a strong tower of defence. He is our God, and we are his people. He shall bring the Counsels of the ungodly to nought. He shall take them in their own net. He shall destroy them in their own inventions. The right hand of the Lord shall work this wonder. His power is known among the Children of men. Their fathers have felt it, and are confounded. In like manner shall they know that there is no counsell against the Lord, when their secrets are opened to the whole world, and are found to be against the living God. Work they never so craftily, build they never so strongly; yet down shall their rabble fall, and the builders themselves shall then be fattered upon the face of the Earth, as accused of God. The just shall see this and be glad, and praise the name of the Lord, that so marvelously hath dealt with his Servants, as to bring their enemies under their feet. Then shall the fearful seed of Cain tremble and quake. Then shall the mocking Ismaelites, be cast out of door. Then shall the proud Nemrob for his labour lost. Then shall the Beasts of Babylon be troden under foot. Then shall the Scribes and Pharisees for madness fret and rage. Then shall their painted wisdom be known, for extream folly. Then shall the bloody Dragon be void of his prey. Then shall the Whore of Babylon receive double vengeance. Then shall they scratch their Crowns for the fall of their Millicres Harlot, whom they now serve for filthy lucre; when no man will buy their wares any more. Then shall the Popish Priesthood cry weal away with care, even when the Lord shall help his Servants; which day is not far off, the day wherein the Kingdom of Antichrist shall have an end, and never rise any more. In the mean time, abide in certain and sure hope, cleaving unto the promises of God, which in their own time shall be fulfilled.

Acquit your selves like men against the enemies of God in all humbleness of mind, be strong in spirit to acknowledge one God, one holy Saviour Jesus Christ, one only, everlasting and sufficient Sacrifice for the remission of sins, even the precious Body of the Lord Jesus once offered for all and for ever. Which now fireth on the right hand of God, and from thence shall he come to judge both the quick and the dead at the last day; and until that time occupyeth the blessed Body none other place to dwell in, to be kept in, to be inclosed in, but only in the Heavens, even in the glorious Majesty of God, personally abiding there in the Flesh, not coming down from thence till the last hour. And as he never ceaseth to be man, so doth he never lose the similitude of man; his body there hath his lineaments, he leaveth them not, so hath that body there his highness, and shrinketh not, and his manly shape he altereth not at any time. He is in that he took of the Virgin Mary, a natural man in all conditions, except sin.

And what he took of his blessed Mother, by the working of the Holy Ghost, he took it for ever, and will not exchange the same for any other. He took the shape of a man with the substance of his manhood, in one sacred womb. There were they two coupled together by the Holy Ghost, never to be divided asunder. He retaineth the one with the other, inseparably. As he will not alter the substance of his flesh into the substance of bread, no more will he alter the shape of his body into the form of bread. There cannot be a greater absurdity against the truth, than to think that he would leave the shape that he took in the Virgins womb, being an accident unto his manhood, and joyn unto the same a Wafer-cake baked in an Oven, or between a pair of Irons. As he is in Heaven very man, one only Mediator between God and Man, even the Man Christ Jesus, he it is that is the Propitiation for our sins. Be bold therefore to confess this most pure and Apostolical Doctrine; and also that all favour, mercy, and forgiveness cometh only by him. He only of God the Father was made for us all wisdom, righteousness, sanctification and redemption. All these are the gifts of God the Father, freely given unto us by Christ Jesus God and Man, through faith in his blood, and not by the merits of men; Gifts they are, I say, freely given unto us of favour, without our desert, by believing, and not by deserving. To this do the Law and the Prophets bear witness.

This Doctrine have all the blessed Martyrs of Christs Church witnessed with their blood to be true. To this truth, have all the Consciences of all true Believers subscribed ever since the Ascension of Christ. This witness is not of Man, but of God. What better quarrel can ye then have to give your lives for, than the Truth it self? That man that giveth his Life for the Truth, taketh the readiest way to life. He that hath the Popes Curse for the Truth, is sure of Christs Blessing. Well then, my Brethren, what shall now let? but that ye go forward as ye have begun? Nay, rather run with the runners, that ye may obtain the appointed glory. Hold on the right way, look not back, have the eye of your heart fixed upon God, and so run that ye may get hold of it. Cast away all your worldly self, and worldly respects, as the favour of friends, the fear of men, sensual affection, respect of persons, honour, praise, shame, rebuke, wealth, poverty, riches, lands, possessions, carnal fathers and mothers, wife and children, with the love of your own selves; and in respect of that heavenly treasure ye look for, let all these be denied, and utterly refused of you, so that in no condition they do abate your zeal, or quench your love towards God. In this case make no account of them, but rather repute them as vile, in comparison of everlasting life. Away with them as thorns that choke the heavenly Seed of the Gospel,

Gospel, where they be suffered to grow. They are burndes of the Flesh, which encumber the Soul. Exchange them therefore for advantage. Doth not he gain, that indureth heavenly and immortal treasure, for earthly and corruptible riches? Lo! that Man any thing, which of his carnal Father and Mother is forsaken, when therefore he received of God the Father to be his Child and Heir in Christ? Heavenly for Earthly, for Mortal Immortal, for transitory things permanent, is great gains to a Christian Confiscance.

Thou, therefore, as I began, I exhort you in the Lord, not to be afraid. Shrink not my Brethren, mistrust not God, be good comfort, rejoice in the Lord, hold fast your faith, and continue to the end. Deny the World, and take up your Cross, and follow him which is your halfman, and is gone before if you suffer with him, you shall reign with him. What way can you glorify the Name of your Heavenly Father better, than by suffering death for his Sons sake? What a spectacle shall it be to the World to behold so godly a fellowship as you servants of God join to fight a quarrel as the Gospel of Christ is, with pure a Conscience, to strong a Faith, and so lively a hope, to offer your selves to suffer most cruel torments of the hands of Gods enemies, and to end your days in peace, to receive in the resurrection of the Righteous, life everlasting?

Be strong therefore in your battle: The Lord God is on your side, and his truth is your cause; and against you be none, but the enemies of the Cross of Christ, as the Serpent and his seed, the Dragon with his Tail, the marked Men of the beast, the off-spring of the Pharises, the congregation malignant, the generation of Vicious, Murderers as their father the devil hath been from the beginning. To conclude, since they are as the Lord God hath always abhorred, and in all ages refuted and overthrown, God, from whom nothing is hid, knoweth what they are. He that searcheth the Hearts of Men, he hath found out them to be crafty, subtle, full of poison, proud, disdainful, stiffnecked, devourers, ravengers, and barkers against the truth, filthy and shameless; and therefore doth the Spirit of God, by the mouths of his holy Prophets and Apostles, call them by the names of Foxes,

Serpents, Cockatrices, Lions, Leopards, Bulls, Bears, Wolves, Dogs, Swine, Beasts, teaching us thereby to understand, that their natural inclination is: to deceive, Poison, and destroy (as much as in them lieth) the faithful and elect of God. But the Lord with his right Arm shall defend his little Flock against the whole rabblement of the Worldlings, which have conspired against him:
 he hath numbered all the hairs of his Childrens head, so that one of them shall not perish without his Fatherly Will. He keepeth the Sparrows, much more will he preserve them whom he hath purchased with the Blood of the immaculate Lamb. He will keep them unto the hour appointed, wherein the Name of God shall be glorified in his Saints. In the mean time let them work their Wills, let them envy, let them malign, let them flatter, burn, let them curse, ban, betray, whip, scourge, hang and persecute: for by these means God will try his elect as Gold in the Furnace; and by these fruits, shall he also bring themselves to be known what they be, for all their threats shall be as the noise of the Wind, and as the smoke of the skins. For as he that is suffering patiently for the Gospel of God, is thereby known to be of Christ, even so likewise is the persecutor of him known to be a member of Antichrist. Besides this, their extreme cruelty shall be a means the sooner to provoke God to take pity upon his servants, and to destroy them that so tyrannically entreat his People, as we may learn by the histories, as well in the bondage of Israel under Pharaoh in Egypt, as also in the miserable captivity of Judah in Babylon: Where, when the people of God were in most extreme thraldom, then did the Lord stretch forth his mighty power to deliver his servants. Though God for a time suffer them to be exalted in their own pride, yet shall they not escape his vengeance: They are his rod, and when he hath worn them to the stumps, then will he cast them into the fire; this shall be their final reward. Our duty is the mean while patiently to abide the will of God, which worketh all things for the best.

mitted to the vast flander of his Gospel, whereby the Name of God was evilsoken of among his enemies: for the which he now punisheth us with his fatherly corrections in this World; that we should not be damned with the World. By this mean feeketh he his sheep that were lost, to bring them home to the fold again. By this way feeketh he to reform us, that we may be like unto him after the Image of his Son Jesus Christ, in all holiness and righteousness before him. Finally, this way ureth his Godly Wisdom, to make us thereby to know him, and our selves in him, that aforesaid had in a manner forgotten him, praised be his Name therefore. And as for those Balaamites which now molest us, commit them to the hands of God, give him the vengeance, and he will reward them. Fall ye to prayer, and let these belly-gods prate. For he is in Heaven, and sleepeeth not, that keepeth Israel. He is in Heaven that made the Seas calmy, when the Disciples were afraid. Let us now faithfully call upon him, and he will hear us. Let us cry unto the Lord, for he is gracious and merciful. We will say, that he will be gracious unto him that will deliver us, and he will glorify us. If we come unto him, we shall find him turned unto us. If we repent us of our wickedness done against him, then shall he take away the plague that he hath devised against us.

Let us therefore earnestly repent, and bring forth the worthy fruits of repentance. Let us study to be his, then shall we not need to fear what these hypocrites do against us, which with their pretended holiness deceive the hearts of the simple, and abuse the authority of God in his Princes, abusing them (by their procurement) to testify their ambitious Praelacy, and to erect up their Idol again with the Romish Mass. God in whose hands are the hearts of Kings, open the heart of the Queens Highness to clype them out what they be, and lo to weed them out, that they no longer be suffered to trouble the Congregation of God, and to payvion the Realm with Pope-holy Doctrine. God almighty for his Son Jesus Chrills sake deliver the Queens Highness and this her Church and Realm, from these proud Prelates, which are as profitable in the Church of Christ as a Polecat in the middelf of a warren of Conies.

To conclude, my brethren, I commit you to God, and to the power of his word: which is able to establish you in all truth. His spirit be with you, and work always that ye may be mindful of your duties towards him, whose ye are both Body and Soul. Whom fee that ye love, serve, dread, and obey above all worldly powers, and for nothing under the Heavens defile your Conscience before God. Diffemble not with his word; God will not be mocked, nay that which defemble with him, deceive themselves. Such shall the Lord deny, and cast out at the last day: such I say, as bear two faces in one hood, such as deny the known truth; such as ultimately rebel against him. All such with their partakers shall the Lord destroy. God defend you from all such, and make you perfect unto the end. Your sorrow shall be turned unto joy,

Another Letter sent to his Wife.

TH God our Father eternal, which brought again from death our Lord Jesus Christ, keep thee, dear Wife, now and ever, Amen, and all thy Parents and Friends.
I praise God for his mercy. I am in the same state thou ye left me in, rather better than worse, looking daily for the living God, before whom I hunger full sore to appear, and receive the glory, of which I trust thou art willing to be a partaker. I give God most hearty thanks therefore, desiring thee of all loves to stand in that faith which thou hast received, and let no Man take away the feed that Almighty God hath won in thee, but lay hands of everlasting Life which shall ever abide, when both the earth and all earthly friends shall perish, desiring thee also to receive thankfully our trouble which is but mententry and light, as thou shalt find, and worthy of the things which shall be received on us; that we paitly enjoying our Cross, may attain to the place where our Saviour Christ is gone before, to the which I beseech God of his mercy bring us speedily. I have been much troubled about your deliverance, fearing much periva-

perswasions of worldlings, and have found a friend, which will (I trust) find a mean for you if you be not already provided, desiring you in any case to abide such order, as those my friends shall appoint in God. And hear well in mind the words which I spake at our departing, that as God hath found us, and also elected us worthy to suffer with him; we may endeavour our selves to follow uprightly in this our vocation, desiring you to present my hearty Commendations to all our Friends, and especially to your Parents, keeping your matter close in any wife. Give most hearty thanks to my Friend, which only for our cause is come to Windsor. Continue in Prayer. Be faultless in all things. Beware of abominations. Keep you clean from sin. Pray for me, as I do for you. I have sent you a piece of Gold for a token, and most entirely desire you to send me word if ye lack any thing. The Lord Jesus preserve you and yours, Amen. The martyrdom and comfortable death of Robt. Smith at Windsor,
An 1555.
Aug. 16.

The foresaid Robert Smith the valiant and constant Martyr of Christ, thus replenished, as ye have heard with the fortitude of Gods Spirit, was condemned at London by Boner their Bishop, the 12th day of July, and suffered at Uxbridge the 9th day of August, who as he had been a comfortable instrument of God before to all them that were in Prison with him: so now also being at the Stake, he did no less comfort the people, there standing about him, willing them to think well of his cause, and not to doubt but that his body dying in that quarrel, should rise again to life. And said he, I doubt not but that God will shew you some token thereof. At length he being well-nigh half burnt, and all black with fire, clutched together as in a lump like a black coal, all men thinking him for dead, suddenly rose upright before the people, lifting up the stumps of his arms, and clapping the same together, declaring a rejoicing heart unto them; and so bending down again, and hanging over the fire, slept in the Lord, and ended this mortal life.

LETTERS.

A Sententious Letter of Robert Smith, to Anne Smith his Wife.

A Letter of
R. Smith to his wife, full of ghostly instructions.

SEEK first to love God, dear Wife, with your whole heart, and then shall it be easie to love your Neighbour.

Be friendly to all Creatures, and especially to your own Soul.

Be always an enemy to the Devil and the World, but especially to your own Flesh.

In hearing of good things joyn the ears of your head and heart together.

Seek unity and quietness with all men, but specially with your Conscience; for he will not easily be intreated.

Love all men, but especially your Enemies.

Hate the sins that are past, but especially those to come.

Be good to thy enemy.

Be as ready to further your Enemy, as he is to hinder you, that ye may be the Child of God.

Defile not that which Christ hath cleansed, lest his blood be laid to your charge.

A double helmet to the taught.

Remember that GOD hath hedged in your tongue with the teeth and lips, that it might speak under correction.

Cast out the nause in thine own eye first.

Be ready at all times to look to your brothers eye, but especially in your own eye: For he that warneth other of that he himself is faulty, doth give his neighbour the clear wine, and keepeth the dregs to himself.

Correct not to be rich.

Beware of riches and worldly honour: for without understanding, prayer, and fasting, it is a snare, and also poverty, all which are like to consuming fire, of which if a man take a little, it will warm him, but if he take too much, it will consume him. For it is hard for a man to carry fire in his bosom, and not to be burnt.

Blessed be the merciful.

Shew mercy unto the Saints for Christs sake, and Christ shall reward you for the Saints sake. Among all other Prisoners visit your own Soul: for it is inclosed in a perilous Prison.

If you will love God, hate evil; and ye shall obtain the reward of well doing.

Thus fare you well good Anne. Have me heartily commended to all that love the Lord unfeignedly. I beseech you have me in your prayer while I am living, and I am assured the Lord will accept it. Bring up my Children and yours in the fear of God, and then shall I not fail but receive you together in the everlasting Kingdom of God, which I go unto.

Your Husband, Robert Smith.

If ye will meet with me again,
For sake not Christ for any pain.

Another Letter sent to his wife Anne Smith.

THE Grace of Almighty God be always with you, and comfort, strengthen, and stablish you in all things, that what his blessed will is, ye may follow faithfully, to his honour, my comfort, and your own salvation, and the good ensample to our Posterity.

I have received your Letter, and I praise God, without any danger: nevertheless, if Gods marvellous goodness had not brought it to my hands by Peter the Keeper, there might have risen a great trouble upon the same. For well ye know George is a wicked man, utterly without all fear of God; and if he had gotten it, the Council sure had seen it. But Peter like an honest man never opened it. Wherefore I desire you from henceforth let your Letters be delivered at Chancery-lane end, to my Sister Tankerfield, and she may deliver them safe into my hand.

We are very streightly kept, I praise God of his mercy. Nevertheless Almighty God is always with us. I have sent you that ye wrote for. The two Nutmegs that should have gone by Nicholas to our Friends, I send now, and desire them to accept them as a poor Prisoners gift, until God give more largely. Thomas Towson sendeth you a Penny, I pray you give him thanks for the same, and Dirick also. I have sent you of that little that I have two pieces of Spanish money. The Lord Jesus have you in his custody, and send you good speed.

In any case keep your self close, I doubt much of your wallings. Have my hearty Commendations to your Parents, and desire them with you to have me in their Prayers. Be fervent in Prayer, pray, pray, pray, that God would of his mercy put up his Sword, and look on his People. Tell my Brother, with Commendations, that the next comer shall bring up the Epistle and Exhortation, I have written all this fortnight for my Lady, yea, and almost done nothing else. I would have sent him the Articles of William Flower, and my talk with him, if I could have delivered it from the Prison. The Holy Ghost keep you, I would ye could make a means, for your money, to send a Cheefe to Peter, for I find much kindness at his hands. Ye shall always hear of me at Tankerfields house. All the Congregation salute you. Fare you most heartily well.

I have not yet (tell my Brother) spoken with the person. There hath come so streight a Commandment, that no man might come to us, because Tooley cursed the Pope at the Gallows. They thought it to be our counsel.

Yours, and ever yours,
Robert Smith.

I sent you by Mr. Alexander a Purle with money. I have certain Tokens for you, sent by my Prison Fellowsto you, that is, from Mr. Hawkes 12 d. from Mr. Simson

Your husband Robert Smith,

A Letter sent to his friend.

Another Letter of Rob Smith to a friend or his. THE eternal God keep you in his fear. I have hearty commendations unto you and your husband, beseeching Almighty God to preserve you in well doing, and in perfect knowledge of his Christ, that ye may be found faultless in the day of the Lord. I have heard say, that my friend is given over to vanity; it breaketh my heart, not only to hear that he so doth, but also reacheth other, that it is unprofitful to go to all abomination, which now stand in the Idols Temples. Nevertheless, dear friend, be ye not moved to follow sinners; for they have no inheritance with God and Christ. But look, that by going into the Idol Temple, ye defile not the Temple of God; for light hath no fellowship with darkness. But look what the Lord hath commanded, that do. For if not going to Church were without perfection, they would not learn you that lesson. But all things that is sweet to the Flesh, is allowed of the Fleshly. The Lord shall reward every Man according to his works, and he that leadeth into captivity, shall go into captivity, and he that by the Fleshly Man is led in the Flesh, shall of the Flesh reap corruption. The Lord Jesus give thee his holy Spirit, Amen.

I have sent thee an Epistle in metre, which is not to be laid up in my coffer, but in thy heart. Seek peace, and pursue it. Fear God, love God with all thy Heart, with all thy Soul, and with all thy strength.

Thy friend and all Mens in Christ Jesus, Robert Smith.

Scribled in much hast from N. the twelfth of May. Robert Smith to all Faithful Servants of Christ, exhorting them to be strong under Persecution.

Content thy self with patience,
With Christ to bear the Cross of pain,
Which can and will thee recompence,
A thousand fold with joyes again.
Let nothing cause thy heart to quail,
Launch out thy boat, bale up thy sail,

Put from the shore:
And beshou sure thou shalt attain,
Vnto the port that shall remain.

For evermore.

The burning of Stephen Harwood, and Thomas Fust, martyred for the testimony of the Gospel.

Stephen Harwood, Thomas Fust, Martyrs of God, that is to say, Stephen Harwood at Stratford, and Thomas Fust at Ware. Which both two, as they were about one time burned with the fore-mentioned Robert Smith and George Tankerfield, although in sundry places, so were they also examined and openly Condemned together with them. Their parents, because it was joyed all in one, with the process of Robert Smith, and other of the same company above mentioned, I thought it superfluous again to repeat the same; save that of Thomas Fust this is to be added, that whereas he in his last appearing the 12. of July, was moved by the Bishop to revoke his opinion, thus he answered, No (said he) my Lord, for there is no truth cometh out of your Mouth, but all lies. Ye condemn Men and will not hear the Truth. Where can ye find any anointing or greasing in Gods Book? I speak nothing but the Truth, and I am certain that it is the Truth that I speak. This answer of him only I find noted by the Register; although how slenderly these Registers have dealt in uttering such matters, that is, in omitting those things which most worthy were to be known, by their doings it is safe to be seen. But to be short, after their answers made, both he and Thomas Fust were for their faithful perseverance Condemned together by the Bishop in his customary place, as hereticks to be burned, and so as before ye have heard, finished their Martyrdom, the one at Stratford, & the other at Ware, in the Month of August, and year above said.

The constant Martyrdom of William Hale, burned at Barnet.

OF the same company of these ten above recorded, which were sent up to Bishop Boner by Sir Nicholas Hale and other Commissioners, in the company of George Tankerfield and Robert Smith, was also William Hale of Thorp in the County of Essex, who likewise being examined with the rest, the 12. of July received with them also the sentence of Condemnation. Giving this exhortation withal to the lookers on: A good People, said he, beware of this Idolatry, and this Antichrist, pointing unto the Bishop of London, and so was he delivered to the Sheriffs as an heretic to be burned, who sent him to Barnet, where about the latter end of August he most constantly sealed up his Faith with the confining of his Body by cruel fire, yielding his Soul unto the Lord Jesus his only and most sure Redeemer.

George King, Thomas Lyes, John Wade, sickned in Prison, and were buried in the fields.

YE heard before of ten sundry persons sent out of Newgate by Master Hale and other Commissioners, to be examined of Boner Bishop of London. Of whom six already have been executed in several places, as hath been shewed; whose names were Elizabeth Warr, George Tankerfield, Robert Smith, Stephen Harwood, Thomas Fust, and William Hale. Other three, to wit, George King, Thomas Lyes, and John Wade sickned in Lollards Tower, were so weak that they were removed into sundry houses within the City of London, and there departed, and were cast out into the fields, and there buried by night of the faithful Brethren, when none in the day durst do it, proper metum Judaeorum. The last that remained of this forefild company was Joan Laysh of Layshford, the daughter-in-law to John Warr and Elizabeth Warr, Martyrs: but because she was reprieved to a longer day, her story and Martyrdom we will defer till the Month of January the next year following.

William Andrew.

THe like Catholick charity was also shewed upon William Andrew of Horsley, in the County of Essex, Carpenter, who was brought to Newgate the first day of April, Anno 1555. by John Morham Constable of Maulden in Essex. The first and principal promoter of him was the Lord Rich, who sent him first to Prison. Another great doer against him also seemeth to be Sir Richard Southwell Knight, by a Letter written by him to Boner, as by the Copy hereof appeareth.

Bishop Boner.

Plenish it your Lordship to understand, that the Lord Rich did about seven or eight weeks past, send up unto the Council, one William Andrew of Thorp, within the County of Essex, an arrogant Heretic. Their pleasure was to command me to commit him unto Newgate, where he remaineth, and as I am informed, hath infected a number in the Prison with his heresie. Your Lordship shall do very well, if it please you to convene him before you, and to take order with him, as his case doth require. I know the Council meant to have writ herein unto your Lordship, but by occasion of other business, the thing hath been omitted. Wherefore knowing their good pleasure, I did advise the Keeper of Newgate to wait upon you with these few lines. And so referring the rest to your vertuous consideration, I remain your good Lordships to command, this 12. of June, 1555.

This William Andrew being twice brought before Boner to Examination, there manfully stood in the defence of his Religion. The Martyrdom of Robert Samuel, Preacher, suffering for the true defence of Christs Gospel.

Mr. Fyffer Justice persecutor of Christs People.

MAfter Fyffer, Justice, dwelling at Coldock in the County of Suffolke, and a little from Ipswich, being in continual hatred against the truth and the professors of the same, did not only not cease day nor night to study how to bring those in thrall and captivity, that were honest and godly inclined to Religion; but also whatsoever they were that once came in his claws, they easily escaped not without clog of Conscience, or else loss of Life, so greedily was there of Blood. Among many whom he had troubled, there was one Samuel, in King Edwards days a very godly and right faithful Preacher of Gods Word, who for his valiant and constant behaviour in his Sermons, leaveth worthy of high admiration. He was

Minister at Bayfield in Suffolke, where he taught faithfully and fruitfully that flock which the Lord had committed to his charge, so long as the time would suffer him to do his duty.

At the last being removed from the Ministry, and put from his Benefice (as many other good Pastors were beside) when he could not avoid the raging violence of the time, yet would he not give over his care that he had for his Flock, but would teach them privily and by stealth, when he could not openly be suffered so to do. At what time order was taken by the Queen, to be published by the Commissioners, that all Priests which had married in King Edwards days, putting their wives from them, should be compelled to return again to their chastity and single life. This Decree would not Samuel stand unto, for that he knew it to be manifestly wicked and abominable; but determining with himself that Gods Laws were not to be broken for Mans traditions, kept his Wife still at Ipswich, and gave his diligence in the mean time to the instructing of other which were about him, as occasion served. At last Master Foster having intelligence hereof, being a great doer in those quarters, foresaw no time nor diligence, but oftsoons sendeth out his espials abroad, laying hard wait for Samuel, that if he came home to his Wife at any time, they might apprehend him, and carry him to Prison.

In conclusion, when such as should betray him espied him at home with his Wife, they bringing word to the Officer, came immediately flocking about his house, and beset it with a great company, and so took him in the night season, because they durst not do it in the day time, for fear of trouble and tumult; although good Samuel did nothing withstand them at all, but meekly yielded himself into their clutches of his own accord. When they had thus caught him, they put him into Ipswich Jail, where he passed his time meekly among his Godly Brethren, so long as he was permitted to continue there. Howbeit not long after, being taken from thence, he was carried (through the malice of the wicked sort) to Norwich, where the said Bishop Doctor Hoper (whether he or Dr. Dunning his Chancellor) full like unmerciful Prelates exercised great cruelty against him, as indeed they were Men in that time of persecution, as had not their match, for strained and cruel tormenting the Bodies of the Saints among all the rest beside, especially through the peevish get Dr. Hoper. For although Anno 1555. the other were sharp enough in their Generation; yet could they be satisfied with imprisonment and death, and could go no farther. Neither did I ever yet hear of any besides these, which so far exceeded all bounds of pity and compassion in tormenting their poor Brethren, as this Bishop did; in such sort, that many of them he perverted, and brought quite from the truth, and some from their wits also.

The cruel handling of Rob. Samuel
in Prison.

The Bishop therefore, or else his Chancellor, thinking that he might as easily prevail with Samuel, as he had done with the other before, kept him in a very strait Prison at his first coming, where he was chained bolt-upright to a great Post, in such sort, that standing only on tip-toe, he was fain to stay up the whole poise or weight of his body thereby. And to make amends for the cruelty or pain that he suffered, they added a far more grievous torment, keeping him without meat and drink, whereby he was unmercifully vexed through hunger and thirst; saying that he had every day allowed two or three mouthfuls of bread, and three spoonfuls of water, to the end rather that he might be reserved to further torment, than that they would preserve his life.

Rob. Samuel

Prison.

O worthy constancy of the Martyr! O pitiless hearts of Papists, worthy to be complained of, and to be accused before God and Nature! O the wonderful strength of Christ in his Members! Whose stomach, though it had been made of Adamant stone, would not have relented at the intolerable vexations, and extreme pains above Nature? How oftentimes would he have drunken his own water? But his body was so dried up with his long emptiness, that he was not able to make one drop of water.

Samuel brought to burning.

At the last, when he was brought forth to be burned, which was but a trifle in comparison of those pains that he had passed, certain there were that heard him declare what strange things had happened unto him during the time of his imprisonment: to wit, that after he had been famished or pined with hunger two or three days together, he then fell into a sleep, as it were one half in a slumber; at which time one clad all in white seemed to stand before him, which ministered comfort unto him by these words; Samuel, Samuel, be of good cheer, and take a good heart unto thee. For after this day shalt thou never be either hungry or thirsty. Which thing came even to pass accordingly; for speedily after he was burned, and from that time till he should suffer, he felt neither hunger nor thirst. And this declared he to the end; as he said, that all men might behold the wonderful works of God. Many more like matters concerning the great comfort he had of Christ in his afflictions, he could utter, he said, besides this; but that shamefastness and modesty would not suffer him to utter it. And yet if it had pleased God, I would he had been less modest in that behalf, that the love and care that Christ hath of his might have the more appeared thereby unto us by such present Arguments, for the more plentiful comfort of the godly, though there be sufficient testimonies of the same in the holy Scriptures already.

No less memorable it is, and worthy also to be noted, concerning the three Ladders which he told to divers he saw in his sleep, set up toward Heaven; of the which there was one somewhat longer than the rest, but yet at length they became one joining (as it were) all three together. This was a forewarning revealed unto him, declaring undoubtedly the Martyrdom first of himself, and from the death of two honest women, which were brought forth, and suffered in the same Town anon after.

Another
memorable Vision of Samuel in Prison.

As this godly Martyr was going to the fire, there came a certain Maid to him, which took him about the neck and kissed him, who being marked by them that were present, was sought for the next day after to be had to Prison and burned, as the very party her self informed me: Howbeit, as God of his goodness would have it, she escaped their fiery hands, keeping her self secret in the Town a good while after. But as this Maid, called Rose Nottingham, was marvellously preferred by the Providence of God; so there were other two honest women did fall into the rage and fury of that time. The

Two godly women, the one a Brewers wife, the other was a Shoemakers wife, both together now espoused to a new Husband, Christ.

With these two was this Maid aforesaid very familiar and well acquainted, who on a time giving counsel to the one of them, that she should convey her self away while she had time and space, seeing she could not away with the Queens unjust proceedings, had this answer at her hands again: I know well, saith she, that it is lawful enough to fly away, which remedy you may use, if you list. But my case standeth otherwise. I am tied to my Husband, and have beside a sort of young Children at home; and then I know not how my Husband, being a Carnal man, will take my departure from him; therefore I am minded, for the love of Christ and his Truth, to stand to the extremity of the matter.

And

And so the next day after Samuel suffered, these two godly Wives, the one called Anne Patten, the other called Jane Trunchfield, the Wife of Michael Trunchfield, Shoemaker of Ipswich, were apprehended, and had both to Prison together. Which as they were both by Sex and Nature somewhat tender; so were they at first less able to endure the strictness of the Prison, and especially the Brewers Wife was cast into marvellous great agonies and troubles of mind thereby. But Christ beholding the weak infirmity of his Servant, did not fail to help her when she was in this necessity. So at the length they both suffered after Samuel, Anno 1536. Febr. 19. as shall be by the Lords grace declared hereafter. And these, no doubt, were those two Ladders, which being joynted with the third, Samuel saw stretched up into Heaven: This blessed Samuel, the Servant of Christ, suffered the 31 of August, Anno 1555.

1 Cor. 10.

A Man knoweth not his time, but as the fish is taken with the Angle, and as the birds are caught with the snare; even so are men caught and taken in the perilous time when it cometh upon them. 'The time cometh; the day draweth near, Ezekiel 7. Better it were to die (as the Preacher saith) then to live and see the miserable works which are done under the Sun; such fudden and strange mutation, such woful, heinous, and lamentable divisions so fast approach, and none or very few thoroughly repent. Alas for this sinful Nation, a People of great iniquity and seed of ungraciousness, corrupting their ways. They have forsaken the Lord, they have provoked the holy One of Israel to anger, and are gone backward. Who now liveth not in such security and rest, as though all dangers were clean overpast? Who now blindeth and buffeteth not Christ, which seeth me, and seeth me not? Yea, who liveth not now in such felicity, worldly pleasures and joyes, wholly seeking the world, providing and craftily flitting for the earthly clod and all carnal appetites, as though sin were clean forgotten, overthrown, and devoured? Like hogghish Gergeffers, now are we more afraid and ashamed of Christ our Messias, fearing the loss of our filthy Pigs, I mean our transitory Goods, and disquieting of our sinful and mortal Bodies in this short, uncertain, and miserable life, then of a Legion of Devils, seducing and driving us from hearing, reading, and believing Christ Gods eternal Son, and his holy Word, the power to save our Souls, unto vanities, lies, and fables, and to this bewitching world.

Oh perilous abundance of goods, too much satirity of meats, wealth, and quietness, which destroyed with so many souls, those goodly Cities, Sodom and Gomorrah! Jeroboam, so long as he was but a poor man, not yet advanced to his dignity, lived in the Laws of God without reprehension; but brought once to wealth and prosperous state, he became a wicked and most shameful Idolater. And what made the covetous young man so loath to follow Christ, when he was bidden to forsake that worldly wealth which he then enjoyed? Wo be unto these false illusions of the World, baits of Perdition, hooks of the Devil, which have so shamefully deceived and seduced full many from the right path unto the Lord, into the High-ways of Confusion and Perpetual Perdition.

We might now worthily (dear Christians) lament and bewail our heavy state, miserable condition, and sorrowful chance: yea, I say, we might well accuse our selves, and with Job curse these our troublous, wicked, and bloody last days of this world, were it not that we both fee and believe, and find in Gods sacred Book, that a remnant God hath in all Ages reserved, I mean the faithful, as many as have been from the beginning of the world, exercised, whetted, and polished with divers afflictions, troubles, and toffings, cast and dashed against all perils and dangers, as the very dross and out-casts of the Earth, and yet will in no wise halt between God and Baal; for God verily abhorreth two men in one: he cannot away with them that are between both, but casteth them away as a filthy vomit. Christ will not part spoil with his mortal enemy the Devil; he will have all, or lose all: he will not permit the Devil to have the service of the body, and he to stand contented with the heart and mind: but he will be glorified both in your bodies and in your spirits, which are his, as S. Paul saith, 1 Cor. 6. For he hath made, bought all, and dearly paid for all, as S. Peter saith, With his own immaculate body hath he clean discharged your bodies from sin, death, and hell, and with his most precious blood paid your ransom and full price once for all and for ever.

Now what harm, I pray you, or what loss sustain you by this? Why are you, O vain men, more afraid of Jesus your gentle Saviour, and his Gospel of Salvation, then of a Legion of cruel Devils, going about with false delusions utterly to destroy you both bodies and souls? Think you to be more sure then under your Captain, Christ? Do you promise your selves to be more quiet in Satans service, then in Christs Religion? Effect you more their transitory and pernicious pleasures, then God and all his heavenly treasures? Oh palpable darkness, horrible madness, and wilful blindness, without comparison, too much to be suffered any longer! We see and will not see; we know and will not know; yea, we smart and will not feel, and that our Conscience well knoweth. Oh miserable and brainless souls, which would for foolish pleasures and slippery wealth lose the Royal Kingdom and permanent joyes of God, with the everlasting glory which he hath prepared for them that truly love him, and renounce the world. The Children of the world live in pleasure and wealth; and the Devil, who is their God and Prince of this world, keepeth their wealth which is proper unto them, and letteth them enjoy it. But let us which be of Christ seek and inquire for heavenly things, which by Gods promise and mercy in Christ shall be peculiar unto us. Let, I say, the Cretians, Epicures, and such other beastly Belials and Carnal People, pass for things that be pleasant for the body, and do appertain to this transitory life: Tet shall they come (as the Kingly Prophet saith) run about the City of God, to and fro bowling like dogs, desiring one scrap of the joys of Gods Elect, but all too late, as the rich Glutton did.

Let us therefore pass for those things that do pertain to the Spirit, and be Celestial. We must be here (saith Paul) not as inhabitants, and home dwellers, but as strangers: not as strangers only, but after the mind of Paul, as painful souldiers appointed of our Governour to fight against the Governour of darkness of this world, against spiritual craftiness in heavenly things. The time is come; we must to it; the judgment must begin first at the House of God. Began they not first with the green and foppy Tree? and what followed then on the dry branches? Jeremy speaking in the Person of God, saith; In the City wherein my Name is invocated, will I begin to punish: but as for you (meaning the wicked) shall you be as innocents, and not once touch. Nay, the dregs of Gods wrath, the bottom of all sorrows, are reserved unto them in the end: but Gods household shall drink the flower of the Cup of his Mercy. And therefore let us say with Ezechias; Play the men, and shrink not: Let us comfort our selves, for the Lord is with us our helper, and fighteth for us. The Lord is (saith he) with you, when you be with him; and when you seek him, he will be found of you: And again, when you forsake him, he will forsake you.

Wherefore we ought not to be dismayed, or discourage our selves, but rather to be of good comfort; not to be sad but merry; not sorrowful, but joyful, in that God of his goodness will vouchsafe to take us as his beloved Children, to subdue our sinful lusts, our wretched flesh and blood unto his glory, the promoting of his holy Word, and edifying of his Church. What if the earthly house of this our habitation (Paul meaning the body) be destroyed? We know assuredly we shall have

Wherefore, let all the wicked enemies of Christ, and all the unbelievers, look to be tormented and vexed with all hellish Furies, and clean without hope of Gods accounting day, which know not God in Christ to be their very righteousness, their life, their only salvation and alone Saviour, nor believe in him. They must, faith S. John, needs abide and perish with their sins in death and in eternal damnation. But we be the Children of Saints, as the elder Toby did answer, and look for another life, which God shall give to all them which change not their faith, nor shrink not from him. Rejoyce therefore ye Christian afflicted brethren, for they cannot take our souls and bodies out of the hands of the Almighty, which be kept as in the bottom of our most sweet and loving Father: and if we abide fast in Christ, and turn not away like Weather-cocks, surely we shall live forever. Christ affirmeth the same, saying, My sheep hear my voice, I know them, they hearken unto me, and to no strangers, and I give them everlasting life, for they shall not be lost, and no man shall pluck them out of my hands: no, nor yet this flattering world with all his vain pleasures, nor any Tyrant with his great threats and stout brags can once move them out of the way of eternal life. What consolation and comfort may we have more pleasant and effectuous than this? God is on our side, and fighteth for us; he suffereth, he smareth, and is afflicted with us. As the world can do nothing against his might, neither intaking away, or diminishing of his glory, nor putting him from his Celestial Throne; so can it not harm nor hurt any one of his Children without his good will. For we are Members of his Body, out of his Flesh, and of his Bones, and as dear to him as the Apple of his Eye.

Precious is the death of Gods Saints.

Let us therefore with an earnest faith set fast hold and sure feeling upon the Promises of God in the Gospel, and let us not be fuddled from the same by any temptation, tribulation, or persecution. Let us consider the verity of God to be invincible, inviolable, and immutable, promising and giving us his faithful Souldiers life eternal. It is he only that hath deserved it for us: It is his only benefit, and of his only meere mercy, and unto him only must we render thanks. Let not therefore the vain fantasies and dreams of men, and foolish gauds and toys of the world, nor the crafty delutions of the Devil, drive and separate us from our hope of the Crown of Righteousness, that is laid up in store for us against the last day. Oh that happy and merry last day, I mean to the faithful, when Christ by his Covenant shall grant and give unto them that overcome, and keep his words to the end, that they may ascend and sit in seat with him, as he hath ascended and sitteth on Throne with his Father. The same body and soul that is now with Christ afflicted, shall then be with Christ glorified: now in the Butchers hands, as sheep appointed to dye; then sitting at Gods Table with Christ in his Kingdom, as Gods honourable and dear Children; where we shall have for earthly poverty, heavenly riches; for hunger and thirst, satiety of the pleasant presence of the glory of God; for sorrows, troubles, and cold irons, celestial joyes, and the company of Angels; and for a bodily death, life eternal. Oh happy souls! Oh precious death and evermore blessed, right dear in the eyes of God; to you the spring of the Lord shall ever be flourishing. Then (as faith Isa. 41) The redeemed shall return and come again into Sion, praising the Lord, and eternal mercies shall be over their heads: they shall obtain mirth and solace; sorrow and we shall be utterly vanquished. Yea, I am he, faith the Lord, that in all things giveth you everlasting consolation. To whom with the Father and the Holy Ghost, be glory and praise for ever, Amen.

Considering with my self these perillous times; perishing days, and the unconſtant and miſerable ſtate of man, the decay of our faith, the ſiniſter report and falſe ſlander of Gods moſt holy Word, theſe urgent cauſes in Conſcience do conſtrain me to confeſs and acknowledge my faith and meaning in Chriſts holy Religion, as S. Peter teacheth me, ſaying, Beready always to give an answer to every man that asketh you a reason of the hope that is in you, and that with meekness and fear, having a good conscience, that when they backbite you as evil doers, they may be ashamed, forasmuch as they have falsely accused your good conversation in Christ.

As touching my Doctrine, for that little Talent that God hath given me, God I take to record, I mine own Conſcience and mine Auditory knoweth, that I neither in doctrine nor manners willingly taught any other thing than I received of the holy Patriarchs, Prophets, Chriſt, and his Apoſtles. For it were not only ſin, but alſo the very part of a curſed Miſcreant, to deny, bely, or betray the inſocency of that heavenly doctrine, or to be aſhamed to Chriſt planted it with his moſt precious blood, and all good men have more eſteemed the true and inſalſible Word of God, then all this tranſitory World, or their own mortal lives. And I believe this Doctrine of the Patriarchs, Prophets, Chriſt, and his Apoſtles, to be ſufficient and abſolutely perfect to inſtruct and teach me, and all the holy Church, of our duties towards God, the Magiſtrates, and our Neighbours.

Mark 3.

One God.

Three Persons.

First and principally I do aſſuredly believe, without any doubting, that there is one Deity or Divine Eſſence, and Infinite Subſtance; which is both called, and is indeed God everlaſting, unbodily, unpartible, unmeaſurable in power, wiſdom, and goodneſs, the Maker and Preſerver of all things, as well viſible as inviſible; and yet there be three diſtinct Perſons, all of one Godhead or Divine Being, and all of one power, coequal, conſubſtantial, coeternal, the Father, the Son, and the Holy Ghoſt.

I believe in GOD the Father Almighty, &c. As touching God the Father of Heaven, I believe as much as holy Scripture teacheth me to believe. The Father is the firſt Perſon in the Trinity, firſt cauſe of our Salvation, which hath bleſſed us with all manner of bleſſings in heavenly things by Chriſt, which hath choſen us before the foundations of the world were laid, that we ſhould be holy and without blame before him; who hath predeſtinate us and ordained us to be his Children of Adoption, through Chriſt Jeſus; in him, as it is ſaid, we live, we move, and have our being; he nourisheth, feedeth, and giveth meat to every Creature.

I believe that the Word, that is, the Son of God the ſecond Perſon in the Trinity, did take mans nature in the womb of the bleſſed Virgin Mary: So that there be in him two Natures, a Divine Nature, and a Humane Nature, in the unity of one Perſon inſeparable, conjoynd and knit in one Chriſt, truly God, and truly Man, the expreſs and perfect Image of the inviſible God, wherein the will of God the Father ſhineth apparently, and wherein man, as it were in a glaſs, may behold what he ought to do, that he may pleaſe God the Father.

I believe in the Holy Ghoſt, coequal with God the Father and the Son, and proceeding from them both; by whoſe virtue, ſtrength, and operation, the true Catholick Church, which is the Communion and Society of Saints, is guided in all truth and verity, and kept from all errors and falſe doctrine, the Devil, and all power of ſin. Which Church is ſanctified and hallowed with the precious blood and ſpirit of our Lord Jeſus Chriſt; which hath alſo her ſign and mark, that ſhe heareth and followeth the voice of her only and true Paſtor Chriſt, and no ſtrangers. This Church alſo is the Houſe of God, the Congregation of the living God, the Pillar of Truth, the lively Body of Chriſts Church both in name and in deed.

I believe the Reſurrection of the Body, whereby in the laſt day all men ſhall riſe again from death, the ſouls joynd again to the bodies, the good to everlaſting life, the wicked to everlaſting pain and puniſhment. And nothing may more certainly ſtabliſh and confirm our faith, that we ſhall riſe again immortal both in body and ſoul, then the Reſurrection of Chriſt our Saviour, and firſt fruits of the dead. Now that Chriſt our Head is riſen, we being his Body and Members muſt follow our Head. Death, Hell, and Sin cannot ſunder nor pluck us from him. For as the Son cannot be divided nor ſundered from the Father, nor the Holy Ghoſt from them both, no more may we, being the faithful Members of Chriſt, be ſeparated from Chriſt. And for a confirmation of our Reſurrection, Chriſt would be ſeen after his Reſurrection in his moſt glorious body, his wounds being handled and felt, ſpeaking and teaching, eating and drinking, &c. We look (ſaith S. Paul) for Jeſus Chriſt our Saviour, which ſhall tranſfigure our vile bodies, and conform them to his glorious body by the ſame power and vertue, wherewith he is able to ſubdue all things: even like as the grain of Wheat ſown in the ground is firſt purified and brought as into a thing of nought, yet after that it ſpringeth up freſhly with a more goodly colour, form, and beauty then it had before. The body is ſown in corruption, and riſeth in incorruption; it is ſown in diſhonour, and riſeth in honour.

Verily, verily, I ſay unto you (ſaith Chriſt) he that heareth my word, and believeth on him that ſent me, hath everlaſting life, and ſhall not come into damnation, but is eſcaped from death to life. It is Chriſt that died once for our ſins, and is riſen again, never more to dye: It is he that ſwallowed up death, and hath caſt it under his feet for ever. What now can death do unto us? Verily nothing elſe, but for a little time ſeparate our precious ſouls from our wretched bodies, that divine ſubſtance from a maſs of ſin, that eternal life from a body of death, and ſo ſend our ſouls out of this miſerable, wretched, and ſorrowful life, cumbered with all calamities, unto that moſt bleſſed felicity and joyes eternal.

As concerning the holy and reverend Sacraments of Chriſts Church, which be in number two, the Sacrament of Baptiſm, and the Supper of the Lord. I believe them to be as S. The Sacrament of Baptiſm is a mark of Chriſts Church, a Seal and Confirmation of our acceptance into the Grace and Favour of God for Chriſts ſake. For his Innocency, his Righteouſneſs, his Holineſs, his Juſtice, is ours, given us of God, and our Sins and Unrighteouſneſs, by his obedience and abating of himſelf to the death of the Croſs, are his, wherof Baptiſm is the ſign, ſeal, and confirmation.

Bap-

Anno 1555. Baptism is also a sign of Repentance, to testify that we be born to the waves of perils, and changes of life, to the intent that we should dye continually, as long as we live, from sin, and rise again like new men unto righteousness, Rom. 6.

The other Sacrament, which is the Supper and holy Maundy of our Saviour Christ, whereby the Church of Christ is known, I believe to be a remembrance of Christs Death and Passion, a seal and confirmation of his most precious body given unto death, even to the vile death of the Cross, wherewith we are redeemed and delivered from sin, death, hell, and damnation. It is a visible Word, because it worketh the same thing in the eyes, which the Word worketh in the ears. For like as the Word is a mean to the ears, whereby the Holy Ghost moveth the heart to believe, Rom. 10. so this Sacrament is a mean to the eyes, whereby the Holy Ghost moveth the heart to believe: it preacheth peace between God and man; it exhorteth to mutual love and all godly life, and teacheth to condemn the world for the life to come, when as Christ shall appear, which now is in Heaven, and no where else as concerning his Humane Body.

Yet do I believe assuredly, that his very Body is present in his most holy Supper at the contemplation of our spiritual eyes, and so verily eaten with the mouth of our Faith. For as soon as I hear these most comfortable and heavenly words spoken and pronounced by the mouth of the Minister: This is my Body which is given for you: when I hear (I say) this heavenly harmony of Gods infallible Promises and Truth: I look not upon, neither do I behold bread and wine; for I take and receive the words simply and plainly, even as Christ spake them. For hearing these words, my senses be wrapt and utterly excluded; for faith wholly taketh place, and not flesh, nor the carnal imaginations of our gross fleshly, and unconverted eating after the manner of our bodily food, which profiteth nothing at all as Christ witnesseth, John 6. but with a sorrowful and wounded Conscience, an hungry and thirsty Soul, a pure and faithful mind do fully embrace, behold, and feed, and look upon that most glorious Body of Christ in Heaven, at the right hand of God the Father, very God and very Man, which was crucified and slain, and his blood shed for our sins, there now making intercession, offering and giving his holy body for me, for my body, for my ransom, for my full price and satisfaction, who is my Christ, and all that ever he hath; and by this spiritual and faithful eating of this lively and heavenly bread, I feel the most sweet sap and taste of the fruits, benefits, and unspeakable joyes of Christs Death and Passion, fully digested into the bowels of my Soul. For my mind is quieted from all worldly adversities, turmoilings, and troubles, my Conscience is pacified from sin, death, hell, and damnation; my soul is full, and hath even enough, and will no more; for all things are but loss, vile dung, and dross, vain vanity, for the excellent knowledge sake of Christ Jesus my Lord and Saviour.

Thus now is Christs flesh my very meat indeed, and his blood my very drink indeed, and I am become flesh of his flesh, and bone of his bones. Now I live, yet not I, but Christ liveth in me: yea, I dwell in him, and he in me; for through faith in Christ, and for Christs sake we are one, that is, of one consent, mind and fellowship with the Father, the Son, and the Holy Ghost, Job. 17. Thus am I assured by Gods grace, my dwelling and resting place for body and soul, life and death. And thus I commit my cause unto Christ the righteous and just Judge, who will another day judge these debates and controversies; whom I humbly beseech to cast his tender and merciful eyes upon the afflicted and ruinous Churches, and shortly to reduce them into a godly and perpetual concord, Amen.

Thus do I believe, and this is my faith and my understanding in Christ my Saviour, and his true and holy Religion. And this whosoever is ashamed to do among this adulterous and sinful Generation, of him shall the Son of Man be ashamed, when he cometh in the glory of his Father with the holy Angels.

Robert Samuel

William Allen, Martyr.

Now after the suffering of Robert Samuel, about the beginning of September, was burned William Allen in Walsingham, labouring man, servant sometime to John Houghton of Somerset. He being brought before the Bishop, and asked the cause why he was imprisoned; answered, That he was put in Prison, because he would not follow the Cross, saying; that he would never go on Procession.

Then being willed by the Bishop to return again to the Catholic Church; he answered, that he would turn to the Catholic Church, but not to the Romish Church; and said, That if he saw the King and Queen, and all other follow the Cross, or kneel down to the Cross, he would not. For the which, Sentence of Condemnation was given against him the 12. of August, and he burned at Walsingham about the beginning of September, who declared such constancy at his Martyrdom, and had such credit with the Justices, by reason of his upright and well tried conversation among them, that he was suffered to go united to his suffering, and there being fastened with a Chain, stood quietly without shrinking until he died.

The Martyrdom of Roger Coo of Melford in Suffolk, Sheerman, first examined before the Bishop of Norwich, and by him condemned, Anno 1555. August 12.

Roger Coo brought before the Bishop, first was asked why he was imprisoned. Coo. At the Justices commandment. Bish. There was some cause why. Coo. Here is my Accuser, let him declare. And his Accuser said, that he would not receive the Sacrament.

Bish. Then the Bishop said, that he thought he had transgressed a Law.

Coo. But Coo answered that there was no law to transgress.

Bish. The Bishop then asked, what he said to the law that then was?

Coo. He answered how he had been in Prison a long time, and knew it not.

No, said his Accuser, nor will not. My Lord, ask him when he received the Sacrament.

Coo. When Coo heard him say so, he said, I pray you my Lord let him sit down and examine me himself.

Bish. But the Bishop would not hear that, but said, Coo, why? will ye not receive.

Coo. He answered him, That the Bishop of Rome had changed Gods Ordinances, and given the people bread and wine in stead of the Gospel, and the belief of the same.

Bish. How prove you that?

Coo. Our Saviour said, My flesh is meat in deed, and my blood is drink in deed. He that eateth my flesh, and drinketh my blood abideth in me, and I in him, and the bread and wine doth not so.

Bish. Well Coo, thou dost slander our holy Fathers. Did not Christ take bread, give thanks, and brake it, and said, This is my Body?

Coo. Yes, said he; and so he went further with the Text, saying, Which shall be given for you: do this in remembrance of me.

Bish. You have said the truth.

Coo. Then Coo replied further, and said, Christ willed to do this in remembrance of him, and not to say this in remembrance of him, neither did the Holy Ghost so lead the Apostles, but taught them to give thanks, and to break bread from house to house, and not to say as the Bishop said.

Bish. How prove you that?

Coo. It is written in the second of the Acts.

Then the Bishops Chaplain said it was true.

Bish. The Bishop asked him if he could say his Belief.

Coo. He answered yea, and so said part of the Creed, and then after he said, he believed more; for he believed the Ten Commandments, that it was meet for all such such as look to be saved, to be obedient unto them.

Bish. Is not the holy Church to be believed also?

Coo. Yes, if it be builded upon the Word of God.

Bish. The Bishop said to Coo, that he had charge of his soul.

Coo. Have ye so my Lord? Then if ye go to the Devil for your sins, where shall I become?

Bish. Do you not believe as your Father did? Was not he an honest man?

Daniel 9.

Coo. It is written, that after Christ hath suffered, There shall come a People with the Prince that shall destroy both City and Sanctuary. I pray you shew me whether this destruction was in my fathers time, or now?

Bish. The Bishop not answering his question, asked him whether he would not obey the Kings Laws.

Coo. As far as they agree with the Word of God, I will obey them.

Bish. * Whether they agree with the Word of God or not, we be bound to obey them, if the King were an Infidel.

* Well spoken, and like the Popes Clerk.

Coo. If Syrach, Mysaac, and Abednago had so done. Nebuchodonsor had not confessed the living God.

Bish. Then the Bishop told him, that these 22. years we have been governed with such Kings.

Coo. My Lord, why were ye then dumb, and did not speak or bark?

Bish. I durst not for fear of death: and thus they ended.

But after this done, it was reported that I railed; wherefore I called it to memory, and wrote this my railing, that light should not be taken for darkness, nor sin for holiness, and the Devil for God, who ought to be feared and honoured both now and ever, Amen.

The Martyrdom of Roger Coo at Yoxford, Anno 1555. Sept.

This Roger Coo, an aged Father, after his sundry troubles and conflicts with his Adversaries, at length was committed to the fire at Yoxford in the County of Sussex, where he most blessedly ended his aged years, Anno 1555. Mens. Septemb.

Thomas Cob of Haverhill, Butcher, Martyr.

Anno

1555.

Over and besides this foresaid Roger Coo, William Allen, James Abbes of Stokenneyland, Robert Samuel, Thomas Cob of Haverhill, Butcher, executed in the Month of September aforesaid. Who being brought and examined by Michael Dunning, the bloody Chancellor of Norwich; first, whether he believed that Christ is really and substantially in the Sacrament of the Altar; answered, That the Body of Christ, born of the blessed Virgin, was in Heaven, and otherwise (he said) he would not answer, because he had read it in the Scripture, that Christ did ascend, and did never descend since; and therefore said, that he had not learned in the Scripture, that Christ should be in the Sacrament.

The Real Presence of Christ only in Heaven.

Furthermore, being demanded whether he would obey the Laws of the Realm of England, made for the unity of faith, or no: he answered, That his body should be at the King and Queens commandment so far as the Law of God would suffer, &c. In fine, the said Thomas Cob being condemned the same 12. day of August, with the other his Fellow-Martyrs, was burned in the Town of Thetford, Anno 1555. Mens. Septemb.

The Martyrdom of Thomas Cob at Thetford, Anno 1555. Sep.

The Martyrdom of George Catmer, Robert Streater, Anthony Burward, George Brodbridge, and James Tuty.

Now from Norfolk and Suffolk, to return again into the Diocets of Canterbury, we have to intreat of five worthy Martyrs, whose blood in the same year and month of September was spilt for the true testimony of Christ, and his Gospels cause. The Names of the which five Martyrs, were these:

George Catmer of Hitch.
Robert Streater of Hitch.
Anthony Burward of Calate.
George Brodbridge of Bromfield.
James Tuty of Brenchley.

The burning of five Martyrs at Canterbury.

Examination of these five Martyrs

Who upon the Third day of August were brought before Thornon the foresaid Bishop of Dover and his Complices, and there were both joyntly and severally examined upon certain Articles, touching the Sacrament of their Altar, Auricular Confession, and other such like.

Examination and answers of Catmer.

To the which the said Catmer (being first examined) made answer on this wise; Christ (quoth he) sitteth in Heaven on the right hand of God the Father; and therefore I do not believe him to be in the Sacrament of the Altar: but he is in the worthy Receiver Spiritually, and the Sacrament, as you use it, is an abominable Idol.

Next unto him was called forth Robert Streater who being also asked, Whether he did believe the Real Presence of Christ in the Sacrament of the Altar, said, Anno 1555. Unto this present time and month of September, Heretic and Idolatry (quoth he) in that ye teach to worship a false God in the Sacrament, enclosed in a Box. It is you that are the malignant Church; for in your Church there are twenty things used against the Law of God.

Second examined. The like objection was articulate also against Anthony Barward, who also said, that their Sacrament was made an Idol.

Broadbridge examined. After him was George Broadbridge demanded what he said to those Articles. Who answered, that he would not be confessed of a Priest, because he could not forgive his own sins. And further said, that in the Sacrament of the Altar there is not the real Body of our Saviour Christ, but Bread given in the remembrance of him. Moreover, as for your holy Bread, your holy Water, and your Mass, I do (quoth he) utterly despise them.

John Tutty And last of all, did also James Tutty make and confirm their said former answers.

And therefore they were all five condemned to be burned as Heretics, and so were they all, in one fire at Canterbury aforesaid, about the sixth day of September then next following.

Thomas Hayward and John Goreway, Martyrs.

Th. Hayward, John Goreway, Martyrs. Although the rage and vehemency of this terrible Persecution in Queen Maries days did chiefly light in London, Essex, Norfolk, Suffolk, and Kent, as hath been partly already declared; yet notwithstanding, besides the same, we find but few parts of this Realm free from this fatal storm, but some good Martyrs or other there shed their blood. And first to begin with the Diocess of Litchfield and Coventry, there we find these two to be condemned and also burned about the middle of the said Month of September at the Town of Litchfield; whose names were Thomas Hayward and John Goreway.

The persecution and story of Mr. Robert Glover Gentleman, and of John Glover his Brother, in the Diocess of Litchfield.

The story of Mr. Robert Glover, Martyr, and of Mr. John Glover his brother. Unto this present time and month of September, pertaineth also the memorable Martyrdom of Mr. Robert Glover Gentleman, in the Diocess of Litchfield and Coventry. Of whose apprehension and troubles, because I cannot well intreat, but I must also intermix some mention of his Brother John Glover, forasmuch as this privy Commission was chiefly sent down for the said John, and not for Robert Glover, (albeit it pleased Almighty God, that John escaped, and Robert in his stead was apprehended.) I thought therefore in one story to comprehend them both, in describing some part of their virtuous institution and order of life: and first to begin with John the eldest Brother. Who being a Gentleman, and heir to his Father, dwelling in the Town of Mancton, was endued with fair Possessions of worldly Goods, but yet much more plentifully enriched with Gods heavenly grace and inward virtues. Which grace of God so working in him, he with his other Brethren, Robert and William, not only received and embraced the happy light of Christs holy Gospel, but also most devoutly zealously professed, and no less diligently in their living and conversation followed the same; much unlike unto our Table-Gospellers now adays, Virtutem qui verba putant, ut lucum ligna, as Horace saith.

And as touching this foresaid John Glover (who through his manifold afflictions seemed to have a deeper taste and contemplation of spiritual things, joynd with mortification from all worldly cares more than the other had) although sufficient relation be made before in our first edition to be seen; yet concerning his spiritual conflicts, and the Lords gracious working in him, because the consideration thereof is both worthy of memory, and the example may work experience peradventure to the comfort of the godly, it shall not be hurtful to rehearse some part of the same. So it pleased God to lay his heavy hand of inward afflictions and grievous passions upon this man, that though he suffered not the pains of the outward fire, as his Brother and other Martyrs did; yet if we consider what inwardly in spirit and mind this man felt and suffered; and that so long time, he may well be counted with his Brother Robert for a Martyr, being no less desirous with him of the same Martyrdom; yea, and in comparison may seem to be Chronicled for a double Martyr.

For as the said Robert was speedily dispatched with the sharp and extrem torments of the fire in a short time; so this no less blessed Saint of God, what and how much more grievous pangs, what sorrowful torments, what boiling heats of the fire of hell in his spirit inwardly he felt and sustained, no speech outwardly is able to express. Being young, I remember I was once or twice with him, who partly by his talk I perceived, and partly by mine own eyes saw to be so worn and consumed by the space of five years, that neither almost any brooking of meat, quietness of sleep, pleasure of life, yea and almost no kind of senses was left in him: And doubtless I have greatly wondered oftentimes at the marvellous works and operation of Christ shewed upon him, who unless he had relieved betimes his poor wretched servant so far worn; with some opportune consolation now and then betwixt, it could not possible be, that he should have sustained so intolerable pains and torments. And yet the occasion thereof was not of so great moment and weight: But this we see common among holy and blessed men, how the more devout and godly they are, having the fear of God before their eyes, the more suspicion and mistrust they have of themselves; whereby it cometh to pass, that often they are so terrified and perplexed with small matters, as though they were huge Mountains; whereas contrary, others there be whom most heinous and very sore crimes indeed do nothing touch or stir at all.

The occasion of this was, That he being first called by the light of the Holy Spirit to the knowledge of the Gospel, and having received a wondrous sweet feeling of Christs heavenly Kingdom, his mind, after that, falling a little to some cogitation of his former affairs belonging to his vocation, began by and by to mislead himself upon the occasion of these words written in the seventh to the Hebrews; For it cannot be that they which were once illumined, and have tasted the heavenly gift, &c. Upon the consideration of which words, he fully persuaded himself that he had sinned verily against the Holy Ghost: even so much, that if he had been in the deepest pit of Hell, he could almost have departed no more of his salvation. Here readily every good man may judge of himself, what terrors, boilings, and convulsions tormented in the mean time in his woful breast: although it be hard for any man to judge the grievousness thereof, unless he which hath experience of the like.

In comparing now the torments of all Martyrs with his pains, I pray you what pains, punishment, and flames would not he willingly have suffered, to have had some refocillation and time of refreshing? Who in such intolerable griefs of mind, although he neither had nor could have any joy of his meat, yet was he compelled to eat against his appetite, to the end to defer the time of his damnation, so long as he might, thinking with himself no less, but that he must needs be thrown into Hell, the breath being once out of the body. Albeit Christ, he thought, did pity his case, and was sorry for him; yet he could not (as he imagined) help, because of the verity of the word, which said, It cannot be, &c.

And this I rehearse of him, not so much to open his wounds and sorrows, as for that by his example all we with him may glorify the Son of God, who suffereth none to be tempted above his strength, but so tempereth and seasoneth the asperity of evils, that what seemeth to us intolerable, not only he doth alienate the same, that we may bear it, but also turneth it to our further commodity then we can think. Which well appeared in this good Servant of God, in no man more. Who albeit (as we have said) he suffered many years so sharp temptations and strong buffetings of Satan; yet the Lord, who graciously preserved him all the while, not only at last did rid him out of all discomfort, but also framed him thereby to such mortification of life, as the like lightly hath not been seen; in such sort as he being like one placed in Heaven already, and dead in this World, both in word and meditation led a life altogether Celestial, abhorring in his mind all prophane doings. Neither was his talk any thing discrepant from the fruits of his life, throwing out never any idle, vile or vain language. The most part of his Lands he distributed to the use of his Brethren, and committed the rest to the guiding of his Servants and Officers, whereby the more quietly he might give himself to his godly study, as to a continual Sabbath rest. This was about the latter end of King Henry's reign, and continued a great part of the time of King Edward the sixth.

After this, in the persecuting days of Queen Mary, as soon as the Bishop of Coventry heard the fame of this John aforesaid, being so ardent and zealous in the Gospel of Christ, effusions he wrote his Letter to the Maior and Officers of Coventry to apprehend him as soon as might be. But it chanced otherwise by Gods holy Providence, disposing all things after his own secret pleasure, who feeng his old and trusty Servant to many years with so extreme and many torments broken and dried up, would in no wise heap too many sorrows upon one poor silly wretch: neither would commit him to the flames of fire, who had been already baked and scorched with the sharp fires of inward affliction, and had sustained so many burning darts and conflicts of Satan so many years: God therefore of his Divine Providence, thinking it too much that one man should be so much overcharged with so many plagues and torments, did graciously provide, that Robert his Brother being both stronger of body, and also better furnished with helps of learning to answer the Adversaries (being a Master of Art in Cambridge) should sustain that conflict, and even so it came to pass, as ye shall hear.

The Maior of Coventry sendeth a privy watch word to John Glover.

For as soon as the Maior of Coventry had received the Bishops Letters for the apprehending of Mr. John Glover, he sent forthwith a privy watch word to the said John to convey away himself: Who with his Brother William was not so soon departed out of his house, but that yet in the sight of the Sheriff and other, the searchers came and rushed in to take him, according to the Bishops commandment.

Mr. Robert Glover apprehended lying sick in his Chamber.

But when the said John could in no place be found, one of the Officers going into an upper Chamber, found there Robert the other Brother lying on his bed, and sick of a long Disease; who was by him incontinent brought before the Sheriff. Which Sheriff notwithstanding favouring Robert and his cause, would indeed faine have dismissed him, and wrought what means he could, saying, That he was not the man for whom they were sent: Yet nevertheless being feared with the stout words of the Officer, contending with him to have him stayed till the Bishops coming, he was constrained to carry him away against his will, and so laid him fast while the Bishop came. And thus much by the way of preamble first concerning the worthy remembrance of Mr. John Glover.

Now to enter the matter which principally we have in hand, that is, to consider the Story and Martyrdom of Mr. Robert Glover, so far as the whole Narration of the same by his own record and testimony in writing was sent unto his Wife, concerning the manner of his ordering and handling: it shall therefore seem best for the more credit of the matter, to exhibit the said his own Letter, the words and contents whereof here ensue as followeth.

A Letter of Mr. Robert Glover to his wife, containing the whole discourse and description of his troubles sustained in prison, and of his sundry conflicts between the Bishop and him about Religion.

To my entirely beloved wife, Mary Glover.

A Letter of Mr. Robert Glover to his wife, certifying his troubles since his first apprehension.

THE Peace of Conscience which passeth all understanding, the sweet consolation, comfort, strength, and boldness of the Holy Ghost be continually increased in our hearts, through a fervent, earnest, and stedfast faith in our most dear and only Saviour Jesus Christ, Amen.

I thank you heartily (most loving Wife) for your Letters sent unto me in my Imprisonment. I read them Anno with tears more than once or twice, with tears (I say) 1555. for joy and gladness, that God had wrought in you so merciful a work; first, an unfeigned repentance; secondly, an humble and hearty reconciliation; thirdly, a willing submission and obedience to the will of God in all things. Which when I read in your Letters, and judged them to proceed from the bottom of your heart; I could not but be thankful to God, rejoicing with tears for you, and these his great mercies poured upon you.

These your Letters, and the hearing of your most godly proceedings and constant doings from time to time, much relieved and comforted me at all times, and shall be a goodly testimony with you at the great day, against many worldly and dainty Dames, which set more by their own pleasure and self in this world, than by Gods glory, little regarding (as it appeareth) the everlasting health of their own souls or others. My prayer shall be whilst I am in this world, that God, which of his great mercy hath begun his good work in you, will finish it to the glory of his Name, and by the mighty power and inspiration of his holy Spirit so strengthen, stablish, and confirm you in all his ways to the end, that we may together shew forth his Praises in the world to come, to our unspeakable consolation everlastingly, Amen.

So long as God shall lend you continuance in this miserable world, above all things give your self continually to prayer, lifting up, as St. Paul saith, clean or pure hands without anger, wrath, or doubting, forgiving (as he saith also) if you have any thing against any man, as Christ forgiveth us. And that we may be the better willing to forgive, it is good often to call to remembrance the multitude and greatness of our sins, which Christ daily and hourly pardoneth and forgiveth us, and then we shall, as St. Peter affirmeth, be ready to cover and hide the offences of our Brethren, be they never so many. And because Gods Word teacheth us, not only the true manner of praying, but also what we ought to do or not to do in the whole discourse and practice of this life, what pleaseth or displeaseth God, and that, as Christ saith, The Word of God that he hath spoken, John 12:1 ken shall judge in the last day: Let your prayer be to this end especially, That God of his great mercy would open and reveal more and more daily to your heart the true sense, knowledge, and understanding of his most holy Word, and give you grace in your living, to express the fruits thereof.

And so far as it is, as the Holy Ghost calleth it, the word of affliction, that is, it is seldom without hatred, persecution, peril, danger of loss of life and goods, and whatsoever seemeth pleasant in this world, as experience teacheth you in this time: call upon God continually for his assistance always, as Christ teacheth, casting your accounts what it is like to cost you, endeavouring your self, through the help of the Holy Ghost by continuance of prayer, to lay your foundation so sure, that no storm or tempest shall be able to overthrow or cast it down; remembering always (as Christ saith) Lets wife; that is, to beware of looking back to that thing that displeaseth God. And because nothing displeaseth God so much as Idolatry, that is false worshipping of God, otherwise than his Word commandeth: Look not back (I say) nor turn not your face to their idolatrous and blasphemous massing, manifestly against the word, practice, and example of Christ; as it is most manifest to all that have any taste of the true understanding of Gods Word, that there remaineth nothing in the Church of England at this present, profitable or edifying to the Church and Congregation of the Lord, all things being done in an unknown tongue, contrary to the express commandment of the Holy Ghost.

They object that they be the Church, and therefore they must be believed. My answer was, The Church of God knoweth and acknowledgeth no other Head but Jesus Christ the Son of God, whom ye have refused, and chosen the Man of Sin, the Son of Perdition, Enemy to Christ, the Devils Deputy and Lieutenant, the Pope. Christs Church heareth, teacheth, and is ruled by his word, as he saith, My sheep hear my voice. If you abide in me, and my word in you, you be my Disciples. Their Church

Luke 17. Example of Lest wife.

Nothing useful in Queen Marys time profitable to edification.

The first note proving the Church of the Papists not to be the true Church.

2. Note. John 10: 10.

Anno Church repelleth Gods Word, and forceth all men to follow their Traditions.

1555. Christs Church dare not add or diminish, alter or change his blessed Testament; but they be not afraid to take away all that Christ instituted, and go a whoring (as the Scripture faith) with their own Inventions, Et letari super operibus manuum suarum; i. To glory and rejoyce in the works of their own hands.

4 Note to know the Church. The Church of Christ is, hath been, and shall be in all Ages under the Cross, persecuted, molested, and afflicted, the World ever hating them, because they be not of the world. But these persecute, murder, slay, and kill such as profess the true Doctrine of Christ, be they in learning, living, conversation, and other virtues never so excellent.

5 Note. John 5. Christ and his Church reserved the trial of their Doctrine to the Word of God, and gave the people leave to judge thereof by the same Word, Search the Scriptures: But this Church taketh away the Word from the people, and suffereth neither learned nor unlearned to examine or prove their Doctrine by the Word of God.

4 Note to know the Church. The true Church of God laboureth by all means to resist and withstand the Lusts, Desires, and Motions of the World, the Flesh, and the Devil: These for the most part give themselves to all Voluptuousness, and secretly commit such things, which (as S. Paul faith) it is shame to speak of.

By these, and such like manifest probations, they do declare themselves to be none of the Church of Christ, but rather of the Synagogue of Satan. It shall be good for you oftentimes to confer and compare their proceedings and doings with the practise of those whom the Word of God doth teach to have been true Members of the Church of God, and it shall work in you both knowledge, erudition, and boldness to withstand with suffering their doings. I likened them therefore to Nemrod, whom the Scripture calleth a mighty Hunter, or a stout Champion, telling them that that which they could not have by the Word, they would have by the Sword, and be the Church whether men will or no, and called them with good Conscience, as Christ called their Forefathers, the Children of the Devil; and as their Father the Devil is a liar and a murderer, so their Kingdom and Church (as they call it) standeth by lying and murdering.

Have no fellowship with them therefore, my dear wife, nor with their Doctrine and Traditions, lest you be partaker of their sins, for whom is reserved a heavy damnation, without speedy repentance. Beware of such as shall advertise you something to bear with the world as they do, for a season. There is no dallying with Gods matters, It is a fearful thing (as S. Paul faith) to fall into the hands of God. Remember the Prophet Hielias, Why halt ye on both sides? Remember what Christ faith, He that putteth his hands to the Plough, and looketh back, is not worthy of me. And seeing God hath hitherto allowed you as a good Souldier in the foreward, play not the coward, neither draw back to the rearward.

3 Reg. 18. Luke 9. S. John numbred among them that shall dwell in the fiery Lake, such as be fearful in Gods cause. Set before your eyes always the examples of such as have behaved themselves boldly in Gods cause, as Stephen, Peter, Paul, Daniel, the three Children, the Widows sons, and in your days, Anne Askew, Lawrence Saunders, John Bradford, with many other faithful Witnesses of Christ.

Phil. 1. He exhorteth to be bold in Christ. Be afraid in nothing (saith S. Paul) of the Adversaries of Christ: Doctrine, the which is to them the sign of perdition, but to you of everlasting salvation. Christ commandeth the same, saying, Fear them not. Let us not follow the example of him which asked time first to take leave of his friends. If we do so, we shall find few of them that will encourage us to go forward in our business, please it God never so much. We read not that James and John, Andrew and Simon, when they were called, put off the time till they had known their fathers and friends pleasure. But the Scripture faith, They forsook all, and by and by followed Christ.

Math. 13. Christ likened the Kingdom of God to a precious Pearl, the which whosoever findeth, selleth all that he hath to buy it. Yea, whosoever hath but a little taste or glimmering how precious a Treasure the Kingdom of Heaven is, will gladly forego both life and goods for the obtaining of it. But the most part now adays be like to Esope, Cock, which when he had found a precious stone, wished rather to have found a barley corn. So ignorant be they how precious a Jewel the Word of God is, that they chooseth rather the things of this world, which being compared to it, be less in value than a barley corn.

If I would have given place to worldly reasons, these might have moved me: First, the foregoing of you and my Children; the consideration of the state of my Children, being yet tender of Age, and young, apt and inclinable to virtue and learning, and so having the more need of my assistance, being not altogether destitute of gifts to help them withal; possessions above the common sort of men; because I was never called to be a Preacher or Minister; and (because of my sickness) fear of death in imprisonment before I should come to my answer, and so my death to be unprofitable.

But these and such like, I thank my heavenly Father (which of his infinite mercy inspired me with his holy Ghost, for his Sons sake my only Saviour and Redeemer) prevailed not in me: but when I had by the wonderful permission of God, fallen into their hands, at the first sight of the Sheriff, Nature a little abashed; yet ere ever I came to the Prison, by the working of GOD, and through his goodness, fear departed. I said to the Sheriff at his coming unto me, What matter have you Master Sheriff to charge me withal? He answered, You shall know when you come before the Masters; and so taking me with him, I looked to have been brought before the Masters, and to have heard what they could have burdened me withal: but contrary to my expectation, I was committed forthwith to the Goal, not being called to my Answer, little justice being shewed therein. But the less justice a man findeth at their hands, the more consolation in Conscience shall he find from God; for whosoever is of the world, the world will love him.

After I came into Prison, and had reposed my self there a while, I wept for joy and gladness, my belly full, musing much of the great mercies of God, and (as it were) saying to my self after this sort; O Lord, whom am I, on whom thou shouldst bestow this thy great mercy, to be numbered among the Saints that suffer for the Gospel sake? And so beholding and considering on the one side my imperfection, unbleness, sinful misery, and unworthiness, and on the other side the greatness of Gods mercy, to be called to so high promotion, I was, as it were, amazed and overcome for a while with joy and gladness, concluding thus with my self in my heart; O Lord, thou shewest power in weakness, wisdom in foolishness, mercy in sinfulness; who shall let thee to choose where and whom thou wilt? As I have zealously loved the confession of thy Word, so ever thought I my self to be most unworthy to be partaker of the affliction for the same.

Not long after came unto me Mr. W. Brasbridge, Mr. C. Phimeas, Mr. N. Hopkins, travelling with me to be dismissed upon bonds. To whom my answer was to my remembrance) after this sort: Forasmuch as the Masters have imprisoned me, having nothing to burthen me withal, if I should enter into bonds, I should in so doing accuse my self; and seeing they have no matter to lay to my charge, they may as well let me pass without bonds, as with bonds.

Secondarily, If I shall enter bonds, covenant; and promise to appear, I shall do nothing but excuse, colour and cloak their wickedness, and endanger my self nevertheless, being bound by my promise to appear. They alledged many worldly persuasions to me to avoid the present peril, and also how to avoid the forfeiture, if I brake promise: I said unto them, I had cast up my pennyworth by Gods help. They undertook also to make the bond ease.

And when they were somewhat importunate, I said to Mr. Hopkins, That liberty of Conscience was a precious thing, and took, as it were, a pause, lifting up my heart to God earnestly for his aid and help, that I might do the thing that might please him. And so when they had let their suit fall, my heart (me thought) was wonderfully comforted. Mr. Dudley communed with me in like manner; whom I answered in effect as I did before.

Afterward debating the matter with my self, these considerations came into my head; I have from time to time time with good Confidence (God I take to record) moved all such as I had conference withal to be no dalliers in Gods matters, but to shew themselves, after so great a light and knowledge, hearty, earnest, constant, and stable in so manifest a Truth, and not to give place one jot contrary to the same. Now thought I, if I shall withdraw my self, and make any shifts to pull my own neck out of the collar, I shall give great offence to my weak Brethren in Christ, and advantage to the Enemies to slander Gods Word. It will be said, He hath been a great boldner of others to be earnest and fervent, to fear no worldly perils or dangers, but he himself will give no such example.

Wherefore I thought it my bounden duty, both to God and Man, being (as it were) by the great goodness of God marvelously called and appointed herunto, to set aside all fear, perils and dangers, all worldly respects and considerations, and like as I had heretofore, according to the measure of my small gift within the compass of my vocation and calling, from the bottom of my heart unfeignedly moved, exhorted and perswaded all that profess Gods Word, manfully to persist in the defence of the same, not with sword and violence, but with suffering and loss of life, rather than to defile themselves again with the whorish abomination of the Romish Antichrist; so the hour being come, with my fact and example to ratify, confirm, and protest the same to the hearts of all true Believers: and to this end, by the mighty assistance of Gods holy Spirit, I resolved my self, with much peace of Confidence, willingly to sustain whatsoever the Romish Antichrist should do against me, and the rather because I understood the Bishops coming to be at hand, and considered that poor mens Conferences should be then sharply assaulted. So remained I prisoner in Coventry by the space of ten or eleven days, being never called to my answer of the Masters, contrary to the Laws of the Realm, they having neither Statute, Law, Proclamation, Letter, Warrant, nor commandment for my apprehension. They would have laid all the matter upon the Sumner: who being examined, denied it before their faces (as one of my friends told me) saying, that he had no commandment concerning me, but for my elder brother. God lay not their extreame doings against me to their charge at the great day.

The second day after the Bishops coming to Coventry, Mr. Warren came to the Guildhall, and willed the chief Jaylor to carry me to the Bishop. I laid to Mr. Warrens charge the cruel seeking of my death; and when he would have excused himself, I told him he could not wipe his hands so; he was as guilty of my blood before God, as though he had murdered me with his own hands.

And so he departed from me, saying, I needed not to fear if I would be of his belief. God open his eyes if it be his will, and give him grace to believe this, which he and all of his inclination shall find (I fear) too true for their parts; that is, that all they which cruelly, maliciously, and spitefully persecute, molest, and afflict the Members of Christ for their Confidence sake, and for the true testimony of Christs Word, and cause them most unjustly to be slain and murdered, without speedy repentance, shall dwell with the Devil and his Angels in the fierce lake everlastingly, where they shall with desire, cry and call, but in vain (as their right Companion Epulo did) to be refreshed of them, whom in this world they contemned, despised, disdained, as Slaves, Misers, and Wretches.

When I came before the Bishop in one Dentons house, he began with this Proclamation, that he was my Bishop for lack of a better, and willed me to submit my self.

I said to him, I am not come to accuse my self; what have you to lay to my charge?

He asked me whether I was learned? I answered, finally learned.

Master Chancellor standing by, said, I was a Master of Arts in Art.

Then my Lord laid to my charge my not coming to the Church.

Have I might have dallied with him, and put him to his proofs, forasmuch as I had not been for a long frason in his Diocesi, neither was any of the Citizens able to prove any such matter against me. Norwithstanding I answered him through Gods merciful help, that I never had nor would come at their Church as long as their Mals was used there, to save (if I had them) five hundred lives. I willed him to shew me one jot or title in the Scriptures for the proof and defence of the Mals.

He answered, he came to teach, and not to be taught. I was content (I told him) to learn of him, so far as he was able to teach me by the Word of God.

Bish. Who shall judge the Word?

Glover. Christ was content that the people should judge his Doctrine by searching the Scriptures, and so was Paul; me thinketh ye should claim no further privilege nor preeminence than they had.

Thus spake Robert Glover, offering him further, that he was content the Primitive Church next to the Apostles time, should judge betwixt the Bishop and him. But he refused also to be judged by that. Then he said he was his Bishop, and therefore he must believe him.

Glover. If you say black is white, my Lord (quoth Glover) must I also say, as you say, and believe the same because you say it is so? Master Chancellor here noted me to be arrogant, because I would not give place to my Bishop.

Glover. If you will be believed because you be a Bishop, why find you fault with the people that believed Mr. Latimer, Mr. Ridley, Mr. Hooper, and the residue of them that were Bishops?

Bish. Because they were Hereticks.

Glover. And may not you err (quoth I) as well as they? I looked for learning at my Lords hand to perswade me, and he oppressed me only with his Authority. He said I differed from the Church, and asked me where my Church was before King Edwards time?

I desired him to shew me where their Church was in Helias's time, and what outward shew it had in Christs time.

Bish. Helias's complaint was only of the Ten Tribes that fell from Davids house, whom he called Hereticks.

Glover. You be not able to shew any Prophets that the other two Tribes had at that same time.

My Lord making no answer to that, Mr. Rogers, one of the Masters of the City, cometh in the mean season, taking upon him as though he would answer to the Text. But my Lord forthwith commanded me to be committed to some Tower, if they had any besides the Common Goal, saying, He would at the end of his Visitation of his Diocesi, weed out such Wolves. Mr. Rogers willed him to content himself for that night, till they had taken further order for me. Even where it pleased you, said I to my Lord, I am content; and so I was returned at that time to the Common Goal again from whence I came.

On the Friday morning, being the next day after, I had warning by one of the Prisoners to prepare my self to ride with my Fellow-Prisoners the same day to Litchfield, there to be bestowed at the Bishops pleasure. Which tydings at the first something discouraged me, fearing lest I should by the means of my great ticknets, through extreame handling (which I looked for) have dyed in the Prison before I should come to my answer: But I he should be rebuked immediately with Gods Word this infidelity in my self, and by the same corrected mine own mistrust and fantasie after this manner. What make I of God? Is not his Power as great in Litchfield as in Coventry? Doth not his Promise extend as well to Litchfield as to Coventry? Was he not with Habakkuk, Daniel, Micaiah, and Jeremy, in their most dangerous imprisonments? He knoweth what things we have need of. He hath numbred all the hairs of our head. The Sparrow falleth not on the ground, without our heavenly Fathers will; much more will he care for us if we be not faithless, whom he hath made worthy to be witnesses of his Truth. So long as we put our trust in him, we shall never be destitute of his help, neither in prison, neither in sickness, nor in health, neither in life, nor in death, neither before Kings, nor before Bishops, nor the Devil himself, much less

Mr. Glover reasoning with himself.

Mr. Glover taken courage, all fear and danger set aside.

Mr. Glover relieved in himself to abide the utmost to the Gods cause.

The Papists proceed with Mr. Glover against the Realm. Commandment given to the Sumner against John Glover, and not against Mr. Glover. This Bishop came with Dr. Bancroft, Mr. Warren of Coventry persecuted Mr. Glover. A Lesson for all perfects.

Take it.

R. Glover brought before the Bishop of Litchfield and Coventry. Mr. R. Glover of Art in Art. R. Glover charged for the Church.

Anno 1555.

The Bishop refused to be judged by the Primitive Church.

Where was the Church before King Edwards time? The Bishop could not shew where Gods Church was in that time where any Prophet was in that time.

R. Glover somewhat discouraged at the first hearing that he should be removed from Coventry to Litchfield. R. Glover comforted again with the mediation of the Scripture, and Gods promise.

less one of his Ministers shall be able to prevail against us. With such like Meditations I waxed cheerful, of good consolation and comfort: so that hearing one say that they could not provide horses enough for us, I said, let them carry us in a Dung-cart for lack of horses, if they list; I am well content for my part.

Notwithstanding, at the request of my Friends, I wrote to Master Maior, and his Brethren, briefly requiring them that I might make answer here to such things as should be laid to my charge: The Contents of which Letter were these.

A Letter of Mr. Robert Glover to the Maier of Coventry and his Brethren.

I beseech you to understand, that it is not unknown, as well to the Keeper of the Goal, as to the Inhabitants about me where I dwell, that I am a man subject to very great sickness, and have been by the space of fifteen years and more, so that it is not like that I shall be removed without peril and danger of life. And because I was here committed to ward by your appointment, I would gladly here answer to such things as should be laid to my charge. If I may obtain this of you, I have cause thankfully to acknowledge your indifferency; if otherwise, I pray God it be not laid to your charge at the great day, where every man shall have just judgment without respect of person.

Your prisoner in the Lord, always mindful of you in my poor prayer,

Robert Glover.

But I received no answers of my Letters to nor fro. I conjectured, that when the Bishop and the Chancellor had seen them, it moved them the rather to have me away, being more desirous (as I suppose) to have had me dispatched privily in Prison, then to come openly to my answer. The manner of intreating and using me at my first coming to Prison, did partly declare the same.

Clerk and Sergeants and Countables of County, being appointed to have the conveying of us to Litchfield, to be delivered there to one Ephraim the Chancellors man, sent from County with us for the same purpose, we were commanded to horsback about eleven or twelve of the clock on Friday, being Market day, that we might be the more gazed and wondered at: and to kindle the peoples hearts more against us, they did proclaim a Letter concerning a Proclamation made for calling in, and disannulling of all such Books as truly expound and interpret the Scriptures. We came to Litchfield about four of the clock at night, and had leave to repose our selves for our Supper time. We Inned at the sign of the Swan, where we were entertained friendly and gently.

Against the Chancellor's servant.

After Supper Hephseth repaired to us, whom we entertained that upon Sureties we might relieve our felves that night, being unprovided of any thing to help our felves withal in the Prison at that present. He was content at the first (as he seemed) but afterwards, whether it was by perjury, or rather (as it seemed to me) he did but of policy put off the time till he had gathered a multitude to flare and wonder upon us, and also that we should provide nothing to ease our felves withall; he revoked his promise, and so by consent we were had to the Prison, the Multitude wondering at us. I willed Hephseth before to excuse his Office with mercy, telling him that they should have judgement without mercy, that shewed no mercy. And this mercy I found at his hand.

Fopple keeps no promise.

He put me into a Prison that fame night, where I continued till I was condemned, in a place next to the Dungeon, narrow of rooms, strong of building and very cold, with small light, and there allowed he me a bundle of straw, in stead of my bed, without chair, form, or any other thing else to ease my self wickhal. God of his mercy gave me great patience through prayer that night, so that if it had been his pleasure, I could have been contented to have ended my life: But Jehovah and one Persy the Bishops man, which afterwards was my continuall Keeper for the next part, came to me in the mornings, to whom I said, This is a great extremity, God lend us patience, and more.

Then they were content that I should have a bed of mine own procurement. But I was allowed no help, neither night nor day, nor company of any man, notwithstanding my great sickness; nor yet paper, pen nor ink, or books, saving my New Testament in Latin, and a Prayer-Book which I privily stole in.

Within two days after, Master Chancellor, and one Temsey a Prebendary there, came to me into my Prison. Master Chancellor exhorted me to conform my self to my Lord and to the Church. He wished to my Soul no more hurt than to his own, belike because I had laid to his charge at Coventry the seeking of my blood unjustly and wrongfully.

Now thus the second time I answered Mr. Chancellor to his Exhortation, That I refused not to be ruled by that Church that was content to be ordered and governed by the Word of God.

Chan. He asked me how I knew the Word of God , but by the Church.

Glossar The Church sheweth which is the Word of God, therefore the Church is above the Word of God. This is no good reason in learning, said I to Master Chancellor. For it is like unto this; John shewed the people who was Christ; Ergo, John was above Christ. Or else, I have a man that knoweth not the King, and I tell him who was the King: am I therefore above the King?

Mr. Chance said, he came not to reason with me, and be departed. So remained I without any further conference of any man by the space of eight days, and till the Bilphos coming: In the which time I gave my self continually to prayer, and meditation of the merciful promises of God, made unto all, without exception of person, that call upon the Name of his dear Son Jesus Christ. I found in my self daily amendment of health of body, increase of peace in conscience, and many consolations from God, by the help of his holy Spirit, and sometimes as I were a taste and glimmering of the life to come; as I for his only Son Jesus Christ sake: to him be all praise for ever and ever,

The Enemy needed not many times fund ways to affail me, often obliecting to my Confidence mine own unworthiness, through the greatness of the benefit to be counted among the number of them that should suffer for Christ, for his Gospel sake. Against him I replied with the Word of God on this sort, What were all those whom God had chosen from the beginning , to be his witnesses, and to carry his name before the world? Were they not men, as Paul and Barnabas said, Similiter obnoxii peccato, as well subject to wickedness, sin, and imperfections, as other men be? Even such were Noah, Abraham, David, and all the rest. Quis prior delit, as Paul faith, Who gave first unto him? And also speaking to every man, What hast thou that thou receivest not?

Likewise John, All have received of his fulness; they were no bringers of any goodness to God, but altogether receivers. They chose not God first, but he chose them. They loved not God first, but he loved them first. Yea, he both loved and chose them when they were his enemies, full of sin and corruption, and void of all goodness.

Mr. Glover replied against the temptation of the Lord in that he is a sinner.

I answered the enemy also on this manner; I am a sinner, and therefore unworthy to be a witness of this truth. What then? Must I deny his Word, because I am not worthy to profess it? What bring I to pass in so doing, but add sin to sin? What is greater sin than to deny the truth of Christs Gospel? as Christ himself beareth witness, He that is ashamed of me or of my words, of him I will be also ashamed before my Father and all his Angels. I might also by like reason forbear to do any of Gods Commandments.

When I am provoked to pray, the enemy may say to me, I am not worthy to pray, therefore I shall not pray: and so in like manner of all the Commandments, I shall not forbear swearing, stealing, murdering, because I am not worthy to do any Commandment of God. These be the delusions of the Devil, and Satans suggestions, which must be overcome by continuance of Prayer, and with the Word of God applied, according to the measure of every mans gift, against all assaults of the Devil.

Mr. Glover brought again before the Bishop.

At the Bishops first coming to Litchfield, after mine imprisonment, I was called into a By-chamber next to my Prison, to my Lord. Before whom, when I came and saw none but his Officers, Chaplains and Servants, except it were an old Priest, I was partly amazed, and lifted up my heart to God for his merciful help and assistance.

Reasoning between Mr. Glover and the Bishop.

My Lord asked me how I liked my imprisonment, I proceeded to persuade me to be a Member of his Church, which had continued so many years. As for our Church (as he called it) it was not known he said, but lately in King Edwards time.

I profess my self to be a Member of that Church (said I) that is builded * upon the Foundation of the Apostles and Prophets, Jesus Christ being the Head corner stone, and so alleged the place of St. Paul to the Ephesians. And this Church hath been from the beginning (said I) though it bear no glorious show before the world, being ever, for the most part, under the Cross and Affliction, contemned, despised and persecuted; My Lord on the other side, contended that they were the Church.

Glover. So cried all the Clergy against the Prophets of Jerusalem, saying, Templum Domini, Templum Domini, The Church, the Church, &c.

Bishop. And always when I was about to speak anything, my Lord cried, Hold thy peace; I command thee by the virtue of obedience to hold thy peace, calling me a proud arrogant Heretic.

Reasoning between Mr. Glover and the Bishop.

more, sometimes less, sometimes very little, sometimes nothing at all, according as the Perfection is. Nevertheless, the Truth of the Church abideth always one. Neither doth it go by number of men, but by soundness of truth. Many agreeing in one maketh an unity: but the verity of the word maketh the church, whether it be in few or in many.

Glover. I willed my Lord to burthen me with some specialities, and then to convince me with some Scriptures and good Learning.

Then my Lord began to move certain questions. I refused to answer him in corners, requiring that I might make my answer openly. He said I should answer him there. I stood with him upon that point until he said, I thought to prison again, and there have neither meat nor drink till I had answered him.

Then I lifted up my heart to God, that I might stand and agree with the Doctrine of his most holy Word.

Bish. The first question was this, How many Sacraments Christ instituted to be used in the Church?

Glover. The Sacrament of Baptism, said I, and the Sacrament that he instituted at his last Supper.

Bish. No more, said he?

Glover. To all those that declare a true and unfeigned repentance, a sure hope, trust and confidence in the death of Christ, to such, Ministers (I grant) have authority to pronounce, by the power of Gods Word, the remission of sins.

Here interrupting me, he would needs bear me in hand that I called this a Sacrament. I would not greatly contend with him in that point, because that matter was of no great weight or importance; although he in so doing did me wrong, for I called it not a Sacrament.

He asked me further, whether I allowed their confession?

I answered, No.

Bish. Then he would know my mind what I thought of the presence of Christs Body in the Sacrament.

Glover. I answered, that their Mass was neither Sacrifice nor Sacrament, because (said I) you have taken away the true institution, which when you restore again, I will tell you my judgment concerning Christs Body in the Sacrament.

And thus much did this worthy Martyr of God leave behind him by his own hand in writing concerning the manner of his using and intreating in Prison, and also of his conflicts had with the Bishop and his Chancellor. More Examinations he had (no doubt) with the Bishop in the publick Confinitory, when he was brought forth to be condemned, which also he would have left unto us if either length of life, or leisure of time, or haste of execution had permitted him to finish that he intended; but by reason of the Writ of his burning being come down from London, lack of time neither did serve him so to do, neither yet could I get the Records of his last Examinations, wherefore they are become.

Only this which I could learn by relation of one Austen Bernier, a Minister, and a familiar friend of his, concerning the going to his death; I can report, that the said blessed Servant of the Lord, Mr. Robert Glover, after he was condemned by the Bishop, and was now at a point to be delivered out of this world, it so happened, that two or three days before his heart being humbled and desolate of all spiritual consolation, felt in himself no appetites nor willingness, but rather a heaviness and dulness of spirit, full of much discomfort to bear the bitter Cross of Martyrdom ready to be laid upon him.

Whereupon fearing in himself lest the Lord had utterly withdrawn his wonted favour from him, made his moan to this Austen his friend above remembered, signifying unto him how earnestly he had prayed day and night unto the Lord, and yet could receive no motion nor sense of any comfort from him.

Unto whom the said Austen answering again, willed and desired him patiently to wait the Lords pleasure, and howsoever his present feeling was, yet seeing his cause was just and true, he exhorted him constantly to stick to the same, and to play the man, nothing mifdoubting but the Lord in his good time would visit him, and satisfy his desire with plenty of consolation, whereof (he said) he was right certain and sure, and therefore desired him whensoever any such feeling of Gods heavenly mercies should begin to touch his heart, that then he should shew some signification thereof, whereby he might witness with him the same, and so departed from him.

The next day when the time came of his Martyrdom, as he was going to the place, and was now come to the sight of the Stake, although all the night before praying for strength and courage he could feel none, suddenly he was so mightily replenished with Gods holy comfort and heavenly joyes, that he cried out, clapping his hands to Austen, and saying in these words, Austen, he is come, he is come, &c. and that with such joy and alacrity, as one seeming rather to be risen from some deadly danger to liberty of life, than as one passing out of the world by any pains of death. Such was the change of the marvelous working of the Lords hand upon that good man.

Cornelius Bungey, Fellow Martyr with Master Robert Glover.

In the same fire with him was burned also Cornelius Bungey, a Capper of Coventry, and condemned by the said Radulph Bishop of Coventry and Litchfield. As concerning the Articles which were to him objected, the effect thereof was this.

First, It was articulated against him, that these three years last, in the City of Coventry and Litchfield, and other places about, he did hold, maintain, argue and teach, that the Priest hath no power here to absolve any sinner from his sins.

Secondly, That by Baptism sins be not washed away, because he said that the washing of the flesh purgeth the flesh outwardly, and not the soul.

Thirdly,

Anno 1555.

Questions.

Mr. Glover desired for a time of the Lords comfort.

The Lord for a time may withdraw his comforts, but at length he visiteth his servants.

Mr. Glover received again comfort of the Lord.

Articles objected to Mr. Bungey.

Anno 1555. Thirdly, That there be in the Church only two Sacraments, that is; Baptism and the Lords Supper.

Fourthly, That in the Sacrament of the Popish Altar, was not the real Body and Blood of Christ, but the Substance of Bread and Wine there remaining still, because St. Paul calleth it Bread and Wine, &c.

Fifthly, That he within the compass of the said years and time, did hold, maintain, and defend, that the Pope is not the Head of the Visible Church here on Earth, &c.

Sixthly, That he was of the Diocesis and Jurisdiction of the Bishop of Coventry and Lichfield, &c.

Seventhly, That the Premises are true, manifest and notorious, and that upon the same there hath been and is a publick voice and fame, as well in the places above rehearsed, as in other quarters also about, &c.

The burning of Master Robert Glover, and Cornelius Bungy, at Coventry.

The burning of William Wolsey and Robert Pygok Martyrs.

His Answer.

Unto the which Articles he answered again: To the first he granted, and to every part thereof, meaning after the Popish manner of Absolution.

To the second he granted first, after revoked the same.

To the third also he granted, adding withal that in Scripture there be no more contained.

To the fourth, touching the Sacrament, he granted, and to every part thereof.

To the fifth, concerning the Pope likewise.

Also to the sixth he granted, and likewise to the seventh.

Upon these Articles and his Answers to the same, the said Radulph the Bishop read the Sentence, and so committed him also after condemnation of Mr. Robert Glover, to the Secular Power.

Thus this foresaid Cornelius, falsely condemned by the Bishop before mentioned, suffered at the same Stake with the Christian Martyr Mr. Robert Glover at Coventry, about the twentieth day of September.

Here followeth the Story of John Glover and William Glover, how they were Excommunicate and cast out after their death, and buried in the Fields.

Now that we have discoursed the Story of Mr. Robert Glover, something also would be touched of his other two Brethren, John and William Glover. Who albeit they were not called to finish their course by like kind of Martyrdom in the fire, as the other did; yet because for their constant profession of Gods Gospel unto the later end, they were exempted after their death, and cast out of the same Church, as the other was, I thought them not unworthy therefore in the story to be joyned together, which in one cause and the same profession were not sundred one from the other.

And first concerning Mr. John Glover the eldest Brother, what inward storms and agonies he sustained by the ghostly Enemy, partly ye heard before described: now what his bodily Enemies wrought against him, remaineth to be declared. Whose rage and malice, although God restrained, that they could little prevail against him so long as his life endured, yet after his decease, having power upon him, what they did ye shall now understand.

After the Martyrdom of Mr. Robert Glover, although John Glover, seeing his Brother to be apprehended for him, had small joy of his life for the great sorrow of his heart, wherewith he was sore oppressed, and would gladly have put himself in his Brothers stead, if Friends had not otherwise perswaded him, shewing that in so doing he might intangle himself, but should do his Brother no good: He thus in great care and vexation endured, yet notwithstanding rubbed out as well as he could, till at length about the later end of Queen Mary, there was a new search made for the said John Glover.

Whereupon the Sheriffs, with their under Officers and Servants, being sent to seek him, came into his House where he and his wife were. It chanced as he was in the Chamber by himself, the Officers bursting into the house, and searching other rooms, came to the Chamber door where this John Glover was, who being within, and holding the latch softly with his hand, perceived and heard the Officers busking about the door, amongst whom, one of the said Officers having the string in his hand, was ready to draw and pluck at the same.

In the mean time another coming by (whose voice he heard and knew) bade them come away, saying they had been there before. Whereupon they departing thence, went to search other corners of the house, where they found Agnes Glover his wife, who being had to Lichfield, and there examined before the Bishop, at length, after much ado, was constrained to give place to their tyranny: John Glover in the mean time, partly for care of his wife, partly through cold taken in the Woods where he did lye, took an Ague, whereupon not long after he left his life, which the cruel Papists so long had fought for.

Thus by the mighty protection of the Almighty Lord, how John Glover was delivered and defended from the hands of the persecuting Enemies during all the time of his life, ye have heard. Now what befell after his death both to him, and William his brother, it is not unworthy to be remembered. Who after that he was dead, and buried in the Church-yard without Priest or Clerk,

Dr. Dracot then Chancellor, six weeks after, sent for the Parson of the Town, and demanded how it chanced that he was there buried. The Parson answered that he was then sick, and knew not of it. Then the Chancellor commanded the Parson to go home, and to cause the body of the said John Glover to be taken up, and to be calf over the Wall into the High-way: The Parson again answered, that he had been six weeks in the Earth, and so smelled, that none was able to abide the favour of him. Well, quoth Dr. Dracot, then take this Bill, and pronounce him in the Pulpit a damned Soul, and a twelve month after take up his bones (for then the flesh will be consumed) and cast them over the Wall, that Carts and Horses may tread upon them, and then I will come and hallow again that place in the Church-yard where he was buried. Recorded by the Parson of the Town, who told the same to Hugh Burrows, dwelling at Rynden in Dash Bury, and to Mr. Robert Glovers wife, by whose creation information we received the same.

Not much unlike usage was practised also by these Catholicke Children of the Mother Church upon the body of William the third brother. Whom after it had pleased Almighty God about the same season to call out of this vale of misery, the good disposed people of the Town of Weme in Shropshire, where he died, brought the body unto the Parish Church, intending there to have it buried. But one Bernard being then Curate of the said Church (and yet is, as I hear, to this day) to stop the burial thereof rode to the Bishop, named Ralph Baines, to certify him of the matter, and to have his advice therein. In the mean time the body lying there a whole day, in the night time one Richard Morice a Taylor, would have entered him. But then came John Thorlyne of Weme with other more, and would not suffer the body to be buried; expressing to us the contrary examples of good Toby: for as he was religious in burying the dead, so that after he had lain there two days and one night, cometh the foresaid Bernard the Curate with the Bishops Letter, the Contents of which Letter being copied out word for word, here followeth.

A Copy of the Bishops Letter writen to the Parish of Weme.

Understanding that one Glover an Heretick is dead in the Parish of Weme, which Glover hath for all the time of my being in this Country been known for a Rebel against our holy Faith and Religion, a contemner of the holy Sacraments and Ceremonies used in the holy Church, and hath separated himself from the holy Communion of all good Christian men, and never required to be reconciled to our Mother holy Church, nor in his last days did call for his Ghostly Father, but died without all rites belonging to a Christian man; I thought it good not only to command the Curate of Weme, that he should not be buried in Christian mans burial, but also will and command all the Parish of Weme, that no man procure, help, nor speak to have him buried in holy ground: but I do charge and command the Churchwardens of Weme in special, and all the Parish of the same, that they assist the said Curate in defending and letting, and procuring that he be not buried either in the Church, or within the Wanybles of the Church-yard: and likewise I charge those that brought the body to the place, to carry it away again, and that at their charge, as they will answer at their peril. At Ecclesesh this sixth of September, Anno 1558.

By your Ordinary, Radulph Coventry and Litchfield.

By the virtue of this foresaid Letter, so it fell out, Anno that they which brought the Corps thither, were fain at 1558. their own Charges to carry it back again. But for so much as the body was corrupted, and smelt so strongly that uneth any man might come near it, they were forced to draw it with Horses into a Broom-field, and there was he buried.

Witnesses of the godly end of the said William Glover, dying in the true Faith and Confession of Christ, Mr. Nowell Dean of Litchfield, George Wilestone and his Wife, Thomas Constanine, Roger Wyabouffe, John Prynn, George Torpelle, &c.

The like example of charitable affection in these Catholicke Church-men, is also to be seen and noted in the burying of one Mr. Edward Burton Esquire, who in the same Diocese of Chesfer, departing out of this world the very day before Queen Elizabeth was crowned, required of his friends, as they would answer for it, that his body should be buried in his Parish Church (which was S. Chad's in Shrewsbury) so that no Maligner should be present thereat. Which thing being declared to the Curate of that Parish, named Sir John Marshall, and the Body being withal brought to the burial, upon the same day when the Queen was crowned, the Curate being therewith offended, said plainly, That he should not be buried in the Church there. Whereunto one of his friends, named George Torpelle, answering again, said, That God would judge him in the last day, &c. Then the Priest, Judge God (faith he) or Devil, the body shall not come there. And so they buried him in his own Garden, where he is no doubt as near the Kingdom of Heaven, as if he had been buried in the midst of the Church.

Moreover, in the said County of Salop, I find that one Oliver Richardine of the Parish of Whitchurch was burned in Hartford-west, Sir John Igone being Sheriff the same time, which seemeth to be about the latter year of King Henry the Eighth. Whose name, because it was not mentioned before, I thought here to give some little touch of him, having now in hand to speak of the Persecution within the Diocese of Coventry and Litchfield.

The Martyrdom of William Wolsey, and Robert Pygot Painter.

After the suffering of Mr. Robert Glover, and Cornelius Bungey at Coventry, followeth next the condemnation of other two blessed Martyrs, which were judged and condemned at Ely, by John Fuller the Bishops Chancellor of Ely, Dr. Shaxton his Suffragane, Robert Steward Dean of Ely, John Christopherson Dean of Norwich, Anno 1555. October 9. the names of which Martyrs, were William Wolsey and Robert Pygot, dwelling both in the Town of Whitchurch, which William Wolsey being a Constable, dwelling and inhabiting in the Town of Well, was there brought to death by the means and procurement of one Richard Everard Gentleman, a Justice appointed for those days, who extremely handled the same William Wolsey, and bound him to the good abearing, causing him to put in Sureties upon his good behaviour, until the next General Sessions holden within the life of Ely: and so the said Wolsey being dispatched of his Office, and brought in trouble, removed his house and dwelling place, coming to dwell in the Town of Whitchurch. Then being called again at the next Sessions, he was still constrained to put in new Sureties, which at the length he refused to do, and so was commanded to the Jail, at the Size holden at Ely in Lent.

In the Easter week following, there repaired to confer with him, Dr. Fuller, the Chancellor, with Christopherson, and one Dr. Tong, who laid earnestly to his charge that he was out of the Catholick faith, willing him to meddle no further with the Scriptures, than it did become such a Lay-man as he was, to do. The said William Wolsey standing still a great while, suffering them to say their pleasures, at the last answered in this wise: Good Mr. Doctor, what did our Saviour Christ mean when he spake these words written in the 23. Chap. of St. Matthews Gospel, Wo be unto you Scribes and Pharisees,

Doctors

And ye shal be shut up the Kingdom of Heaven because ye will not enter in, neither suffer ye them that come to enter in.

Yea, faith Dr. Fuller, you must understand, that Christ spake to the Scribes and Pharisees.

Nays, Master Doctor (saith Wolfey) Christ spake even to you, and your fellows here present, and to all other such like as you be.

Away Master Doctor (saith Christopher) for you can do no good with this man. Yet faith Dr. Fuller, I will leave thee a Book to read, I promise thee of a learned mans doing, that is to say, of Dr. Watsons doing (who was then Bishop of Lincoln).

Wolfey receiving the same Book, did diligently read it over, which in many places did manifestly appear contrary to the known truth of Gods Word. At the length, a fortnight or three weeks following, the said Dr. Fuller, reforting again to the Prison-house to confer with the said Wolfey, did ask him how he did like the said Book (thinking that he had won him by the reading of the same) who answered him and said, Sir, I like the Book no otherwise than I thought before I should find it. Whereupon the Chancellor taking his Book, departed home.

At night when Dr. Fuller came to his Chamber to look on it, he did find in many places, contrary to his mind, the Book rased with a Pen by the said Wolfey.
The which he seeing, and being vexed therewith, said,
Oh this is an obnoxious Hereticke, and hath quite marred my Book.

Then the Sizess holden at Wisbich drawing nigh, Dr. Fuller cometh again to the said Wolfey, and speaketh unto him on this manner; Thou doest much trouble my Conscience, wherefore I pray thee depart, and rule thy tongue, so that I hear no more complaint of thee, and come to the Church when thou wilt, and if thou be complained upon, so far as I may, I promise thee I will not hear of it.

Master Doctor (quoth Wolfey) I was brought hither
by a Law, and by a Law I will be delivered.

Then being brought to the Sessions before named, Wolfey was laid in the Cattle at Wisbich, thinking to him and all his friends, that he should have suffered there at that present time, but it proved nothing so.

Then Robert Pygot the Painter, being at liberty, was there presented by some evil disposed persons (sworn men as they called them) for not coming to the Church.

The said Pygot being called in the Sessions, would not absent himself, but there did plainly appear before Sir Clement Hyggam being Judge, who said unto him;
Ah, are you the holy Father the Painter? How chance ye came not to the Church? Sir, quoth the Painter, I am not out of the Church, I trust in God.

No Sir, said the Judge? This is no Church, this is a Hall. Yea Sir, said Pygot, I know very well it is a Hall; but he that is in the true Faith of Jesus Christ, is never absent, but present in the Church of God.

Ah Sirra, said the Judge, you are too high learned for me to talk withal: wherefore I will send you to them that be better learned than I, straight-ways commanding him to the jail where Wolfey lay. So the Sessions being broken up and ended, the said Wolfey and Pygot were carried again to Ely into Prison, where they both did remain till the day of their death.

In the mean time certain of their Neighbours of Wisbich aforesaid, being at Ely, came to see how they did.

There came thither also a Chaplain of Bishop Good-rikes a Frenchman born, one Peter Valentin, who said unto the said Wolfey and Pygot; My Brethren, according to mine Office I am come to talk with you, for I have been Amner here these twenty years and above.
Wherefore I must desire you, my Brethren, to take it in good part that I am come to talk with you, I promise you, not to pull you from your Faith. But I both require and desire in the Name of Jesus Christ, that you stand to the truth of the Gospel and Word, and I beseech the Almighty God, for his Son Jesus Christs sake, to preserve both you and me in the same unto the end. For I know not my self (my Brethren) how soon I shall be at the same point that you now are. Thus with many other like words he made an end, causing all that were there present to water their cheeks, contrary to the hope they all had in him, God be praised thereto.

Then within short time after, Pygot and Wolfey were called to Judgment about the ninth day of October, before Dr. Fuller then Chancellor, with old Dr. Shaxton, Christopher, and others in Commission, who laid ear-nfully to their charge for their belief in divers Articles, but especially of the Sacrament of the Altar. Whereunto their answer was, That the Sacrament of the Altar was an Idol, and that the natural body and blood of Christ was not present really in the said Sacrament, and to this opinion they said they would stick, believing perfectly the same to be no heresie that they had affirmed, but the very truth, whereunto they would stand. Then said the Doctors, that they were out of the Catholick Faith.

Then Dr. Shaxton said unto them; Good Brethren, remember your selves, and become new men, for I my self was in this fond Opinion that you are now in, but I am now become a new man.

Ah, said Wolfey, are you become a new man? Wo-be to thee thou wicked new man, for God shall justly judge thee.

Dr. Fuller then spake, saying, This Wolfey is an obli-viate Fellow, and one that I could never do good upon.
But as for the Painter, he is a man quiet and indifferent (as far as I perceive) and is soon reformed, and may very well be delivered for any evil Opinion I find in him.

Then Christopher called for Pen and Ink, and wrote these words following; I Robert Pygot do believe, that after the words of Consecration spoken by the Priest, there remaineth no more bread and wine, but the very body and blood of Christ really and substantially, the self same that was born of the Virgin Mary; and reading it to the Painter, he said thus, Dost thou believe all this according as it is written?

Pygot. No, Sir, said the Painter, that is your Faith, and not mine.

Christopher. Lo, Master Dr. Fuller, you would have let this Fellow go, he is as much an Hereticke as the other. And so immediately Judgment was given upon them to dye. Which done, after the Sentence read, they were sent again to the Prison, where they did lye till the day of their death. At which day, one Peacock Barche-lor of Divinity, being appointed to preach, took his Text out of the first Epistle of S. Paul to the Corinthians, Ch. 5, of one that had lived inordinately, by abusing his Fathers wife; likening the said Pygot and Wolfey to the same man, oftentimes saying, that such Members must be cut off from the Congregation, most maliciously reporting the said Wolfey to be clean out of the Faith, and in many places quite denying the Scripture.

So his Sermon being ended, the forenamed Pygot and Wolfey being brought to the place of Execution, and so bound to the Stake with a Chain, thither cometh one Sir Richard Collinson a Priest, at that time destitute of any biding place or stay of Benefice, who said unto Wolfey; Brother Wolfey, the Preacher hath openly reported in his Sermon this day, that you are quite out of the Catholick Faith, and deny Baptism, and that you do err in the holy Scripture; wherefore I beseech you for the certifying of my Conscience, with others here present, that you declare in what place of the Scripture you do err or find fault.

Wolfey. I take the eternal and everlasting God to witness, that I do err in no part or point of Gods Book, the holy Bible, but hold and believe in the same to be most firm and sound Doctrine in all points most worthy for my salvation, and for all other Christians to the end of the world. Whatsoever mine Adversaries report by me, God forgive them therefore. With that cometh one to the fire with a great thirt knit full of Books to burn, like as they had been New Testaments. O said Wolfey, give me one of them, and Pygot desired another, both of them clapping them close to their breasts, saying the 106 Psalm, desiring all the People to say Amen, and so received the fire most thankfully.

Books burned with

Concerning the Story of William Wolsey, I received moreover from the University of Cambridge, by a credible person, and my faithful friend William Fulke, this Relation which I thought in this place not unmeet to be notified unto the Reader in order and form as followeth.

There were burned at Ely two godly Martyrs, the one called Wolsey, the other Pygot. In these two appeared a divers disposition of spirit. Pygot was mild, humble and modest, promising that he would be conformable to his Persecutors, if they could persuade him by the Scripture. The other, Wolsey was stout, strong, and vehement, as one having anaspaspas of the Spirit, and detested all their doings, as of whom he was sure to receive nothing but cruelty and tyranny. He was wonderful jealous over his Companion, fearing lest his gentle nature would have been overcome by the flattering enticements of the world, and therefore the same day that they were burned, when they would have talked with him alone, he pulled him away from them almost by force. He was so desirous to glorify God with his suffering, that being wonderful sore tormented in the Prison with the Tooth-ach, he feared nothing more than that he should depart before the day of Execution (which he called his glad day) were come.

This Wolsey being in Prison at Ely, was visited by Thomas Hadlo Beer-Brewer in Ely. To him he delivered certain money to be distributed (as he appointed) part to his Wife, and part to his Kinsfolks and Friends, and especially six shillings eight pence to be delivered to one Richard Denton, Smith, dwelling at Wells in Cambridgeshire, within the Jurisdiction of the Isle of Ely, with his Commendation, that he marvelled that he tarried so long behind him, seeing that he was the first that delivered him the Book of Scripture into his hand, and told him that it was the Truth, desiring him to make haste after as fast as he could.

This Thomas Hadlo, both to avoid the danger of the time, and to have a witness of his doings herein, delivered the said sum of Money to one Mr. Lawrence, Preacher in Essex (who then resorted often to his house) to be distributed as Wolsey had appointed; which thing he performed, riding from place to place. And when this six shillings eight pence was delivered to Richard Denton with the Commendation aforesaid: His answer was this, I confess it is true, but alas I cannot burn. This was almost one whole year after Wolsey was burned. But he that could not burn in the Cause of Christ, was afterward burned against his will, when Christ had given peace to his Church. For in the year of our Lord 1564. on Tuesday being the eighteenth of April, his house was set on fire, and while he went in to save his goods, he lost his life, with two other that were in the same house.

Witnessed by Thomas Hadlo
and William Fulke.

Not much unlike to this, was also the example of M. West, Chaplain to Bishop Ridley, who refusing to dye in Christ's Cause with his Master, said Mass against his Conscience, and soon after died.

Dr. Nicholas Ridley, and Mr. Hugh Latimer, both Bishops, Preachers, and Martyrs of Christ, with their doings, conferences, and sufferings described.

The same year, month and day which the foresaid two Martyrs, William Wolsey and Thomas Pygot suffered at Ely, the which was Anno 1555. Octob. 16. followed also at Oxford the slaughter of two other special and singular Captains and principal Pillars of Christ's Church, Mr. Ridley Bishop of London, and Mr. Hugh Latimer, Bishop sometime of Worcester, of whose famous doings and memorable learning, and incomparable ornaments and gifts of grace, joyned with no less commendable sincerity of life, as all the Realm can witness sufficiently; so it needeth not greatly that we should stand exactly at this time in setting forth a full description of the same, but only to comprehend briefly in a few words, touching the order of their lives, so much as necessarily serveth to the due instruction of the Reader, and maketh to the use of this present History, in Anno declaring first their beginning and bringing up, then their studies and acts in the University, their preferences also by their studies to higher dignity, at last their trouble and travel in setting forth Religion, and in maintaining the same to the shedding of their blood. And first to begin with the life of Mr. Ridley, whose story here ensueth.

Among many other worthy and sundry Histories and notable Acts of such as of late days have been troubled, murdered, and martyred for the true Gospel of Christ in Queen Maries reign, the tragical story and life of Dr. Ridley, I thought good to commend to Chronicle, and leave to perpetual memory; beleeving thee (gentle Reader) with care and study well to peruse, diligently to consider, and deeply to print the same in thy breast, seeing him to be a man beautified with such excellent qualities, so ghostly inspired and godly learned, and now written doubtless in the Book of Life, with the blessed Saints of the Almighty, crowned and throned amongst the glorious Company of Martyrs. First, descending of a stock right worshipful, he was born in Northumberlandshire, who being a Child, learned his Grammar with great dexterity in Newcastle, and was removed from thence to the University of Cambridge, where he in short time became so famous, that for his singular aptness, he was called to higher functions and offices of the University, by degree attaining therunto, and was called to be Head of Pembroke Hall, and there made Doctor of Divinity. After this, departing from thence, he travelled to Paris, who at his return was made Chaplain to King Henry the Eighth, and promoted afterwards by him to the Bishoprick of Hereford; and so from thence translated to the See and Bishoprick of London in King Edwards days.

In which calling and offices he so travelled and occupied himself by preaching and teaching the true and wholesome Doctrine of Christ, that never good Child was the fruitful more singularly loved of his dear Parents, than he of his Flock and Diocese. Every Holiday and Sunday he lightly preached in some one place or other, except he were otherwise letted by weighty affairs and business, to whose Sermons the people resorted swarming about him like Bees, and coveting the sweet flowers and wholesome joyce of the fruitful Doctrine, which he did not only preach, but shewed the same by his life, as a glittering Lanthorn to the eyes and senses of the blind, in such pure order and chastity of life (declining from evil desires and concupiscences) that even his very enemies could not reproove him in any one jot thereof.

Besides this, he was passively well learned, his memory was great, and he of such reading withal, that of right he deserved to be comparable to the best of this our Age, as can testifie as well divers his notable Works, pithy Sermons, and sundry his Disputations in both the Universities, and also his very Adversaries, all which will say no less themselves.

Besides all this, wife he was of counsel, deep of wit, and very politick in all his doings. How merciful and careful he was to reduce the obstinate Papists from their erroneous opinions, and by gentleness to win them to the Truth, his gentle ordering and courteous handling of Dr. Heath, late Archbishop of York, being Prisoner with him in King Edwards time in his house one year, sufficiently declareth. In fine, he was such a Prelate, and in all points so good, godly, and ghostly a man, that England may justly rue the loss of so worthy a Treasure. And thus hitherto concerning these Publick Matters.

Now will I speak something further particularly of Mr. Ridley his person and conditions. He was a man right comely and well proportioned in all points, both in complexion and incaments of the body. He took all things in good part, bearing no malice nor rancour from his heart, but straightways forgetting all injuries and offences of others against him. He was very kind and natural to his Kinsfolks, and yet not bearing with them any thing otherwise than right would require, giving them always for a general rule, yea to his own Brother and Sister, that they doing evil should seek or look for nothing nothing at his hand, but should beas strangers and aliens unto him, and they to be his Brother and Sister, which used honestly, and a godly trade of life.

He using all kinds of ways to mortifie himself, was given to much prayer and contemplation : For duly every Morning, so soon as his apparel was done upon him, he went forthwith to his Bed-chamber, and there upon his knees prayed the space of half an hour ; which being done, immediately he went to his Study (if there came no other business to interrupt him) where he continued till ten of the Clock, and then came to the Common Prayer, daily used in his house: The prayers being done, he went to dinner ; where he used little talk, except otherwise occasion by some had been ministred, and then was it sober, discreet and wife, and sometime merry, as cause required.

The dinner done, which was not very long, he used to sit an hour or thereabouts talking, or playing at the Chess : That done, he returned to his Study, and there would continue, except Suters or business abroad were occasion of the contrary, untill five of the Clock at Night, and then would come to Common-Prayer, as in the fore-noon : which being finished, he went to Supper behaving himself there as at his dinner before. After Supper recreating himself in playing at Chess the space of an hour, he would then return again to his Study ; continuing there till 11 of the Clock at Night, which was his common hour to go to Bed, then saying his prayers upon his knees as in the Morning when he rose. Being at his Manor of Fulham, as divers times he used to be, he read daily a Lecture to his Family at the Common-Prayer, beginning at the Acts of the Apostles, and so going thorow all the Epistles of S. Paul, giving to every man that could read a New testament, hiring them besides with money to learn by heart certain principal Chapters, but especially the 13 Chapter of the Acts, reading also unto his household oftentimes the 101 Psalm, being marvellous careful over his Family, that they might be a spectacle of all vertue and honesty to others. To be short, as he was godly and virtuous himself, so nothing but vertue and godliness reigned in his house, feeding them with the food of our Saviour Jesus Christ.

Now remaineth a word or two to be declared of his gentle nature and kindly pity in the usage of an Old woman called Mrs. Boner, Mother to Dr. Boner sometime Bishop of London, which I thought good to touch, as well for the rare clemency of Dr. Ridley, as the unworthy inhumanity and ingratefull disposition again of Dr. Boner, Bishop Ridley being at his Manor of Fulham, always went for this said Mrs. Boner, dwelling in a house adjoining to his house, to dinner and Supper, with one Mrs. Mungey, Boners Sister, saying, Go for my Mother Boner, who coming, was ever placed in the Chair at the Tables end, being so gently intreated, welcomed, and taken, as though he had been born of her own Body, being never displaced of her seat, although the Kings Council had been present, saying, when any of them were there (as divers times they were) By your Lordships favour this place of right and custom is for my Mother Boner.

But how well he was recompensed for this his singular gentleness, and pitiful pity after, at the hands of the said Dr. Boner, almost the least Child that goeth by the ground can declare. For who afterward was more enemy to Ridley, than Boner and his? Who more went about to seek his destruction than he? recompensing this his gentleness with extreme Cruelty ; As well appeared by the strait handling of Ridelys own Natural Sister, and George Shipside her Husband from time to time : whereas the gentleness of the other did suffer Boners Mother, Sister, and other of his kindred, not only quietly to enjoy all that which they had of Boner, but also entertained them in his house, shewing much courtesie and friendship daily unto them : whereas on the other side, Bishop Boner being restored again, would not suffer the Brother and Natural Sister of Bishop Ridley, and other his friends not only not to enjoy that which they had by the said their Brother Bishop Ridley, but also curiously without all order of Law or honesty, by extort power wrested from them all the Livings they had.

And yet being not therewith satisfied, he sought all the means he could to work the death of the foresaid

Shipside, saying, that he would make twelve Godfathers to go upon him ; which had been brought to pass indeed, at what time he was Prisoner at Oxford, had not God otherwise wrought his deliverance by means of Dr. Heath, then the Bishop of Worcester. Teste Georgio Shipside.

Whereby all good indifferent Readers notoriously have to understand, what great diversity was in the disposition of these two Natures. Whereof as the one excelled in mercy and piety, so the other again as much or more excelled in churlish ingratitude, and despitefull disdain. But of this matter enough.

Now concerning Gods vocation, how Dr. Ridley was first called to the favouring and favouring of Christ and his Gospel, partly by his disputation before, and other his Treatises it may appear, that the first occasion of his Conversion, was by reading of Bertrams Book of the Sacrament, whom also the conference with Bishop Crammer, and with Peter Martyr did not a little confirm in that behalf. Who now by the grace of God, being thorowly won and brought to the true way, as he was before blind and zealous in his old ignorance, so was he constant and faithful in the right knowledge which the Lord had opened unto him (as well appeared by his preachings and doings during all the time of King Edward) and so long did much good, while Authority of exten power might defend and hold up the peace of the Church, and proceedings of the Gospel. But after that it so pleased the heavenly will of the Lord our God to bereave us of our stay, and call from us King Edward that precious Prince, as the whole state of the Church of England was left desolate and open to the enemies hand : to this Bishop Ridley, after the coming in of Queen Mary, effoon and with the first was laid hands upon, and committed to Prison, as before hath sufficiently been expressed : first in the Tower, then after translated from thence with the Archbishop of Canterbury, and Mr. Latimer to Oxford, was with them inclosed in the Common Gaol, and Prison of Bocardo, while at length, being delivered from them, he was committed to custody in the house of one Irlish, where he remained till the last day of his death and Martyrdom, which was from the year of our Lord, 1554, till the year 1555, and 16 day of October.

Furthermore, as touching his disputations and conflicts had at Oxford, and also of his determination had at Cambridge, also his travels in perswading and instructing the Lady Mary before she was Queen, his reasons and conference likewise had in the Tower at the Lieutenants Boord, enough hath been said already. Beside this, other conferences he had in Prison both with Dr. Crammer, and Mr. Latimer, as here followeth to be read.

A Conference had betwixt Mr. Ridley, and Mr. Latimer in Prison, upon the Objections of Antonian, meaning by that name some Popish Persecutor, as Winchester, alluding thereby to the story of Victor. lib. 3. De persecut. Aphri.

IN writing again ye have done me an unspeakable pleasure, and I pray that the Lord may requite it you in that day. For I have received great comfort at your words : but yet I am not so filled withal, but that I thirst much more now than before, to Drink more of the Cup of yours, wherein ye mingle unto me profitable with pleasant. I pray you, good Father, let me have one draught more to comfort my stomach. For surely except the Lord assist me with his gracious aid, in the time of his service, I know I shall play but the part of a white-livered Knight. But truly my trust is in him, that in mine infirmity he should try himself strong, and that he can make the Coward in his cause to fight like a man.

Sir, now I daily look when Diotrephes with his warriors shall assault me : wherefore I pray you good Father, for that you are an old Souldier, and an expert Warriour, and God knoweth I am but a young Souldier, and as yet of small experience in these feats, help me, I pray you, to buckle my harness. And now I would have you to think, that these darts are cast at my Head of some one of Diotrephes, or Antonius Souldiers.

The Objection of the Antonian.

All men marvel greatly, why you, after the liberty you have granted unto you, more than the rest, do not go to Maf, which is a thing (as you know) now much esteemed of all men, yea of the Queen herself.

The Answer

Because no man that layeth hand on the plough and looketh back is fit for the Kingdom of God, and also for the self same cause why St. Paul would not suffer Titus to be circumcised, which is, that the Truth of the Gospel might remain with us uncorrupt, Galat. the second: And again, If I build again the things which I destroyed I make my self a Trefpaffer. This is also another cause: I should seem by outward fact to allow the things, which I am perswaded is contrary to sound Doctrine, and so should be a stumbling stock unto the weak. But we be unto him by whom offence cometh: it were better for him that a Mill-stone were hanged about his neck, and he cast into the midst of the Sea.

Except the Lord help me, ye say. Truth it is. For without me, faith he, ye can do nothing, much less suffer death of our Adversaries, through the bloody Law now prepared against us. But it followeth, If you abide in me, and my word abide in you, ask what you will, and it shall be done for you. What can be more comfortable? Sir, you make answer your self so well, that I cannot better it. Sir, begin now to smell what you mean by travelling thus with me, you use me as Bilney did once, when he converted me, pretending as though he would be taught of me, he sought ways and means to teach me, and so do you. I thank you therefore most heartily. For indeed you minister armour unto me, whereas I was unarmed before and unprovided, saying that I give my self to prayer for my refuge.

What is it then that offendeth you so greatly in the Maf that you will not vouchsafe once either to hear it or see it? And from whence cometh this new Religion upon you? have not you used in times past to say Maf your self?

I confess unto you my fault and ignorance; but know you that for these matters I have done penance long ago, both at Pauls Crofs, and also openly in the Pulpit at Cambridge, and I trust God hath forgiven me this mine offence: for I did it upon ignorance. But if you be desirous to know and will vouchsafe to hear what things do offend me in the Maf, I will rehearse unto you those things which be most clear, and seem to repugn most manifestly against Gods word, and they be these: the strange Tongue; the want of the shewing of the Lords Death; the breaking of the Lords Commandment of having a Communion; the Sacrament is not communicated to all under both kinds, according to the Word of the Lord; the sign is fervently worshipped for the thing signified; Christs Passion is injured, forasmuch as this Maf-sacrifice is affirmed to remain for the purging of sins; to be short, the manifold superstitions, and trifling fondness which are in the Maf, and about the same.

Better a few things well pondered, than to trouble the memory with too much; you shall prevail more with praying, than with studying, though mixture be best, for so one shall alleviate the tediousness of the other. I intend not to contend much with them in words, after a reasonable account of my Faith given: for it shall be but in vain. They will say, as their Fathers said, when they have no more to say: We have a Law, and by our Law he ought to die. Be ye steadfast and unmovable, faith St. Paul: and again Persevere, Stand fast: And how oft is this repeated, If ye abide, if ye abide? &c. But we shall be called obstinate, sturdy, ignorant, heady, and what not? so that a man hath need of much patience, having to do with such men.

But you know how great a Crime it is to separate your self from the Communion or fellowship of the Church, and to make a Schism, or division. You have been reported to have hated the Sect of the Anabaptists, and always to have impugned the same. Moreover, this was the pernicious error of Novatus, and of the Hereticks called (Cathari) that they would not communicate with the Church.

I know that the Unity of the Church is to be retained by all means, and the same to be necessary to salvation. But I do not take the Maf, as it is at this day, for the Communion of the Church, but a Popish device, whereby both the Commandment and Institution of our Saviour Christ, for the oft frequenting of the remembrance of his Death, is eluded, and the People of God are miserably deluded. The Sect of the Anabaptists, and the Herefie of the Novatians ought of right to be condemned, forasmuch as without any just or necessary cause they wickedly separated themselves from the Communion of the Congregation, for they did not alledge that the Sacraments were unduly ministered, but turning away their eyes from themselves, wherewith according to St. Pauls rule they ought to examine themselves, and calling their eyes ever upon others, either Ministers, or Communicants with them, they always reproved something for the which they abstained from the Communion, as from an unholly thing.

I remember that Calvin beginneth to confute the Interim after this sort with this saying of Hilary, The name of Peace is beautiful, and the Opinion of Unity is fair: but who doubteth that to be the true and only Peace of the Church, which is Christ? I would you had that little Book, there should you see how much is to be given to Unity. St. Paul when he requireth Unity, he joyneth straight-withal, secundum Jesum Christum, Rom. 15. according to Jesus Christ, no further. Diotrephes now of late did ever harp upon Unity, Unity. Yea Sir (quoth I) but in Verity, not in Popery. Better is diversity, than an Unity in Popery. I had nothing again but scornful Taunts, with commandment to the Tower.

But admit there be in the Maf, that peradventure might be amended, or at least made better: yea, seeing you will have it so admit there be a fault; if you do not consent thereto, why do you trouble your self in vain? do you not know both by Cyprian and Augustine that Communion of Sacraments doth not defile a man, but consist of deeds?

If it were any one trifling Ceremony, or if it were some one thing of it self indifferent (although I would wish nothing should be done in the Church, which doth not edifie the same) yet for the continuance of the common quietness I could be content to bear it. But forasmuch as things done in the Maf tend openly to the overthrow of Christs Institution, I judge that by no means either in word or deed I ought to consent unto it. As for that which is objected out of the Fathers, I acknowledge it to be well spoken, if it be well understood. But it is meant of them which suppose they are defiled if any secret vice be either in the Ministers, or in them that communicate with them, and is not meant of them which do abhor superstition, and wicked traditions of men, and will not suffer the same to be thrust upon themselves, or upon the Church in stead of Gods Word and the Truth of the Gospel.

The very Marrow-bones of the Maf are altogether detestable, and therefore by no means to be born withal: so that of necessity the mending of it is to abolish it for ever. For if you take away oblation and adoration, which do hang upon Consecration and Transubstantiation, the most Papists of them all will not set a Button by the Maf, as a thing which they esteem not, but for the gain that followeth thereon. For if the English Communion, which of late was used, were as gainful to them, as the Maf hath been heretofore, they would strive no more for their Maf; from thence growth the grief.

Consider into what dangers you cast your self, if you forsake the Church; and you cannot but forsake it, if you refuse to go to Maf. For the Maf is the Sacrament of Unity; without the Ark there is no salvation. The Church is the Ark and Peters Ship. Ye know this saying well enough; He shall not have God to be his Father, which acknowledgeth not the Church to be his Mother. Moreover without the Church, (faith S. Augustine) be the life never so well spent, it shall not inherit the Kingdom of Heaven.

The Holy Catholick or universal Church, which is the communion of Saints, the Houfe of God, the City of God, the Spouse of Christ, the Body of Christ, the pillar and stay of the truth; this Church I believe; according to the Creed. This Church I do reverence; and honor in the Lord. But the rule of this Church is the Word of God, according to which rule we go forward unto life. And as many as walk according to this rule, I say with Saint Paul, Peace be upon them; and upon Israel which pertaineth unto God. The guide of this Church is the Holy Ghost. The marks whereby this Church is known unto me in this dark World, and in the midst of this crooked and froward generation, are these: The sincere preaching of Gods Holy Word, the due administration of the Sacraments, charity, and faithful observing of Ecclesiastical discipline, according to the Word of God. And that Church or congregation which is garnished with these marks, is in very deed that heavenly Jerusalem, which consisteth of those that be born from above. This is the Mother of us all, and by Gods grace I will live and die the Child of this Church. Forth of this (I grant) there is no salvation; and I suppose the residue of the places objected are rightly to be understood of this Church only. In times past (saith Chrysostome) there were many ways to know the Church of Christ, that is to say, by good life, by miracles, by chastity, by Doctrine, by ministering the Sacraments. But from that time that Heresies did take hold of the Church, it is only known by the Scriptures which is the true Church. They have all things in outward shew, which the true Church hath in truth. They have Temples like unto ours.

And in the end concluded. Wherefore only by the Scriptures do we know which is the true Church. To that which they say, that the Mass is the Sacrament of Unity, I answer; The Bread which we break, according to the institution of the Lord, is the Sacrament of the Unity of Christs mystical Body. For we being many, are one Bread and one Body, forasmuch as we all are partakers of one Bread. But in the Mass the Lords institution is not observed; for we are not all partakers of one Bread, but one devoureth all, &c. So that (as it is used) it may seem a Sacrament of singularity, and of a certain special privilege for one sect of People, whereby they may be discerned from the rest, rather than a Sacrament of unity, wherein our knitting together in one is represented.

Yea, what fellowship hath Christ with Antichrist? Therefore is it not lawful to bear the yoke with Papists. Come forth from among them, and separate your selves from them, saith the Lord. It is one thing to be the Church indeed, another thing to counterfeit the Church. Would God it were well known what is the forsaking of the Church. In the Kings days that dead is, who was the Church of England? The King and his fautors, or Mass-mongers in corners? If the King and the fautors of his proceedings, why be not we now the Church abiding in the same proceedings? If clancular Mass-mongers might be of the Church, and yet contrary to the Kings proceedings, why may not we as well be of the Church contrary the Queens proceedings? Not all that be covered with the title of the Church, are the Church indeed. Separate thy self from them that are such, saith S. Paul; from whom? The text hath before, If any man follow other Doctrine, &c. he is put up, and knoweth nothing, &c. Weigh the whole text, that ye may perceive what is the fruit of contentious disputes: But wherefore are such men said to know nothing, when they know so many things? You know the old Verities,

Hoc est nefcive, sine Christo plurima scire:
S; Christum bene scis, satis est, si cetera nescis.

That is, This is to be ignorant, to know many things without Christ. If thou knowest Christ well, thou knowest enough, though thou know no more. Therefore would S. Paul know nothing but Jesus Christ crucified, &c. As many as are Papists and Mass-mongers, they may well be said to know nothing. For they know not Christ, forasmuch as in their making they take much away from the benefit and merit of Christ.

That Church which you have described unto me is invisible, but Christs Church is visible and known. For else why would Christ have said, Die Ecclesies, Tell it unto the Church. For he had commanded it vain to go unto the Church, if a man cannot tell which it is.

The Church which I have described is visible, it hath members which may be seen; and also I have afore declared, by what marks and tokens it may be known. But if either our eyes are so dazled, that we cannot see, or that Satan hath brought such darkness into the World, that it is hard to discern the true Church; that is not the fault of the Church, but either of our blindness, or of Satans darkness. But yet in this most deep darkness there is one most clear candle, which of it self alone is able to put away all darkness. Thy Word is a candle unto my feet, and a light unto my steps.

The Church of Christ is a Catholick or universal Church, dispersed throughout the whole World; this Church is the great house of God, in this are good men and evil mingled together, goats and sheep, corn and chaff; it is the net which gathereth all kind of fishes: this Church cannot err, because Christ hath promised it his Spirit, which shall lead it into all truth, and that the gates of hell shall not prevail against it; that he will be with it unto the end of the World; whatsoever it shall loose or bind upon earth, shall be ratified in heaven, &c. This Church is the pillar and stay of the truth; this is it for the which Saint Augustine saith, he believeth the Gospel: But this universal Church alloweth the Mass, because the more part of the same alloweth it. Therefore, &c.

I grant that the name of the Church is taken after three divers manners in the Scriptures. Sometimes for the whole multitude of them which profess the Name of Christ, of the which they are also named Christians. But as S. Paul saith of the Jew, not every one is a Jew, that is a Jew outwardly, &c. Neither yet all that be of Israel, are counted the seed; even so not every one which is a Christian outwardly is a Christian indeed. For if any man have not the Spirit of Christ, the same is none of his. Therefore that Church which is his Body, and of which Christ is the head, standeth only in living stones, and true Christians, not only outwardly in name and title, but inwardly in heart and in truth. But forasmuch as this Church (which is the second taking of the Church) as touching the outward fellowship, is contained within the great house, and hath with the same, outward society of the Sacraments and ministry of the Word, many things are spoken of that Universal Church (which S. Augustine calleth the mingled Church) which cannot truly be understood, but only of that pure part of the Church. So that the rule of Ticonius concerning the mingled Church, may here well take place; where there is attributed unto the whole Church that which cannot agree unto the same, but by reason of the one part thereof; that is, either for the multitude of good men, which is the very true Church indeed; or for the multitude of evil men, which is the malignant Church and Synagogue of Satan. And there is also a third taking of the Church, of the which, although there be seldom mention in the Scriptures, in that signification, yet in the World, even in the most famous assemblies of Christendom, this Church hath born the greatest swinge. This distinction presupposed of the three sorts of Churches, it is an easie matter, by a figure called Synecdoche, to give to the mingled and Universal Church, that which cannot truly be understood but only of the one part thereof. But if any man will stiffly affirm, that Universal doth so pertain unto Church, that whatsoever Christ hath promised to the Church, it must needs be understood of that, I would gladly know of the same man, where that Universal Church was in the times of the Patriarchs and Prophets, of Noah, Abraham, and Moses, (at such time as the People would have stoned him) of Helias, of Jeremy, in the times of Christ, and the dispersion of the Apostles, in the time of Arrins, when Constantius was Emperour, and Felix Bishop of Rome succeeded Liberius. It is worthy to be noted, that Lyra writeth upon Matthew; The Church (saith he) doth not stand in men by reason of their power or dignity, whether it be Ecclesiastical or Secular. For many Princes and Popes, and other inferiours, have been found to have fallen away from God. Therefore the Church consisteth in those persons,

And Saint Augustine, contra Crescentium grammaticum, f. 14; Whosoever is afraid to be deceived by the darkness of this question, let him ask Counsel at the same Church of it; which Church the Scripture doth point out without any doubtfulness. All my notes which I have written and gathered out of such Authors as I have read in this matter, and such like, are come into the hands of such, as will not let me have the least of all my written books; wherein I am enforced to complain of them unto God: for they spoil me of all my labours, which I have taken in my study these many years. My memory was never good, for help whereof I have used for the most part to gather out notes of my reading, and so to place them, that thereby I might have had the use of them when the time required. But who knoweth whether this be Gods will, that I should be thus ordered, and spoiled of the poor learning I had (as me thought) in store, to the intent that I now definite of that, should from henceforth learn only to know with Paul, Christ, and him crucified? The Lord grant me herein to be a good young Scholar, and to learn this lesson so well, that neither death nor life, wealth nor wo, &c. make me ever to forget that, Amen, Amen.

I have no more to say in this matter; for you yourself have said all that is to be said. That same vehement saying of Saint Augustine, I would not believe the Gospel, &c. was wont to trouble many men; as I remember, I have read it well qualified of Philip Melancthon; but my memory is altogether slippery. This it is in effect; The Church is not a judge, but a witness. There were in his time that lightly esteemed the testimony of the Church, and the outward ministry of Preaching, and rejected the outward word it self, sticking onely to their inward revelations. Such rash contempt of the word provoked and drove Saint Augustine into that excessive vehemency. In the which after the bare found of the words, he might seem to such as do not attain unto his meanings, that he preferred the Church far before the Gospel, and that the Church hath a free Authority over the same; but that godly man never thought so. It were a saying worthy to be brought forth against the Anabaptists, which think the open ministry to be a thing not necessary, if they any thing esteemed such testimonies. I would not stick to affirm, that the more part of the great house, that is to say, of the whole Universal Church, may easily err. And again, I would not stick to affirm, that it is one thing to be gathered together in the Name of Christ, and another thing to come together with a Mass of the Holy Ghost going before. For in the first Christ ruleth, in the later the Devil beareth the swing; and how then can any thing be good that they go about? From this later shall our six Articles come forth again into the light, they themselves being very darkness. But it is demanded, whether the founder or better part of the Catholick Church may be seen of men, or no? Saint Paul saith; The Lord knoweth them that are his. What manner of speaking is this in commendation of the Lord, if we knew as well as he who are his? Well, thus is the text: The sure foundation of God standeth still, and hath this seal, the Lord knoweth them that are his; and let every man that nameth the name of Christ depart from iniquity. Now how many are there of the whole Catholick Church of England which depart from iniquity? How many of the Noble men, how many of the Bishops or Clergy, how many of the rich men, or Merchants, how many of the Queens Councillors, yea, how many of the whole Realm? In how small room then I pray you is the true Church within the Realm of England? And where is it? And in what state? I had a conceit of mine own well grounded (as they say) when I began, but now it is slain by the way.

A question
Answer.

General Councils represent the Universal Church, and have this promise of Christ; Where two or three be gathered together in my name, there am I in the midst of them. If Christ be present with two or three, then much more where there is so great a multitude, &c. But in general Councils Mass hath been approved and used: Therefore, &c.

Of the Universal Church, which is mingled of good and bad, thus I think; Whensoever they which be chief in it, which rule and govern the same, and to whom the whole mystical Body of Christ doth obey, are the lively members of Christ, and walk after the guiding and rule of his Word, and go before the flock towards everlasting life, then undoubtedly Councils gathered together of such guides and pastors of the Christian flock, do indeed represent the Universal Church, and being so gathered in the name of Christ, they have a promise of the gift and guiding of his Spirit into all truth. But that any such Council hath at any time allowed the Mass, such an one as ours was of late, in a strange tongue, and stuffed with so many absurdities, errors, and superstitions; that I utterly deny, and affirm it to be impossible. For like as there is no agreement betwixt light and darkness, between Christ and Belial; so surely superstition and the sincere Religion of Christ, will worship and the pure worshipping of God, such as God requireth of his, that is, in Spirit and truth, can never agree together. But ye will say, where so great a company is gathered together, it is not credible but there be two or three gathered in the name of Christ. I answer; If there be one hundred good, and two hundred bad (forasmuch as the decrees and ordinances are pronounced according to the greater number of the multitude of voices) what can the less number of voices avail? It is a known thing; and a common Proverb; Oftentimes the greater part overcometh the better.

As touching general Councils, at this present I have no more to say, then you have said. Onely I refer you to your own experience, to think of our Country Parliaments and Convocations, how and what ye have seen and heard. The more part in my time did bring forth six Articles; for then the King would so have it, being seduced of certain. Afterward the more part did repel the same, our good Josias willing to have it so. The same Articles now again (alas) another great, but worse part hath restored. O what an uncertainty is this? But after this sort commonly are many proceedings, God be merciful unto us. Who shall deliver us from such torments of mind? Therefore is death the best Physician, but unto the faithful, whom he together and at once delivereth from all griefs. You must think this written upon this occasion, because you would needs have your paper blotted.

If the matter should go thus, that in general Councils men should not stand to the more number of the multitude (I mean of them which ought to give voices) then should no certain rule be left unto the Church; by the which controversies in weighty matters might be determined; but it is not to be believed, that Christ would leave his Church destitute of so necessary a help and safeguard.

Christ, who is the most loving spouse of his spouse the Church, who also gave himself for it, that he might sanctify it unto himself, did give unto it abundantly all things which are necessary to salvation; but yet so, that the Church should declare it self obedient unto him in all things, and keep it self within the bounds of his commandments, and further not to seek any thing which he teacheth not, as necessary unto salvation. Now further, for determination of all controversies in Christs Religion, Christ himself hath left unto the Church not onely Moses and the Prophets, whom he willeth his Church in all doubts to go unto, and ask Counsel at, but also the Gospels, and the rest of the Body of the New Testament; in the which whatsoever is heard of Moses and the Prophets, and whatsoever is necessary to be known unto salvation, is revealed and opened.

So that now we have no need to say, Who shall climb up into heaven, or who shall go down into the depth, to tell us what is needful to be done? Christ hath done both, and hath commended unto us the Word of faith, which also is abundantly declared unto us in his Word written; so that hereafter if we walk earnestly in this way, to the searching out of the truth, it is not to be doubted, but through the certain benefit of Christs Spirit, which he hath promised unto his, we may find it, and obtain everlasting life. Should men ask Council of the dead for the living, saith Ishai? Let them go rather to the Law and to the Testimony, &c. Christ sendeth them that be desirous to know the Truth, unto the Scriptures, saying, Search the Scriptures. I remember a like thing well spoken of Hieron; Ignorance of the Scriptures, is the mother and cause of all Errors. And in another place, as I remember in the same Author; The knowledge of the Scriptures, is the food of everlasting life. But now me thinketh I enter into a very broad Sea, in that I begin to shew, either out of the Scriptures themselves, or out of the ancient Writers, how much the holy Scripture is of force to teach the Truth of our Religion. But this is it, that I am now about that Christ would have the Church his Spouse in all doubts to ask counsel at the Word of his Father written, and faithfully left, and commended unto it in both Testaments, the Old and New. Neither do we read, that Christ in any place hath laid so great a burthen upon the members of his Spouse, that he hath commanded them to go to the Universal Church. Whatsoever things are written, faith Paul, are written for our learning. And it is true, that Christ gave unto his Church, some Apostles, some Prophets, some Evangelists, some Shepherds and Teachers, to the edifying of the Saints, till we come all to the unity of Faith, &c. But that all men should meet together out of all parts of the world, to define of the Articles of our Faith, I neither find it commanded of Christ, nor written in the word of God.

There is diversity betwixt things pertaining to God or Faith, and Politick and Civil matters. For in the first we must stand only to the Scriptures, which are able to make us all perfect and instructed unto salvation, if they well be understood. And they offer themselves to be well understood only to them, which have good wills, and give themselves to study and prayer. Neither are there any men less apt to understand them, then the prudent and wise men of the World. But in the other, that is, in Civil or Politick matters oftentimes the Magistrates do tolerate a less evil, for avoiding of a greater, as they which have this saying oft in their mouths; Better an inconvenience than a mischief. And it is the property of a wise man, faith one, to dissemble many things; and he that cannot dissemble, cannot Rule. In which sayings they bewray themselves, that they do not earnestly weigh what is just, what is not. Wherefore forsooth as mans laws, if it be but in this respect only, that they be devised by men, are not able to bring any thing to perfection, but are enforced of necessity to suffer many things out of square, and are compelled sometime to wink at the worst things: seeing they know not how to maintain the common peace and quiet otherwise, they doordain that the more part shall take place. You know what these kinds of speeches mean, I speak after the manner of men; ye walk after the manner of men, all men are liars. And that of S. Augustine, If ye live after mans reason, ye do not live after the will of God.

If ye say, that Councils have sometime erred, or may err, how then should we believe the Catholick Church? for that Councils are gathered by the authority of the Catholick Church.

From may be, to be indeed, is no good Argument; but from being, to may be, no man doubteth but it is a most sure Argument. But now that Councils have sometime erred it is manifest. How many Councils were there in the East parts of the World, which condemned the Nicene Council; and all those which would not forsake the same, they called by a slanderous name (as they thought) Homoians. Was not Achanasius, Chrysostom, Cyril, Eusebius, men very well learned, and of godly life, banished and condemned as famous Hereticks, and that by wicked Councils? How many things are there in the Canons and Constitutions of the Councils, which the Papists themselves do much dislike? But here peradventure one man will say unto me; We will grant you this in provincial Councils, or Councils of some one Nation, that they may sometimes err, forsooth as they do not reprehend the Universal Church; but it is not to be believed, that the general and full Councils have erred at any time. Here if I had my Books of the Councils, or rather such notes as I have gathered out of those Books, I could bring something which should serve for this purpose. But now seeing I have then not, I will recite one place only out of S. Austin, which (in my judgment) may suffice in this matter in stead of many. Who knoweth not (faith he) that the holy Scripture is so set before us, that it is not lawful to doubt of it, and that the Letters of Bishops may be reproved by other mens words, and by Councils, and that the Councils themselves which are gathered by Provinces and Countries, do give place to the authority of the general and full Councils; and that the former and general Councils are amended by the later; when as by some experience of things, either that which was shut up, is opened, or that which was hid, is known. Thus much out of Austin. But I will plead without Anton. upon matter contested. Here with us when as Papistry reigned, I pray you how doth that Book, which was called the Bishops Book, made in the time of King Henry the Eighth, whereof the Bishop of Winchester is thought to be either the first Father, or chief gatherer; how doth it (I say) sharply reprove the Florentine Council, in which was decreed the supremacy of the Bishop of Rome, and that with the content of the Emperor of Constantinople, and of the Grecians? So that in those days our learned ancient Fathers and Bishops of England did not stick to affirm, that a general Council might err. But me think I hear another man despising all that I have brought forth, and saying, These which you have called Councils, are not worthy to be called Councils, but rather Assemblies, and Conventicles of Hereticks. I pray you Sir, why do you judge them worthy of so slanderous a name? Because (faith he) they decreed things Heretical, contrary to true godliness and sound Doctrine and against the Faith of Christian Religion. The cause is weighty, for the which they ought of right to be called. But if it be so that all Councils ought to be defined, which decree any thing contrary to sound Doctrine, and the true Word, which is according to godliness, forsooth as the Mass, such as we had here of late, is openly against the Word of God; forsooth it must follow of necessity, that all such Councils, as have approved such Masses, ought of right to be held and despised, as Conventicles and Assemblies of men that stray from the Truth.

Another man alledgeth unto me the Authority of the Bishop of Rome, without which, neither can the Councils (faith he) be lawfully gathered, neither being gathered determine any thing concerning Religion. But this Objection is only grounded upon the ambitious and shameless maintenance of the Romish Tyranny and usurped dominion over the Clergy; which Tyranny we English men long ago, by the consent of the whole Realm, have expelled and abjured. And how rightly we have done it, a little Book set forth de utraque Potestate (that is, of both the Powers) doth clearly shew. I grant that the Romish ambition hath gone about to challenge to it self and to usurp such a Privilege of old time. But the Council of Carthage, in the year of our Lord 457. did openly withstand it, and also the Council at Milev, in the which S. Austin was present, did prohibit any appellations to be made to Bishops beyond the Sea.

S. Austin faith, the good men are not to be forsaken for the evil, but the evil are to be born withal for the good. Ye will not say (I trow) that in our Congregations all be evil.

I speak nothing of the goodness or evilness of your Congregations; but I fight in Christs quarrel against the Mass, which doth utterly take away and overthrow the ordinance of Christ. Let that be taken quite away, and then the partition of the wall that maketh the strick, shall be broken down. Now to the place of S. Austin, for bearing with the evil for the goods sake, there ought to be added other words, which the same writer hath exprestly in other places; that is, if those evil men do cast abroad no seeds of false Doctrine, nor lead other to destruction by their example.

It is perilous to attempt any new thing in the Church, which lacketh example of good men. How much more perilous is it to commit any act, unto the which the example of the Prophets, of Christ, and of the Apostles are contrary? But unto this your fact, in abstaining from the Church by reason of the Mass, the Example of the Prophets, of Christ, and of the Apostles are clean contrary:

Therefore, &c. The first part of the Argument is evident, and the second part I prove thus. In the times of the Prophets, of Christ, and his Apostles, all things were most corrupt. The People was miserably given to superstition, the Priests despised the Law of God; and yet notwithstanding we read not that the Prophets made any Schisms or divisions, and Christ himself haunted the Temple, and taught in the Temple of the Jews. Peter and John went up into the Temple at the ninth hour of Prayer; Paul after the reading of the Law, being desired to say something to the People, did not refuse to do it. Yea further, no man can shew, that either the Prophets, or Christ, and his Apostles did refuse to pray together with others, to sacrifice, or to be partakers of the Sacrament of Moses Law.

I grant the former part of your Argument, and to the second part I say, that although it contain many true things as of the corrupt state in the times of the Prophets, of Christ, and the Apostles, and of the Temple being haunted of Christ and his Apostles; yet notwithstanding the second part of your Argument is not sufficiently proved. For ye ought to have proved, that either the Prophets, either Christ or his Apostles did in the Temple communicate with the People in any kind of worshipping, which is forbidden by the Law of God, or repugnant to the Word of God. But that can no where be shewed. And as for the Church, I am not angry with it, and I never refused to go to it, and to pray with the People, to hear the Word of God, and to do all other things whatsoever may agree with the Word of God. S. Austin speaking of the Ceremonies of the Jews (I suppose in the Epistle ad Januarius) although he grant they grievously oppressed that People, both for the number, and bondage of the same, yet he calleth them burdens of the Law, which were delivered unto them in the word of God, not presumptions of men, which notwithstanding if they were not contrary to Gods Word, might after a sort be born withal. But now, seeing they are contrary to those things which are in the Word of God written, whether they ought to be born of any Christian or no, let him judge which is spiritual, which seareth God more then man, and loveth everlasting life more then this short and transitory life. To that which was said, that my fact lacketh example of the godly Fathers that have gone before, the contrary is most evident in the history of Tobie. Of whom it is said, that when all other went to the golden Calves, which Jeroboam the King of Israel had made, he himself alone fled all their Companies, and got him to Jerusalem unto the Temple of the Lord, and there worshipped the Lord God of Israel. Did not the man of God threaten grievous plagues both unto the Priests of Bethel, and to the Altar which Jeroboam had there made after his own fantasie? Which plagues King Josias the true Minister of God, did execute at the time appointed. And where do we read, that the Prophets or the Apostles did agree with the People in their idolatry, when as the People went a whoring with their Hill-altars? For what cause I pray you did the Prophets rebuke the People so much, as for their false worshipping of God after their own minds, and not after Gods Word? For what was so much as that was? Wherefore the false Prophets ceased not to malign the true Prophets of God: therefore they beat them, they banished them, &c. How else, I pray you, cut you understand that S. Paul alledgeth, when he saith, what concord hath Christ with Belial? Either what part hath the Believer with the Infidel? or how agreeeth the Temple of God with Images? For ye are the Temple of the living God, as God himself hath said; I will dwell among them, and will be their God, and they shall be my People. Wherefore, come out from among them, and separate your selves from them (saith the Lord) and touch none unclean thing; so will I receive you, and will be a Father unto you, and ye shall be my Sons and Daughters, saith the Lord Almighty.

Judas that holy Woman, would not suffer her self to be defiled with the meats of the wicked. All the Saints of God, which truly feared God, when they have been provoked to do any thing which they knew to be contrary to Gods Laws, have chosen to die, rather then to forsake the Laws of their God. Wherefore the Machabees put themselves in danger of death for the defence of the Law, Yea and at length died manfully in the defence of the same. If we do praise (saith Saint Augustine) the Machabees, and that with great admiration, because they did stoutly stand even unto death, for the Law of their Country; how much more ought we to suffer all things for our Baptism, for the Sacrament of the Body and Blood of Christ, &c.? But the Supper of the Lord, such a one (I mean) as Christ commandeth us to celebrate, the Mass utterly abolisheth, and corrupteth most shamefully.

Who am I that I should add any thing to this which you have so spoken? Nay I rather thank you that have vouchsafed to minister so plentiful armour to me, being otherwise altogether unarmed, saying that he cannot be left destitute of help, which rightly trusteth in the help of God. I only learn to die in reading of the New Testament, and am ever now and then praying unto my God, that he will be an helper unto me in time of need.

Seeing you are so obstinately set against the Mass, that you affirm, because it is done in a Tongue not understood of the People, and for other causes, I cannot tell what; therefore is it not the true Sacrament ordained of Christ? I begin to suspect you, that you think not catholically of Baptism also. Is our Baptism, which we do use in a Tongue unknown unto the People, the true Baptism of Christ, or no? If it be, then doth not the strange Tongue hurt the Mass. If it be not the Baptism of Christ, tell me how were you Baptized. Or whether will ye (as the Anabaptists do) that all which were Baptized in Latin, should be Baptized again in the English Tongue?

Although I would with Baptism to be given in the vulgar Tongue for the Peoples sake which are present, that they may the better understand their own profession, and also be more able to teach their Children the same, yet notwithstanding there is not like necessity of the vulgar Tongue in Baptism, as in the Lords Supper. Baptism is given to Children, who by reason of their Age are not able to understand what is spoken unto them, what Tongue soever it be. The Lords Supper is, and ought to be given to them that are waxen. Moreover, in Baptism which is accustomed to be given to Children in the Latin Tongue, all the substantial points (as a man would say) which Christ commanded to be done, are observed. And therefore I judge that Baptism to be a perfect and true Baptism; and that it is not only not needful, but also not lawful for any man to christened, to be christened again. But yet notwithstanding, they ought to be taught the Catechism of the Christian Faith, when they shall come to years of discretion; which Catechism whosoever despiseth, or will not devoutly embrace and willingly learn, in my judgment he playeth not the part of a Christian man. But in the Popish Mass are wanting certain substantial, that is to say, things commanded by the Word of God to be observed in the Ministration of the Lords Supper; of the which there is sufficient declaration made before.

Where you say (I would wish) surely I would wish that you had spoken more vehemently, and to have said, it is of necessity, that all things in the Congregation should be done in the vulgar Tongue, for the edifying and comfort of them that are present, notwithstanding that the Child itself is sufficiently Baptized in the Latin Tongue.

Forasmuch as I perceive you are so stiffly, I will not say obstinately bent, and so wedded to your Opinion, that no gentle Exhortations, no wholesome counsels, no other kind of means can call you home to a better mind, there remaineth that which in like cases was wont to be the only remedy against stiffnecked and stubborn persons, that is you must be hampered by the Laws, and compelled either to obey whether ye will or no, or else to suffer that which a Rebel to the Laws ought to suffer. Do you not know that whosoever refuseth to obey the Laws of the Realm, he bewrayeth himself to be an enemy to his Country? Do you not know that this is the readiest way to stir up Sedition and Civil war? It is better that you should bear your own sin, than that through the example of your breach of the common Laws, the common quiet should be disturbed. How can you say, you will be the Queens true subject, when as you do openly profess that you will not keep her Laws?

A. Latimer.

O heavenly Father, the Father of all wisdom, understanding, and true strength, I beseech thee for thy only Son our Saviour Christ's sake, look mercifully upon me wretched Creature, and send thine holy Spirit into my breast, that not only I may understand according to thy wisdom, how this pestilent and deadly dart is to be born off, and with what answer it is to be beaten back, but also when I must joyn to fight in the field for the glory of thy Name, that then I being strengthened with the defence of thy right hand, may manfully stand in the Confession of thy Faith, and of thy Truth, and continue in the same unto the end of my life, through the same our Lord Jesus Christ, Amen.

Now to the objection. I grant it to be reasonable, that he which by words and gentleness cannot be made to yield to that is right and good, should be bridled by the strict correction of the Laws: that is to say, he that will not be subject to Gods Word, must be punished by the Laws. It is true that is commonly said, He that will not obey the Gospel, must be tamed and taught by the rigour of the Law. But these things ought to take place against him, which refuseth to do that is right and just according to true Godliness, not against him, which cannot quietly bear Superstitions, but doth hate and detest from his heart such kind of proceedings, and that for the glory of the Name of God. To that which ye say, a transgressor of the common Laws bewrayeth himself to be an enemy of his Country, surely a man ought to look unto the nature of the Laws, what manner of Laws they be which are broken. For a faithful Christian ought not to think alike of all manner of Laws. But that saying ought only truly to be understood of such Laws as be not contrary to Gods Word. Otherwise, whosoever love their Country in Truth (that is to say, in God) they will always judge if at any time the Laws of God and man be the one contrary to the other (that a man ought rather to obey God than man. And they that think otherwise, and pretend a love to that Country forsooth as they make their Country to fight as it were against God, in whom consisteth the only way of their Country, surely I do think that such are to be judged most deadly enemies, and traitors to their Country. For they that fight against God which is the safety of their Country, what do they else but go about to bring upon their Country a present ruine and destruction? But they that do so are worthy to be judged enemies to their Country, and betrayers of the Realm. Therefore, &c.

But this is the readiest way (ye say) to stir up Sedition, to trouble the quiet of the Common-wealth; therefore are these things to be ceased in time by force of Laws. Behold, Satan doth not reprove to practise his old guiles, and accustomed subtleties. He hath ever this darts in a readiness to hurl against his Adversaries, to accuse them of Sedition, that he may bring them (if he can) in danger of the Higher Powers. For so hath he by his Minister always charged the Prophets of God. Abah said unto Elias; Art thou he that troublest Israel? The false Prophets also complained to their Princes of Jeremy, that his words were seditious, and not to be suffered: Did not the Scribes and Pharisees falsely accuse Christ as a Seditious person, and one that spake against Caesar? Did they not at the last cry, *If you let this man go, ye are not Caesars Friends*? The Orator Tertullus, how doth he accuse Paul before Felix the high Deputy? We have found this man, saith he, a pestilent fellow, and a stirrer of Sedition, unto all the Jews in the whole world, &c. But I pray you were these men, as they were called, Seditious persons? Christ, Paul and the Prophets? God forbid. But they were of false men falsely accused. And wherefore I pray you? but because they reproved before the People their guiles, superstition, and deceits. And when the other could not bear it, and would gladly have had them taken out of the way, they accused them as Seditious persons, and troublers of the Common-wealth, that being by this means made hateful to the People and Princes, they might the more easily be snatched up to be tormented, and put to death. But how far they were from all Sedition, their whole doctrine, life, and conversation doth well declare. For that which was objected last of all, that he cannot be a faithful subject to his Prince, which professeth openly that he will not observe the Laws which the Prince hath made; here I would wish that I might have an indifferent Judge, and one that feareth God, to whose Judgment in this cause I promise I will stand. I answer therefore, A man ought to obey his Prince, but in the Lord, and never against the Lord. For he that knowingly obeyeth his Prince against God, doth not a duty to the Prince, but is a deceiver of the Prince, and an helper unto him to work his own destruction. He is also unjust, which giveth not to the Prince that is the Prince, and to God that is Gods. Here cometh to my remembrance, that notable saying of Valentinianus Theod. Re- the Emperour for choosing the Bishop of Millain. Set clus. hist. him (saith he) in the Bishops seat, to whom if we (as be- ete- him) do offend at any time, we may submit our selves. clus. hist. Polycarpus the most constant Martyr, when he stood lib. 4. c. 4. before the chief Rulers and was commanded to blaspheme Niceph. Christ, and to swear by the fortune of Caesar, &c. he lib. 3. cap. 31. answered with a mild spirit; We are taught (saith he) to give honour unto Princes: and those powers which be of God; but such honour as is not contrary to Gods Religion.

Hitherto ye see (good Father) how I have in words only made as it were a flourish before the fight, which I shortly look after, and how I have begun to prepare certain kinds of weapons to fight against the adversary of Christ, and to muse with myself how the darts of the old enemy may be born off, and after what fort I may smite him again with the Sword of the Spirit. I Ephet. 6. learn also hereby to be in ure with armour, and to assay how I can go armed. In Tindal where I was born, not far from the Scottish Borders, I have known my Country-men to watch night and day in their hamlets, such as they had, that is, in their Jacks, and their Spears in their hand (you call them Northern-gads) especially when they had any privy warning of the coming of the Scots. And so doing, although at every such bickering some of them spent their lives, yet by such means, like pretty men, they defended their Country. And those that so did, I think that before God they died in a good quarrel, and their off-spring and Progeny all the Country loved them the better for their Fathers sake. And in the quarrel of Christ our Saviour, in the defence of his own Divine Ordinances, by the which he giveth unto us life and immortality; yea, in the quarrel of Faith, and Christian Religion, wherein resteth our everlasting salvation, shall we not watch? shall we not go always armed? ever looking when our Adversary (which like a roaring Lion 2 Pet. 2. seeketh whom he may devour) shall come upon us by reason of our slothfulness? yea, and we be unto us, if he can oppress us unawares, which undoubtedly he will do, if he find us sleeping. Let us awake therefore. For if the good man of the house knew at what hour the thief should come he would surely watch, and not suffer his house to be broken up. Let us awake therefore, I say: Let us not suffer our house to be broken up. Rediff the Devil, saith Saint James, and he will fly from you. Let James 4. us therefore resist him manfully, and taking the Cross upon our shoulders, let us follow our Captain Christ, who by his own Blood hath dedicated and hallowed the way which leadeth unto the Father, that is to the light which no man can attain, the fountain of the everlasting joys. 1 Tim. 6. Let us follow, I say, whithersoever he calleth and allureth us, that after these afflictions which last but for a moment, whereby he trieth our Faith, as gold by the fire, we may everlastingly reign and triumph with him in the glory of the Father, and that through the same our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ; to whom with the Father and the holy Ghost, be all honour and glory, now and for ever, Amen, Amen.

Good Father, forsooth as I have determined with myself, to pour forth these my cogitations into your bosom, here, me thinketh, I see you suddenly lifting up your head towards heaven, after your manner, and then looking upon me with your Prophetical countenance, and speaking unto me, with these or like words; Trust not, my Son (I beseech you vouchsafe me the honour of this name; for in so doing I shall think myself both honoured, and beloved of you.) Trust not, I say, my Son, to these word-weapons; for the Kingdom of God is not in words but in power. And remember always the words of the Lord. Do not imagine beforehand, what and how how you will speak: for it shall be given you even in that same hour what ye shall speak. For it is not ye that speak, but the Spirit of your Father which speaketh in you. I pray you therefore, Father, pray for me, that I may cast my whole care upon him, and trust upon him in all perils. For I know, and am fully persuaded, that whatsoever I can imagine or think beforehand, it is nothing, except he assist me with his Spirit when the time is. I beseech you therefore, Father, pray for me, that such a compleat harness of the Spirit, such boldness of mind may be given unto me, that I may out of a true Faith say with David; I will not trust in my Bow, and it is not my Sword that shall save me. For he hath no pleasure in the strength of an Horse, &c. But the Lords delight is in them that fear him, and put their trust in his mercy. I beseech you pray, pray, that I may enter this fight only in the Name of God, and that when all is past, I being not overcome through his gracious aid, may remain and stand fast in him, till that day of the Lord, in the which to them that obtain the victory shall be given the lively Manna to eat, and a triumphant Crown for evermore.

Apost. 2.

Now Father, I pray you help me to buckle on this gear a little better. For ye know the deepness of Satan, being an old Souldier, and you have collared with him ere now: blessed be God, that hath ever aided you so well. I suppose he may well hold you at the bay. But truly he will not be so willing (I think) to joyn with you as with us younglings: Sir, I beseech you, let your servant read this my babbling unto you, and now and then, as it shall seem unto you best, let your pen run on my Book; spare not to blot my Paper: I give you good leave.

R. Latimer.

Sir, I have caused my Man not only to read your Armour unto me, but also to write it out. For it is not only no bare Armour, but also well buckled Armour. I see not how it could be better. I thank you even from the bottom of my heart for it, and my prayer shall you not lack, trusting that you do the like for me; For indeed there is the help, &c. Many things make confusion in memory. And if I were learned as well as St. Paul, I would not bestow much amongst them, further than to gail them, and spur-gail too, when and whereas occasion were given, and matter came to mind; for the Law shall be their shoot-anchor stay, and refuge. Therefore there is no remedy; Namely, now when they have the master bowl in their hand, and rule the royl, but patience. Better it isto suffer what cruelly they will put upon us, than to incur Gods holy indignation. Wherefore (good my Lord) be of good cheer in the Lord, with due consideration what he requirith of you, and what he doth promise you. Our common Enemy shall do no more than God will permit him. God is faithful, which will not suffer us to be tempted above our strength, &c. Be at a point what ye will stand unto; stick unto that, and let them both say and do what they list. They can but kill the Body, which otherwise is of it self mortal. Neither yet shall they do that when they list, but when God will suffer them, when the hour appointed is come. To use many words with them it shall be but in vain, now that they have a bloody and deadly Law prepared for them. But it is very requisite that ye give a reasonable account of your Faith, if they will quietly hear you; else ye know in a wicked place of judgment a man may keep silence, after the example of Christ. Let them not deceive you with their sophistical Sophisms and fallacies; you know that false things may have more appearance of Truth, than things that be most true: therefore Paul giveth us a watch-word, Let no man deceive you with likeliness of speech. Neither is it requisite that with the contentious ye should follow strife of words, which tend to no edification, but to the subversion of the hearers, and the vain bragging and ostentation of the Adversaries. Fear of death doth most pervert a great number. Be well ware of that Argument; for that perwaded Shaston (as many men thought) after that he had once made a good profession openly before the judgment seat. The flesh is weak, but the willingness of the Spirit shall refresh the weakness of the flesh.

Apost. 6.

Phil. 1.

The number of the Criers under the Altar must needs be fulfilled; for that perwaded thertunto, happy be we. That is the greatest promotion that God giveth in this world, to be such Philippians, to whom it is given not only to believe, but also to suffer, &c. But who is able to do these things? Surely all our ability, all our sufficiency is of God. He requirith and promitteth. Let us declare our obedience to his will, when it shall be requisite in the time of trouble, yea, in the midst of the fire.

Anno
1555.

When that number is fulfilled, which I ween shall be shortly, then have at the Papists, when they shall fly peace, all things are safe, when Christ shall come to keep his great Parliament to the redress of all things that be amiss. But he shall not come as the Papists feign him, to hide himself, and to play bo-peep as it were under a piece of Bread; but he shall come gloriously, to the terror and fear of all Papists; but to the great consolation and comfort of all that will here suffer for him. Comfort your selves one another with these words.

Lo Sir, here have I blotted your Paper vainly, and played the fool egregiously; but so I thought better than not to do your request at this time. Pardon me, and pray for me, pray for me, I say, pray for me, I say. For I am sometime so fearful, that I would creep into a Moule-hole; sometime God doth visit me again with his comfort. So he cometh and goeth, to teach me to feel and to know mine infirmity, to the intent to give thanks to him that is worthy, lest I should rob him of his due, as many do, and almost all the world. Fare ye well.

What credence is to be given to Papists, it may appear by their wracking, writing, wrinceling, and monstrously injuring of Gods holy Scripture, as appeareth in the Popes Law. But I dwell here now in a School of oblivionists. Fare you well once again, and be you stedfast and unmoving in the Lord. Paul loved Timothy marvellous well, notwithstanding he saith unto him; Be thou partaker of the afflictions of the Gospel; and again, Harden thy self to suffer afflictions. Be faithful unto the death, and I will give thee a Crown of life, saith the Lord.

Here followeth the Letters of the Reverend Bishop and Martyr, Nicholas Ridley.

A Letter sent from Bishop Ridley, and his Prison-fellows unto Mr. Bradford and his Prison-fellows, in the Kings-Bench in Southwark, Anno 1554.

Well beloved in Christ our Saviour, we all with one heart wish to you, with all those that love God in deed and Truth, grace and health, and especially to our dearly beloved Companions which are in Christs cause, and the cause both of their Brethren, and of their own salvation, to put their neck willingly under the yoke of Christs Cross. How joyful it was to us to hear the report of Dr. Taylor, and of his godly Confession, &c. I assure you, it is hard for me to express.

Blessed be God, which was and is the giver of that, and of all godly strength and stomach in the time of adversity. As for the rumours that have or do go abroad, either of our relenting or melting, we trust, that they which know God and their duty towards their Brethren in Christ, will not be too light of credence. For it is not the slanderers evil Tongue, but a mans evil deed that can with God defile a man; and therefore with Gods grace, ye shall never have cause to do otherwise than ye say ye do, that is, not to doubt but that we will, by Gods grace, continue, &c. Like rumour as ye have heard of our coming to London, hath been here spread of the coming of certain learned men Prisoners, hither from London; but as yet we know no certainty whether of these rumours is, or shall be more true. Know you that we have you in our daily remembrance, and wish you and all the rest of our fore-said companions well in Christ.

It should do us much comfort, if we might have knowledge of the State of the rest of our most dearly beloved, which in this troublesome time do stand in Christs cause, and in the defence of the Truth thereof. Somewhat we have heard of Mr. Hoopers matter; but of the rest never a deal. We long to hear of Father Crome, of Mr. Sands, Mr. Saunders, Veron, Beacon, Rogers, &c. We are in good health, thanks be to God, and yet the manner of our intreating doth change as snow doth in summer. It is reported to us of our Keepers, that the University beareth in buru l. A cole danced to fall in the night out of the chimney, and burnt a hole in the floor, and no more harm was done, the Bayliffs servant sitting by the fire. Another night there chanced (as Mr. Bayliffs told us) a drunken fellow to multiply words, and for the same he was set in Bocardo. Upon these things (as is reported) there is risen a rumour in the Town and Country about, that we should have broken the prison with such violence, as that if Master Bayliffs had not plac'd the pretty men, we should have made a scape. We had out of our prison a wall that we might have walked upon, and our servants had liberty to go abroad in the Town or fields, but now both they and we are restrained of both.

My Lord of Worcester passed by throw Oxford, but he did not visit us. The same day began our refrains to be more, and the book of the Communion was taken from us by the Bayliffs at the Mayors commandment, as the Bayliffs did report to us. No man is licensed to come unto us; afore they might, that would see us upon the wall, but that is so grudging at, and so evil reported, that we are now restrained. O Sir, blessed be God, with all our evil reports, grudges, and restraints, we are merry in God, all our care and care is and shall be (by Gods grace) to please and serve him, of whom we look and hope, after these temporall and momentary miseries, to have eternal joy and perpetual felicity with Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob, Peter and Paul, and all the heavenly company of the Angels in heaven, through Jesus Christ our Lord.

As yet there was never learned man, nor any Scholar or other that visited us since we came into Bocardo, which now in Oxford may be called a College of "Quondams." For as ye know, we be no fewer than three, and I dare say every one well contented with his portion, which I do reckon to be our heavenly Father's fatherly, good and gracious gift. Thus fare you well. We shall by Gods grace one day meet together, and be merry. The day assuredly approacheth apace; the Lord grant that it may shortly come. For before that day come, I fear me the World will wax worse and worse. But then all our enemies shall be overthrown, and trodden under foot; Righteousness and truth then shall have the victory, and bear the bell away, whereof the Lord grant us to be partakers, and all that love truly the truth.

We all pray you, as we can, to cause all our commendations to be made unto all such as ye know did visit us and you, when we were in the Tower, with their friendly remembrances and benefits. Mistress Wilkin and Mistress Warcup have not forgotten us, nor ever since we came to Bocardo, with their charitable and friendly benevolence have comforted us: not that else we did lack (for God be blessed, he ever hitherto hath provided sufficiently for us) but that is a great comfort, and an occasion for us to bless God, when we see that he maketh them so friendly to tender us, whom some of us were never familiarly acquainted withall.

Yours in Christ, Nich. Ridley.

A Letter of Master Ridley, sent to a Cousin of his.

Gods Holy Spirit be with you now and ever, Amen.

When I call to remembrance (beloved Cousin) the state of those that for fear of trouble, either for loss of goods, will do in the sight of the World those things that they know and are assured are contrary to the will of God, I can do no less but lament their case, being assured the end thereof will be so pitiful (without speedy repentance) that I tremble and fear to have it in remembrance. I would to God it lay upon some earthly burden, so that freedom of conscience might be given unto them. I wote (as God knoweth) not of presumption, but only lamenting the state of those, whom I thought now in this dangerous time should have given both you and me comfortable instruction. But alas, instead thereof we have instructions to follow (I lament to rehearse it) superstitious Idolatry. Yea, and that worst of all is, they will seek to prove it by the Scriptures. The Lord for his mercy turn their hearts, Amen. Commend me, &c.

Yours, Nicholas Ridley.

To Master Bradford.

Brother Bradford, I wish you and your company in Christ, yea, and all the Holy Brotherhood, that now with you in divers prisons suffereth and beareth patiently Christs Cross for the maintenance of his Gospel, grace, mercy, and peace from God the Father, and from our Lord Jesus Christ.

Sir, considering the state of this chivalry and warfare, wherein I doubt not but we be set to fight under Christs banner, and his Cross, against our ghostly enemy the Devil, and the old Serpent Satan, me think I perceive two things to be his most perillous and most dangerous engines, which he hath to impugne Christs verity, his Gospel, and his faith; and the same two also to be the most massy posts, and most mighty pillars, whereby he maintaineth and upholdeth this Satanical Synagogue. These two, Sir, are they, in my judgement: the one, his false Doctrine and Idolatrical use of the Lords Supper, and the other, the wicked and abominable usurpation of the primacy of the See of Rome. By these two Satan semeth to me principally to maintain and uphold his Kingdom; by these two he driveth down mightily (alas I fear me) the third part of the stars in heaven. These two poisonous rotten posts he had so painted over with such pretence and colour of Religion, of Unity in Christs Church, of the Catholick faith, and such like, that the wily Serpent is able to deceive (if it were possible) even the elect of God. Wherefore John faith not without great cause; If any man know not Satans subtilties and the profundities thereof, I will wysp him no other burden to be laden withall.

Sir, because these be his principal and main posts whereupon standeth all his falshood, craft, and treachery, therefore according to the poor power that God hath given me, I have bended mine Artillery to shoot at the same. I know it to be but little (God knoweth) that I can do, and of my shot I know they pass not. Yet I will not (God willing) cease to do the best that I can, to shake those cankered and rotten posts. The Lord grant me good success, to the glory of his Name, and the furtherance of Christs Gospel. I have now already (I thank God) for this present time spent a good part of my powder in these scribblings, whereof this bearer shall give you knowledge. The Good Brother Bradford, let the wicked fumes and fumes what they list; know you for a certainty, by Gods grace, without all doubt, that in Christs Gospels cause, against the and upon the afore said Gods enemies, I am fully determined to live and die. Farewell (dear Brother) and I beseech you and all the rest of our Brethren to have good remembrance of the condemned Hereticks (as they call them) of Oxford, in your prayers. The bearer shall certify you of our state. Fare well in the Lord. From Bocardo

Another Letter of Master Ridley unto Master Bradford, and other his prison-fellowes, Anno, 1555.

Early beloved, I wish you grace, mercy, and peace.

According to your mind; I have run over all your papers, and what I have done (which is but small) therein may appear. In two places I have put in two loose leaves. I had much ado to read that was written in your great leaves. And I wene somewhere I have altered some words, because I could not read perfectly that which was written. Sir, what shall be best done with these things, now ye must consider; for if they come in sight at this time, undoubtedly they must to the fire with their Fatherland as for any safeguard that your custody can be unto them, I am sure you look not for it. For as you have been partner of the work, so I am sure you look for none other, but to have and receive like wages, and to drink of the same cup. Blessed be God, that hath given you liberty in the mean season, that you may use your pen to his glory, and the comfort (as I hear say) of many. I bless God daily in you, and all your whole company, to whom I beseech you commend me heartily. Now I love my country-man in deed and in truth. I mean D Taylor not for my earthly countries sake, but for our heavenly Fathers sake, and for Christs sake, whom I heard say, he did stoutly in time of perill confesse, and yet also for our countries sake, and for all our Mothers sake; but I mean of the Kingdom of Heaven, and of heavenly Jerusalem, and because of the Spirit, which bringeth forth in him, in you, and in our company such blessed fruits of boldness in the Lords cause, of patience and con-fancy. The Lord which hath begun this work in you all, perform and perfect this his own deed, until his own day come. Amen.

And yet I perceive ye have not been baited, and the cause thereof God knoweth, which will let them do no more to his, than is his pleased will and pleasure to suffer them to do for his own glory, and to the profit of them which be truly his. For the Father, which doth guide them that be Christs to Christ, is more mighty than all they, and no man is able to pull them out of the Fathers hands: except, I say, it please our Father, it please our Master Christ to suffer them, they shall not stir one hair of your heads.

My Brother P. the bearer hereof, and Master Hoopers Letters; would that we should say what we think good concerning your "minds that is, not to answer, except ye might have somewhat indifferent Judges; We are (as ye know) separated, and one of us cannot in anything consult with another, and much strait watching of the Bayliffs is about us, that there be no privy conference amongst us. And yet, as we hear, the Scholars bear us more heavily than the Townsmen. A wonderful thing, among so many, never yet Scholar offered any of us (so far as I know) any manner of favour, either for or in Christs cause.

Now as concerning your demand of your Counsell, for my part I do not mislike that which I perceive ye are minded to do. For I look for none other, but if ye answer afore the same Commissioners that we did, ye shall be served and handled as we were; though ye were as well learned as ever was either Peter or Paul. And yet further I think, that occasion afterward may be given you, and the consideration of the profit of your auditory may perchance move ye to do otherwise.

Finally, determinately to say what shall be best, I am not able; but I trust he, whose cause ye have in hand, shall put you in mind to do that which shall be most for his glory, the profit of his flock, and your own salvation.
This Letter must be common to you and Master Hooper, in whom and in his prison-fellow good Father C. I bless God, even from the bottom of my heart; for I doubt not but they both do to our Master Christ, true, acceptable, and honorable service, and profitable to his flock;
the one with his pen, and the other with his fatherly example of patience and confancy, and all manner of true godliness. But what shall I need to say to you? Let this be common among your Brethren, among whom (I dare say) it is with you as it is with us, to whom all things here are common, meat, money, and whatsoever any of us hath, that can or may do another good. Although I bid the Bayliffs and our Hosts straitly watch us, that we have no conference or intelligence of any thing abroad, yet hath God provided for every one of us instead of our servants, faithful fellows, which will be content to hear and see, and to do for us whatsoever they can. It is Gods work surely, blessed be God for his unspeakable goodness.
The grace of our Lord Jesus Christ and the love of God, and the communication of the Holy Ghost be with you all, Amen, Amen.

As far as London is from Oxford, yet thence we have received of late, both meat, money, and shirts, not only from such as are of our acquaintance, but of some (whom this bearer can tell) with whom I had never to my knowledge any acquaintance. I know for whose sake they do it; to him therefore be all honour, glory, and due thanks.

And yet I pray you do so much as to shew them, that we have received their benevolence, and (God be blessed) have plenty of all such things. This I desire you to do, for I know they be of Master Hoopers and your familiar acquaintance. Master Latimer was crazed; but I hear now (thanks be to God) that he amendeth again.

Nicholas Ridley.

Another Letter of M. Ridley unto Master Bradford.

OH dear Brother, seeing the time is now come, wherein it pleaseth the heavenly Father for Christ our Saviour his sake, to call upon you, and to bid you to come, happy are you that ever you were born, thus to be found awake at the Lords calling. Eugē serve bone & fidelis, quia super pauca fuisi fidelis, super multa te constituat, & intra bis in gaudium Domini. Well done good and faithful servant, because thou hast been truly in small matters, he shall set thee over great things, and thou shalt enter into the joy of thy Lord.

O dear Brother, what meaneth this, that you are sent into your own native Country? The wisdom and policy of the World may mean what they will, but I trust God will so order the matter finally by his fatherly providence, that some great occasion of Gods gracious goodness shall be plentifully powred abroad amongst his, our dear Brethren in that Country, by this your Martyrdom, where the Martyrs for Christs sake shed their Blood, and lost their lives. Oh what wondrous things hath Christ afterward wrought to his glory, and confirmation of their Doctrine? If it be not the place that sanctified the man, but the holy man doth by Christ sanctify the place, Brother Bradford, then happy and holy shall be that place wherein thou shalt suffer, and shall be with thy ashes in Christs cause sprinkled over withall. All thy Country may rejoice of thee, that it ever brought forth such a one, which would render his life again in his cause, of whom he had received it. Brother Bradford, so long as I shall understand thou art in thy journey, by Gods grace I shall call upon our heavenly Father for Christs sake, to set thee safely home:
and then, good Brother, speak you, and pray for the remnant which are to suffer for Christs sake, according to that thou then shalt know more clearly.

We do look now every day when we shall be called on, blessed be God. I woe I am the weakest many ways of our company; and yet I thank our Lord God and heavenly Father by Christ, that since I heard of our dear Brother Rogers departing, and stout confession of Christ and his truth even unto the death, my heart (blessed be God) rejoiced of it, that since that time (I say) I never felt any lumpish heaviness in my heart, as I grant I have felt sometimes before. Oh good Brother, blessed be God in thee, and blessed be the time that ever
I knew thee. Farewell, farewell.

Your Brother in Christ, Nicholas
Ridley; Brother farewell.

To the Brethren remaining in captivity of the flesh, and dispersed abroad in sundry prisons, but knit together in Unity of Spirit and Holy Religion in the bowels of the Lord Jesus.

GRace, peace, and mercy be multiplied among you.
What worthy thanks can we render unto the Lord for you my Brethren, namely, for the great consolation which through you we have received in the Lord, who notwithstanding the rage of Satan that goeth about by all manner of subtle means to beguile the World, and also busily laboureth to restore and set up his Kingdom again, that of late began to decay and fall to ruine; ye remain yet still unmoveable, as men surely grounded upon a strong rock. And now, albeit that Satan by his souldiers and wicked ministers, daily (as we hear) draweth numbers unto him, so that it is said of him, that he plucketh even the very Stars out of heaven, whilst he driveth into some men the fear of death, and loss of all their goods, and sheweth and offereth to overcome the pleasant baits of the World: namely, riches, wealth, and all kind of delights and pleasures, fair houses, great revenues, fat benefices, and what not; and all to the intent they should fall down and worship, not the Lord, but the

4. 4005

And as for the darkness that Satan now bringeth upon the Church of England, who needeth to doubt thereof? Of late time our Saviour Christ, his Apostles, Prophets, and Teachers spake in the Temple to the People of England in the English Tongue, so that they might be understood plainly, and without any hardnesse, of the godly and such as sought for heavenly knowledge in matters, which of necessity of salvation pertained to the obtaining of eternal life; but now those things, which once were written of them for the edifying of the Congregation, are read in a strange Tongue without interpretation, manifestly against St. Pauls commandment, so that there is no man able to understand them, which hath not learned that strange and unknown Tongue.

Of late days those heavenly Mysteries, whereby Christ hath ingrafted us into his Body, and hath united us one to another, whereby also being regenerate, and born anew unto God, he hath nourished, increased and strengthened us, whereby moreover, either he hath taught and set forth an order amongst them which are whole, or else to the sick in Soul or Body, hath given, as it were, wholsom medicines and remedies; those (I say) were all plainly set forth to the People in their own language; so that what great and exceeding good things every man had received of God, what duty every one owed to another by Gods Ordinance, what every one had professed in his vocation, and was bound to observe, what remedy was to be had for the wicked and feeble, he to whom God hath given a desire and willing heart to understand those things, might soon perceive and understand. But now all these things are taught and set forth in such sort, that the People redeemed with Christs Blood, and for whose sakes they were by Christ himself ordained, can have no manner of understanding thereof at all.

Of late (forasmuch as we know not how to pray as we ought) our Lord Jesus Christ in his Prayer, whereof he would have no man ignorant, and also the Holy Ghost in the Psalms, Hymns, and Spiritual Songs which are set forth in the Bible, did teach and instruct all the People of England in the English Tongue, that they might ask such things as are according to the will of the Father, and might join their hearts and lips in Prayer together; but now all these things are commanded to be hid and shut up from them in a strange Tongue, whereby it must needs follow, that the People can neither tell how to pray, nor what to pray for; and how can they join their hearts and voice together, when they understand no more what the voice signifieth, than a brute Beast?

Finally, I hear say, that the Catechism which was lately set forth in the English Tongue, is now in every Pulpit condemned. Oh devilish malice, and most spitefully injurious to the salvation of Mankind purchased by Jesus Christ! Indeed Satan could not long suffer that so great light should be spread abroad in the world; he saw well enough that nothing was able to overthrow his Kingdom so much, as if Children being godly instructed in Religion, should learn to know Christ whilst they are yet young; whereby not only Children, but the Elder sort also and aged Folks that before were not taught to know Christ in their Childhood, should now even with Children and Babes be forced to learn to know him. Now therefore he roareth, now he rageth. But what else do they (Brethren) which serve Satan, and become his ministers, and slaves in maintaining of his impiety, but even the same which they did, to whom Christ our Saviour threatneth this Curse in the Gospel; Wo unto you which shut up the Kingdom of Heaven before men, and take away the Key of knowledge from them: ye your selves have not entered in, neither have ye suffered them that would enter, to come in.

And from whence shall we say (Brethren) that this horrible and mischievous darkness proceedeth, which is now brought upon the world? From whence, I pray you, but even from the smoke of the great furnace of the bottomless Pit, so that the Sun and the Air are now darkened by the smoke of the Pit? Now, even now (out of doubt) Brethren the Pit is opened against us, and the Locusts begin to swarm, and Abaddon now reigneth.

Yet therefore (my Brethren) which pertain unto Christ, and have the Seal of God marked in your Fore-heads: that is to wit, are Sealed with the earnest of the Spirit to be a peculiar People of God, quit your selves like men, and be strong; for he that is in us, is stronger than he which is in the World; and ye know that all that is born of God overcometh the World, and this is our victory that overcometh the World, even our Faith. Let the World fret, let it rage never so much, be it never so cruel, and bloody, yet be ye sure that no man can take us out of the Fathers hands, for he is greater than all; who hath not spared his own Son, but hath given him to death for us all; and therefore how shall he not with him give us all things also? Who shall lay any thing to the charge of Gods elect? It is God that justifieth, who then shall condemn? It is Christ that is dead, yea rather which is risen again, who also is at the right hand of God, and maketh request also for us. Who shall separate us from the love of Christ? shall tribulation, or anguish, or persecution, or famine, or nakedness, or peril, or sword? I the rest ye know, Brethren. We are certainly persuaded with St. Paul, by the grace of our Lord Jesus Christ, that no kind of thing shall be able to separate us from the love of God which is in Christ Jesus our Lord. Which thing, that it may come to pass by the grace and mercy of our Lord Jesus Christ, to the comfort both of you and of us all, as we for our parts will continually (God willing) pray for you; so (dear Brethren in the Lord) with all earnest and hearty request we beseech you, even in the bowels of our Lord Jesus Christ, that ye will not cease to pray for us. Fare ye well dear Brethren. The grace of our Lord Jesus Christ be with you all evermore, Amen.

A Letter of Bishop Ridley, answering to a certain Letter of one Mr. Wylf sometime his Chaplain.

I Wish you grace in God, and love of the Truth, without the which truly established in mens hearts: by the mighty hand of the Almighty God, it is no more possible to stand by the Truth in Christ in time of trouble, than it is for the wax to abide the heat of the fire. Sir you know this, that I am (blessed be God) persuaded that this World is but transitory, and (as St. John saith) The World passeth away, and the lust thereof: I am persuaded Christs words to be true; whosoever shall confess me before men, him will I confess also before my Father which is in heaven: And I believe that no earthly Creature shall be saved, whom the Redeemer and Saviour of the World shall before his Father deny. This the Lord grant, that it may be so glorified, established, and fixed in my heart, that neither things present nor to come, high or low, life nor death, be able to remove me thence. It is a goodly wish, that you wish me deeply to consider the things pertaining unto Gods glory; but if you had wished also, that neither fear of death, nor hope of worldly prosperity should let me to maintain Gods word and his Truth, which is his glory and true honour, it would have liked me well. You desire me for Gods sake to remember my self. Indeed Sir, now it is time to do so; for so far as I can perceive, it standeth me upon no less danger, than of the loss both of Body and Soul; and I trust, when it is time for a man to awake, if any thing will awake him. He that will not fear him that threatneth to cast both Body and Soul into everlasting fire, whom we shall fear? With this fear, O Lord, fasten thou together our frail flesh, that we never sever from thy Laws. You say, you have made much fate for me. Sir, Gods grace that you have not in swing for my worldly deliverance, impaired and hindered the furtherance of Gods Word and his Truth.

You have known me long indeed; in the which time it hath chanced me, as you say, to mislike some things. It is true, I grant; for sudden changes without substantial and necessary cause, and the ready setting forth of extremities, I did never love. Confession unto the Minister which is able to instruct, correct, comfort, and inform the weak, wounded, and ignorant Conscience, indeed I ever thought might do much good in Christs Congregation, and so I assure you, I think even at this day. My Doctrine and my Preaching you say you have heard often, and after your judgment have thought it godly, saving only for the Sacrament, which thing at the time it was of me reverently handled, and a great deal deal better than of the rest (as you say) yet in the Margent you write warily, and in this world Wisely; and yet me thought all sounding not well. Sir, but that I see so many changes in this world, and so much alteration, else as this your saying I would not a little marvel. I have taken you for my Friend, and a man whom I fancied for plainness and faithfulness, as much I assure you, as for your learning; and have you kept this so close in your heart from me unto this day? Sir, I consider more things than one, and will not say all that I think. But what need you to care what I think, for any thing I shall be able to do unto you, either good or harm? You give me good Lessons to stand in nothing against my learning, and to beware of vain-glory. Truly Sir, I herein like your counsel very well, and by Gods grace I intend to follow it unto my very end.

To write unto those whom you name, I cannot see what it will avail me. For this I would have you know, that I esteem nothing available for me, which also will not further the glory of God. And now, because I perceive you have an entire zeal and desire of my deliverance out of this captivity and worldly misery, if I should not bear you a good heart in God again, methink I wereto blame. Sir, how nigh the day of my dissolution and departure out of this world is at hand, I cannot tell: the Lords will be fulfilled how soon soever it shall come. I know the Lords words must be verified on me that I shall appear before the incorrupt Judge, and be countable to him of all my former life. And although the hope of his mercies is my Shoot-anchor of eternal salvation, yet am I persuaded, that whosoever willingly neglecteth and regardeth not to clear his Conscience, be cannot have peace with God, nor a lively faith in his mercy. Conscience therefore moveth me, considering you were one of my Family, and one of my household, of whom then I think I had a special Cure, and of all them which were within my house, which in deed ought to have been an example of godliness to all the rest of my Cure, not only of good life, but also in promoting of Gods Word to the uttermost of their power, (but alas, now when the trial doth separate the Chaff from the Corn, how small a deal it is, God knoweth, which the wind both not blow away) this Conscience (I say) doth move me to fear, lest the lightness of my Family shall be laid to my charge for lack of more earnest and diligent instruction, which should have been done. But blessed be God which hath given me grace to see this my default and to lament it from the bottom of my heart, before my departing hence.

This Conscience doth move me also now to require both you and my Friend Dr. Harvey, to remember your promises made to me in times past, of the pure setting forth and Preaching of Gods Word and his Truth. These promises, although you shall not need to fear to be charged with them of me hereafter before the world, yet look for none other (I exhort you as my Friends) but to be charged with them as Gods hand. This Conscience and the love that I bear unto you, biddest me now say unto you both in Gods Name; Fear God, and love not the world: for God is able to cast both Body and Soul into Hell-fire. When his wrath shall suddenly be kindled, blessed are all they that put their trust in him. And the saying of St. John is true, All that is in the world, as the lust of the flesh, the lust of the eyes, and the pride of life, is not of the Father, but of the world, and the world passeth away and the lust thereof, but he that doth the will of God abideth for ever. If this gift of grace (which undoubtedly is necessarily required unto eternal salvation) were truly and unfeignedly grafted and firmly established in mens hearts, they would not be so light, so suddenly to shrink from the maintenance and confession of the Truth as is now (alas) seen so manifestly of so many in these days. But here peradventure you would know of me, what is the Truth. Sir, Gods Word is the Truth, as St. John saith, and that even the same that was heretofore. For albeit man doth vary and change as the Moon, yet Gods Word is stable, and abideth one for evermore: and of Christ it is truly said, Christ yesterday and to day, the same is also for ever.

When I was in office, all that were effected learned in Gods Word, agreed this to be a Truth in Gods Word written, that the Common Prayer of the Church should be had in the Common Tongue. You know I have conferred with many, and I assure you, I never found any (so far as I do remember) neither old nor young, Gospeller nor Papist of what judgment soever he was, in this thing to be of a contrary opinion. If then it were a Truth of Gods Word, think you that the alteration of the world can make it an untruth? If it cannot, why then do so many men shrink from the confession and maintenance of this Truth received once of us all? For what is it, I pray you, else to confess or deny Christ in this world, but to maintain the Truth taught in Gods Word, or for any worldly respect to shrink from the same? This one thing have I brought for an example; other things be in like case, which now particularly I need not rehearse. For he that will forsake willingly, either for fear or gain of the world, any one open Truth of Gods Word, if he be constrained, he will assuredly forsake God and all his Truths; other than he will endanger himself to lose or to leave that he loveth better indeed, than he doth God and the Truth of his Word.

I like very well your plain speaking, wherein you say, I must either agree or die, and I think that you mean of the bodily death, which is Common both to good and bad. Sir, I know I must die, whether I agree or no. But what folly were it then to make such an agreement, by the which I could never escape this death which is common to all, and also incur the guilt of death and eternal damnation? Lord, grant that I may utterly abhor and detest this damnable agreement so long as I live. And because (I dare say) you wrote of friendship unto me this short earnest advertisement, and I think verily, wishing me to live and not to die, therefore bearing you to my heart no less love in God, then you do me in the world, I say unto you in the Word of the Lord (and that I say to you, I say to all my Friends and lovers: of us in God) that if you do not confess and maintain to your power and knowledge that which is grounded upon Gods Word, but will either for fear or gain of the world shrink and play the Apostate, indeed you shall die the death; you know what I mean. And I beseech you all true Friends and lovers in God, remember what I say, for this may be the last time peradventure that ever I shall write unto you.

From Bocardo in Oxford the 8. day of April, 1555.

Master Grindal now Archbishop of Canterbury, being in the time of exile in the City of Frankford, wrote to Dr. Ridley then Prisoner, a certain Epistle, wherein first he lamenteth his captivity, exhorting him withal to be constant. Secondly, he certifieth him of the state of the English Exiles being dispersed in Germany, and of the singular providence of God in stirring up the favour of the Magistrates and Rulers there towards them. Thirdly, he writeth to know his mind and will concerning the printing of his Book against Transubstantiation, and of certain other Treatises and his dispositions. Whereunto Bishop Ridley answereth again in order, as followeth

The Answer of Dr. Ridley to the Letter above said.

Blessed be God our heavenly Father which inclined your heart to have such a desire to write unto me, and blessed be he again which hath heard your request, and hath brought your Letters safe unto my hands; and over all this I bless him through our Lord Jesus Christ, for the great comfort I have received by the same, of the knowledge of your state and of other our dearly beloved Brethren and Country-men in those parts beyond the Sea.

Dearly beloved Brother Grindal, I say to you and all the rest of our Brethren in Christ with you, rejoice in the Lord, and as you love me, and the other my Reverend Fathers and Concaptives, (which undoubtedly are Gloria Christi) lament not our state, but I beseech you and them all to give to our heavenly Father for his boundless mercies and unspeakable benefits even in the midst of all our troubles given unto us, most hearty thanks. For Know ye, that as the weight of his Cross hath increased upon us, so he hath not nor doth not cease to multiply his mercies to strengthen us; and I trust, yet by his grace I doubt nothing, but he will so do for Christ our Masters like even to the end. To hear that you and other Brethren do find in your exile favour, and grace with the Magistrates, Ministers, and Citizens at Tigury, Frankford, and elsewhere, it doth greatly comfort (I dare say) all here that do indeed love Christ and his true Word. I ensure you, it warmed my heart, to hear you by chance to name some, as Scary and Cox, &c. Oh that it had come in your mind to have said somewhat also of Cheek, of Turner, of Leaver, of Sampson, of Chambers, but I trust in God they be all well. And Sir, seeing you say, that there be in those parts with you of Students and Ministers so good a number, now therefore care you not for us, otherwise than to wish that Gods glory may be set forth by us. For whenever God shall call us home (as we look daily for none other, but when it shall please God to say, Come) you, blessed be God, are enow through his word, to light, and set up again the Lantern of his Word in England. As concerning the Copies ye say ye have with you. I wonder how ever they did and could find the way to come to you. My disposition, except ye have that which I gathered my self after the disputation done, I cannot think ye have it truly. If ye have that, then ye have therewithal the whole manner after the which I was used in the disputation.

As for the Treatise in English, Contra transubstantiationem, vix possum adducere ad eam operam preteritam fore ut in Latium transferatur. Ceterum, quicquid sit nullo modo volumus ut quidquam quocumque modo meo nomine edictum, donec quid de nobis Dominus, constitutum fieri, vobis prius certo committeretur; and thus much unto your Letters. Now although I suppose you know agood part of our state here (for we are forth-coming, even as when ye departed, &c. You shall understand that I was in the Tower about the space of two months close Prisoner, and after that had granted to me without my labour, the liberty of the Tower, and so continued about half a year, and then, because I refused to allow the Mass with my presence, I was shut up in Prison again.

The last Lent have one: it chanced by reason of the tumult stirred up in Kent, there were so many Prisoners in the Tower, that my Lord of Canterbury, M. Latimer, M. Bradford, and I were put all together in one Prison, where we remained till almost the next Easter, and then we three, Canterbury, M. Latimer, and I, were suddenly sent a little before Easter to Oxford, and were suffered to have nothing with us, but that we carried upon us. About the Whitsontide following was our disputation at Oxford, after the which was all taken from us, as Pen, Ink, &c. Our own servants were taken from us before, and every one had put to him a strange man, and we each one appointed to be kept in several places, as we are unto this day.

Blessed be God, we three at the writing hereof were in good health, and (in God) of good cheer. We have looked long ago to have been dispatched, for we were all three on one day within a day or two of our disputations, of Dr. Wosten being the head Commissioner, condemned for Hereticks, and since that time we remain as we were of him left. The Lords will be fulfilled in us, as, I do not doubt but by his grace it shall be to his glory, and our endless salvation through Jesus Christ our Lord.

Likewise the Lord hath hitherto preserved above all our expectation, our dear Brother, and in Christs cause a strong Champion, John Bradford. He is likewise condemned, and is already delivered to the Secular Power, and Writs (as we have heard say) given out for his execution, and called in again.

Thus the Lord, so long as his blessed pleasure is, preserveth whom he listeth, notwithstanding the wonderful raging of the world. Many (as we hear say) have valiantly suffered confessing Christs Truth, and nothing yielding to the Adversary, yea not for the fear or pains of death.

Names of Martyrs.

The names of them which I knew, and have now suffered, are these: Farrar the Bishop of S. Davids, Hooper the Bishop of Worcester, Rogers tuus olim comprobandarius, Dr. Taylor of Hadley, M. Sanders, and one Tomkins a Weaver, and now this last day M. Cardmaker, with another, were burnt in Smithfield at London, and many other in Essex and Kent, whose names are written in the Book of Life, whom yet I do not know.

Wells, your old companion and sometime mine Officer (alas) hath relented (as I have heard) but the Lord hath shortened his days, for anon after he died, and is gone. Grembold was caught by the heels, and cast into the Marshalsea, but now is at liberty again, but I fear me he escaped not without some becking or bowing (alas) of his knee unto Baal.

My dear Friend Thomas Ridley of the Bull-head in Cheap, which was to me the most faithful Friend that I had in my trouble, is departed also unto God. My Brother Shipside that hath married my sister, hath been almost half a year in Prison, for delivering (as he was accused) of certain things, I ween, from me; but now, thanks be to God, he is at liberty again, but so that the Bishop hath taken from him his Parish.

Of all us three Concupives at Oxford, I am kept most strait, and with least liberty, Vel quia Vire, in cuius edibus ego custodior, uxor dominatur (licet modo sit Præfatus Civitatis) mulier vetula, morosa, & superstitiosa, qua etiam hoc sibi laudi ducit quod me dicatur arctissime & cautissime custodire; vir autem ipse, iustitiam nomine, missi satis est omnibus, uxori vero plusquam obsequens. Licet uxorem (ut nostri) nunquam haberem, tamen ex hac quotidiana consuetudine, quam cum istis conjugibus habeo, videor mihi nonnulli posse intelligere, quam grave malum & intolerabile iugum sit cum mala muliere in conjugio collocari. Resiste ergo sapienti dicit, uxor bona donum Dei; & iterum, mulieris bonæ beatus vir. Vel hæc inquam, causa est, vel quia a magnis Magistratibus (nescio quas ob causas) illud est, ut ita fieret, ipsi mandatum: idque illi, si quando de mea nimia servitute apud eos conquerer, sedulo sepe rursus mihi inculcant.

At Cambridge (as I hear say) *Omnes studiorum & flatorum reformationes nuper factæ nunc sunt denuo deformatæ & deletæ, & omnia sunt in pristinum chaos & in antiquum Papismum redacta: omnes Collegiorum Præfati qui sinceritati Evangelij favebant, vel qui conjugati erant loco moti sunt, & alij Papistice factionis in eorum loca surrogati, quod & de Sociis Collegiorum qui noluerunt steterere genu Baal factum est audis. Nec mirum, nam idem passim factum est in universis regno Angliæ, in omnibus Archiepiscopis, Episcopis, Decanis, Prebendis, Sacerdotibus Ecclesiæ, & in tota Clero: and to tell you much naughty matter in few Words; Papismus apud nos ubique in pleno suo antiquo robore regnat.*

The Lord be merciful, and for Christs sake pardon us our old unkindness and unthankfulness: for when he poured upon us the gifts of his manifold graces and favours, (alas) we did not serve him nor render unto him thanks according to the same. We Pastors many of us were too cold, and bare to much (alas) with the wicked world; our Magistrates had abuse, to their own worldly gain, both Gods Gospel and the Ministers of the same. The People in many places was wayward and unkind. Thus of every side and of every sort we have provoked Gods anger and wrath to fall upon us: but blessed might he be that hath not suffered his to continue in those ways which so wholly have displeased his Sacred Majesty, but hath awaked them by the fatherly correction of his own Sons Cross, unto his glory and our endless salvation, through Jesus Christ our Lord.

My daily Prayer is (as God doth know) and by Gods grace shall be so long as I live in this world, for you, my dear Brethren that are fled out of your own Country, because you will rather forsake all worldly things than the Truth of Gods Word. It is even the same that I use to maketo God, for all those Churches abroad thorough the world, which have forsaken the Kingdom of Antichrist, and professed openly the purity of the Gospel of Jesus Christ; that is that God our eternal Father, for our Saviour Christs sake, will daily increase in you the gracious gift of his heavenly Spirit, to the true setting forth of his glory and of his Gospel, & make you to agree Brotherly in the Truth of the same, that there arise no root of bitterness among you that may infect that good seed which God hath sown in your hearts already; and finally that your life may be so pure and so honestly, according to the rule of Gods Word and according to that vocation whereunto

Bernher.

Brother Augustine, I bless God with all my heart in his manifold merciful gifts, given unto our dear Brethren in Christ, specially to our Brother Rogers, whom it pleased him to set forth first, no doubt out of his gracious goodnes and fatherly favour towards him. And likewise blessed be God in the rest, as Hooper, Sanders, and Taylor, whom it hath pleased the Lord likewise to set in the forefront of the battel against his Adversaries, and hath endued them all so far as I can hear to stand in the confession of his truth, and to be content in his cause, and for his Gospels sake to lose their life. And evermore and without end blessed be even the same our heavenly Father for our dear and entirely beloved Brother Bradford, whom now the Lord (I perceive) calleth for: for I ween he will no longer vouchsafe him to abide among the adulterous and wicked generation of this World. I do not doubt but that he (for those gifts of grace which the Lord hath bestowed on him plentifully) hath holpen those which are gone before in their journey, that is, hath animated and encouraged them to keep the high way, & sic currere, ut tandem acciperent premium. The Lord be his comfort, whereof I do not doubt, and I thank God heartily that ever I was acquainted with him, and that ever I had such a one in my house. And yet again I bless God in our dear Brother, and of this time Protomartyr Rogers, that he was also one of my calling to be a Prebendary Preacher of London. And now because Grindall is gone (the Lord I doubt not hath and knoweth wherein he will bestow him) I trust to God, it shall please him of his goodnes to strengthen me to make up the trinity out of Paul's Church, to suffer for Christ whom God the Father hath anointed, the Holy Spirit doth bear witness unto, Paul and all the Apostles preached. Thus fare you well, I had no paper, I was constrained thus to write.

Besides these Letters of Bishop Ridley, divers other tractations also were written by him, partly out of prison, partly in prison: as namely among certain other, there remain in my hands certain notes answering to the two notable Sermons of Doctor Watson, Bishop of Lincoln, &c.

Here beginneth the life, acts, and doings of Master Hugh Latimer, the famous Preacher and worthy Martyr of Christ and his Gospel.

Now consequently after the life of Bishop Ridley, with other his Letters, which partly we have expressed, and partly we have deferred to our latter appendix, followeth likewise the life and doings of the worthy Champion, and old practised Souldier of Christ, Master Hugh Latimer: of whose acts and long travels even from his first years and tender age, to begin here to chitreat: first, he was the Son of one Hugh Latimer, of Thirkeston in the County of Liecester, a Husbandman of right good estimation; with whom also he was brought up until he was of the age of four years or thereabout. At which time his Parents (having him as then left for their only son, with six other daughters) seeing his ready, prompt, and sharp wit, purposed to train him up in erudition, and knowledge of good literature; wherein he so profited in his youth, at the common Schools of his own Country, that at the age of 14. years, he was sent to the University of Cambridge. Where, after some continuance of exercises in other things, he gave himself to the study of such School Divinity, as the ignorance of that age did suffer.

Zealous he was then in the Popish Religion; and therewith so scrupulous, as himself confessed, that being a Priest, and using to say Mass, he was so servil an observer of the Romish Decrees, that he thought he had never sufficiently mingled his massing wine with water; and moreover: that he should never be damned, if he were once a professed Friar, with divers such superstitious fantasies. And in this blinde zeal he was a very enemy to the Professors of Christs Gospel; as both his Oration made, when he proceeded Bachelor of Divinity, against Philip Melancthon, and also his other works did plainly declare. But especially his Popish zeal could in no case abide in those days good Master Stafford, Reader of the Divinity Lectures in Cambridge, most faithfully railing against him, and willing the youth of Cambridge in no wise to believe him.

Notwithstanding, such was the goodness and merciful purpose of God, that when he saw his good time, by the which way he thought to have utterly defaced the professors of the Gospel, and true Church of Christ, he was at length himself by a member of the same prettily caught in the blessed net of Gods Word. For M. Thomas Bilney (whose story is before described) being at that time a trier out of Satans subtilties, and a secret overthrower of Antichrists Kingdom, seeing Master Latimer to have a zeal in his ways (although without knowledge) was stricken with a brotherly pity towards him, and betrougth by what means he might best win this zealous ignorant Brother, to the true knowledge of Christ. Wherefore, after a short time, he came to Master Latimers study, and desired him to hear him make his confession. Which thing he willingly granted; by hearing whereof, he was (through the good Spirit of God) so touched, that hereupon he forsook his former studying of the School Doctors, and other such fopperies, and became an earnest student of true Divinity, as he himself, as well in his conference with Master Ridley, as also in his first Sermon made upon the Pater noster, doth confess. So that whereas before he was an enemy, and almost a persecutor of Christ, he was now a zealous seeker after him, changing his old manner of cavilling and railing, into a diligent kinde of conferring, both with Master Bilney and others, and came also to Master Stafford before he dyed, and desired him to forgive him.

After this his winning to Christ, he was not satisfied with his own conversion only, but like a true Disciple of the blessed Samaritane, pitied the misery of other, and therefore became both a Publick Preacher, and also a private instructor to the rest of his Brethren within the University, by the space of three years, spending his time partly in the Latin tongue, among the learned, and partly amongst the simple People in his natural and vulgar language. Howbeit, as Satan never sleepeth when he seeth his Kingdom to begin to decay, so likewise now, seeing that this worthy member of Christ would be a shrewd

Th. difference between true
and false;

Amongst these there was an Augustine Friar who took occasion upon certain Sermons that Mr. Latimer made about Christmas 1529. as well in the Church of St. Edward, as also in St. Augustines, within the University of Cambridge to envy against him, for that Mr. Latimer in the said Sermons (alluding to the common usage of the season) gave the People certain Cards out of the 5, 6, 7. Chapters of S. Matthew, whereupon they might, not only then, but always else, occupy their time. For the chief triumph in the Cards he limited the Heart, as the principal thing that they should serve God withal, whereby he quite overthrow all hypocritical and external Ceremonies, not tending to the necessary furtherance of Gods holy Word and Sacraments. For the better attaining hereof, he wished the Scriptures to be in English, whereby the Common People might the better learn their duties, as well to God as their neighbours.

The handling of this matter was so apt for the time, and so pleasantly applied of him, that not only it declared a singular towardness of wit in the Preacher, but also wrought in the hearers much fruit, to the overthrow of Popish superstition, and setting up of perfect Religion.

This was upon the Sunday before Christmas day; on which day coming to the Church, and causing the bell to be tolled to a Sermon, he entered into the Pulpit, taking for his text the words of the Gospel aforesaid, read in the Church that day; Tu quis es? &c. In delivering the which Cards (as is aforesaid) he made the Heart to be triumph, exhorting and envying all men thereby to serve the Lord with inward Heart and true affection, and not with outward Ceremonies: adding moreover to the praise of that triumph, that though it were never so small, yet it would take up the best Coat Card beside in the bunch, yea, though it were the King of Clubs, &c. meaning thereby how the Lord would be worshipped and served in simplicity of Heart and verity, wherein consisteth true Christian Religion, and not in the outward deeds of the letter only, or in the glittering shew of mans Traditions, or Pardons, Pilgrimages, Ceremonies, Vows, Devotions, voluntary Works, and works of Supererogation, Foundations, Oblations, the Popes Supremacy, &c. so that all these either were needless, where the other is present; or else were of small estimation, in comparison of the other.

The tenor and effect of these his Sermons, so far as they could come to our hands, here follow.

The tenor and effect of certain Sermons made by Master Latimer in Cambridge, about the Year of our Lords, 1529.

TU quis es? Which words are as much to say in English, Who art thou? These be the words of the Pharisees, which were sent by the Jews unto St. John Baptist in the Wilderness, to have knowledge of him, who he was; which words they spake unto him of an evil intent, thinking that he would have taken on him to be Christ, and so they would have had him done with their good wills, because they knew that he was more carnal, and given to their Laws, than Christ indeed should be, as they perceived by their old Prophecies: and also, because they marvelled much of his great Doctrine, Preaching and Baptizing, they were in doubt whether he was Christ or not: wherefore they said unto him, Who art thou? Then answered S. John, and confessed that he was not Christ. Now here is to be noted, the great and prudent answer of S. John Baptist unto the Pharisees, that when they required of him who he was, he would not directly answer of himself, what he was himself; but he said he was not Christ, by the which saying he thought to put the Jews and Pharisees out of their false opinion, and belief towards him, in that they would have had him to exercise the office of Christ, and so declared further unto them of Christ, saying, He is in the midst of you, and amongst you, whom ye know not, whose latchet of his shoe I am not worthy to unloose, or undo. By this you may perceive that St. John spake much in the laud and praise of Christ his Master, professing himself to be in no wise like unto him. So likewife it shall be necessary unto all men and women of this world, not to ascribe unto themselves any goodness of themselves, but all unto our Lord God, as shall appear hereafter, when this question aforesaid (Who art thou?) shall be moved unto them: not as the Pharisees did unto S. John, of an evil purpose, but of a good and simple mind, as may appear hereafter.

Now then, according to the Preachers mind, let every Man and Woman, of a good and simple mind, contrary to the Pharisees intent, ask this question (Who art thou?) This question must be moved to themselves, what they be of themselves, on this fashion, What art thou of thy only and natural generation between Father and Mother, when thou camest into the world? What substance, what virtue, what goodness art thou of by thyself? Which question if thou rehearse oftentimes unto thyself, thou shalt well perceive and understand, how thou shalt make answer unto it: which must be made on this wise; I am of my self, and by my self, coming from my natural Father and Mother, the Child of the ire and indignation of God, the true Inheritor of Hell, a lump of sin, and working nothing of my self, but all towards Hell, except I have better help of another, than I have of my self. Now we may see in what late we enter into this world, that we be of our selves the true and just inheritors of Hell, the Children of the ire and indignation of Christ, working all towards Hell, whereby we deserve of our selves perpetual damnation, by the right judgment of God, and the true claim of our selves: which unthriftly state that we be born unto is come unto us for our own deserts, as proveeth well this example following.

Let it be admitted for the probation of this, that it might please the Kings Grace now being, to accept into his favour a mean man, of simple degree and birth, not born to any possession; whom the Kings Grace favoureth, not because this person hath of himself deserved any such favour, but that the King casteth his favour unto him of his own mere motion and fancy, and because the Kings Grace will more declare his favour unto him, he giveth unto this said man a thousand pounds in Land, to him and his heirs, on this condition; that he shall take upon him to be the chief Captain and Defender of his Town of Calice, and to be true and faithful to him in the custody of the same, against the French-men especially, above all other enemies.

This man taketh on him this charge, promising his fidelity thereunto; It chanceth in process of time, that by the singular acquaintance and frequent familiarity of this Captain with the French-men, these French-men give unto the said Captain of Calice a great sum of money, so that he will be but content and agreeable, that they may enter into the said Town of Calice by force of arms, and so thereby possess the same unto the Crown of France: upon this agreement the French-men do invade the said Town of Calice, alone by the negligence of this Captain.

Now the Kings Grace hearing of this Invasion, cometh with a great puissance to defend this his said Town, and so by good policy of war overcometh the said French-men, and entrench again into his Town of Calice. Then he being desirous to know how these Enemies of his came thither, he maketh profound search and inquiry, by whom this Treason was conspired; by this search it was known and found his own Captain to be the very author and the beginner of the betraying of it. The King, seeing the great infidelity of this Person, discharged this man of his office, and taketh from him and his heirs this thousand pounds possessions. Think you not that the King doth use justice unto him, and all his posterity and heirs? Yes truly: the said Captain cannot deny himself, but that he had true justice, considering how unfaithfully he behaved himself to his Prince, contrary to his own fidelity and promise: So likewise it was of our first Father Adam. He had given unto him the spirit and science of knowledge, to work all goodness therewith; this said spirit was not given alone unto him, but unto all his heirs and posterity. He had also delivered him the Town of Calice, that is to say, Paradise in earth, the most strong and surest Town in the world, to be in his custody: He nevertheless by the infidelity of these French-men, i.e. the temptation of the Fiend, did obey unto their desire

and,

Anno 1555. and so he brake his promise and fidelity, the commandment of the everlasting King his Master, in eating of the Apple by him inhibited.

Now then, the King seeing this great treason in his Captain, deposited him of the thousand pounds of possessions, that is to say, from everlasting life in glory, and all his heirs and posterity: for likewise as he had the spirit of science and knowledge, for him and his heirs; so in like manner when he lost the same, his heirs also lost it by him, and in him. So now, this example proveth, that by our Father Adam we had once in him the very inheritance of everlasting joy; and by him, and in him again we lost the same.

The Heirs of the Captain of Calice, could not by any manner of claim ask of the King the right and title of their Father, in the thousand pounds possessions, by reason the King might answer, and say unto them, that although their Father deserved not of himself to enjoy so great possessions, yet he deserved by himself to lose them, and greater, committing so high treason, as he did against his Princes commandments; whereby he had no wrong to lose his title, but was unworthy to have the same, and had therein true justice; let not you think which be his heirs, that if he had justice to lose his possessions, you have wrong to lose the same: In the same manner it may be answered unto all men and women now being, that if our Father Adam had true justice to be excluded from his possession of everlasting glory in Paradise, let us not think the contrary that be his heirs, but that we have no wrong in losing also the same; yea, we have true justice and right. Then in what miserable estate we be, that of the right and just title of our own deserts have lost the everlasting joy and claim of our selves to be true inheritors of Hell? For he that committeth deadly sin willingly, bindeth himself to be an inheritor of everlasting pain: and so did our Fore-father Adam willingly eat of the Apple forbidden. Wherefore he was cast out of the everlasting joy in Paradise, into this corrupt world amongst all vilenes, whereby of himself he was not worthy to do any thing laudable or pleasant to God, evermore bound to corrupt affections and beastly appetites, transformed into the uncleanness and variablest nature that was made under heaven, of whose seed and disposition all the world is lineally descended, inasmuch that this evil Nature is so diffused and shed from one into another, that at this day there is no man nor woman living, that can of themselves wash away this abominable vilenes: and so we must needs grant of our selves to be in like displeasure unto God, as our Father Adam was; by reason hereof, as I said, we be of our selves the very Children of the indignation and vengeance of God, the true inheritors of Hell, and working all towards Hell, which is the answer to this question, made to every man and woman by themselves, Who art thou?

And now the world standing in this damnable state, cometh in the occasion of the Incarnation of Christ; the Father in Heaven perceiving the frail nature of man, that he by himself and of himself could do nothing for himself, by his prudent wisdom sent down the second person in Trinity, his Son Jesus Christ, to declare unto man his pleasure and commandment: and so at the Fathers will Christ took on him humane Nature, being willing to deliver man out of this miserable way, and was content to suffer cruel passion in shedding his blood for all mankind, and so left behind for our safeguard, Laws and Ordinances, to keep us always in the right path unto everlasting life, as the Evangelists, the Sacraments, the Commandments, and so forth: which if we do keep and observe according to our profession, we shall answer better unto this question, (Who art thou?) than we did before: for before thou didst enter into the Sacrament of Baptism, thou wert but a natural Man, a natural Woman; as I might say, A man, a woman. But after thou takest on thee Christs Religion, thou hast a longer name: for then thou art a Christian man, a Christian woman. Now then, seeing thou art a Christian man, what shall be the answer of this question, Who art thou?

The answer of this Question is, when I ask it unto my self, I must say that I am a Christian man, a Christian woman, the Child of everlasting joy, through the merits of the bitter Passion of Christ. This is a joyful answer. Here we may see how much we be bound, and in danger unto God, that hath revived us from death to life, and saved us that were damned: which great benefit we cannot well consider, unless we do remember what we were of our selves before we medled with him or his Laws: and the more we know our feeble nature, and set less by it, the more we shall conceive and know in our hearts what God hath done for us: and the more we know what God hath done for us, the less we shall set by our selves; and the more we shall love and please God; so that in no condition we shall either know our selves or God, except we do utterly confess our selves to be meer vilenes and corruption. Well, now it is come unto this point, that we be Christian men, Christian women; I pray you what doth Christ require of a Christian man, or of a Christian woman? Christ requireth nothing else of a Christian man or woman, but that they will observe his Rule. For likewise as he is a good Augustine Frier that keepeth well St. Augustine's rule, so is he a good Christian man that keepeth well Christs Rule.

Now then, what is Christs Rule? Christs Rule consisteth in many things, as in the Commandments, and the works of Mercy, and so forth. And because I cannot declare Christs Rule unto you at one time, as it ought to be done, I will apply my self according to your custom at this time of Christmas, I will, as I said, declare unto you Christs Rule, but that shall be in Christs Cards. And where you are wont to celebrate Christmas in playing at Cards, I intend by Gods grace to deal unto you Christs Cards, wherein you shall perceive Christs Rule. The game that we will play at shall be called the Triumph, which if it be well played at, he that dealeth shall win; the Players shall likewise win; and the standers and lookers upon shall do the same; inasmuch that there is no man that is willing to play at this Triumph with these Cards, but they shall be all winners, and no losers.

Let therefore every Christian man and woman play at these Cards, that they may have and obtain the Triumph; you must mark also that the Triumph must apply to fetch home unto him all the other Cards, whatsoever suit they be of. Now then take ye this first Card, which must appear and be shewed unto you as followeth. You have heard what was spoken to men of the old Law, Thou shalt not kill; whosoever shall kill shall be in danger of Judgment. But I say unto you of the new Law, faith Christ, that whosoever is angry with his neighbour, shall be in danger of Judgment, and whosoever shall say unto his neighbour, Racha, that is to say, Brainles, or any other like word of rebuking, shall be in danger of a Council; and whosoever shall say unto his neighbour, Fool, shall be in danger of Hell-fire. This Card was made and spoken by Christ, as appeareth in the 5th Chap. of St. Matthew.

Now it must be noted, that whosoever shall play with this Card, must first before they play with it, know the strength and virtue of the same; wherefore you must well note and mark terms how they be spoken, and to what purpose: Let us therefore read it once or twice, that we may be the better acquainted with it.

Now behold and see, this Card is divided into four parts: The first part is one of the Commandments that was given unto Moses in the old Law, before the coming of Christ, which Commandment we of the new Law be bound to observe and keep, and it is one of our Commandments. The other three parts spoken by Christ, be nothing else but expositions unto the first part of this Commandment: for in very effect of all these four parts be but one Commandment, that is to say, Thou shalt not kill: yet nevertheless, the three last parts do shew unto thee how many ways thou maist kill thy neighbour contrary to this Commandment: yet for all Christs exposition, in the three last parts of this Card, the terms be not open enough to thee that dost read and hear them spoken. No doubt, the Jews understood Christ well enough when he spake to them these three last sentences, for he spake unto them in their own natural terms and tongue: wherefore seeing that these terms were natural terms of the Jews, if shall be necessary to expound them, and compare them unto some like terms of our natural speech, that we in like manner may understand Christ as well as the Jews did. We will begin first with the first part of this Card, and then after with the other three parts: you must therefore understand that the Jews and the Pharisees of the old Law, to whom this first part, this commandment, Thou shalt not kill, was spoken, thought it sufficient and enough for their discharge not to kill with any manner of material weapon, as Sword, Dagger, or with any such weapon, and they thought it no great fault whatsoever they said or did by their neighbour, so that they did not harm or meddle with their corporal bodies, which was a false Opinion in them, as prove well the three last other Sentences following the first part of this Card,

Now as touching the three other Sentences, you must note and take heed what difference is between these three manner of offences, To be angry with your neighbour, To call your neighbour brainless, or any such word of disdain, Or to call your neighbour Fool: whether these three manner of offences be of themselves more grievous one than the other, it is to be opened unto you. Truly, as they be of themselves divers offences, so they kill diversly one more than the other, as you shall perceive by the first of these three, and so forth: A man which conceiveth against his neighbour or Brother, ire, or wrath in his mind, by some manner of occasion given unto him, although he be angry in his mind against his said neighbour, he will peradventure express his ire by no manner of sign, either in word or deed; yet nevertheless he offendeth against God, and breaketh this Commandment in killing his own Soul; and is therefore in danger of judgment.

Now to the second part of these three; That man that is moved with ire against his neighbour, and in his ire calleth his neighbour brainless, or some other like word of displeasure, as a man might say in a fury I shall handle thee well enough, which words and countenances do more repress and declare ire to be in this man, than in him that was but angry, and spake no manner of word nor shewed any countenance to declare his ire: wherefore as he that so declareth his ire either by word or countenance, offendeth more against God, so he both killeth his own Soul, and doth that in him is to kill his neighbours Soul in moving him unto ire, wherein he is faulty himself, and so this man is in danger of a Council.

Now to the third offence, and last of these three; That man that calleth his neighbour Fool, doth more declare his angry mind toward him, than he that calleth his neighbour brainless, or any such words moving ire: but for to call a man Fool, that word representeth more envy in a man, than brainless doth. Wherefore he doth most offend, because he doth most earnestly with such words express his ire, and so he is in danger of Hell-fire: wherefore you may understand now these three parts of this Card to be three offences, and that one is more grievous to God than the other, and that one killeth more the Soul of man than the other.

Now peradventure there be some that will marvel that Christ did not declare this commandment by some greater faults of ire, than by these which seem but small faults, as to be angry and speak nothing of it, to declare it and to call a man brainless, and to call his neighbour Fool; truly these be the smallest, and the least faults that belong to ire, or to killing in ire. Therefore beware how you offend in any kind of ire: seeing that the smallest be damnable to offend in, see that you offend not in the greatest. For Christ thought, if he might bring you from the smallest manner of faults, and give you warning to avoid the least, he reckoned you would not offend in the greatest and worst, as to call your neighbour thief, Whoreson, Whore, Drab, and so forth, into more blasphemous names, which offences must needs have punishment in Hell, considering how that Christ hath appointed these three small faults, to have three degrees of punishment in Hell, as appeareth by these three terms, Judgment, Council, and Hell-fire; these three terms do signify nothing else but three divers punishments in Hell, according to the offences: Judgment is less in degree than Council, therefore it signifieth a lesser pain in Hell, and it is ordained for him that is angry in his mind with his neighbour, and doth express his malice neither by word, nor countenance: Council is a less degree in Hell, than Hell-fire, and is a greater degree in hell than judgment; and it is ordained for him that calleth his neighbour brainless, or any such word, that declareth his ire and malice: wherefore it is more pain than Judgment. Hell-fire is more pain in Hell, than Council, or Judgment; and it is ordained for him that calleth his neighbour Fool, by reason that in calling his neighbour Fool, he declareth more his malice, in that it is an earnest word of ire. Wherefore Hell-fire is appointed for it, that is, the most pain of the three punishments.

Now you have heard that to these divers offenders of ire and killing, be appointed punishments according to their degrees: for look as the offence is, so shall the pain be: if the offence be great the pain shall be according: if it be less, there shall be less pain for it. I would not now that you should think because that there are but three degrees of punishment spoken of, that there be no more in Hell: no doubt Christ spake of no more here but of these three degrees of punishment, thinking they were sufficient enough for example, whereby we might understand, that there be as divers and many pains as there be offences: and so by these three offences, and these three punishments, all other offences and punishments may be compared with each other: yet I would satisfy your minds further in these three terms, of Judgment, Council, and Hell-fire. Where you might say, what was the cause that Christ declared more the pains of Hell by these terms, than by any other terms? I told you afore that he knew well to whom he spake them; these terms were natural and known well amongst the Jews and the Pharisees. Wherefore Christ taught them with their own terms, to the intent they might understand the better his Doctrine: and these terms may be likened unto three terms which we have common and usual amongst us, that is to say, the Sessions of enquirence, the Sessions of deliverance, and the Execution day: Sessions of enquirence is like unto Judgment: for when Sessions of enquiry is, then the Judges cause Twelve men to give verdict of the Felons crime, whereby he shall be judged to be edited: Sessions of deliverance, is much like Council: for at Sessions of deliverance, the Judges go among themselves to Council to determine sentence against the Felon.

Execution day is to be compared unto Hell-fire: for the Jews had amongst themselves a place of Execution, named Hell-fire: and surely when a man goeth to his death it is the greatest pain in this world: wherefore you may see that there are degrees in these our terms, as there be in those terms. These evil disposed affections and sensualities in us are always contrary to the rule of our salvation. What shall we do now or imagine to thrust down these Turks, and to subdue them? It is a great ignominy and shame for a Christian man to be bond and subject unto a Turk: Nay, it shall not be so, we will first cast a Trump in their way, and play with them at Cards who shall have the better, let us play therefore on this fashion with this Card. Whensoever it shall happen these foul passions and Turks to rise in our stomachs against our Brother, or neighbour, either for unkind words, injuries, or wrongs, which they have done unto us, contrary unto our mind, straightways let us call unto our remembrance, and speak this question unto our selves, Who art thou? The answer is, I am a Christian man. Then further we must say to our selves, What requireth Christ of a Christian man? Now turn up your Trump, your Heart (Hearts is Trump as I said before) and cast your Trump, your Heart, on this Card, and upon this Card you shall learn what Christ requireth of a Christian man, not to be angry, nor moved to ire against his Neighbour, in mind, countenance, nor other ways, by word or deed. Then take up this Card with your Heart, and lay them together; that done, you have won the game of the Turks, whereby you have defaced and overcome by true and lawful play: but alas for pity, the Rhodes are won and overcome by these false Turks, the strong Castle Faith is decayed, so that I fear it is almost impossible to win it again.

The great occasion of the loss of this Rhodes is by reason that Christian men do so daily kill their own Nation, that the very true number of Christianity is decayed: which murder and killing one of another, is increased specially two ways, to the utter undoing of Christendom, that is to say, by example and silence. By example as thus: When the Father, the Mother, the Lord, the Lady, the Master, the Dame, be themselves overcome

Anno 1555. come with their Turks, they be continual swearers, adulterers, disposers to malice, never in patience, and so forth in all other vices: Think you not when the Father, the Mother, the Master, the Dame, be disposed unto vice or impatience, but that their Children and Servants shall encline and be disposed to the same? No doubt, as the Child shall take disposition natural of his Father and Mother, so shall the Servants apply unto the vices of their Masters and Dames; if the Heads be false in their faculties and crafts, it is no marvel if the Children, Servants, and Apprentices do joy therein. This is a great and shameful manner of killing Christian men, that the Fathers, the Mothers, the Masters, and the Dames, shall not alone kill themselves, but all theirs, and all that belongeth unto them, and so this way is a great number of Christian linage murdered and spoiled. The second manner of killing is silence. By silence also is a great number of Christian men slain, which is on this fashion: although that the Father and Mother, Master and Dame of themselves be well disposed to live according to the Law of God, yet they may kill their Children and Servants in suffering them to do evil before their own faces, and do not use due correction according unto their offences; the Master teach his Servant or apprentice take more of his neighbour than the Kings Laws, or the order of his faculty doth admit him, or he suffered him to take more of his neighbour than he himself would be content to pay if he were in like condition: thus doing, I say, such men kill willingly their Children and Servants, and shall go to Hell for so doing; but also their Fathers and Mothers, Masters and Dames, shall bear them company for so suffering. Wherefore I exhort all true Christian men and woman to give good example unto your Children and Servants, and suffer not them by silence to offend: every man must be in his own house, according to St. Augustines mind, a Bishop, not alone giving good example, but teach according to it, rebuke and punish vice, not suffering your Children and Servants to forget the Laws of God: you ought to see them have their belief, to know the commandments of God, to keep their holy-days, not to lose their time in idleness; if they do so, you shall all suffer pain for it, if God be true of his saying, as there is no doubt thereof: and so you may perceive that there be many one that break this Card, Thou shalt not kill, and playeth therewith offensive, at the blind Trump, whereby they be no winners, but great losers, but who be those now a days that can clear themselves of these manifest murders used to their Children and Servants? I think not the contrary, but that many have these two ways slain their own Children unto their damnation, were not the great mercy of God ready to help them when they repent therefore.

Wherefore considering that we be so prone and ready to continue in sin, let us cast down our selves with Mary Magdalen, and the more we bow down with her toward Christs feet, the more we shall be afraid to rise again in sin, and the more we know and submit our selves, the more we shall be forgiven, and the less we know and submit our selves, the less we shall be forgiven, as appeared by this example following.

Christ when he was in the world amongst the Jews and Pharisees, there was a great Pharisee whose name was Simon; this Pharisee desired Christ on a time to dine with him, thinking in himself that he was able and worthy to give Christ a dinner: Christ refused not his dinner, but came unto him. In time of their dinner it chanced there came into the house a great and a common sinner named Mary Magdalen. As soon as she perceived Christ, she cast herself down, and called unto her remembrance what he was of her self, and how greatly she had offended God, whereby she conceived in Christ great love, and so came near unto him, and washed his feet with bitter tears, and shed upon his head precious ointment, thinking that by him she should be delivered from her sins; this great and proud Pharisee seeing that Christ did accept her oblation in the best part, had great indignation against this woman, and said to himself, if this man Christ were a holy Prophet, as he is taken for, he would not suffer this sinner to come so nigh him. Christ understanding the naughty mind of this Pharisee said to him, Simon, I have somewhat to say unto thee: Say what you please (quoth the Pharisee.) Then said Christ, I pray thee tell me this: If there be a man to whom is owing twenty pound by one, and forty by another, this man to whom this money is owing, perceiveth these two men be not able to pay him; he forgiveth them both. Which of these two debtors ought to love this man most? The Pharisee said, That man ought to love him best that had most forgiven him: Likewise said Christ, it is by this woman. She hath loved me most, therefore most is forgiven her, she hath known her sins most, whereby she hath most loved me; and thou hast least loved me, because thou hast least known thy sins, therefore because thou hast least known thine offences, thou art least forgiven. So this proud Pharisee had an answer to allay his pride: and think you not, but that there be amongst us a great number of these proud Pharisees, which think themselves worthy to bid Christ to dinner, which will perk and presume to sit by Christ in the Church, and have disdain of this poor Woman Magdalen, their poor Neighbour, with an high disdainous and solemn countenance, and being always desirous to climb higheth in the Church, reckoning their selves more worthy to sit there than another, I fear me poor Magdalen under the Board, and in the Belfrey, hath more forgiven of Christ than they have: for it is like that these Pharisees do less know themselves and their offences, whereby they less love God, and so they be less forgiven.

I would to God we would follow this example, and be like unto Magdalen. I doubt not but we be all Magdalens in falling into sin, and in offending: but we be not again Magdalens in knowing our selves, and in rising from sin. If we be the true Magdalens, we should be as willing to forsake our sin, and rise from sin, as we were willing to commit sin, and to continue in it, and we then should know our selves best, and make more perfect answer than ever we did, unto this question, Who art thou? To the which we might answer, that we be true Christian men and women: and then I say you should understand, and know how you ought to play at this Card, Thou shalt not kill, without any interruption of your deadly enemies the Turks, and so triumph at the last, by winning everlasting life in glory, Amen.

It would ask a long discourse to declare what a stir there was in Cambridge, upon this preaching of M. Latimer. Belike Satan began to feel himself and his kingdom to be touched too near, and therefore thought it time to look about him, and to make out his men of arms.

First came out the Prior of the Black Friars called Buckeneham, otherwise surnamed Domine labia, who thinking to make a great hand against Mr. Latimer, about the same time of Christmas, when Mr. Latimer brought forth his Cards to deface belike the doings of the other, brought out his Christmas Dice, casting there to his audience cinqve and quater, meaning by the cinqve five places in the new Testament, and the four Doctors by the quater; by which his Cinqve quater, he would prove that it was not expedient the Scripture to be in English, lest the ignorant and vulgar sort through the occasion thereof, might haply be brought in danger to leave their vocation, or else to run into some inconvenience: as for example.

The Plowman when he heareth this in the Gospel, Note these! No man that layeth his hand on the Plough and looketh back, is meet for the Kingdom of God; might peradventure hearing this, cease from his Plough. Likewise the Baker, when he hears that a little Leaven corrupteth a whole lump of dough, may peradventure leave our Bread unleavened, and so our bodies shall be unseasoned. Also the simple man, when he heareth in the Gospel, If thine eye offend thee, pluck it out, and cast it from thee, may make himself blind, and so fill the world full of beggars. These with other more this Clerky Frier brought out, to the number of five to prove his purpose.

Mr. Latimer hearing this Frierly Sermon of Dr. Buckeneham, cometh again the afternoon, or shortly after to the Church, to answer the Frier, where referred to him a great multitude, as well of the University as of the Town, both Doctors and other Graduates, with great expectation to hear what he could say: among whom also, directly in the face of Latimer underneath the Pulpit, Great reason of the Catholics, why the Scriptures should not come in English.

Then Master Latimer first repeating the Frierly reasons of Doctor Bucknham, whereby he would prove it a dangerous thing for the vulgar People to have the Scripture in the vulgar tongue, so refuted the Frier, so answered to his objections, so dallied with his bald reason of the Ploughman looking back, and of the Baker leaving his Bread unleavened, that the vanity of the Frier might to all men appear, well proving and declaring to the People, how there was no such fear nor danger for the Scriptures to be in English, as the Frier pretended; at least requiring this, that the Scripture might be so long in the English tongue, till Englishmen were so mad, that either the Ploughman durst not look back, or the Baker should leave his bread unleavened. And proceeding moreover in his Sermon, he began to discourse of the mytical speeches, and figurative phrases of the Scripture: which phrases he said were not so diffuse and difficult, as they were common in the Scripture, and in the Hebrew tongue are commonly used and unknown: and not only in the Hebrew tongue, but also every speech (saith he) hath his like metaphors and figurative significations, so common and vulgar to all men, that the very Painters do paint them on walls, and on houses.

As for example (saith he, looking toward the Frier that fate over against him) when they paint a Fox preaching out of a Friers coul, none is so mad to take this to be a Fox that preacheth, but know well enough the meaning of the matter, which is to point out unto us, what hypocrites, crafts, and subtle dissimulation lieth hid many times in these Friers couls, willing us thereby to beware of them. In fine, Frier Bucknham with this Sermon was so dashed, that never after he durst peep out of the pulpit against M. Latimer.

M. Latimer.

Besides this Bucknham, there was also another nailing Frier, not of the same coat, but of the same note and faction, a gray Frier and a Doctor, an Outlandishman called Doctor Venerus, who likewise in his brawling Sermons raised and ragged against Master Latimer, calling him a mad and brainless man, and willing the People not to believe him, &c. To whom Master Latimer answering again, taketh for his ground the words of our Saviour Christ, Matthew 5. Thou shalt not kill, &c. But I say unto you, whosoever is angry with his neighbour shall be in danger of judgement; and whosoever shall say unto his neighbour, Racha (or any other like words of rebuking, as brainless) shall be in danger of Council: And whosoever shall say to his neighbour, Fool, shall be in danger of hell fire.

Meth. 1.

Answer of
M. Latimer
to another nailing Frier

In discussing of which place, first he divideth the offence of killing into three branches: One to be with hand, the other with heart, the third with word. With hand, when we use any weapon drawn, to spill the life of our neighbour: With heart, when we are angry with him: With word, when in word or countenance we disdainfully rebuke our neighbour, or despitefully revile him. Words of rebuking are, when we speak any opprobrious or uncleanly thing, whereby the patience of our neighbour is moved, as when we call him mad (saith he) or brainless, or such like, which are guilty of Council: Words of spite, or reviling are, when we call him Fool; which Christ saith is guilty of hell fire, &c.

Sup. 11.

Thus M. Latimer in handling and trimming this matter, after that with the weight of Christs words, and the explaining of the same, he had sufficiently born the Frier clean down, then he turned to the fifth Chapter of the Book of Wisdom. Out of the which Chapter he declared to the audience, how the true Servants and preachers of God in this World commonly are scorned and reviled of the proud enemies of Gods Word, which account them here as mad men, fools, brainless, and drunken: so did they (saith he) in the Scripture call them which most purely preached, and set forth the glory of Gods Word. But (saith he) what will be the end of these jolly fellows, or what will they say in the end? Nos in inferis, nos in inferis, &c. We mad men, we mad fools, we, we our selves, &c. And that will be their end except they repent. And thus ending his Sermon, he so confounded the poor Frier, that he drove him not only out of countenance, but also clean out of the University.

But what should I here stand deciphering the names of his Adversaries, when whole swarms of Friers and Doctors flockt against him on every side, almost thorow the whole University, preaching likewise and barking against him? Amongst whom was Doctor Watson, Master of Christs Colledge, whose Scholar Latimer had been afore. Doctor Notaries, Master of Clare-hall, Doctor Philo, Master of Michael-house, Doct. Mercalfs, Master of St. Johns, Doctor Blube of the Kings-Hall, Doctor Bullock, Master of the Queens Colledge, Doctor Cliffe of Clement-House, Doctor Donnes of Jesuss Colledge, Doctor Psalm, M. of St. Nicholas Hostel, Bain, Rud, and Greenwood, Bachelor of Divinity, all three of St. Johns Colledge. Also Brikenden Bachelor of Divinity of the same house, and Scholar sometimes to the said Latimer. Briefly, almost as many as were Heads there of houses, so many impugnors did this worthy Standard-bearer of Christs Gospel sustain.

Then came at last Doctor Wesl, Bishop of Ely, who preaching against M. Latimer at Barwell Abbey, forbade him within the Churches of that University to preach any more. Notwithstanding, to the Lord provided, that Doctor Barnes, Prior of the Augustine Friers, did licence Master Latimer to preach in his Church of the Augustines, and he himself preached at the Church by, called Saint Edwards Church, which was the first Sermon of the Gospel, which Doct. Barnes preached, being upon Christsmas Even upon a Sunday. Whereupon certain Articles were gathered out of his Sermon, and were commenced against him by Master Tirell, Fellow of the Kings Hall, and so by the Vice-chancellor presented to the Cardinal, as in his story before hath been declared.

This M. Latimer (as you have heard) being baited by the Friers, Doctors, and Masters of that University, about the year aforesaid, 1529. notwithstanding the mangre and malice of these malignant Adversaries, continued yet in Cambridge preaching the space of three years together with favour and applause of the godly, also with such admiration of his enemies that heard him, that the Bishop himself coming in, and hearing his gift withheld himself to have the like, and was compelled to commend him upon the same.

So M. Latimer, with M. Bilney, after this continued yet in Cambridge a certain space, where he with the said Bilney used much to confer and company together, inasmuch that the place where they most used to walk in the fields, was called long after, the Heretics hill.

The society of these two, as it was much noted of many in that University, so it was full of many good examples, to all such as would follow their doings, both in visiting the prisoners, in relieving the needy, in feeding the hungry, whereof somewhat is before mentioned in the history of Master Bilney, in a place of his Sermons. Master Latimer maketh mention of a certain history which happened about this time in Cambridge between them two, and a certain woman then prisoner in the Castle or Tower of Cambridge, which I thought here not unworthy to be remembered. The history is this: It so chanced, that after Master Latimer had bin so acquainted with the foresaid Master Bilney, he went with him to visit the Prisoners in the Tower in Cambridge, and being there, among other prisoners there was a woman which was accused that she had killed her own child, which she plainly and steadfastly denied. Whereby it gave them occasion to search for the matter, and at length they found that her husband loved her not, and therefore sought all means he could to make her away. The matter was thus:

A child of hers had been sick a whole year, and at length died in harvest time, as it were in a consumption. Which when it was gone, she went to have her neighbours to help her to the burial, but all were in harvest abroad, whereby she was enforced with heaviness of heart, alone to prepare the child to the burial. Her husband coming home, and not loving her, accused her of murdering the child. This was the cause of her trouble, and Mr. Latimer, by earnest inquisition, of confidence thought the woman not guilty. Then immediately after, was he called to preach before King Henry the Eighth at Windsor, where where, after his Sermon, the Kings Majesty sent for him, and talked with him familiarly. At which time Master Latimer finding opportunity, kneeled down, opened this whole matter to the King, and begged her pardon, which the King most graciously granted, and gave it him at his return homeward. In the mean time the woman was delivered of a child in the prison, whose Godfather was M. Latimer, Mistress Cheek Godmother. But all the while he would not tell her of the pardon, but laboured to have her confess the truth of the matter. At length the time came when she should look to suffer, and Master Latimer came as he was wont to instruct her: unto whom she made great lamentation and moan, to be purified before her suffering, for the thought to be damned if she should suffer without purification.

Purification of women.

Then Master Bilney being with Master Lasimer, both told her that that Law was made to the Jews, and not to us, and that women be as well in the favour of God before they be purified, as after; and rather it was appointed for a civil and politick law, for natural honesty sake, than that they should any thing the more be purified from Sin thereby, &c. So thus they travelled with this woman, till they had brought her to a good trade, and then at length shewed her the Kings pardon, and let her go.

This good sort among many other, at this time happened in Cambridge by Master Latimer, and Master Bilney. But this was not alone, for many more like matters were wrought by them; if all were known, whereof partly some are touched before, such especially as concern Master Bilney, mention whereof is above expressed. But as it is commonly seen in the naturall course of things, that as the fire beginneth more to kindle, so the more smoke ariseth withal, in much like sort it happened with Master Latimer; who towards the more it began to spring, his vertues to be seen, and his doings to be known, the more his Adversaries began to spurn and kick against him. Concerning these Adversaries, and such as did molest him, partly their names be above expressed. Among the rest of this number was Doctor Redman, of whom mention is made before in the reign of King Edward, a man favouring at that time somewhat more of superstition, then of true Religion, after the zeal of the Pharisees, yet not so malignant or harmful, but of a civil and quiet disposition, and also so liberal in well doing, that few poor Scholars were in that University, which fared not better by his purse. This D. Redman being of no little Authoritie in Cambridge, perceiving and understanding the bold enterprise of M. Latimer, in setting abroad the word and Doctrine of the Gospel, at this time, or much about the same, writeth to him, feeling by perswasion to revoke the said Latimer from that kind and manner of teaching; to whom M. Latimer maketh answer again in few words: The sum and effect of both their letters, translated out of Latine, here followeth to be seen.

GRACE be with you, and true peace in Christ Jesus. I beseech you heartily, and require most earnestly, even for charities sake, that you will not stand in your own conceit with a mind so indurate, nor prefer your own singular judgement in matters of Religion and controversies before so many learned men, and that more is, before the whole Catholick Church, especially considering that you neither have any thing at all in the word of God to make for you, nor yet the testimony of any authenticall Writer. Nay, nay! I beseech you rather consider that you are a man, and that lying and vanity may quickly blear your eyes, which doth sometime transform it self into an Angel of light.

Judge not so rashly of us, as that wicked Spirit hath tickled you in the ear. Wit you well that we are careful for you, and that we wish you to be saved, and that we are careful also for your own salvation. Lay down your stomach I pray you, and humble your Spirit, and suffer not the Church to take offence with the hardness of your heart, nor that her unity and Christs coat without seam (as much as lyeth in you) should be torn asunder. Con-

R Everend Master Redman, it is even enough for me, that Christs Sheep hear no mans voice but Christs; and as for you, you have no voice of Christ against me, whereas for my part I have a heart that is ready to hearken to any voice of Christ that you can bring me. Thus fare you well, and trouble me no more from the talking with the Lord my God.

to a letter

After M. Laimmer had thus travelled in preaching and teaching in the University of Cambridge about the space of three years, at length he was called up to the Cathedral for Hereford, by the procurement of certain of the said University, where he was content to subscribe, and grant to such Articles as then they propounded unto him, &c.

After that he returned to the University again, where shortly after by the means of Doctor Burr, the English Physician, a singular good man, and a special favourite of good proceedings, he was in the number of the which laboured in the cause of the Kings supremacy. Then went he to the Court, where he remained a certain time in the said Doctors Chappell, preaching then in London very often. At last being weary of the Court, having a Benefice offered by the King, at the suite of the L. Cromwell, and Doctor Burr was glad thereof, knowing by that means to be rid out of the Court, wherewithin he could not well agree; and to having a grant of the Benefice, (containing in the mind of D. Burr, he would needs depart, and be resident at the same.

This Rehearsal was in Wilshire, under the Dioc. of Sarum, the name of which Town was called Wyl-Kirke-Hen, where this good Preacher did exercise himself, and not only to them his diligence extended, but also to all the Country about it, his diligence was so great, his Preaching so mighty, the manner of his teaching so zealous, that there in like fort he could not escape without enemies. So true it is that S. Paul foretelleth us, Whosoever will live godly in Christ, shall suffer persecution. It is fancied, that whereas he Preaching upon the blessed Virgin Christis Mother whom we call our Lady had thereupon declared his mind, referring and reducing all honor only to Christ our only Saviour, certain Popish Priests, being thereoff offended, fought and wrought much against him, drawing out Articles and impositions, which they unrightly, falsely and uncharitably imposed upon him: First, that he should preach against our Lady, for that he reproved in a sermon the superstitious rudeness of certain blinde Priests, which he held together upon that blessed Virgin, as though she never had a sin, nor were saved by Christ the only Saviour of the whole World.

Against this Citation, although Mr. Latimer did appeal to his own Ordinary, requiring by him to be ordered, yet that notwithstanding, he was had up to London before Warham the Archbishop of Canterbury, and the Bishop of London, where he was greatly molested, and detained a long space from his Cure at home. There he being called thrice every week before the said Bishops, to make answer for his Preaching, had certain Articles or Propositions drawn out and laid to him, wherunto they required him to subscribe. At length he not only perceiving their practical proceedings, but also much grieved with their troublesome unquietness, which neither would preach themselves, nor yet suffer him to preach and do his duty, writeth to the forsaide Archbishop, partly excusing his Infirmitie, whereby he could not appear at their commandment, partly expostulating with them for so troubling and detaining him from his duty doing, and that for no just cause, but only for preaching the truth against certain vain abuses crept into Religion, much needful to be spoken against. Which all may appear by his Epistle sent to a certain Bishop or Archbishop, whose name is not expressed; the Copy of which Epistle in Latin is this.

Non licet, Reverendissime Praeul, per super-venientem negotiationem ad tuum Palatium venire, non novam quidem illam, sed inveteratam, et si novus occasionibus super exasperatam. Certe quantum videre videor, & quantum conjecturis ducor, bodie non licebit, circa meum exspectare adventum diutius tua dominatio frustra: en hanc qualemque schedulam mea manu oblitam ad tuam amplitudinem mitte, velut excusationis nostrae certissimum iudicem. In qua utinam vel per temporis importunitatem, vel per capitis gravedinem, iustam aliquam expostulationem liceat tecum facere, qui me, curam animarum habentem, ab earundem curatione debita tam diu detines invitam, & hac quidem tempestate detines, quae Pastores cum gregibus adesse oportet vel maxime. Quid ni enim expostulem, si modo tam vili muncipio cum tanto Patre expostulare sit licitum? Nam si Petrus arbitrabatur iustum esse ratione officii sui, quem diu in hoc foret Tabernaculo, ut populum adnecneret & docere nequaquam cessare, & quo precipis morti hoc insentiam: ergo non potest non iurari iniustum, si qui bodie neque decet ipse (ut jam nihil miror si non ante docuerant) neque cupientes docere permittunt, nisi quos habue-

runt votis per omnia & in omnibus obsecundantes. Primum liberum erat meipsum amplitudinis vestrae praesentare & offerre, sed inde meipsum eripere & extricare, parum nunc quidem videtur mihi liberum esse. Et dum aliud in principio praetenditur, aliud in progressu tam longo temporis tractu agitur, nostri negotii quis aut qualis sit futurus exitus non immerito dubitatur; sed veritatem in seculum liberabit, super quo quid scribis Hieronymus utinam nunquam memoria excideret. Non poterat me molestare quicquid esset pro veritate passurus; sed vivit Deus, & ipse cura est de nobis. Tum modo ad Lond. missus sum, ceterum coram Cant. interdum multis formidandis patribus stipato geruntur omnia. Res velut cancellos quosdam & limites habet, ab eo qui me misit praestitutus, verum sic tractatur causa, & ambagibus ducitur, quasi in infinitum abiura, nullo tandem claudenda termino, dum sine modo & fine, alia post alia ad me, seu pertinentia, seu impertinentia, nunc ab hoc, nunc ab illo interrogantur, si non egomet modo, & si forte incivilliter, ac non imprudenter tamen (ni fallor) modum imponere, veritus ne inter multa dum multis respondet unus, unum aliquid (ut fit) ex inconsulto erumperet, quod casum lederet, aliqui iustissimam: & me malum ostendat oportet nemini volentem male moliri, si quid in conscientia est erroris: & meminisse omnino illud oportet, nempe ad Gebennam edificare, contra conscientiam facere, his sat fuerit sua profiteri, sua assertere, sua defendere: mihi vero assertiones alienae obtruduntur, nescio quo iure asserenda. Sine exemplo, opinor, hoc fit mihi, qui tamen intratibilis fere videor, dum nihil aliud quam inquis effugiationibus (quod ego iudico) acquirere deinceps. Adversus predicationes meas si quis quid intenter conabatur, tanquam vel obcurior, vel parum caute pronuntiatus, paratus sum predicationes predicationibus illustrare, qui nihil adversus veritatem, nihil adversus decreta Patrum, nil non Catholica (quod sciam) praedicavi unquam. Id quod per adversarium & eloquentium testimonia commonstrare poteram esse verum. Optavi & opto iudicium vultu reparari. Optavi & opto discrimen rerum deprehendi, & sua dignitate, suo loco, & tempore, suo gradu & ordine, unumquamque verum polere, gaudere, ut ingenie ciant omnes permutum inter se ea quae praeparavit Deus, ut in eis ambularemus, quaeque vocationis opera sedulo faceretur, postquam quae omnibus sunt communia pari fidelitate sunt facta, & inter ea quae spontanea sunt, ut in quibus non nisi nos propterea morte obambulemus. Imaginibus autem licet peregrinari licet, sanctis invocare licet, animarum in purgatorio residentium memores esse licet: sed si temperanda sunt, quae voluntaria sunt, ut praeccepta Dei factu necessaria quae facientibus vitant aeternam, non facientibus aeternam mortem afferunt iustitiae estimatione non preceunt, ne praepostere diligenter Deum fuisse devoti, Deum contra experiri non redamantem nos, sed ad potius profectum; cum hoc esse Deum vere diligere mirum praeccepta Dei diligenter servare, iuxta illud Christi: Qui habet praeccepta mea & facit ea, bis est qui diligit me, ne qui tam vilita reputat praeccepta Dei vocationem concernentia, in suis potius adventionibus aberraturus, cum in fine ante tribunal Christi secundum illa, non secundum has, omnes ad unum iudicabimur, iuxta illud Christi, Sermo quem locutus sum, ipse iudicabit in novissimo die. Et quis potest unum praecceptum Dei nullis additis inveniri quamlibet aut multis, aut speciosis compensare. O si essemus ad ea quae Deo sunt peragenda tam propensius, quam sumus ad nostra excoGITamenta exercenda sedulo & devoti. Multa sunt quae simplicis fide facta non improbat Deus, sed probat utcumque saltem quorundam infirmitati indulgens, quae tamen antequam fierent interrogatus, nec praeciperet, nec consuleret fieri, utpote quae iustius toleranda sunt, dum sic sunt, quam praedicanda ut fiant; ne occasione predicationis (ut fit) omittantur, quae periculo damnationis fieri debeant. That Pilgrimages and Oblations done to the Sepulchres and Reliques of Saints are meritorious.

That they which have vowed perpetual chastity may not marry, nor break their Vow, without the dispensation of the Pope.

That the Keys of binding and loosing delivered to Peter, do still remain with the Bishops of Rome, his Successors, although they live wickedly, and are by no means nor at any time committed to Laymen.

That men may merit and deserve at Gods hand by fasting, Prayer, and other good works of piety.

That they which are forbidden of the Bishop to preach, as suspect persons, ought to cease until they have purged themselves before the said Bishop, or their Superiors, and be restored again.

That the fast which is used in Lent, and other fasts prescribed by the Canons, and by custom received of the Christians (except necessity otherwise require) are to be observed and kept.

That God in every one of the seven Sacraments giveth grace to a man, rightly receiving the same.

That consecrations, sanctifyings, and blessings by use and custom received in the Church, are laudable and profitable.

That it is laudable and profitable, that the venerable Images of the Crucifix and other Saints, should be had in the Churches as a remembrance, and to the honour and worship of Jesus Christ, and his Saints.

That it is laudable and profitable to deck and to cloath those Images, and set up burning lights before them to the honour of the said Saints.

To these Articles whether he did subscribe or no, it is uncertain. It appeareth by this Epistle above written to the Bishops, that he durst not consent unto what he the wriether in these words, Hic ego vultis sententias subscribere non quoad quæ popularis superstitionis datus duraturæ, quæque pollicentur, immortales esse vobis, &c. But whether he was compelled afterwards to agree, to the cruel handling of the Bishops, it is obscure. By the words and the title in Tompas Register prefixed before the Articles, it may seem that he did subscribe. The words of the Register be these: Hugo Laniæmus in sacra Theologia Baccal. in Universitate Cantabrigiæ, coram Cant. Archiepisc. Johan. Lond. Episcopo, reliquisque concione apud Westmon. vocatus, confessus esse & recognovisse suam seipsum sic sentiendo atque inquitur in his articulis. 2. die Martii Anno 1531. If these words be true, it may be so thought that he subscribed. And whether he so did, no great matter nor marvel, the iniquity of the time being such, that either he must needs do so, or else abide the Bishops blessing that is, cruel sentence of death, which he at that time (as he himself confessed preaching at Stamford was loath to sustain for such matters as these were, unless it were for Articles necessary, of his belief; by which his words I conjecture rather that he did subscribe at length, albeit it was long before he could be brought to do. I Believe that there is a Purgatory to purge the Souls of the dead after this life.

That the Souls in Purgatory are holpen with the Masses, Prayers, and Alms of the living.

That the Saints do pray as Mediators now for us in Heaven.

That they are to be honoured of us in Heaven.

That it is profitable for Christians to call upon the Saints, that they may pray as Mediators for us unto God.

There

There was amongst the Bilshops that examined me, one with whom I have been very familiar, and took him for my great Friend, an aged man, and he fate next the tables end.

Then amongst all other questions he put forth one, a very subtle and crafty one, and such an one indeed, as I could not think so great danger in. And when I should make answer; I pray you Mr. Latimer, said one, speak out; I am very thick of hearing, and here be many that sit far off. I marvelled at this, that I was bidden speak out, and began to misdeem, and gave an ear to the chimney; and, Sir, there I heard a pen was king in the chimney behind the cloth. They had appointed one there to write all mine answers; for they made sure, that I should not start from them: there was no starting from them. God was my good Lord, and gave me answer, I could never else have escaped it. The question to him there and then objected was this; Whether he thought in his Conscience, that he hath been suspected of Heresie. This was a captious question. There was no holding of peace would serve; for that was to grant him self faulty. To answer, it was every way full of danger; But God, which alway giveth in need what to answer helped him, or else (as he confessed himself) he had never escaped their Bloody hands. Albeit what was his answer, he doth not there express. And thus hitherto you have heard declared the manifold troubles of this godly Preacher, in the time not onely of his being in the Univerfity, but especially at his Benefice, as partly in his own words above mentioned, and partly by his own Letters hereafter following, may better appear.

In these so hard and dangerous straits, and such snares of the Bilshops, hard it had been for him and impossible to have escaped and continued so long, had not the Almighty helping hand of the highlest, as he stirred him up, so preserved him through the favour and power of his Prince; who with much favour embraced him, and with his meer power sometime rescued and delivered him out of the crooked claws of his enemies. Moreover, at length also, through the procurement partly of Doctor Bais, partly of good Cromwel (whose story ye heard before) he advanced him to the dignity and degree of a Bilshop, making him the Bilshop of Worcester, which he continued a few years, instructing his Diocess, according to the duty of a diligent and vigilant Pastor, with wholesome Doctrine and example of perfect conversation duly agreeing to the same. It was a long matter to stand particularly upon such things as might here be brought to the commendation of his pains; as study, readines, and continual carefulness in teaching, preaching, exhorting, visiting, correcting, and reforming, either as his ability could serve, or else the time would bear. But the dayes then were so dangerous and variable, that he could not in all things do that he would. Yet what he might do, that he performed to the uttermost of his strength, so that although he could not utterly extinguish all the sparkling reliques of old superstition, yet he so wrought, that though they could not be taken away, yet they should be used with as little hurt, and with as much profit as might be. As for example in this thing, and in divers other it did appear, that when it could not be avoided, yet so he prepared and instructed them of his Diocess, with such informations and lessons, that in receiving thereof superstition should be excluded, and some remembrance taken thereby, reaching and charging the Ministers of his Diocess, in delivering the Holy water and the Holy Bread, to say these words following.

Words spoken to the People in giving them Holy Water.

Remember your promise in Baptism.
Christ his meere, and Blood-shedding.
By whose meere Holy sprinkling,
Of all your sins you have free pardoning.

What to say in giving Holy Bread.

Of Christs Body this is a token,
Which on the Cress for our Sins was broken.

Wherefore of your sins you must be forsaker,
If of Christs death ye will be partaker.

By this it may be considered what the diligent care of this Bilshop was in doing the duty of a faithful Pastor among his flock. And moreover it is to be thought that he would have brought more things else to pass, if the time then had answered to his desire; for he was not ignorant how the institution of Holy Water and Holy Bread, not onely had no ground in Scripture, but also how full of prophane, exorcisms and conjurations they were, contrary to the rule and learning of the Gospel. Thus this good man behaved himself in his Diocess. But (as before) both in the Univerfity, and at his Benefice, he was toft and turnmiled by wicked and evil disposed persons; So in his Bilshoprick also he was not all clear and void of some that fought his trouble. As among many other evil willers, one especially there was, and that no small person, which accused him then to the King for his Sermons. The story because he himself sheweth in a Sermon of his before King Edward. I thought therefore to use his own words, which be these:

In the Kings days that is dead, a great many of us were called together before him, to say our minds in certain matters. In the end, one kneeleth down and accuseth me of sedition: and that I had preached seditious Doctrine. A heavy salutation, and a hard point of such a mans doing, as if I should name, ye would not think. The King turned to me, and said; What say you to that Sir?

Then I kneeled down, and turned me first to my accuser, and required him; Sir, what form of preaching would you appoint me, in preaching before a King? would you have me preach nothing as concerning a King in the Kings Sermon? have you any commission to appoint me what I shall preach? besides this, I asked him divers others questions, and he would make no answer to any of them all; he had nothing to say.

Then I turned me to the King, and submitted my self to his Grace, and said; I never thought my self worthy, nor did I ever sue to be a Preacher before your Grace, but I was called to it, and would be willing (if you mislike me) to give place to my betters; for I grant there be a great many more worthy of the room than I am. And if it be your Graces pleasure so to allow them for Preachers, I could be content to bear their books after them. But if your Grace allow me for a Preacher, I would desire your Grace to give me leave to discharge my Conscience, give me leave to frame my Doctrine according to my audience. I had been a very dolt to have preached so at the borders of your Realm, as I preach before your Grace.

And I thank Almighty God (which hath always been my remedy) that my sayings were well accepted of the King; for like a gracious Lord he turned into another communication. It is even as the Scripture saith; Cor Regis in manu Domini, i. The Lord directeth the Kings heart. Certain of my Friends came to me with tears in their eyes, and told me they looked I should have been in the Tower the same night.

Besides this, divers other confidants and combats this godly Bilshop sustained in his own Country and Diocess, in taking the cause of right and equity against oppression and wrong. As for another example, there was at that time not far from the Diocess of Worcester a certain Justice of Peace, whom here I will not name, being a good man afterward, and now deceased. This Justice in purchasing of certain land for his Brother, or for himself, went about to wrong or damage a poor man, who made his complaint to Mr. Latimer. He first hearing, then tending his rightful cause, wrote his letter to the Gentleman, exhorting him to remember himself, to consider the cause, and to abstain from injury. The Justice of Peace not content withal (as the fashion of men is when they are told of their fault) sendeth word again in great displeasure, that he would not so take it at his hands, with such threatening words, &c. Master Latimer hearing this, answered again by writing to a certain Gentleman: the Copy whereof among his Letters hereafter followeth in the sequel of this story to be seen.

It were a large and long procees to storry out all the doings, travels, and writings of this Christian Bilshop, neither neither yet have we expressed all that came to our hands; but this I thought sufficient for this present. Thus he continued in this laborious Function of a Bishop the space of certain years, till the coming in of the six Articles. Then being distressed through the freightness of time, so that either he must lose the quiet of a good Conscience, or else forsake his Bishoprick, he did of his own free accord resign his Pastorship. At which time Shaxton the Bishop of Salisbury resigned likewise with him his Bishoprick. And so these two remained a great space unbishopped, keeping silence till the time of King Edward of blessed memory. At what time he first put off his Rocket in his Chamber among his Friends, suddenly he gave a skip in the floor for joy, feeling his shoulder so light, and being discharged (as he said) of such an heavy burden. Howbeit neither was he so lightened, but that troubles and labours followed him where, soever he went. For a little after he had renounced his

Mr. Latimer kept silence till the time of King Edward.

The whole life of Mr. Latimer full of tribulation.

Mr. Latimer almost slain with the fall of a Tree. Then coming up to London for remedy, he was molested and troubled of the Bishops, whereby he was again in no little danger, and at length was cast into the Tower, where he continually remained Prisoner, till the time that blessed King Edward entered his Crown, by means whereof the golden mouth of this Preacher, long shut up before, was now opened again. And so he beginning afresh to set forth his Plough again, continued all the time of the said King, labouring in the Lords Harveit most fruitfully, discharging his Talent as well in divers other places of this Realm, as in Stamford, and before the Duches of Suffolk (whose Sermons he extant and set forth in print) as also at London in the Convocation-house, and especially before the King at the Court: In the same place of the inward Garden, which was before applied to lascivious and courtly Pastimes, there he dispensed the fruitful Word of the glorious Gospel of Jesus Christ, preaching there before the King and his whole Court, to the edification of many.

In this his painful travel he occupied himself all King Edward's days, preaching for the most part every Sunday twice, to no small shame of all other loytering and unpreaching Prelates, which occupy great rooms, and do little good; and that so much more to their shame, because he being a fore bruised man by the fall of a Tree, mentioned a little before, and above 67 years of age, took so little ease and care of sparing himself, to do the people good. Now to speak here of his indefatigable travel and diligence in his own private studies, who notwithstanding both his years, and other pains in preaching, every morning orderly, Winter and Summer, about two of the Clock in the morning, was at his Book most diligently. How careful his heart was of the preservation of the Church, and the good success of the Gospel, his Letters can testify, wherewith he admonished such as as then were in authority of their duty, and assisted them with his godly counsel.

As the diligence of this man of God never ceased all the time of King Edward, to profit the Church both publicly and privately, so among other doings in him to be noted, this is not lightly to be overlooked, but worthy to be observed, that God not only gave unto him his Spirit plentifully and comfortably to preach his word unto his Church, but also by the same Spirit he did so evidently foreshew and prophecy of all those kinds of Plagues afore, which afterward ensued, that if England ever had a Prophet, he might seem to be one. And as touching himself, he ever affirmed that the preaching of the Gospel would cost him his life, to the which he no less cheerfully prepared himself, than certainly was persuaded that Winchester was kept in the Tower for the same purpose, as the event did too truly prove the same. For after the death of the said blessed King Edward, not long after Queen Mary was proclaimed, a Pursivant was sent down (by the means no doubt of Winchester) into the Country, to call him up, of whose coming, although Mr. Latimer lacked no forewarning, being premonished about six hours before by one John Careles (whose story hereafter followeth) yet so far off was it that he thought to escape, that he prepared himself towards his journey before the said Pursivant came to his House.

At the which thing when the Pursivant marvelled, seeing him so prepared towards his journey, he said unto him, My Friend, you be a welcome Messenger to me. And be it known unto you, and to all the World, that I go as willingly to London at this present, being called by my Prince to render a reckoning of my Doctrine, as ever I was at any place in the world. I doubt not but that God, as he hath made me worthy to preach his Word before two excellent Princes, so will be able me to witness the same unto the third, either to her comfort or discomfort eternally, &c. At the which time the Pursivant

Mr. Latimer prophesied what plagues were to come in Queen Mary's time.

Mr. Latimer called up to London by Winchester, Mr. Latimer being premonished before, yet refused to escape.

Mr. Latimer was to be the Queen's Parson.

Latimer, when he had delivered his Letters, departed, abating that he had Commandment not to tarry for him. By whose sudden departure it was manifest that they would not have him appear, but rather to have fled out of the Realm. They knew that his constancy should deface them in their Popery, and confirm the godly in the Truth.

Thus Mr. Latimer being sent for, and coming up to London, thorow Smithfield (where merrily he liked, That Smithfield had long groaned for him) was brought before the Council, where he patiently bearing all the mocks and taunts given him by the scornful Papists, was cast again into the Tower, where he being assisted with the heavenly Grace of Christ, sustained most patient imprisonment a long time, notwithstanding the cruel and unmerciful handling of the lordly Papists, which thought then their Kingdom would never fall; yet he shewed himself not only patient, but also cheerful in and above all that which they could or would work against him; yea, such a valiant Spirit the Lord gave him, that he was able not only to despise the terrible of Prisons and Torments, but also to deride and laugh to scorn the doings of his Enemies. As it is not unknown to the ears of many, what he answered to the Lieutenant being then in the Tower. For when the Lieutenants man upon a time came to him, the aged Father kept without fire in the frosty Winter, and well nigh starved for cold, merrily bade the man tell his Master, That if he did not look the better to him, perchance he would deceive him.

The Lieutenant hearing this, berought himself of these words, and fearing lest that indeed he thought to make some escape, began to look more straightly to his Prisoner, and so coming to him, beginneth to charge him with his words, reading the same unto him which his man had told him before; How that if he were not better looked unto, perchance he would deceive him, &c. Yea, Mr. Lieutenant, so I said, quoth he, for you look, I think, that I should burn; but except you let me have some fire, I am like to deceive your expectation, for I am like here to starve for cold.

Many such like Answers and Reasons, merry, but favourable, coming not from a vain mind, but from a constant and quiet reason, proceeded from that man, declaring a firm and stable heart, little passing for all this great blustering of their terrible threats, but rather deriding the same.

Thus Mr. Latimer passing a long time in the Tower, with as much patience as a man in his case could do, from thence was transported to Oxford, with Dr. Crammer Archbishop of Canterbury, and Mr. Ridley Bishop of London, there to dispute upon Articles sent down from Gardiner Bishop of Winchester, as is before touched, the manner and order of which Disputations between them and the University Doctors, is also before sufficiently expressed. Where also is declared, how and by whom the said Latimer with his other Fellow-prisoners were condemned after the Disputations, and so committed again to the Prison, and there they continued from the Month of April above mentioned, to this present Month of October; where they were most godly occupied, either with brotherly conference, or with fervent prayer, or with fruitful writing.

Albeit Mr. Latimer, by reason of the feebleness of his Age, wrote least of them all in this later time of his imprisonment; yet in Prayer he was fervently occupied, wherein oftentimes so long he continued kneeling, that he was not able to rise without help: And amongst other things, these were three principal matters he prayed for.

First, That as GOD had appointed him to be a Preacher of his Word, so also he would give him grace to stand to his Doctrine until his death, that he might give his heart blood for the same.

Secondly, That God of his mercy would restore his Gospel to England once again; and these words once again, once again, he did so inculcate and beat into the ears of the Lord God, as though he had seen God before him, and spoken to him face to face.

The third matter was, to pray for the preservation of the Queens Majesty that now is, whom in his Prayer he was wont accustomed to name, and even with tears desired God to make her a comfort to this comfortless Realm of England. These were the matters he prayed for so earnestly. Neither were these things of him desired in vain, as the good success thereof after following did declare; for the Lord most graciously did grant all those his requests.

First, Concerning his constancy, even in the most extremity the Lord graciously assisted him. For when he stood at the Stake without Beardo-gate at Oxford, and the Tormentors about to set the fire to him, and to the learned and godly Bishop Mr. Ridley, he lifted up his eyes towards Heaven with an amiable and comfortable countenance, saying these words, Fidelis est Deus, qui non sinit nos tentari supra id quod possumus; God is faithful, which doth not suffer us to be tempted above our strength; and so afterward by and by shed his blood in the cause of Christ, the which blood ran out of his heart in such abundance, that all those that were present, being godly, did marvel to see the most part of the blood in his body to be gathered to his heart, and with such violence to gush out, his body being opened by the force of the fire; by the which thing God most graciously granted his request, which was, That he might shed his heart blood in the defence of the Gospel.

How mercifully the Lord heard his second Request, in restoring his Gospel once again unto this Realm, these present days can bear record. And what then shall England lay now for her defence, which being so mercifully visited and refreshed with the Word of God, so slenderly and unthankfully considereth either her own misery past, or the great benefit of God now present? The Lord be merciful unto us, Amen.

Again, Concerning his third Request, it seemeth likewise most effectually granted, to the great praise of God, the furtherance of his Gospel, and to the unspeakable comfort of this Realm. For whether at the request of his Prayer, or of other Gods holy Saints, or whether God was moved with the cry of his whole Church, the truth is, that when all was deplorable and in a desperate case, and so desperate that the Enemies mightily flourished and triumphed, Gods Word was banished, Spaniards received, no place left for Christs Servants to cover their heads, suddenly the Lord called to remembrance his mercy, and forgetting our former iniquity, made an end of all these miseries, and wrought a marvellous change of things; at the change whereof the said Queen Elizabeth was appointed and anointed, for whom this gray-headed Father so earnestly prayed in his imprisonment: through whose true, natural, and imperial Crown, the brightness of Gods Word was set up again to confound the dark and false vized Kingdom of Antichrist, the true Temple of Christ re-edified, the captivity of sorrowful Christians released, which so long was wished for in the Prayers of so many good men, specially of this faithful and true servant of the Lord, Mr. Latimer.

The same God, which at the requests of his holy and faithful Saints hath poured upon us such benefits of his mercy, peace, and tranquillity, assist our most virtuous and christian Prince, and her Subjects, that we may every one in his state and calling serve to his glory, and walk in our Vocation, that we lose not that which they have obtained, but may proceed in all faithfulness, to build and keep up the House and Temple of the Lord, to the advancing of his glory, and our everlasting comfort in him. And thus much concerning the doings and laborious travels of Mr. Latimer. Now after these things thus finished and discoursed pertaining to the story of his Life, let us come to his Letters, which he wrote at divers and sundry times from the first beginning of his preaching, all which here to comprehend which he wrote both in English and Latin, lack of space and place at this present will not permit: nevertheless certain we will take, and first concerning the Articles above mentioned, for the which he was troubled by the Priests of the Country about his Benefice at West-Kington; which he writeth thereof to Mr. Morice, the Copies whereof followeth.

Anno
1555.Articles untruly, falsely, uncharitably imputed to me by Dr. Powell of Salisbury.

First that our Lady was a Sinner.

Occasioned of some, not only Lay-men, but also Priests and Beneficed-men, which gave so much to our Lady of Devotion without Judgment, as though she had not needed Christ to save her: to prove Christ her Saviour, to make Christ a whole Saviour of all that be, or shall be saved: I reasoned after this manner: That either she was a sinner, or no sinner; there is no mean: if she were a sinner, then she was redeemed or delivered from sin by Christ, as other sinners be: If she were no sinner, then she was preserved from sin by Christ; so that Christ saved her, and was her necessary Saviour, whether she sinned or no. Now certain Authors (said I) as Chrysostom, Tbeophilus, and others, writeth as though she had been something faulty in her time. Also I said that certain Scriptures standeth something to the same, unless they be the more warily understood and taken, (as in the 3. ro. 20.) All have declined, that every mouth be stopped, and all the world be bounden or in danger to God. And after in the same Chapter, All have sinned, and need the glory of God. And in the fifth, And so death passed thorough into all men and women, forasmuch as all have sinned. But to these Scriptures I said it might be answered that the privilege of one, or of a few, doth not derogate or diminish the verity of a universal Exposition in Scriptures.

And as to the Doctors, I said, that other more faith-otherwise; and forasmuch as now it is universally and constantly received and applied that she was no sinner, it becometh every man to stand and agree to the same, and so will I, quoth I, nor any man that wife is, will the contrary: But to my purpose it is neither to nor from, to prove neither this nor that; for I will have her saved, and Christ her Saviour, whether ever she was, &c.

And to that, what need you to speak of this? I answered great need, when men cannot be content that she was a Creature saved, but as it were a Saviour, not needing Salvation, it is necessary to set her in degree to the glory of Christ, Creator and Saviour of all that be or shall be saved. Good Authors have written that she was not a sinner: but good Authors never wrote that she was not saved: for though she never sinned, yet she was not so impeccable, but she might have sinned, if she had not been preserved: It was of the goodness of God that she never sinned: it had come of her own illness if she had sinned: there was difference betwixt her and Christ: And I will give as little to her as I can (doing her no wrong) rather than Christ her Son and Saviour shall lack any parcel of his glory; and I am sure that our Lady will not be displeased with me for so doing, for our Lady sought his glory here upon Earth, she would not defraud him now in Heaven: But some are so superstitiously religious, or so irreligiously superstitious, so preposterously devout toward our Lady, as though there could not too much be given to her: such are zeals without knowledge and judgment to our Ladies displeasure.

No doubt our Lady was, through the goodness of God, a good and a gracious Creature, a devout Handmaid of the Lord, indued with singular gifts and graces from above, which through the help of God she used to Gods pleasure, according to her duty, so giving us ensample to do likewise, so that all the goodness that she had, she had it not of herself, but of God the Author of all goodness: the Lord was with her favourably, and poured graces unto her plentifully, as it is in the Ave Marie. The Son of God, when he would become man, to save both man and woman, did choose her to his Mother, which love he shewed to her alone, and to none other, of his benign goodness, by the which she was the natural Mother of Christ: and through faith in Christ she was the spiritual Sister of Christ, saved by Christ, blessed by hearing Christs Word, and keeping the same. It should not availed her to Salvation, to have been his natural Mother, if she had not done the will of his heavenly Father: By him she was his Mother, by him she did the will of his Father: she the first woman, he the Lord. The Handmaiden did magnify her Lord, the Handmaiden would that all should magnify the Lord, to whom he honoureth and glorifieth.

To honour him worthily, is not to dishonour him: for he is able to preserve from sin, as to deliver from sin, he was then subject to Joseph, his Father in Law, his Mothers Husband; Joseph is now subject to him. He never dishonoured Joachim and Anna, his Grandfather and Grandmother, and yet I have not read that he preserved them from all sin.

To say that Peter and Paul, David and Mary Magdalen, were sinners, is not to dishonour them: for their Scripture doth dishonour them. It had not been for our profit to have preserved all that he could have preserved:

For remembrance of that fall and uprising, keepeth us in our fall from despairing: both is of God, to have not sinned, and to have forsaken and left sin. And as sure is this of Heaven, as that, and this more common than that, and to us that have been sinners more comfortable.

It hath been said in times past, without sin, that our Lady was a sinner: but it was never said, without sin, that our Lady was not saved, but a Saviour: I go not about to make our Lady a sinner, but to have Christ her Saviour. When mine Adversaries cannot reprove the thing that I say, then they will bely me, to say the thing that they can reprove. They will sin to make our Lady no sinner, to prove that, that no man dieth. So that provers, and so cold probations say you never. It were better unproved, than so weakly proved. But they be devout towards honouring of our Lady, but to sin to have our Lady no sinner, or to say she was no sinner.

I would be loath to dishonour our Lady as they, I pray God we may honour her as she would be honoured; for verily she is worthy to be honoured.

To make a pernicious and a damnable lye, to have our Lady no sinner, is neither honour, nor yet pleasure to our Lady, but great sin, to the dishonour and displeasure both of God and our Lady.

They should both please and honour our Lady much better, to believe their sinful living, and keep themselves from sinfulness, as our Lady did, than so sinfully to lye to make our Lady no sinner; which if they do not, they shall go to the Devil certainly, though they believe that our Lady was no sinner never so surely.

And for the Ave Marie they lye falsely, I never denied it: I know it was a heavenly saluting or greeting of our Lady, spoken by the Angel Gabriel, and written in holy Scripture of S. Luke. But yet it is not properly a Prayer, as the Pater noster is. Saluting or greeting, lauding or praising, is not properly praying. The Angel was sent to greet our Lady, and to annunciate and shew the good will of God towards her, and therefore it is called The Annunciation of our Lady, and not to pray her, or to pray to her properly: Shall the Father of Heaven pray to our Lady? When the Angel spake it, it was not properly a Prayer. And is it not the same thing now that it was then? Nor yet he that denieth the Ave Marie to be properly a Prayer, denieth the Ave Marie; so that we may salute our Lady with Ave Marie, as the Angel did, though we be not sent of God so to do, as the Angel was. So though we may so do, yet we have no plain bidding of God so to do, as the Angel had; so that the Angel had been more to blame peradventure to have left it unsaid than we be. Forasmuch as he was appointed of God to say it, and not we: But as I deny not, but as we may say the Pater noster, and the Ave Marie together, that to God, this to our Lady, so we may say them sundrily, the Pater noster by itself, and the Ave by itself; and the Pater noster is a whole and a perfect Prayer, without the Ave Marie; so that it is but a superstition to think that a Pater noster cannot be well said without an Ave Marie at his heel. For Christ was no fool, and when he taught the people to say a Pater noster to God, he taught them not to say, neither Pater noster, neither Ave Marie to our Lady, nor yet Pater noster to S. Peter, as M. Hieronimus saith: Therefore to teach to say twenty Ave Marias for one Pater noster, is not to speak Sermones Dei, in Sermone Dei; the Word of God as the Word of God. And one Ave Marie well said, and devoutly with attention, is far more understanding, is better than 27 ill spoken, thoughtless, and it is not like, but our Lady said many times the Pater noster, forasmuch as her Son Christ, whom she loved and honoured most, did make it, and taught it to be said, whether not displeased to have God honoured.

she made an Ave Marie with all, or ten or twenty Ave Marias for one Pater noster, I will leave that to great Clerks, as Hubberdin and Powell to discuss and determine: she was not fared by often saying of the Ave Marie, but by consenting to the will of him, that sent the Angel to salute her with Ave Marie: wherefore if the praying of them which decline their ear from hearing the Law of God is execrable in the sight of God, yea, though they say the Pater noster, I doubt not but the salvation of them hath been unpleasant to our Lady in her fight, for whatsoever pleaseth not her Son, pleaseth not her; for she hath delight and pleasure in nothing, but in him, and in that that delighteth and pleaseth him. Now we will be Traytors to her Son by customable sinful living, and yet we shall think great perfection and holiness in numbering every day many Ave Marias to our Lady, and so we think to make her our Friend and Patroness, and then we care not for God: for having our Lady of our side, we may be bold to take our pleasure: for we fantasie as though the very work and labour of humming the Ave Marie is very acceptable to our Lady, and the more, the more acceptable, not passing how they be said, but that they be said, if the Pater noster which Christ both made, and bid us say it, may be said to Christs displeasure, much more the Ave Marie, which neither Christ nor our Lady bid to be said, may be said to our Ladies displeasure, and better never once said, then often to said. So that I would have a difference betwixt well saying and often saying, and betwixt that that Christ bid us say, and that that he bid not say: and whether Ave Marie be said in Heaven or no, who can tell but Dr. Powell? and if it be said alway there without a Pater noster, why may not Pater noster be said here without Ave Marie; and whether doth our Lady say it in Heaven or no? which thing I speak not to withdraw you from saying of it, but to withdraw you from superstitious and unfruitful saying of it. So that by occasion of false faith and trust that ye have in the daily saying of it, you set not aside imitation and following of holy living, which will serve at length, when superstitious greetings, will neither serve nor stand in strength: It is meet that every thing be taken, esteemed and valued as it is.

We salute also and greet well the Holy Cross, or the Image of the Holy Cross, saying, All hail Holy Cross, which hath deserved to bear the precious Talent of the World: and yet who will say that we pray properly to the Holy Cross? whereby it may appear that greeting is one thing, praying another thing. The Cross can neither hear nor speak again, no more then this Pulpit: therefore we do salute it, not properly pray to it.

The Angel spake also to Zachary, before he spake to our Lady. Ne times Zacharia, &c. Be not afraid Zachary, for thy prayer is heard, and thy wife Elizabeth shall bring thee forth a child, which shall be called John, and great joy and gladness shall be at his birth, and he shall be great and full of the Holy Ghost from the womb of his mother, &c.

What if a man should say these words every day, betwixt the Pater noster, and the Ave Marie in the worship of St. Zachary, which I think is a Saint in Heaven, and was e're ever our Lady came therefore to be honoured, I think he might please and honour Saint Zachary, as well some other way, and better too, though they be words sent from God, spoken of an Angel, and written in holy Scripture of the Evangelist Luke.

And yet if it were once begun and accustomed, I warrant some men would make it more then Sacrilege to leave it off, though the Devil should sow never so much Superstition by process of time unto it.

Christ made the Pater noster for a Prayer, and bid his people say it to his heavenly Father, one God in Trinity of Persons, one Father and Comforter, one worker and doer of all things here in this World, saying unto us vos autem sic orabitis; so or after such manner, shall ye pray, Pater noster, &c. God sent his Son amongst other things to teach his people to pray: God sent his Angel to greet our Lady, not to teach his people to pray. For neither Christ nor the Angel said to the people, this shall ye pray, Ave Marie. When the Apostles said to Christ, Domine docenas orare, teach us to pray; Christ said, Cum oratis, dicite, Pater noster; when you pray, say Pater noster: he said not when you pray, say Ave Maria. wene Christ could teach to pray, as well as Dr. Powell and Mr. Hubberdin. I say that the Ave Maria was before the Pater noster; Dr. Powell saith, it shall endure after the Pater noster: I can prove my saying by Scripture, so cannot he his: yet as it is no good Argument, the Ave Mary was before the Pater noster, Ergo it is properly a Prayer: so it is no good Argument, the Ave Mary shall last after the Pater noster; Ergo it is properly a Prayer, without the Antecedent be impossible, which is not credible to come out of such a phantastical brain.

Who was ever so mad as to think that words of holy Scripture could not be well said? And yet we may not be so peevish as to allow the superstitious saying of holy Scripture. The Devil is crafty, and we frail and prone to Superstition and Idolatry, God give me grace to worship him and his, not after our own curioly, but according to his Ordinance with all Humility.

S. Zachary is to be honoured, and in no wife to be dishonoured: so that we may leave unfaid that, that the Angel said without dishonouring him.

It is not necessary to our Salvation to make an Ordinance of honouring him with saying as the Angel did.

It is better for a mortal man to do the office of a man, which God biddeth him do, than to leave that undone, and do the office of an Angel which God biddeth us not do: if the other be presumption, I had rather presume to pray to God, which is Gods bidding and mans office, than to presume into the office of an Angel without Gods bidding.

It is a godly presumption to presume to do the bidding of God.

Here I neither say, that our Lady was a sinner, nor yet I deny the Ave Mary.

Saints are not to be honoured.

I Said this word Saints is diversly taken of the Vulgar People, Images of Saints are called Saints, and Inhabitants of Heaven are called Saints. Now by honouring of Saints, is meant praying to Saints. Take honouring so, and Images for Saints; so Saints are not to be honoured, that is to say, dead Images are not to be prayed unto; for they have neither ears to hear withal, nor tongue to speak withal, nor heart to think withal, &c.

They can neither help me, nor mine Ox, neither my Head nor my Tooth, nor work any Miracle for me, one no more than another: and yet I shewed the good use of them to be Lay-mens Books, as they be called, reverently to look upon them, to remember the things that are signified by them, &c.

And yet I would not have them so costly and curiously gilded and decked, that the quick Image of God, (for whom Christ shed his blood, and to whom whatsoever is done, Christ repute it done to himself) lack necessities, and be unprovided for, by that occasion, for then the Lay-man doth abuse his Book.

A man may read upon his Book, though it be not very curiously gilded, and in the day time, a man may behold it without many Candles, if he be not blind.

Now I say, there be two manner of Mediators, one by way of Redemption, another by way of Intercession; and I said, that these Saints, that is to say, Images called Saints, be Mediators neither way.

As touching Pilgrimages, I said, that all Idolatry, Superstition, Error, false Faith, and hope in the Images, must be pared away, before they can be well done, household looked upon, poor Christian people provided for, restitutions made, all ordinance of God discharged, or ere they can be well done. And when they be at best, before they be vowed, they need not to be done: they shall never be required of us, though they be never done; and yet we shall be blamed when they be all done; Wives must counsel with their Husbands, and Husbands with their Wives, both with Curats, ere ever they may be vowed to be done.

And yet Idolatry may be committed in doing of them, as it appeareth by S. Paul, in the first Epistle to the Corinthians, cap. 10. where he biddeth the Corinthians this; to beware of Idolatry, and that after they had received the true Faith in Christ, which had been vain, if they tation.

Anno

Anno 1555. they could not have done Idolatry, and Expositors add to beware not only of the act of idolatry, but also of all occasion of that act: which is plain against Mr. Hubberdine, and Parson of Christs Church, which went about to prove, that now there could be no idolatry.

As touching the Saints in Heaven, I said, They be not our Mediatours by way of Redemption: for so Christs alone is our Mediatour and theirs both: so that the blood of Martyrs hath nothing to do by way of Redemption: the blood of Christs is enough for a thousand worlds, &c.

But by way of Intercession, so Saints in Heaven may be Mediatours, and pray for us, as I think they do when we call not upon them; for they be charitable, and need no spurs, and we have no open bidding of God in Scripture to call upon them, as we have to call upon God, nor yet we may call upon them without any diffidence or mistrust in God; for God is more charitable, more merciful, more able, more ready to help than them all, so that though we may desire the Saints in Heaven to pray God for us, yet it is not so necessary to be done, but that we may pray to God our selves, without making sure first to them, and obtain of him whatsoever we need, if we continue in prayer, so that whatsoever we ask the Father in the Name of Christs his Son, the Father will give it us: for Saints can give nothing without him, but he can without them, as he did give to them: Scripture doth set Saints that be departed before our eyes for examples, so that the chieftest and most principal worship and honouring of them is to know their holy living, and to follow them, as they followed Christs, &c.

God biddeth us come to him with Prayer, and to do his bidding is no presuming, it is rather presuming to leave it undone to do that, that he biddeth us not do, &c. We must have Saints in reverent memory, and learn at Gods Goodness towards them to trust in God, and mark well their Faith toward God and his Word, their Charity toward their Neighbour, their patience in all adversity, and pray to God which gave them grace so to do, that we may do likewise, for which like doings we shall have like speedings, they be well honoured when God is well pleased; The Saints were not Saints by praying to Saints, but by believing in him that made them Saints: and as they were Saints, so may we be Saints, yea there be many Saints that never prayed to Saints: And yet I deny not, but we may pray to Saints, but rather to him, which can make us Saints, which calleth us to him, biddeth us call upon him, promisseth help, cannot deceive us and break his promise; when we pray faithfully to him we honour him, not after our own fantastical imagination, but even after his own most wisest ordination, whom to honour is not to dishonour Saints; therefore they lye that say, that I would not have Saints to be honoured, &c.

There is no fire in Hell.

I Never knew man that ever said so. I speak of divers Opinions that have been written of the nature of that fire; some that it is a spiritual fire, or at least way a spiritual pain in the corporal fire; for as it is called a fire, so it is called a worm: now because they think not that it is a corporal worm, but a spiritual and metaphorical worm, so they think of the fire. Some that it is a corporal and natural fire; some have thought diversly before the Resurrection without body, and after with body; some that the soul without body suffereth in the fire, but not of the fire; some both in and of the fire. The Scholastical Authors think, that the souls before the Resurrection, because they be spiritual substance, doth not receive the heat of the fire into them, which is a sensible and a corporal quality, so that Athanasius, a Greek Author, calleth their pain Trifitium, a heaviness or an anguish; and this opinion is probable enough: Some think that though they be always in pain, yet they be not always in fire, but go from waters of snow to exceeding heat: but it is when their bodies be there; but whether in cold or in heat, in water or in fire, in air or in earth, they lack no pain, their torment goeth with them, for they think that the Devils that tempt us, though they have paid with them, yet they have not fire with them, for then they should be known by heat of the fire.

I am certain, saith St. Augustine, that there is a fire in Hell, but what manner of fire, or in what part of the world, no man can tell, but he that is of Gods Privy Council: I would advise every man to be more careful to keep out of Hell, then trust he shall find no fire in Hell. Chrysostom saith, That to be deprived of the fruition of the Godhead, is greater pain than the being in Hell: there is fire burning, there is the worm gnawing, there is heat; there is cold, there is pain without pleasure, torment without easement, anguish, heaviness, sorrow, and penitiveness, which tarrieth and abideth for all liars and hinderers of the truth.

There is no Purgatory after this life.

Not for such liars that will bear me in hand to say, Purgatory: that I said not: I shewed the state and condition of them that be in Purgatory: Then I denied it, not that they have Charity in such suretye that they cannot lose it, so that they cannot murmur nor grudge against God, cannot dishonour God, can neither displease God, nor be displeased with God, cannot be disfavoured from God, cannot dye, nor be in peril of death, cannot be damned, nor be in peril of damnation, cannot be but in surety of salvation, they be Members of the Mystical Body of Christs as we be, and in more surety than we be; they love us charitably; Charity is not idle, if it be, it worketh and sheweth it self, and therefore I say, they with us well, and pray for us, they need not cry loud to God, they be in Christs, and Christs in them, they be with Christs, and Christs with them, they joy in their Lord Christs always, taking thankfully whatsoever God doth with them, ever giving thanks to their Lord God, ever lauding and praising him in all things that he doth, discontent with nothing that he doth, &c.

And forasmuch as they be always in charity, and when they pray for us, they pray always in charity, and be always Gods friends, Gods children, brethren and sisters to our Saviour Christs, even in Gods favour, even have Christs with them, to offer their Prayer to the Father of Heaven, to whom they pray in the Name of the Son. And we many times for lack of charity, having malice and envy; rancor, hatred, one toward another, be the children of the Devil, inheritors of Hell, adversaries to Christs, hated of God, his Angels, and all his Saints; they in their state may do us more good with their Prayers, than we in this state: And they do us always good, unless the lack and impediment be in us; for Prayer said in charity, is more fruitful to him that it is said for, and more acceptable to God than said out of charity; for God looketh not to the work of praying, but to the heart of the Prayer. We may well pray for them, and they much better for us, which they will do of their charity, though we desire them not.

I had rather be in Purgatory than in the Bishop of Londons Prison; for in this I might dye bodily for lack of meat: In that I could not, in this I might dye ghostly for fear of pain, or lack of good counsel; in that I could not: In this I might be in extrem necessity; in that I could not, if extrem necessity be periculum periculi, peril of perishing. And then you know what followeth, if we be not bounden, per preceptum, to help, but them that be in extrem necessity, we see not who needeth in Purgatory, but we see who needeth in this world. And John saith, If thou see thy brother, and help him not, how is the charity of God in thee? Here, either we be, or we may be in extrem necessity, both in body and soul; in Purgatory neither one nor other: Here we be bound to help one another, as we would be holpen our selves under pain of damnation: Here for lack of help we may murmur and grudge against God, dishonour God, fordote our selves, which inconveniencies shall not follow, if we do our duty one to another. I am sure the souls in Purgatory be so charitable, and of charitys hearts to have God dishonoured, that they would have nothing withdrawn from the Poor here in this world, to be bestowed upon them which might occasion the dishonour of God, &c.

Therefore howsoever we do for Purgatory, let us provide to keep out of Hell. And had I a thousand pound to bestow, as long as I saw necessary occasion offered to me of God to dispense it upon my needy Brother here in this world, according to Gods Commandment, I would not withdraw my duty from him for any provision of Purgatory, as long as I saw dangerous ways unrepaid, poor mens daughters unmarried, men beg for lack of work, sick and sore for lack of succour. I would have difference betwixt that that may be done, and that that ought to be done, and this to go before that, and that to come after this: If God command one way, mine one Devotion moveth me another way, whether way should I go? I may by no Trentals, no Masses, no Ladders of Heaven make no foundations for my self with other mens goods; goods wrongfully gotten must needs home again, must needs be restored to the owners, if they can be known; if not, they be poor mens goods: Debts must needs be paid, Creditors satisfied and content, Gods ordinance toward my Neighbour here in this world discharged, all sins and lusts moving to the contrary purged. Or else, though our Soul-Priests sing till they be bleary-eyed, cry till they have worn their tongues to the stumps, neither their singings, nor their sayings, shall bring us out of Hell, whether we shall go for contemning of Gods forbiddings.

Hi that purge all Errors of halfe Opinions, all unlikeliness to do Gods Ordinance, provideth not for Hell and Purgatory. Purgatories iniquity hath fed aside Restitutions, and brought poor Christians to extreme beggary, replenished Hell, and left Heaven almost empty.

*That can break their Charity.
That can break their Patience.
That can disserve them from Christ.
That can disserve Christ from them.*

*In Purgatory there is no pain.
That can cause them to dishonour God.
That can cause them to be displeased with God.
That can bring them to peril of death.*

*That can bring them to peril of damnation.
That can bring them to extreme necessity.
That can cause them to be discontent with God.
That can bring them from surety of salvation.*

And yet it followeth not that there is no pain. Howbeit if the Bishops two fingers can shake away a good part, if a Friars Cowl, or the Popes Pardon, or Scalls Cals of a Groat can dispatch for altogether, it is not so greatly to be cared for, I have not leisure to write at large, and I wrote before such things, which in this haste cometh now to mind.

They that can reclaim at this, that the Souls in Purgatory do pray for us, if they could get as much money for the Prayer, that the Souls in Purgatory saith for us, as they have done for that, that they have laid for them, they would not reclaim: You know the Wasp that doth sting them, and maketh them so swell, they that reclaim at that, do not reclaim at this.

Letters of Mr. Latimer.

A Letter of Mr. Latimer to Mr. Morice, concerning the Articles written, which were falsely and untruly laid against him.

Right Worshipful, and mine own good Master Morice, Saltem in Christo Iesu. And I thank you for all hearty kindness, not only heretofore shewed unto me, but also that now of late you would vouchsafe to write unto me so poor a Wretch, to my great comfort among all these my troubles. I trust and doubt nothing in it, but God will reward you for me, and supply abundantly mine inability, &c. Mr. Morice, you would wonder to know how I have been intreated at Bristol, I mean of some of the Priests, which first desired me, welcomed me, made me cheer, heard what I said, and allowed my saying in all things whiles I was with them; when I was gone home to my Benefice, perceiving that the People favoured me so greatly, and that the Maior had appointed me to preach at Easter, privily they procured an Inhibition for all them that had not the Bishops Licence, which they knew well enough I had not, and so craftily defeated Master Maiors appointment, pretending that they were sorry for it, procuring also certain Preachers to blatter against me, as Hubberdine and Powell, with other more, whom when I had brought before the Maior and the wise Council of the Town, to know what they could lay to my charge, wherefore they so declaimed against me, they said they spake of Information: Howbeit no man could be brought forth that would abide by any thing: So that they had place and time to bely me shamefully, but they had no place nor time to lay to my charge when I was present and ready to make them answer. God amend them, and swage their malice that they have against the Truth and me, &c.

Our Lady was a sinner.

So they did bely me to have said, when I had said nothing so, but to reprove certain, both Priests and Beneficed-men, which do give so much to our Lady, as though she had not been saved by Christ, a whole Saviour both of her, and of all that be and shall be saved; I did reason after this manner, That either she was a sinner, or no sinner: if a sinner, then she was delivered from sin by Christ; so that he saved her, either by delivering or preserving her from sin, so that without him neither she, nor none other, either be, or could be saved. And to avoid all offence, I shewed how it might be answered, both to certain Scriptures which maketh all generally sinners, and how it might be answered unto Chrysostom and Theophilact, which make her namely and specially a sinner. But all would not serve, their malice was so great; notwithstanding that five hundred honest men can and will bear record. When they cannot reprove that thing that I do say, then they will bely me, to say that thing that they can reprove; for they will needs appear to be against me.

Saints are not to be worshipped.

So they lied when I had shewed divers significations of this word (Saints) among the vulgar People: First, Images of Saints are called Saints, and so they are not to be worshipped: take worshipping of them for praying to them; for they are neither Mediators by way of Redemption, nor yet by way of Intercession. And yet they may be well used, when they are applied to that use that they were ordained for, to be Lay-mens books for remembrance of heavenly things, &c.

Take Saints for Inhabiters of Heaven, and worshipping of them for praying to them, I never denied, but that they might be worshipped, and be our Mediators, though not by way of Redemption (for so Christ alone is a whole Mediator, both for them, and for us) yet by the way of Intercession.

Pilgrimage.

And I never denied Pilgrimage. And yet I have said that much scurf must be pared away, ere ever it can be well done; Superstition, Idolatry, false faith and trust in the Image, unjust estimation of the thing, setting aside Gods Ordinance for doing of the thing; Debts must be paid, Restitutions made, Wife and Children be provided for, duty to our poor Neighbours discharged. And when it is at the best, before it be vowed, it need not to be done; for it is neither under the bidding of God, nor of Man, to be done. And Wives must counsel with Husbands, and Husbands and Wives with Curates, before it be vowed to be done, &c.

Ave Maria.

Ave Maria. As for the Ave Maria, who can think that I would deny it? I said it was a heavenly greeting or saluting of our blessed Lady, wherein the Angel Gabriel, sent from the Father of Heaven, did annunciate and shew unto her the good will of God towards her, what he would with her, and to what he had chosen her. But I said, it was not properly a Prayer, as the Pater noster, which our Saviour Christ himself made for a proper Prayer, and bid us say it for a Prayer, not adding that we should say ten or twenty Ave Marias withal: and I denied not but that we may well say Ave Maria also, but not so that we shall think that the Pater noster is not good, a whole and perfect Prayer, nor cannot be well said without Ave Maria; so that I did not speak against well saying of it, but against superstitious saying of it, and of the Pater noster too; and yet I put a difference betwixt that, and that which Christ made to be said for a Prayer.

Ave Maria,
no prayer.

No fire in Hell.

Who ever could say or think so? Howbeit good Authors do put a difference betwixt a suffering in the fire with Bodies, and without Bodies. The Soul without the Body is a Spiritual Substance, which they say cannot receive a Corporal Quality; and some make it a spiritual fire, and some a corporal fire. And as it is called a fire, so it is called a Worm, and it is thought of some not to be a material Worm, that is a living Beast, but it is a Metaphor, but that is neither to nor fro. For a fire it is, a worm it is, pain it is, a torment it is, an anguish it is, a grief, a misery, a sorrow, a heaviness inexplicable, intolerable, whose nature and condition in every point who can tell, but he that is of Gods Privy Council, saith St. Austin? God give us grace rather to be diligent to keep us out of it, than to be curious to discuss the property of it; for certain we be, that there is little ease, yea none at all, but weeping, wailing, and gnashing of teeth, which be two effects of extrem pain, rather certain tokens what pain there is, than what manner of pain there is.

No Purgatory.

He that sheweth the state and condition of it, doth not deny it. But I had rather be in it, than in Lollards Tower, the Bishops Prison, for divers skills and causes.

First, In this I might dye bodily for fear of meat and drink; in that I could not.

Item, In this I might dye ghostly for fear of pain, or lack of good counsel; there I could not.

Item, In this I might be in extrem necessity; in that I could not, if it be peril of perishing.

Item, In this I might lack Charity; there I could not.

Item, In this I might lose my patience; in that I could not.

Item, In this I might be in peril and danger of death; in that I could not.

Item, In this I might be without surety of salvation; in that I could not.

Item, In this I might dishonour God; in that I could not.

Item, In this I might murmur and grudge against God; in that I could not.

Item, In this I might displease God; in that I could not.

Item, In this I might be displeased with God; in that I could not.

Item, In this I might be judged to perpetual Prison, as they call it; in that I could not.

Item, In this I might be craftily handled; in that I could not.

Item, In this I might be brought to bear a Fagot; in that I could not.

Item, In this I might be discontented with God; in that I could not.

Item, In this I might be separated and dis severed from Christ; in that I could not.

Item, In this I might be a Member of the Devil; in that I could not.

Item, In this I might be an inheritor in Hell, in that I could not.

Item, In this I might pray out of Charity, and in vain; in that I could not.

Item, In this my Lord and his Chaplains might manacle me by night; in that they could not.

Item, In this they might strangle me, and say that I changed my self; in that they could not.

Item, In this they might have me to the Confistory and judge me after their fashion; from thence they could not.

Erge, I had rather to be there then here. For though the fire be called never so hot, yet if the Bishops two fingers can shake away a peice, a Friars cowl another part, and scala calis altogether, I will never found Abbey, Colledge, nor Chauntry, for that purpose.

For seeing there is no pain that can break my charity, break my patience, cause me to dishonour God, to displease God, to be displeased with God, cause me not to joy in God, nor that can bring me to danger of death or to danger of desperation, or from surety of Salvation, that can separate me from Christ, or Christ from me, I care the less for it. John Chrysostome saith, that the greatest pain that damned Souls have, is to be separate and cut off from Christ for ever: which pains the Souls in Purgatory neither have nor can have.

Consider, Master Morice, whether provision for Purgatory hath not brought thousands to hell. Debts have not been paid; restitution of evil gotten lands and goods hath not been made; Christian People (whose necessities we see, to whom whatsoever we do, Christ repeth done to himself, to whom we are bounden under pain of damnation to do for, as we would be done for our self) are neglected and suffered to perish; last wills unfulfilled and broken; Gods ordinance set aside: and also for Purgatory, foundations have been taken for sufficient satisfaction; so we have trifled away the ordinance of God, and restitutions. Thus we have gone to hell with Masses, Dirges and ringing of many a bell. And who can pull Pilgrimages from Idolatry, and purge Purgatory from Robbery, but he shall be in peril to come in suspicion of Heresie with them? so that they may pill with Pilgrimage and spoyl with Purgatory. And verily the abuse of them cannot be taken away, but great lucre and vantage shall fall away from them; which had rather have profit with abuse, then lack the same with use: that is the Waspe that doth sting them, and maketh them to swell. And if Purgatory were purged of all that hath gotten, by setting aside restitution, and robbing of Christ, it would be but a poor Purgatory, so poor, that it should not be able to feed so fat, and tickle up so many idle and slothful Lubbers.

I take God to witness, I would hurt no man, but it grieveth me to see such abuse continue without remedy. I cannot understand what they mean by the Popes padding of Purgatory, but by way of suffrage; and as for suffrage, unless he do his duty, and seek not his own, but Christs glory, I had rather have the suffrage of Jack of the Skultery, which in his calling doth exercise both faith and charity; but for his Mass; And that is as good of another simple Priest as of him. For as for Authority of Keyes, it is to loose from cuffs of sin and eternal pain, due to the same, according to Christs Word and not to his own private will. And as for Pilgrimage

you would wonder what juggling there is to get money vithal. I dwell within halt a mize of the Fols-way, and you would wonder to see how they come by Rocks out of the We.l country to many Images, but chiefly to the blood of Hailes. And they believe verily that it is the very blood that was in Christs body, shed upon the Mount of Calvary for our salvation, and that the sight of it with their bodily eye, doth certifie them, and putteth them out of doubt, that they be in clean life, and in state of salvation without spot of sin, which doth bolder them to many things. For you would wonder if you should commune with them both coming and going, what faiths they have. For as for forgiving their Enemies, and reconciling their Christian Brethren, they cannot away withal; for the sight of that blood doth quite thum for the time.

I read in Scripture of two Certifications; one to the Romans; Iustificati ex fide, pacem habemus: i. We being justified by faith, have peace with God.

If I see the blood of Christ with the eye of my soul, that is, true faith, that his blood was shed for me, &c.

Another in the Epistle of John; Nos scimus quod translati sumus de morte ad vitam, quoniam diligimus fratres: i. We know that we are translated from death to life, because we love the Brethren. But I read not that I have peace with God, or that I am translated from death to life, because I see with my bodily eye the blood of Hailes. It is very probable, that all the blood that was in the body of Christ, was united and knit to his Divinity, and then no part thereof shall return to his corruption. And I marvel that Christ shall have two Resurrections. And if it were that they that did violently and injuriously pluck it out of his body when they scourged him and nailed him to the Crose, did see it with their bodily eye, yet they were not in clean life. And we see the self same blood in form of wine, when we have consecrated, and may both see it, feel it, and receive it to our damnation as touching bodily receiving. And many do see it at Hailes without Confession, as they say. God knoweth all, and the Devil in our time is not dead.

Christ hath left a Doctrine behind him, wherein we be taught how to believe, and what to believe; he doth suffer the Devil to use his crafty fashion for our trial and probation. It were little thank-worthy to believe well and rightly, if nothing should move us to false faith, and to believe superstitiously. It was not in vain that Christ, when he had taught truly, by and by bade, Beware of false Prophets, which would bring in error slyly. But we be secure and uncaredful, as though false Prophets could not meddle with us, and as though the warning of Christ were no more earnest and effectual, then is the warning of Mothers when they trifle with their children, and bid them beware the Bugg, &c.

Lo Sir, how I run at riot beyond measure. When I began, I was minded to have written but half a dozen lines; but thus I forget my self, ever when I write to a trusty friend, which will take in worth my folly, and keep it from mine Enemy, &c.

As for Dr. Wilson, I wot not what I should say; but I pray God endue him with charity. Neither he, nor any of his Country-men, did ever love me, since I did in-veigh against their factions, and partiality in Cambridge.
Before that, who was more favoured of him than I? That is the Byle that may not be touched, &c.

A certain friend shewed me, that Dr. Wilson is gone now into his Country about Beverly in Holdernes, and from thence he will go a progress through Yorkshire, Lincolnshire, Cheshire, and so from thence to Bristol. What he intended by this Progress, God knoweth, and not I.
If he come to Bristol, I shall hear, till &c.

As for Hubberdin (no doubt) he is a man of no great learning, nor yet of stable wit. He is here seruus ho- minum; for he will preach whatsoever the Bishops will bid him preach. Verily in my mind they are more to be blamed than he. He doth magnifie the Pope more than enough. As for our Saviour Christ and Christian Kings, they are little beholding to him. No doubt he did mite the Cushion in many things. Howbeit they that did find him, men think, will defend him; I pray God amend him and them both. They would fain make matter against me, intending so either to deliver him by me, or elfe to rid us both together, and so they would think him well belov'd, &c.

As touching Dr. Powel, how highly he took upon him in Bristol, and how little he regarded the Sword, which representeth the Kings Person, many can tell you.
I think there is never an Earl in this Realm that knoweth his obedience by Christs Commandment to his Prince, and woteth what the Sword doth signifie, that would have taken upon him so stoutly. Howbeit Mr. Maior, as he is a profound wise man, did twit him prettily; it were too long to write all. Our Pilgrimages are not a little beholding to him. For to occasion the people to them, he alledged this Text:

Omnia qui relinquit patrem, domos, uxorem; i. Whosoever leaveth father, house, wife, &c. By that you may perceive his hot zeal and crooked judgment, &c. Because I am so belied, I could wish that it would please the Kings Grace to command me to preach before his Highness a whole year together every Sunday, that he himself might perceive how they bely me, saying, that I have neither learning, nor utterance worthy thereunto, &c. I pray you pardon me, I cannot make an end.

A brief digression touching the railing of Hubberdin against Mr. Latimer.

Forasmuch as mention hath been made in this Letter of Hubberdin, an old Divine of Oxford, a right painted Pharisee, and a great strayer abroad in all quarters of the Realm to deface and impeach the springing of Gods holy Gospel, something would be added more touching that man, whose doings and pageants, if they might be described at large, were as good as any Enterlude for the Reader to behold. Who in all his life, and in all his actions (in one word to describe him) seemeth nothing else but a right Image or a Counterfeit, setting out unto us in lively colours the pattern of perfect hypo-cricie. But because the man is now gone, to spare therefore the dead (although he little deferyed to be spared, which never spared to work what villany he could against the true Servants of the Lord) this shall be enough for examples sake, for all Christian men necessarily to observe, how the said Hubberdin, after his long railing in all places against Luther, Melancthon, Zuinglius, John Fritsb, Tindall, Latimer, and all other like Professors, after his hypocritical open Alms given out of other mens Purses, his long Prayers, pretended Devotions, devout Pastings, his woolward going, and other his prodigious demeanour, riding in his long Gown down to the Horse heels like a Pharisee, or rather like a Sloven, dirted up to the Horse belly, after his forged Tales and Fables, Dialogues, Dreams, Dancings, Hoppings and Leapings, with other like Histrionical toys and gestures used in the Pulpit, and all against Hereticks; at last riding by a Church side, where the Youth of the Parish were dancing in the Church-yard, suddenly this Silennus lighting from his horse, by the occasion of their dancing came into the Church, and there causing the Bell to toll in the People, thought in stead of a fit of mirth to give them a Sermon of dancing.

In the which Sermon, after he had patched up certain common Texts out of the Scriptures, and then coming to the Doctors, first to Augustine, then to Ambrose, so to Jerom and Gregory, Chrysostom and other Doctors, had made them every one (after his Dialogue manner) by name to answer to his call, and to sing after his tune for the probation of the Sacrament of the Altar against John Fritsb, Zuinglius, Oecolampadius, Luther, Tin- dall, Latimer, and other Hereticks (as he called them) at last to shew a perfect harmony of all these Doctors together; as he had made them before to sing after his tune, so now to make them dance also after his Pipe, first he calleth out Christ and his Apostles, then the Doctors and ancient Seniors of the Church, as in a round ring all to dance together; with pipe up Hubberdin. Now dance Christ, now dance Peter, Paul, now dance Augustine, Ambrose, Jerom; and thus old Hubberdin, as he was dancing with his Doctors lustily in the Pulpit against the Hereticks, how he stamp and took on I cannot tell, but crash quoth the Pulpit, down cometh the Dancer, and there lay Hubberdin not dancing, but spawling in the midst of his Audience; where altogether he brake not his neck,

Anno Neck, yet he so brake his Leg the same time, and bruised his Old Bones, that he never came in Pulpit more, and died not long after the same. Whereupon when the Church-Wardens were called, and charged for the Pulpit being no stronger, they made answer again, excusing themselves, that they had made their Pulpit for Preaching, and not for dancing, &c. But to spend no more Paper about this idle matter, now to our purpose again.

Amongst many other impugnors and adversaries, whereof there was no small fort which did infect this good Man in Sermons; some also there were, which attempted the Pen against him. In the number of whom was one Doctor Sherwood, who upon the same occasion of Preaching of the Virgin Mary (or as they thought against the Virgin) did invade him with his Pen, writing against him in Latine, whose long Epistle, with Mr. Latimer's answer also in Latin to the same hereunder followeth.

Epistola Gulielmi Sherwodi adversus Dominum Latimeram expostulatoria.

Gulielmus Sherwodus Presbiter, D. Latimero Kingtonize Rectori, gratiam & pacem à Deo Patre nostro, & Domino Jesu Christo.

Nihil molestè ferres satis, vir egregie, ab homine christiano christiani admitteri, quæ res una (est Deus testis) nos hoc tempore animarum libere tecum per litteras (quando coram sanctis copia negatur) confabulari super nonnullis, quæ parum christianis in concione illa tua (si modo concio & non verum multo Saxya quadam insana dicenda) Magnus illic effudit mihi videbare. Ac primum quidem proverbio illo de fure & pastore (quænam pro verbi vocem parabola vice mihi usurpasse videatur? Evangeliste carpiunt, recte & vere aiebant, Christus Scribarum & Phariseorum in potestate Deum, quoque æquid dixerunt, nos sanctam obdurate tamque incredulitatem, sed clam, sed sedit, sed in genere. Non aiebat, Scriba & Pharisei ad unum fures sunt & latrones. Sed quid? Amen dico vobis qui non intras per ostium in stabulum ovium, sed ascendit aliunde, ille fur est & latro. Tu contra homo patentium intuitor, non mentium rimator. Episcopi omnes, Papæ omnes, Rectores ecclesiarum omnes, te uno paucis quæ alius, quos nescio, tuas farinæ hominibus idem inesse videris, exceptis vicariis omnes fures sunt & latrones, quibus furibus, quibus latronibus suffragandi non Anglie totius quidam canabum sufficere prædicabas, aut verius demantabas, hyperbole forsitan, ut semper, sed temeraria, sed audaci supra modum, sed recte, sed impta. Non es, mi frater, non es sic temere, si deo credimus. Pulo, ante tempus judicandum, quod veniet Dominus qui & illuminabit abscondita tenebrarum, & manifestabit consilia cordium: Christus quoque ipse, iudex vivorum & mortuorum à Deo patre constitutus, temerariam ejusmodi proximi condemnationem apud Matheum, christiano homini mihi suffulisse videtur, quum inquit, Nolite condemnare, ne condemnemini, nec tanti flagitii subriter panem. Quo enim (inquit) iudicio iudicatis, eo iudicabitur de vobis, & qua mensura metimini, ea metientur vobis & alii. Volo hominum vitia taxari, volo sua scelera populo prædicari, annunciari, revelari, & si fieri possit, ob oculos poni, non debacchari in homines eosque absentes, non poni lucem tenebras, & tenebras lucem, non dici bonum malum, & malum bonum, dulce amarum, & amarum dulce. Quod si fit, verendum ne dum alius alium mordemus & devoramus, vicissim alius à alio consumetur. An ista parcius, imo modestius vitia obijcienda, ipse videto. Novimus, & qui te transverso tumentibus birquis, & quo, sed facies, nimbpha rursus facello. Heu, heu, Latimere, quæ te demencia capiti, ut memineris, dixisses prædicares, plures longe in Christi ecclesia fures esse, quam pastores, plures bacos quam oves? Non sic Cyprianus ille, non sic. Sed quid? Est, inquit, Deus verax, omnis autem homo mendax. Sicut confessorum, hoc est (ut ipse intelligit pie) Christianorum pari major & melior in fidei sue robore, & in legæ ac disciplina dominicæ veritate, nec ab ecclesiæ pace discedunt, qui se in ecclesiâ gratiam consequuntur de Dei dignatione meminerunt. Atque hoc ipsi amplorem consequuntur fidei suæ laudem, quod ab eorum perfidia segregati, qui iuncti confessionis consortio fu-erint, à contagionis crimine recesserunt. Vero illuminati evangelij lumine, pura & candida domini luce radiati, tam sunt in conservanda Christi pace laudabiles, quam fuerunt in diaboli congressione victores. Quæ sanctissimi hominis sanctissima verba, ausus, te etiam reclamante, de ea ipsa, quæ nunc, ecclesiâ, prædicare, verere, affirmare; quam ubi ex confessoribus Christi filij Dei viri pepinisset, statim ubi esset gentium te nescire prædicabas. Dicebas enim, Quisquis cum Petro Christum Dei viventis filium fateretur, Petrus est, & de ecclesiâ, seu ut ipse interpretabatur, congregatione (subdola nimirum usus arte, ac cæco potius præstigio) ac si hoc loci magis nihil ad Petrum, Christi in terris summum Vicarium, attineret, quam ex christianis alium quemlibet. Ego, sumus nos ut Origènes utar verba, aliquo modo Petrus; si dixerimus quod dixit Petrus, Tu es Christus, Filius Dei vivi, non carne & sanguine nobis revelante, sed Patre qui est in celis mentem nostram illuminante, non alio dicendi genere dicemus hæc nobis Petri competere verba, quam ipsi Petros absit procul, absit. Nam secundum Christi nomen omnes qui sunt illius Christi dicuntur, dicente propheta: Ut salvos faciat Christus suos. Item. Nolite tangere Christos meos, & tum alio longe modo hic, alio illi unctionis vocabulo insigniuntur. Sanius certe Roterdamus, cuius imitatore, & sequacem strenuum te in nonnullis video. Id (tu es Petrus & mox quæ sequuntur) in primis in Romanorum pontificem, omnium semoto dubio, annotatione in 16 Matthei caput, quamquam plus æquo Origènes sententia inniti ibidem mihi videtur. Quod si dixerimus, te auctoritate æqualiter, & indiscriminatim hæc de Petro, & omnibus christianis intelligi, incidemus in illam Lutheranam sententiam, Omnes Christianos esse sacerdotes, & ordinatam nullam potestatem accipere, quam antea non habebant, sed deputari tantum ad licito utendum potestate prius habitis, quæ sententia jam olim est ab ecclesiâ damnata.

Ad hæc aiebat Christum, quoniam minima vocares præcepta, Scribarum & Phariseorum alluisse impietati, qui ut sua eveberent, & amplificarent, minima dicebant divina. Multum hic discors es ab Origène, Scripturarum interprete, saneque vigilantissimo, qui Homilia in Mattheum quinta adeo non negat revera quedam Dei præcepta dici, & esse minima, ut ex solutione, & observatione eorum minimum & magnum dici in regno calorum nihil obscure prædiceret. Simul pugnat quod tum Christus ipse sorsum à plebe & populo cum paucis Discipulis, ius celestis tum solus, doctrinæ capacibus in monte versabatur, nihil interim cum Scribis, nihil cum Phariseis tractans, ut divina illa concione sua prolixus indignis.

Subiunxit christiane parum ut mihi videbatur, hominem christianum carnis acies centem desideris, non magis christianum esse, quam sit Judeus, quam sit Turcus. Hoc mihi non christianum, sed Oecolampadianum.

* Desunt nonnulla, quæ conjecturis forsitan utcumque, suppleri possunt ex sequenti Latimeri responsione.

Sit opus, quam ad beneficam Petri confessionem germanis fructibus referendam. Quid tu bic tibi velis nescio. Si est aliquis Petri primatus, is certe Catholico cuilibet pro viribus defendendus est. Est aliquis Petri primatus, alioqui Christi verbum inefficax est (tibi dabo claves regni calorum, &c.) Si nihil est opus ut defensetur Petri primatus, nihil est opus ut defensetur veritas. Et ob veritatem ad necem usque mortali cuilibet certandum. Non puto quæquam germanis fructibus referre posse beneficam Petri confessionem, negando Petri primatum: beneficam Petri confessio, an non est Jesum esse Christum filium Dei viventis? Dei filius est veritas. At non Christus, si nullus est Petri primatus. Hic fude lapsus mihi videre. Nihil enim alienum esse puto à beneficia Christi confessione, si quis pro virili sedem teneat & defensetur Apostolicam.

Aperitissimum mendacium esse clamitas, Christum cum paucis Discipulis in monte sorsum à turba versatum fuisse. Aperitissime tum mecum mentis est Origènes, Scripturarum interprete vigilantissimus, qui Homilia in Mattheum 5, inquit, Descendente Jesu de monte, sequente sunt cum turba multa, Docente vero Domino in monte, Discipuli erant cum ipso, quibus datum erat celestis doctrinæ novissè secreta, per quæ salutis scientia brutorum corda salirent, & eorumque oculis secularis, quia multi principes & summi pontifices, inquit, inveniunt apostatasse à fide, propter quod Ecclesia constituit, inquit, in illis personis, in quibus est mentis vera & consilii fides & veritas. Hic consensit & cum Hieronymo Chrysostomus. Sic enim dicit; nescio an apostataverint tui quod dicunt, quippe qui in illis te credis esse? Qui conspiciunt sunt ad primatum Petri defendendum, etiam cum nihil sit operis, quam ad beatificationem Petri confessionem geramus fructibus referendam. Sed tu mitti me ad Augustinum, bene liberalis consiliorum. Ego opem te eundem legere si libeat in Epist. Iohannis tractatu tertio. Videris enim in Augustinianis operibus non adeo exercitatur, cum de fidei justificatione tam argute Philosopharis. Quocirca cuperem te in collectaneis Bede exercitatur fore, cum tua ipsius collectanea Augustinum non sperent, ut jam non pluribus neque illius, neque aliorum Autorum locis quaerendis te gravem. Sed illud non omitam tamen, etsi alio etiam me evocet negotia, tamen illius videlicet Christum Phariseorum impetati, cum precepta vocaret minima. Sic enim tu audis dicere, quia aliam ut Origene interpretationem legisti, Pulchre admodum obiectum, quasi unus & idem Scripturae locus non sit ad alius aliter fere expositus: Origenes de illusione non meminit, ut nemo: qualis confectio? sed nihil inquit tibi Christo cum Phariseis: & id quod non minus pulchre ab te dictum, quasi non statim post subderet Christus de Scribis & Phariseis mentionem, populum ab illorum iustitia humanis, i suis ipsorum traditionibus fabula revocans. Nisi abunde veris iustitia vestra, inquit, plus quam Scribarum, &c. At versabatur tamen, inquit, Christus cum paucis Discipulis solum à turba: imo hoc aperte solum mendacium est, id quod verbum Matthaei caput septimum claudencia luce clarius demonstrat, ut tolerabiliora sint mihi de mendacia tua, qui audes de ipso Christo & eius sermone mentiri. Et factum est, inquit, ut cum finisset Iesus sermones suos, obstupuerunt super doctrina ejus. Ecce autem, si Christus solum à turba sit locutus, quomodo obstupuerunt super doctrina, quam (per te) non audierunt? Sed Lucas Evangelista, fere de eodem, fere de consimili Christi sermone locutus, testatur turbam audisse, capite septimo. Cum consummasset Iesus sermones suos (inquit) audienti populo. En quo prolatur preceptis iudicium tuum invidiam male deformatum? Scilicet in ipse hic non toto erras calce? dignus videlicet quia aliorum errores expostis & notes. & ad palmodiam revocas: Tu tuo sensui hic non fides? Medice cura te ipsum, & alios quod sit illud, Hypocrita, cur vides falsitatem, &c. Dices ex tuis tradibus alienis falsitatem parcere. Ego nihil dixi, testor Deum, non mentior, quod vel Oecolampadio, vel Luthero, vel Melancthonio acceptum referre debeam: & tamen tu, quae est tua charitas, non vereris id meo effluere capiti. Ego si fecis illud, decidam merito ab inimici meis inani. Sed nescis tu quidem opinor, ejus spiritus sit, dum Marcus ministrum verbi impudentissimum mendacis laesere, quam testimonium veritatis perhibere, quod quantum sit piaculum in conspectu Dei, tu absque doctore non ignoras, in cumulum damnationis tuae, nisi respicias. Jam vero num ego vituperor, ut quis credat quemadmodum Ecclesia credit? Non sane vituperor, nisi quod malevolentia erga me tua tam surdas reddidit aures tuas, ut ne audiens quidem audias quae dicuntur. Sed hoc vituperor, ut quis cui christianorum suadeat, quemadmodum suadere solent pseudopredicatores non pauci, sat per omnia esse, credere quemadmodum Ecclesia credit, & nescire interim quid aut quomodo credit Ecclesia, & sic miserum populum ab ampliori Dei agnitione quaerenda deborari? Quod postremo mihi obtrudis, mendacium est, & illud plus quam dici possit inhumanum, neque, eo mea verba sensu accipis, sensu quo sint à me dicta, ideoque Hieronymo [per 26 Matthaei] teste falsus testis coram Deo futurus. Lége locum, & relinq; falsum testimonium. Ego dico Christianum, id est, baptismo in Christianorum numerum receptum, si professioni non respondet, sed carnis desiderii sese dedit, non magis Christianum esse, quam ad consuetudinem aeternae vitae spectat quae promittitur Christianis, quam Iudaeum aut Turcam: inquam, huius conditionem in illo die deterorem fore, si verum tui dixit: melius esse vitam veritatis non agnoscere, quam post agnitam, &c. Et quibus dicit Christus nunquam movi vos? Noene his qui per nomen ejus prebepantes, virtutes praeservimus? nonne negabit Christus nos, cum praesentem coram bonis? Noene tamen uterque, & Christi à dextis, sicut vitam Christo dignam reulerimus professi Christum, sed professionem mala vita contaminantes. Sunt verius pseudo-Christiani quam Christiani habendi: & ab Augustino & Christo vocantur Antichristi. Non nego quin obligatio manet, sed in maiorem damnationem manet, si non satisfacit obligatio. Officium concionatoris est hortari auditores ut sint Christiani, ut compatientes hic cum Christo, cum Christo congregetur in Caelo, aliter Christianum esse non sit illis Christianum esse. Sic Scripturae sic interpretes Scripturae loquuntur, ut verbis haeretica tibi videatur loquutio: sed avarus, fornicator, homicida, inquit, catibolus est & Christi servus: tamen sic animi gratia tecum ludam. Fornicator, per te, est Christi servus, sed idem est peccator & Diaboli servus; ergo idem potest duobus dominis servire, quod Christum latuit. Et si fides mortua esset Catholicum, & Demones pertinent ad Ecclesiam Catholicam, utpote qui iuxta Jacobum credunt & contremiscunt. Fornicator (inquit) fides Christi; spes non pudesat, qui fides Christo non parit, sed habebit vitam aeternam. Neque me latet ad Galathas scriptum Paulum fide aberrantes Ecclesiam tamen vocasse; sic idem ad Corinthios scribens eos in eodem capite nunc carnales appellat, nunc Dei Templum, Corinthios nimirum intelligentes, sed alios atque alios. Neque enim Templum Dei erant qui carnales erant; quamquam nec me latet Ecclesiam, multitudine profitentium Christum, partim ex bonis, partim ex malis constare esse, nempe rete Evangelicam ex omni genere congregari. Quid hoc adversum ea quae ego dixi, qui conabar omnes bonos non malos efficere, & ideo laborabam ut auditores mei non putarent magnum esse si in malis Ecclesiasticis invenirentur: sed non visum est tibi piam predicationem pie interpretari, dum existimas ad pietatem pertinere, si pie dicta impie revocarentur. Si colloquia tua non sunt quam scripta clementiora, neutra ego optem mihi contingere, sed omnis amarulentia, tumor, iracundia, maledicentia tollatur à te cum omni malitia; & tamen neque colloquiis, neque scriptis me gravabis. Tu non optares (opinor) tales auditores, qualem te praesentis. Sed Deus te reddat benigniorem, vel à meis concionibus quam longissime ablegat. Vale.

Spiritum Veritatis.

Flammis, fumoque quam lectione, aut oculis digniores multo perlegimus tuas literas, quibus tua ipsius selecta in nos torquere subdole, & astute admodum moluit. Et quo firmius ista tua statuas, viderem inter pocula me tui suggestitorem facere. Quod quam vere (ut omnia) dicas, jam vide. Narravit nobis presentibus jam olim Marchfieldie unus & idem alter, qui tunc interfuerant concioni, te palam summasque praeter se habere, cum auctoritate dixisse, indignos esse miseros homunculos, qui angelica salutatione saluenter deiparam Virginem, velint ipsam rursus ut pariat Christum. Ego haec dixi, parum Christiane & religiose abs te dicta, cavendumque, diligenter pios quibusque Christianis, ne huiusmodi fidem habeant concionatoribus. An hoc est te suggillare, an magis & tibi & illis pie, & religiose consilium? Nihil ego tibi & tu mihi, necdum visis, his impingo, sed summa raraque te esse modestia, & tolerantia hominem (ut videri vis) gaudere, sed & gaudio, nec retorqueo in te convitia, & probra, quibus tua sciant litera. At istud non video quomodo dicas (imo nec admonitum, tandem, sed acerrime potius redargutum, sed convitatus & mendaciam habitum potius, sed calumniam inique affectum potius, sed falso condemnatum potius). Redargui fateor, at ea redargutio quam admonitio, aliud nihil. Convictum nullum, mendacium nullum, calumnia nulla, quod sciam, in meis conspiciatur literis, nisi mentitus est Paulus, nisi calumniatus est Paulus, nisi convitatus est Paulus, quomodo deceret quodam sic dixisse, facienda mala ut venirent bona. Nos calidi adhuc tuo spiritui, tua tibi retulimus verba, id quod norunt probe omnes, qui te illic una audierunt. Utinam tu nil tale effudisses, ego tum certe nihil tibi tale adscripsissem. Absit à me ut ego (quod dicere videris) ullo te animi odio, ullo te impio mentis affectu persequar. Didi ex Christo diligere etiam inimicos: tantum abest ut hominem fratrem, ejusdemque Domini conservum odio habeam. Sed plus quam hostilia, plus quam cruenta tua verba ne quicquam me movent. Tantum quam possum paucissimis tuis respondebo, posthac te tuo relicto iudici.

Primum quod dicis (Ego dixerim ego, omnes Papas, omnes Episcopos, Vicarios, Rectoresque omnes per officium non ut priores, sed ascendentes aliunde, fures esse & latrones, dum sic dixi, ex assensu non ex personis & titulis cum Christo sum rem meatus.) Si id dixisses, nihil nobis tecum ea de re negotij fuisset. Sed (quod tu mea Minerva collegisse dicis) dicebas, Papas videlicet omnes, Episcopos omnes, Vicarios omnes, Rectores omnes fures sint, & latrones, nulla quam audui, neque assensus, neque descensus, neque per officium, neque per sententiam, mentione facta. Nec ego adeo furdis eram auribus, ut si quid tale suo loco dixisses, contumax non exceperim. Eam quam nunc adfers sententiam catholicam ven. cor. & exculcor priorem resecio & detestor. Secus Scripturæ autoritas (Principi populi tui non male dices) non sinit me ut sentiam, ut tu mihi ascribere videaris, plerique omnes aliunde ascendere. Quis sum ego ut iudicem alienum servum? (unusquisque enim propriam sententiam habebit.) Non ego, sed nec alius quisquam vult unquam quo minus diceret, omnes esse fures qui per officium non intrantes ascendunt aliunde quibuscunque intrantem ascendunt aliunde, jam primum audio, quod si prius (ut jam dixi) adcessisses, sic collegisses, ut plures fures quam pastores, plures hædos quam oves esse in Ecclesia, dixisses. Quod quam dixeris, ut prius dixi, vera, isle video. Jam prioribus litteris saniores fuisse divi Cypriani Martyris de Ecclesia sententiam decimus. Frustra dicis apertam illam & in os obiectam criminatorem, & vobis, Scriba & Pharisæi, Hypocritæ, mihi de regione dispecturam, quam adeo, ut dicis arideat tellus & parabolica illa, Qui non intravit per officium in stabulum ovium, &c. Non potest profecto mihi unquam displicere aliquod sacrum Christi factum. Præsertim reprehendebas ipse impius Scribas & Pharisæos, juxta id, Annuncia populo meo scelera sua, non aliena; absentes tu Papas & Episcopos; qui talia fecerant & facturum prædixit; tu vocabula, quo nescio afflatu, tantum respiciebas. Nullius ego homini animum iudico unquam, sed ne iudicabo, tantum abest ut animi tui emphasin mihi arrogaverim unquam. Desine mihi obijcere talia. Quod audio minus loquimur, quod vidimus testamur. Si sane, & recte ad quemlibet Christianum interpretatus es id Matthei, Tu es Petrus æqualiter, ut dicis, de Ecclesia, nihil omnino de vi clavium locutus gaudet. Mihi certe non ardeat. Nec dixi te dixisse omnes Christianos, ut tu es, Sacerdotes esse, sed ejusmodi nudam & consulam interpretationem non parum fovere & nutrire hujusmodi asserionem Lutherani, id quod credo, isle vides. Me illorum adiectione numero, qui promptiores sunt ad Primatum Petri defensionem, ut ait, quum nihil sed Hæreticum dicitur videtur. Christianus enim conditionem significat non actionem sine actû. Signe laet quippiam, &c.

Besides these Latin Letters above expressed, other Letters also he wrote in English, as well to others, as namely to Sir Edward Baynton Knight, which Letters, because they do contain much fruitful matter, worthy to be read and known, I thought here presently to insert, which albeit may seem somewhat prolix in reading; yet the fruit thereof I trust shall recompence the length of them.

The Copy of a Letter sent by Mr. Latimer, Parson of Wiltington, in the County of Wiltshire, to Sir Edward Baynton Knight.

Salutem in Christo.

Right worshipful Sir, I recommend me unto your Masterhip with hearty thanks for your so friendly, so charitable, and so mindful remembrance of me so poor a Wretch. Whereas of late I received your Letters by Mr. Bonnam, perceiving therein both who be grieved with me, wherefore, and what behoveh me to do, in case I must needs come up, which your goodness towards me with all other such like to recompence, whereas I myself am not able, I shall not cease to pray my Lord God, which both is able, and also doth indeed reward all them that favour the favourers of his Truth for his sake; for the Truth is a common thing, pertaining to every man, for the which every man shall answer another day. And I desire favour neither of your Masterhip, neither of any man else, but in truth, and for the truth, I take God to witness, which knoweth all. In very deed Mr. Chancellor did shew me that my Lord Bishop of London had sent Letters to him for me; and I made answer that he was mine Ordinary, and that both he might and should reform me as far as I needed reformation, as well and as soon as my Lord of London. And I would be very loath (now this deep Winter) being so weak and so feeble (not only exercised with my old Distaste in my head and side, but also with new, both the Cholick and the Stone) to take such a journey; and though he might so do, yet he needed not, for he was not bound so to do: notwithstanding I said, if he, to do my Lord of London pleasure to my great displeasure, would needs command me to go, I would obey his commandment, yea though it should be never so great a grievance, and painful to me; with the which answer he was content, saying he would certify my Lord of London thereof, trusting his Lordship would be content with the same: but as yet I hear nothing from him. Mr. Chancellor also said, that my Lord of London maketh as though he were greatly displeased with me, for that I did contemn his Authority, at my last being in London. Forsooth I preached in Abbe-Church, not certain then (as I remember) whether in his Diocese or no, intending nothing less than to contemn his Authority, and this I did not of mine own swinge, or by mine own procurement, but at the request of honest Merchant men (as they seemed to me) whose names I do not know, for they were not of mine acquaintance before; and I am glad thereof for their sakes, lest if I knew them, I should be compelled to utter them so, and their godly desire to hear godly preaching, should return to their trouble: for they required me very instantly, and to say the truth, even importunately. Whether they were of that Parish or no, I was not certain: But they shewed not only themselves, but also many other to be very desirous to hear me, pretending great hunger and thirst of the Word of God, and Gholly Doctrine. And upon consideration, and to avoid all inconveniencies, I put them off, and refused them twice or thrice, till at the last they brought me word that the Parson and Curate were not only content, but also desired me, notwithstanding that they certified him both of my name plainly, and also that I had not the Bishops Seal to shew for me, but only a Licence of the University; which Curate did receive me, welcomed me, and when I should go into the Pulpit, gave me the common benediction; so that I had not been alone uncharitable, but also churlishly uncharitable, if I should have said nay. Now all this supposed to be truth (as it is) I marvel greatly how my Lord of London can alledge any contempt of him in me.

First, He did never inhibit me in my life; and if he did inhibit his Curate to receive me, what pertained that to me, which neither did know thereof, nor yet made any suit to the Curate deceitfully, nor did it appear to me very likely that the Curate would so little have regarded my Lords inhibition, which he maintaineth so vigilantly, not knowing my Lords mind before. Therefore I conjectured with my self, that either the Curate was of such acquaintance with my Lord, that he might admit whom he would, or else (and rather) that it was a train and a trap laid before me, to the intent that my Lord himself, or other pertaining to him, was appointed to have been there, and to have taken me if they could in my Sermon: which conjecture both occasioned me somewhat to suspect those men which desired me, though they speak never so fair and friendly, and also rather to go. For I preach nothing, but if it might be so, I would my Lord himself might hear me every Sermon I preach. So certain I am that it is truth, that I take in hand to preach. If I had with power of my friends (the Curate gain-saying and notwithstanding) presumed to have gone into the Pulpit, there had been something wherefore to pretend a contempt. I preached in Kent also, at the instant request of a Curate; yet hear I not that his Ordinary layeth any contempt to my charge, or yet doth trouble the Curate. I marvel not a little, how my Lord Bishop of London, having so broad, wide, and large a Diocese committed

Anno 1555. mitted unto his Cure, and so peopled as it is, can have leisure for preaching and teaching the Word of God, Opportune, importune, tempestive, intempestive, prevatum, publicè, to his own Flock, infando, arguendo, exhortando, monendo, cum omni lenitate & doctrina, have leisure (I say) either to trouble me, or to trouble himself with me, so poor a wretch, a stranger to him, and nothing pertaining to his Cure, but as every man pertaineth to every mans Cure, so intermixing and intermeddling himself with another mans Cure, as though he had nothing to do in his own. If I would do as some men say my Lord doth, gather up my joye, as we call it, warily and narrowly, and yet neither preach for it in mine own Cure, nor yet elsewhere, peradventure he would nothing deny me. In very deed I did monish Judges and Ordinaries to use charitable equity in their Judgments towards such as he accused, namely, of such Accusers, which be as like to hear and bewray, as other be to say amiss, and to take mens words in the meaning thereof, and not to wrest them in another sense than they were spoken in: For all such Accusers and Witnesses do false before God, as S. Hierom saith upon the 26th Chapter of S. Matthew. Nor yet do I accompt those Judges well advised, which wittingly will give Sentence after such Witnesses, much less those which procure such Witnesses against any man: Nor do I think Judges now adays so deeply confirmed in grace, or so impeccable, but that it may beehove and become Preachers, to admonish them to do well, as well as other kinds of men, both great and small. And this I did, occasioned of the Epistle which I declared, Rom. 6. wherein is this Sentence, Non estis sub lege, sed sub gratia, Ye Christian men that believe in Christ: are not under the Law. What a saying is this (quoth I) if it be not rightly understood, that is, as S. Paul did understand it? for the words found as though he would go about to occasion Christian men to break Law, seeing they be not under the Law: And what if the Pseudopostles, Adversaries to S. Paul, would have so taken them, and accused S. Paul of the same to my Lord of London? if my said Lord would have heard S. Paul declare his own mind of his own words, then he should have escaped, and the false Apostles put to rebuke; if he would have rigorously followed utrumque allegatione & probata, and have given Sentence after relation of the Accusers, then good St. Paul must have borne a Faggot at Paul's Crofs, my Lord of London being his Judge. O, it had been a godly sight to have seen S. Paul with a Faggot on his back, even at Paul's Crofs, my Lord of London Bishop of the same, sitting under the Crofs. Nay, verily I dare say, my Lord should soner have burned him, for S. Paul did not mean that Christian men might break Law; and do whatsoever they would, because they were not under the Law: but he did mean, that Christian men might keep the Law, and fulfil the Law, if they would, because they were not under the Law, but under Christ, by whom they were divided from the tyranny of the Law, and above the Law, that is to say, able to fulfil the Law to the pleasure of him that made the Law, which they could never do of their own strength, and without Christ: so that to be under the Law, after S. Paul's meaning, is to be weak to satisfy the Law; and what could S. Paul do with all, though his Adversaries would not so take it? But my Lord would say peradventure, that men will not take the Preachers words otherwise than they mean therein. Bona verba; as though S. Paul's words were not otherwise taken, as it appeareth in the third Chapter to the Romans, where he saith, Quod injustitia nostra Dei justitiam commendat, that is to say, our unrighteousness commendeth and maketh more excellent the righteousness of God, which foundeth to many as though they should be evil, that good should come of it, and by unrighteousness to make the righteousness of God more excellent. So S. Paul was reported to mean; yet he did mean nothing so; but shewed the indefinable wisdom of God, which can use our naughtiness to the manifestation of his unspeakable goodness; not that we should do naughtily to that end and purpose. Now my Lord will not think (I dare say) that S. Paul was to blame that he spake no more circumpectly, more warily, or more plainly; to avoid evil offence of the People; but rather he will blame the People, for that they took no better heed and attendance of Paul's speaking; to the understanding, of the same: yea, he will rather pity the People, which had been so long nuzled in the Doctrine of the Pharisees, and wallowed so long in darkness of mans Traditions, Superstitions, and trade of darkness of mans Traditions, Superstitions, and trade of darkness of mans Traditions, and were unable to receive the bright lightness of the Truth, and wholesome Doctrine of God, uttered by S. Paul. Nor do I think that my Lord will require more circumpectiō, or more convenience to avoid offence of Errours in me, than was in S. Paul, when he did not escape malevolous corrections, and slanderous reports of them that were of perverse Judgments, which reported him to say whatsoever he appeared to them to say, or whatsoever seemed to them to follow of his saying: But what followeth? Sic animi nos dicere, sic male loquuntur de nobis: so they report us to say, saith S. Paul; So they speak evil of us: sed quorum damnatio justa est, but such, whose damnation is just, saith he; and I think the damnation of all such that evil report Preachers now adays, likewise just, for it is untruth now and then: Yea, Christ himself was mis-reported, and falsely accused; both as touching his words, and also as concerning the meaning of his words. First he said, destruite, that is to say, destroy you; they made it possunt destruire, that is to say, I can destroy: he said Templum hoc, this Temple; they added manu factum, that is to say, made with hand, to bring it to a contrary sense. So they both inverted his words, and also added unto his words, to alter his sentence: for he did mean of the Temple of his Body, and they wrested it to Solomon's Temple. Now I report me, whether it be a just sentence raised up and dispersed after this manner. Nay verily, for there be three manner of persons which can make no credible information: First, Adversaries, Enemies: Secondly, Ignorant and without Judgment: Thirdly, Sufurronei, that is to say, whisperers and blowers in mens ears, which will spew out in hudder mudder, more than they dare avow openly. The first will not, the second cannot, the third dare not: therefore the relation of such is not credible, and therefore they can make no fame lawful, nor occasion any indifferent Judge to make Process against any man; and it maketh no little matter what they be themselves that report of any man, whether well or evil: for it is a great commendation to be evil spoken of, of them that be naught themselves, and to be commended of the same, is many times no little reproach. God send us once all grace to wish well one to another, and to speak well one of another. Me seems it were more comely for my Lord (if it were comely for me to say so) to be a Preacher himself, having so great a Cure as he hath, than to be a disquieter and a troubler of Preachers, and to preach nothing at all himself. If it would please his Lordship to take so great a labour and pain at any time, as to come to preach in my little Bishoprick at Welshington, whether I were present or absent my self, I would thank his Lordship heartily, and think my self greatly bounden to him, that he of his charitable goodness would go so far to help to discharge me in my Cure, or else I were more unnatural than a Beast unreasonable, nor yet would I dispute, contend, or demand by what authority, or where he had authority so to do, as long as his predication were fruitful, and to the edification of my Parishioners. As for my Lord, he may do as it pleaseth his Lordship. I pray God he do always as well as I would wish him ever to do: But I am sure S. Paul, the true Minister of God, and faithful Dispenser of Gods Mysteries, and right Exemplar of all true and very Bishops, saith in the first Chapter to the Philippians, that in his time some preached Christ for envy of him, thinking thereby so to grieve him withal, and as it were to obscure him, and to bring his Authority into contempt, some of good will and love, thinking thereby to comfort him: Notwithstanding (saith he) by all manner of ways, and after all fashions, whether it be of occasion or of truth, as ye would say for Truths sake, so that Christ be preached and shewed, joy and will joy: so much he regarded more the glory of Christ, and promotion of Christs Doctrine, to the edification of Christians souls, than the maintenance of his own authority, reputation and dignity, considering right well (as he said) that what authority forever he had it was to edification, and not to destruction. Now I think it were no reproach to my Lord, but very commendable, rather to joy with St. Paul, and be glad that Christ be preached quocumque modo, yea, though it were for envy, that is to say, in disdain, despite and contempt of his Lordship (which thing no man well advised will enterprise or attempt) then when the preaching cannot be proved justly, to demand of the Preacher utterly, as the Pharisees did of Christ, qua auctoritate hec facis, aut quis dedit tibi istam auctoritatem? As my authority is good enough, and as good as my Lord can give me any, yet I would be glad to have his also, if it would please his Lordship to be so good a Lord unto me. For the University of Cambridge hath authority Apollolick to admit twelve yearly, of the which I am one: and the Kings Highness, God save his Grace, did decree that all admitted of Universities should preach throw out all his Realm as long as they preached well, without disdain of any man, my Lord of Canterbury, my Lord of Durham, with such other not a few, standing by, and hearing the Decree, nothing gainsaying it, but consenting to the same. Now to condemn my Lord of London's Authority, were no little fault in me; so no less fault might appear in my Lord of London to condemn the Kings Authority and Decree, yea so godly, so fruitful, so commendable a Decree, pertaining both to the edification of Christian souls, and also to the regard and defence of the Popish grace and authority Apollolick. To have a Book of the King not inhibited, is to obey the King, and to inhibit a Preacher of the Kings admitted, is it not to disobey the King? Is it not one King that doth inhibit and admit, and hath he not as great authority to admit as to inhibit? He that resisteth the Power, whether admitting or inhibiting, doth he not resist the Ordinance of God? We low Subjects are bound to obey Powers, and their Ordinances: and are not the highest Subjects also, who ought to give us example of such obedience? As for my preaching it self, I trust in God, my Lord of London cannot rightfully blame it, nor justly reprove it, if it be taken with the circumstance thereof, and as I speak it, or else it is not my preaching, but that falsely reporteth it, as the Poet Martial said to one that depraved his Book:

*Quem recitas meus est, O Filentine, libellus:
Sed male cum recitas, incipit esse tuus.*

But now I hear say that my Lord of London is informed, and upon the said Information hath informed the King, that I go about to defend Bilney, and his cause, against his Ordinaries and his Judges, which I ensure is not so: for I had nothing to do with Bilney, nor yet with his Judges, except his Judges did him wrong; for I did nothing else but monthly all Judges indifferently to do right; nor am I altogether so foolish as to defend the thing which I knew not. It might have become a Preacher to say as I said, though Bilney had never been born. I have known Bilney a great while, and to tell you the truth, what I have thought always in him, I have known hitherto few such so prompt and ready to do every man good after his power, both friends and foe, noyson wittingly to no man, and towards his enemy so charitable; so seeking to reconcile them, as he did, I have known yet not many; and to be short, in sum, a very simple good Soul, nothing fit or meet for this wretched world, whose blind fashion and miserable state (yea far from Christs Doctrine) he could as evil bear, and would sorrow, lament, and bewail it as much as any man that ever I knew: As for his singular learning, as well in holy Scripture, as in all other good Letters, I will not speak of it. Notwithstanding, if he either now of late, or at any time attempted any thing contrary to the obedience which a Christian man doth owe either to his Prince or to his Bishop, I neither do nor will allow and approve that, neither in him, nor yet in any other man: we be all men, and ready to fall; wherefore he that standeth, let him beware he fall not. How he ordered or misordered himself in judgment, I cannot tell, nor will I meddle withal; God knoweth, whose judgments I will not judge. But I cannot but wonder, if a man living so mercifully, so charitably, so patiently, so continently, so studiously and vertuously, and killing his old Adam, that is to say, mortifying his evil affections, and blind motions of his heart so diligently, should dye an evil death, there is no more, but let him that standeth, beware that he fall not: for if such as he shall dye evil, what shall become of me, such a wretch as I am? But let this go, as little to the purpose, and come to the point we must rest upon. Either my Lord of London will judge my outward man only, as it is said, Omnis vident qua foris sum, or else he will be my God, and judge mine inward man, as it is said, Dens autem intuetur cor: If he will have to do only with mine outward man, and meddle with mine outward Conversation, how that I have ordered my self toward my Christian Brethren, the Kings Liege People, trust I shall please and content both my Lord God, and also my Lord of London: for I have preached and taught by according to holy Scripture, holy Fathers, and ancient Interpreters of the same, with the which I think my Lord of London will be pacified: for I have done nothing else in my preaching, but with all diligence moved my Auditors to Faith and Charity, to do their duty, and that that is necessary to be done. As for things of private devotion, mean things, and voluntary things, I have reprov'd the abuse, the superstition of them, without condemnation of the things themselves, as it becometh Preachers to do: which thing, if my Lord of London will do himself (as I would to God he would do) he should be reported (no doubt) to condemn the use of such things, of covetous men which have damage, and find less in their boxes by condemnation of the abuse, which abuse they said rather should continue still, than their profit should not continue (so thorny be their hearts). If my Lord will needs coaft and invade my inward man, will I, will I, and break violently into my heart, I fear me I shall either displease my Lord of London, which I would be very loath, or else my Lord God, which I will be more loath: not for any infidelity, but for ignorance, for I believe as a Christian man ought to believe: but peradventure my Lord knoweth, and will know many things certainly, which (perchance) I am ignorant in, with the which ignorance, though my Lord of London may if he will be discontent, yet I trust my Lord God will pardon it, as long as I hurt no man withal, and say to him with diligent study, and daily prayer, Paratum cor meum Deus, paratum cor meum, so studying, preaching, and tarrying the pleasure and leisure of God: And in the mean season, Acts 8. as Apollos did, when he knew nothing of Christ, but Baptismus Johannis, teach and preach mine, even Christian that, and no farther than I know to be true. There be three Creeds, one in my Mass, another in my Martins, the third common to them that neither say Mass, nor Martins, nor yet know what they say when they say the Creed: and I believe all three with all that God hath left in holy Writ, for me and all other to believe: yet I am ignorant in things which I trust hereafter to know, as I do now know things in which I have been ignorant heretofore: ever learn, and ever to be learned, to profit with learning, with ignorance not to annoy. I have thought in times past, that the Pope, Christs Vicar, hath been Lord of all the world as Christ is, so that if he should have deprived the King of his Crown, or you of the Lordship of Bromham, it had been enough: for he could do no wrong. Now I might be hired to think otherwise; notwithstanding I have both seen and heard Scripture drawn to that purpose. I have thought in times past, that the Popes dispensations of Pluralities of Benefices, and absence from the same, had discharged consciences before God: as much as I have heard, Eccce vobiscum sum, & qui vos audis, bended to corroborate the same. Now I might be easily intreated to think otherwise, &c.

I have thought in times past that the Pope could have spoiled Purgatory at his pleasure with a word of his mouth; now learning might perwade me otherwise, or else I would marvel why he would suffer so much money to be bestowed that way, which so needful is to be bestowed otherwise, and to deprive us of so many Patrons in Heaven as he might deliver out of Purgatory, &c. I have thought in times past, that if I had been a Friar, and

and in a Cowl; I could not have been damned; nor afraid of death, and by occasion of the same, I have been minded many times to have been a Frier, namely, when I was fore, sick, and diseased: Now I abhor my superstitious foolishness, &c. I have thought in times past, that divers Images of Saints could have holpen me, and done me much good, and delivered me of my diseases: Now I know that one can help as much as another. And it pitieth mine heart, that my Lord, and such as my Lord is, can suffer the People to be so craftily deceived: It were too long to tell you what blindness I have been in, and how long it were ere I could forsake such folly, it was so corporate in me: but by continual Prayer, continual study of Scripture, and oft communing with men of more right judgment, God hath delivered me, &c. Yea, men think my Lord himself hath thought in times past, that by Gods Law a man might marry his Brothers wife, which now both dare think and say contrary: and yet this his boldness might have chanced; in Pope Julius's days, to stand him either in a fire, or else in a laggon. Which thing deeply considered, and pondered of my Lord, might something stir him to charitable Equity, and to be something remis toward men, which labour to do good as their power serveth with knowledge, and do hurt to no man with their ignorance: for there is no greater distance, than between Gods Law, and not Gods Law; nor is it so, or fo, because any man thinketh it so, or fo: but because it is so, or so indeed, therefore we must think it so, or fo, when God shall give us knowledge thereof: for if it be indeed either so or not, it is so, or not so, though all the world hath thought otherwise these thousands years, &c.

And finally as ye say, the matter is weighty, and ought substantially to be looked upon, even as weighty as my life is worth; but how to look substantially upon it, otherwise know not I, than to pray my Lord God day and night, that as he hath imboldened me to preach his truth, so he will strengthen me to suffer for it, to the edification of them which have taken by the working of him fruit thereby, and even so I desire you, and all other that favour me for his sake, likewise to pray: for it is not I (without his mighty helping hand) that can abide that brunt; but I have trust that God will help me in time of need, which if I had not, the Ocean Sea, I think, should have divided my Lord of London and me by this day. For it is a rare thing for a Preacher to have favour at his hand which is no Preacher himself, and yet ought to be I pray God that both he and I may both discharge our selves, he in his great Cure, and I in my little, to Gods pleasure, and safety of our souls, Amen. I pray you pardon me, that I write no more distinctly, nor more truly, for my head is out of frame, that it would be too painful for me to write it again; and if I be not prevented, shortly I intend to make merry with my Parishioners this Christmas, for all the sorrows, lest perchance I never return to them again: and I have heard say, that a Doe is as good in Winter, as a Buck in Summer.

After Latimer, after hearty recommendations; I have communicated the effect of your Letters to divers of my Friends, such as for Christian Charity (as they say) rather desire in you a reformation, either in your opinion (if it swerve from the truth) or at the least in your manner and behaviour, in as much as it giveth occasion of slander and trouble, in let of your good purposes, than any other inconvenience to your person or good name. And forasmuch as your said Letter misliketh them in some part, and that I have such confidence in your Christian breast, as in my judgment ye will conformably and gladly both hear, that may be reformed in you, and also (as it is worthy) so knowledge and confess the same: I have therefore desired them to take the pain to note their minds in this Letter which I send to you, as aggregate of their sayings, and sent from me your assured friend and favourer, in that that is the very truth of Gods Word wherein nevertheless, as I trust you your self will temper your own judgment, and in a soberness affirm no truth of your self, which should divide the Unity of the Congregation in Christ; and the received truth agreed upon by holy Fathers of the Church, consonant to the Scripture of God, even so whatsoever ye will do therein (as I think ye will not do otherwise than ye should do) I being unlearned, and not of the knowledge to give sentence in this alteration and contention, must rather of good congruence shew my self in that you disagree with them, readier to follow their Doctrine in truth, than yours, unless it may please Almighty God to inspire and confirm the hearts of such people to testify the same in some honest number, as ought to induce me to give credence unto them.

Only God knoweth the certain truth, which is communicated to us, as our capacity may comprehend it by faith, but that it is per speculum in enigmate. And there hath been qui zelam Dei habuerunt, sed non secundum scientiam. Among which I repute not you, but to this purpose I write it, that to call this or that truth, it requirerh a deep and profound knowledge: considering that to me unlearned, that I take for truth may be otherwise, not having sensus exercitatus, as S. Paul faith, ad discernendum bonum & malum: and it is shewed me, that an opinion or manner of teaching, which causeth dissention in a Christian Congregation, is not of God, by the Doctrine of S. John in his Epistle, where he faith, Omnes qui confitentur Christum in carne, &c. ex Deo est. And like as the Word of God hath always caused dissention among men unchristened, whereupon hath ensued and followed Martyrdom to the Preacher, so in Christs Congregation, among them that profess Christs Name, In uno Domino, uno Baptismo, & una fide, they that preach and stir rather Contention than Charity, though they can defend their saying, yet their teaching is not to be taken as of God, in that it breaketh the chain of Christian Charity, and maketh division in the people, congregated and called by God into an unity of Faith and Baptism. But for this point I would pray to God, that not only in the truth may be agreement, but also such soberness and uniform behaviour used in teaching and preaching, as men may wholly express (as they may) the Charity of God, tending only to the union and love of us all, to the profit and salvation of our souls.

The answer of Mr. Latimer to the Letter of Sir Edward Baynton above prefixed.

Right worshipful Sir, and my singular good Master, salutem in Christo Iesu, with due commendation and also thanks for your great goodness towards me, &c. And whereas you have communicate my last Letters to certain of your friends, which rather desire this or that in me, &c. what I think therein I will not now say, not for that there could be any peril or danger in the said Letters (well taken) as far as I can judge, but for that they were rashly and unadvisedly scribbled, as ye might well know both by my excuse, and both by themselves also, though none excuse had been made. And besides that ye know right well, that whereas the Bee gathereth honey, even there the Spinner gathereth venom, not for any diversity of the flower, but for divers natures in them that suck the flower: At in times past and in the beginning, the very truth, and one thing in it self, was to some offence, to some foolishness, to other otherwise disposed, the wisdom of God. Such diversity was in the redress of hearers thereof.

But this notwithstanding, there is no more but either my writing is good, or bad. If it be good, the communicating thereof to your Friends cannot be hurtful to me; if it be otherwise, why should you not communicate it to them, which both could and would instruct you in the truth, and reform my error? Let this pass, I will not contend: Had I wist cometh ever out of season. Truly I were not well advised if I would not either be glad of your instruction, or yet refuse mine own reformation, but yet it is good for a man to look ere he leap, and God forbid that ye should be addict and sworn to me so wreathed a fool, that you should not rather follow the Doctrine of your Friends in truth, so great learned men as they appear to be, then the opinions of me, having never so Christian a breast.

The Epistle will not drive a way disturbed. Epistle concerned with authority of holy Fathers.

Mr. Baynton will follow the most number.

Note the proceeding of the Popes Church, which would not have the people certain of Gods truth and religion.

Error and false Doctrine would sin ye still in peace, and not to be stirred. Unity in the Lord, in Baptism, in Faith.

The chain of Christian Charity.

Answer of Mr. Latimer to Mr. Baynton Letter.

The Bee! The Spinner.

Every thing as it is taken.

Had I wist.

Wherefore do as you will: for as I would not if I could, so I cannot if I would, be anyone unto you, but yet I say, I would my Letters had been unwritten, if I were other than call'd at leisure; in as much as they clog me to more writing, an occupation nothing meet for my mad head: and as touching Points which in my foresaid Letters mislike your Friends, I have now little leisure to make an answer thereto, for the great business that I have in my little Cure, I know not what other men have in their great Cure, seeing that I am alone without any Priest to serve my Cure, without any Scholar to read unto me, without any Book necessary to be looked upon, without any learned men to come and consult withal. All which things other have at hand abundantly; but [something] must be done, howsoever it be. I pray you take it in good worth, as less as I tender my own judgment, affirming nothing

Certain

Clear know-

Mr. Latine not ignorant of the Sch
subtilties

But as to my presumption and Arrogancy; either I am certain or uncertain that it is truth that I preach. If I am certain, why may I say so, to encourage my hearers to receive the [same more ardently, and enjue it more fully? doubly? If it be uncertain, why dare I be bold to preach it? If by your friends, in whom you trust I greatly, you Preachers themselves, after their Sermon, I pray, you ask them whether they be certain and [are that they taught you of the truth or no, and [And now word what they say, that I may learn to feake after it. If they say they be sure, you know what followeth: If they say they be unsure, when shall you be sure, that have [so doubtful Teachers and unsure? And you your self, whether are you certain or uncertain that Christ is your Saviour, and [so forth of other Articles that ye be bounden to believe or whether be ye sure or unsure, that Civil Ordinances be the good works of God, and that you do God [service in doing of them, ye do them for a good intent? If ye be uncertain, take heed be of your [sure friend that daubeth you [say so, and then with what confidence do ye doubt? Cum quicquid non esse ex die, peccatum fit? But contrary [say you, God alone knoweth certain truth, and ye have it not per specimen in enigmatæ; and there have been qui zelum Dei habuerunt, sed non secundum scientiam: And to call this a [that truth, is requireth a deep knowledge [considering that to you unlearned, that you take for truth may be erroneous, not having sensus exercitatos (as Paul [saith) ad discernendum bonum & malum, at ye reason against me, and ye do be [to know [very nothing for truth at all, but to wander meekly byther and thither, omni vento doctrine, &c. Our knowledge here, you say, is but per speculum anigmatæ: What then? Ergo, it is not certain and sure.

I deny your argument by your leave ; yea, if ye be by Faith, as ye say, it is much sure, Certe certum fidei est maxime certum : Because the certainty of faith is the most certum certainly, as Duns and other School Divines say, that there is a great difference between certain knowledge and clear knowledge : for that may be of things abstruse, that appear not, this requires the presence of the object, the mean of the thing known, so that I certainly and surely know the thing which I perfectly believe, though I do not clearly and evidently know it, know your School subtilties, as well as you, publicly dispute at though enigmatical knowledge, that is to say, dark and obscure knowledge, might not be certain and sure knowledge, because it is not clear, manifest, and evident knowledge ; and yet there have been (as they) qui zelum Dei habuerunt, sed non fecerunt scientiam, which have had a zeal, but not after knowledge. True it is, there have been such, and yet be so many to the great hindrance of Christs glory, which nothing doth more clearly cure, than an all zeal accompanied with aeterni auctoritatis iudicij right judgment. There have been also, Quia fientiam habuerunt abiequebo Dei, qui veritatem Dei in infinita detinentes palis vapulabunt multis ;

 dum voluntatem Domini cognoscunt, nihil minus quam faciant : What have had knowledge without any zeal of God, who holding the verity of God in righteousness, shall be beaten with many stripes, while they knowing the will of God, do nothing therewith. I mean not of those like Pharisees and Sadducees that are unchristened, but of them that be christened. And there have been also, who have lost Scrip-turam Dei, id est spiritumalem divini verbi sensum, quam prius habuerunt : The spiritual knowledge of Gods Word which they had before, because they have not enjoyed after it, nor promoted the same, but rather with their masterants have imagnated the wisdom of the Father, and understood the knowledge thereof, which therefore hath been taken away from them, Ut iustificetur Christus in feromonibus is, & vincat cum iudicator, threatening Math. 13. Eivero, qui non habetis, quoniam quod habet, id est, quod videtur habere auctoritas ab eorum aut habito, vel non bene uti, non habere, nec non uti verum illud quoque, non habiturarum, videlicet sapientiam in coram peccatis fidentibus, quo-ad huc est carnaliter sapient plus satis patet flatu sententia, nempe carnalem & Philosophicam Scripturarum intelligentiam, non esse sapientiam Dei, que i sapientibus absconditur parvulis revelatur : To him that hath not, that alowhich he hath, that is, that which he seemeth to have, shall be taken from him : when as to abuse that which a man hath or not to use it well, is as not to have it. And also seeing it is true, that Gods wisdom will not dwell in a body [subject to sin], alsein be abond in carnal wisdom too much ; yet the same carnal and philosophical understanding of Gods Scriptures, is not the wisdom of God which is bid from the wife, and is revealed to little ones. And if so call this or that truth, requireth a deep and profound knowledge, then either every man call a deep and profound knowledge, where ever, or else no man can call this or that truth; and it be-cometh every Preacher to have so deep and profound knowledge, that he may call this or that truth, which this truth be taken in hand to preach for the truth, and yet be may be ignorant and uncertain in many things, both this and that, as Apollo was : but which things, whether this or that, he will not attempt to preach for the truth. And so for my self, I trust in God, may have fensis exercises well enough, ad discernendum bonum & malum : Sense exercised to discern good and evil in those things which without deep and profound knowledge in many things, preach not, yet there be many things in Scripture in which I cannot certainly discern bonum & malum, I mean verum & falsum, not with all the exercise that I have in Scripture, nor yet with the help of all interpreters : that I have content my self and other in all scrupulosity, that may arise and be in such I am wont to wade no further into the fream of them, I may either go over, or else return back again, without ever reject, not to the ofensation of my little understanding, but to the edification of them that hear me, as far forth as I can, neither pollui minus cum auctoritate, quam si non

And such pillar of Arguments might well serve the Devil contra punitur, to occasion him to wander and waver in the faith, and to be uncertain in things in which they ought to be certain: or else it may appear to make serve against such Preachers, which will define great facilities and hard matters in the Pulpit: which man can be certain and sure of by Gods Word to be true, he felicit non habens ad discernendum bonum & malum exercitationem; as whether if Adam had not sinned, we should have had Stockills out of Iland: how many Larks for a penny if every Star in the Element were a Juckering Hobby.
How many years a man shall lie in Purgatory for one sin if he buy not plenty of the oil that remaineth over our Lamps to flake the sin within, and so forget Hell which cannot be shaken, to provide for Purgatory.

Such argumentation (I say) might appear to make way against such Preachers, nor against me, which simply and plainly utter true faith and the fruits of the same, which be the good works of God, quæ præparavit Deus ut in ei ambulavimus: i. which he hath prepared for us to walk in:
every man to do the thing that pertaineth to his office and duty in his degree and calling, as the Word appointeth which thing a man may do with soberness, being in his differentia bonum & malum, vel mediocriter, &c.

Anno
1555.

Every Preacher ought to be sure of the truth. There be many truths whereof a good man may well be ignorant. There be many things in Scripture in the profanities whereof a man may wade too far. Against Preachers which take upon them to define great subtleties and high matters in the Pulpit. Vain subtleties and questions to be declined. Simple and plain preaching of faith, and the fruits thereof.

Anno 1555. For it is but foolish humility, willingly to continue always infantulus in Christo & infirmate: i. An Infant still in Christ, in Infirmity. In reproof of which it was said, Fas est etis opus habere lacte non folido cibo. For S. Paul saith u. t. Estote humiles, ut non capiat. For though he would not that we should think arrogantly of our selves, and above that, that it becometh us to think of our selves, but so to think of our selves, ut finis sobrii ac modesti, yea he biddeth us so to think of our selves, ut cuique Deus partitus est mensuram fidei: i. As God hath distributed to every one the measure of faith. For he that may not with meekness think in himself what God hath done for him, and of himself as God hath done for him, how shall he, or when shall he give due thanks to God for his gifts? And if your friends will not allow the same, I pray you enquire of them whether they may cum sobrietate & modestia, be sure they preach to you the Truth, and whether we may, cum sobrietate & modestia, follow Saint Paul's bidding, where he saith unto us all, Nolite fieri pueri sensibus, sed malicia infantiles estote: i. Be not children in understanding, but in malitiously be infants. God give us all grace to keep the mean, and to think of our selves neither too high nor too low, but so that we may restore unto him, qui peregre profectus est, his gifts again cum usura, that is to say, with good use of the same, so that edification invicem with the same, ad gloriam Dei, Amen.

A man too high and too low.

For my life, I trust in God that I neither (by Gods grace) shall, neither in soberness, nor yet in drunkenness, affirm any truth of my self, therewith intending to divide that unity of the Congregation of Christ, and the received Truth agreed upon by the holy Fathers of the Church consonant to the Scripture of God, though it be shewed you never so often, that an opinion or manner of teaching, which causeth dissension in a Christian Congregation, is not of God, by the Doctrine of S. John in his Epistle, where he saith, Omnis qui conhitur lesium Christum in carne, ex Deo est: i. Every one that confesseth Christ in the flesh, is of God. First, Not every thing whereupon followed dissension, causeth dissension, as I would that they shewed you that, would altho so shew you, whether this opinion, that a man may not marry his brothers wife, be of God or of men: if it be of men, then as Gamaliel said, dissolvitur; if it be of God, as I think it is, and perchance your friends also, quis potest dissolvere nisi qui videtur Deo repugnare? i. Who can dissolve it, but shall seem to repugn against God? And yet there be many, not Heaters, but in Christendom, that dissent from the same, which could bear full evil to bear said unto them, Vos ex parte Diaboli estis. So that such an opinion might seem to some to make a dissension in a Christian Congregation, saving that they may say perchance with more liberty than other, that an occasion is sometime taken and not given, which with their favour I might abuse for my defence, saving that, non omnibus licet in hac temporum iniquitate.

The Galatians having for Preachers and Teachers the false Apostles, by whose teaching they were degenerate from the sweet liberty of the Gospel into the four Bonds of Ceremonies, thought themselves peradventure a Christian Congregation, when S. Paul did write his Epistle unto them, and were in a quiet trade under the dominion of masterly Curars, so that the false Apostles might have objected to S. Paul that his Apostleship was not of God, forasmuch as there was dissension in a Christian Congregation by occasion thereof, while some would renew their opinions by occasion of the Epistle, some would opinar, as they were wont to do, and follow their great Lords and Masters, the false Apostles, which were not beaten and unchristianed, but christianed, and high Prelates of the Professors of Christ. For your friends I know right well what Erasmus hath said in an Epistle set before the Paraphrases of the first Epistle to the Corinthians, which Erasmus hath caused no small dissension with his Pen in a Christian Congregation in as much as many have dissented from him, not only in Cloisters (men more than christened men) of high perfection, but also at Paul's Croft, and S. Mary Spittle, besides many that with no small zeal have written against him, but not without answer.

Erasmus in his Epistle set before the Paraphrases, in 1. Cor.

And I would fain learn of your friends, whether that S. Hieronys writing were of God, which caused dissension in a Christian Congregation, as it appeareth by his own words in the Prologue before the Canonical Epistles, which be these: Et ut Virgo Christi Euthochium, dum a me impensius Scripturæ veritatem inquiris, meam quodam modo senectutem invidorum denitibus vel moribus corrodendam apponis, qui me falsarium corruptoremque Scripturarum pronunciant: sed ego in tali opere nec illorum invidentiam pertimesco, nec Scripturæ veritatem poscentibus decebo. I pray you what were they that called S. Hieron falsarium, and corrupter of Scripture, and for every would have bitten him with their teeth? unchristian, or christian? What had the Unchristian to do with Christian Doctrine? They were worshipful Fathers of a Christian Congregation, men of much more hotter stomachs then right judgement, of a greater authority then good charity: but S. Hieron would not cease to do good for the evil speaking of them that were naughty, giving in that an ensample to us of the same; and if this dissension were in S. Hieron's time, what may be in our time? de malo in pejus scilicet.

And I pray you what mean your Friends by a Christian Congregation? All those (troupe ye) that have been christianed? But many of those be in worse condition, and shall have greater damnation then many unchristianed, for it is not enough to be a Christian Congregation that is of God, to have been christianed: but it is to be considered what we promise when we be christianed, to renounce Satan, his Works, his Pomps: Which thing if we buye not our selves to dolet us not crack that we profess Christ's name in a Christian Congregation, in uno baptismo, in one Baptism.

And where they add in uno Domino, i. in one Lord: I read in Math. 17. Non omnis qui dicit, Domine Domine, &c. i. Not every one that saith Lord, Lord, &c. And in Luke the Lord himself complaineth and rebuketh such Praefors and Confessors, saying to them, Cur dicitis, Domine Domine, & non facitis quæ dico? i. Why call ye me Lord, Lord, and do not that I bid you? Even as though it were enough to a Christian man, or to a Christian Congregation to say every day, Domine, Dominus noster, and to salute Christ with a double Domine. But I would your friends would take the pains to read over Chrylostom super Mattheum, hom. 49. cap. 24. to learn to know a Christian Congregation if it will please them to learn at him. And where they add, in una fide, i. in one faith, S. James saith boldly, Offende mihi fidem ex operibus; i. Shew me thy faith by thy works. And S. Hieron, Si tamen credimus, inquit, opere veritatem ostendimus: i. If we believe, we shew the truth in working. And the Scripture saith, Qui credit Deo, attendit mandatis: i. He that believeth God, attendeth to his Commandments: And the Devils do believe to their little comfort. I pray God to save you and your friends from that believing and Congregation, and from that faithful company.

Therefore all this toucheth not them that be unchristianed, but them that be christianed, and answer not to their Christendom. For S. Hieron sheweth how true Preachers should order themselves, when evil Priests and false Preachers, and populus ab his deceptus; i. the People that be by them deceived, should be angry with them for preaching the Truth, Tom. 5. in Hieroniam cap. 26. exhorting them to suffer death for the same, of the evil Priests and false Preachers, and the people deceived of them, which evil Priests and false Preachers with the people deceived, be christianed as well as other: And I fear me that S. Hieron might appear to some Christian Congregation, as they will be called, so write seditiously, to divide the unity of a great honest number confessing Christ, in uno baptismo, uno Domino, una fide, saying, populus qui ante sub magistris consopius erat, ibi ad montes, non illos quidem qui vel leviter tacti fumigant, sed montes veteris & novi Testamenti, Prophetas, Apostolos, & Evangelistas, & cum iustis modum tum lectione versatis, si non inveniunt doctores (messis enim multa, operarii autem pauci) tunc & populi studium comprobabit, quo fugerit ad montes, & magistrorum desidia coarguetur. Tom. 6. in Naum. c. 30. i. The people which before were brought asleep by their Masters, must go up to the Mountains, not such Mountains which smok when they are touched, but to the Mountains of the Old and New Testament, the Prophets, Apostles, and Evangelists. And when thou art occupied with reading in these Mountains, if then thou find no instructors, (for the Harvest is great, and the Workmen be few) yet shall Hieron in Prologo in per Canon. Epist. Hieron moved at Hieron to be a falsifier and a corrupter of the Scripture.

Worshipful Fathers of greater authority than of good charity.

It is not enough to be christianed, but to keep our promise when we be christianed.

Unity in baptism, is not enough.

To pretend unity under the title of one Lord, is not enough.

To be in unity, except the faith be sound, is not enough.

How true Preachers should order themselves, when the wicked Priests be against them.

Anno

the diligent study of the people be fleeing to the Mountains, and the sloathfulness of the Masters shall be rebuked.

I do marvel why our Christian Congregations be so greatly grieved that Lay-people would read Scripture, (seeing that S. Hierom alloweth and approveth the same, 2d. It compareth not here the unchristian to the christian, and the Lay-people christianed to their Curats christianed, under the which they have been rocked and locked asleep in a subtil trade a great while full soundly, though now of late they have been waked, but to their pain, at the least way to the pain of them that have wakened them with the Word of God; and it is properly said of S. Hierom to call them Masters and not Servants, meaning that Servants teach not their own Doctrine, but the Doctrine of their Master Christ, to his glory. Masters teach not Christs Doctrine, but their own, to their own glory, which Masterly Curats cannot be quiet till they have brought the people asleep again: but Christ the very true Master saith, Vigilate, & orate, ne intretis in tentationem. Non cogitationes vestras, neque vires carnis vestras; dicit Dominus: et there have been, qui cogitaverunt consilia, quæ non poterunt stabilire; i. which have gone about counsels, which they could not establish. I pray God give our people grace so to wake, ut studium illorum comprobetur, and our Masters so to sleep, ut non deficiat illorum coarguatur. For who is so blind that he seeth not how far our Christian Congregation doth gain say S. Hierom, and speaketh after another fashion? God amend that it amiss; for we be something wide I wis.

But now your Friends have learned of S. John, that omnis qui confitetur Iesum Christum in carne, ex Deo est: i. Every one that confesseth Iesum Christ in the flesh, is of God: And I have learned of S. Paul, that there have been, not among the Heathen, but among the Christians, qui are contenti, factis autem negant: i. which confess Christ with their mouth, and deny him with their act: So that S. Paul should appear to expound S. John, saying that I will not affirm any thing as of my self, but leave it to your Friends to show you utrum qui factis negant Christum & vitam, sint ex Deo necne per solam oris confessionem: for your Friends know well enough by the same S. John, qui ex Deo est non peccat: and there both have been, and be now too many, Qui are tenus contenti Christum venisse in carne: i. which with mouth only confess Christ to be come in the flesh; but will not effectually bear the Word of God by consenting to the same, notwithstanding that S. John saith, Qui ex Deo est, verbum Dei audit, vos non auditis quia ex Deo non estis: and many shall hear nonquam novi vos: i. I never knew you, which shall not only be christianed, but also shall prophesie, and do pious things in nomine Christi: And S. Paul said there should come Lupi graves, qui non parcerent gregi: i. Ravenous Wolves which will not spare the flock, meaning it of them that should confiteri Christum in carne in their lips, and yet usurp by succession the Office, which Christ called Picudo-propheta, i. false Prophets, and biddeth us beware of them, saying, They shall come in vestimentis ovium, i. in sheeps cloathing, and yet they may wear bush Satten, Silk and Velvet, called afterwards servi nequam, non pascetes, sed percutientes confervos, edentes & bibentes cum ebriis, habituri tandem portionem cum hypocritis: i. Naughty Servants, not feeding, but smiting their Fellow-servants, eating and drinking with the drunken, which shall have their portion with Hypocrites. They are called servi, Servants I know, Quod ore contentitur Christum in carne; nequam vero, quia factis negant eundem, non dantes cibum in tempore, dominum exercentes in gregem: i. Because they confess Christ in the flesh: and naughty they are called, because they deny him in their deeds, not giving meat in due season, and exercising Master-ship over the flock. And yet your Friends reason as though there could none bark and bite at vice Preachers, but they that be unchristianed, notwithstanding that St. Augustine, upon the same Epistle of John, callith such Confessors of Christ, qui ore contentitur, & factis negant, Antichristi; a strange name for a Christian Congregation: And though S. Augustine could descry but saying, yet his name might appear not to be of God, to some mens judgment, in that it breaketh the chain of Christs Christianity, so to canse men to hate Antichristianisme, Antichrist, according to the Doctrine of S. Paul, Sitis odio persequentes quod malum est: i. Hate that is evil; and so making division, not between christianed and unchristianed, but between Christians and Antichristians, when neither Pen nor Tongue can divide the Antichristian from their blind folly. And I would you would cause your Friends to read over S. Augustine upon the Epistle of S. John, and tell you the meaning thereof, if they think it expedient for you to know it, as I remember it is Tractatu 3. but I am not sure nor certain of that, because I did not see it since I was at Cambridge; and here I have not S. Augustine's Works to look for it, but well I wot, that there be teacheth us to know the Christians from the Antichristians, which both be christianed, and both confess, Iesum esse Christum, if they be asked the question: and yet the one part denieth it in very deed. But to know whether, Non linguam, sed facta attendamus, & vivendi genus, num studemus officia vocaciones præstare annon fudeamus, immo perfusi forte sumus non necesse esse ut præstemus, sed omnia in primitivam Ecclesiam & tempora præterita, etc. quali nobis sit sit dominari, & secularibus negotiis nos totos volvere, ac voluptatibus & pompæ inhiare: i. Let us not stand upon our talks, but attend to our doings and conversation of life, whether we, not only do not put our endeavour thereto, but also persuade our selves as though it were not necessary for us to accomplish such things, etc. but that it is enough to bear rule and authority over them, and to bestow our selves wholly upon Secular matters, pleasures, and pomp of this world. And yet we will appear, vel soli ex Deo esse; sed longe aliter Christum confitemur, qui confitendo ex Deo esse comprobantur.

And yet as long as they minister the Word of God, or his Sacraments, or any thing that God hath ordained to the salvation of Mankind, wherewith God hath promised to be present, to work with the ministration of the same to the end of the world, they be to be heard, to be obeyed, to be honoured for Gods Ordinance sake, which is effectual and fruitful, whatsoever the Minister be, though he be a Devil, and neither Church nor Member of the same, as Origen saith, and Chrysostom, so that it is not all one to honour them, and trust in them, S. Hierom saith: But there is required a judgment, to discern when they minister the Gods Word and Ordinance of the same, and their own self peradventure we take chalk for cheese, which will edge our teeth, and hinder digestion. For as it is commonly said, The blind earth many a fly, as they did which were persuaded à principibus Sacerdotum ut peterent Barabbam, Iesum autem crucifigerent: i. Of the High Priests, to ask Barabbas, and to crucifie Iesus: and ye know that to follow the blind Guides, is to come into the pit with the same. And will you know, saith S. Augustine, how aptly they resist Christ, when men begin to blame them for their mistaking, and intolerable seculary and negligence? they dare not for shame blaspheme Christ himself, but they will blaspheme the Ministers and Preachers of whom they be blamed.

Therefore, whereas ye will pray for agreement both in the Truth, and in uttering of the Truth, when shall that be, as long as we will not hear the Truth, but disquiet with crafty conveyance the Preachers of the Truth, because they reprove our evilness with the Truth? And, say the truth, better it were to have a deformity in preaching, so that some would preach the Truth of God, and that which is to be preached, without capuon and adulteration of the words, (as Lyranus saith in his time few did, what they do now adays, I report me to them that can judge) than to have such an uniformity, that the silly people should be thereby occasioned to continue still in their lamentable ignorance, corrupt judgments, superstition and idolatry, and esteem things as they do all, preposterously doing that, that they need not to do, leaving undone that they ought to do, for lack or want of knowing what is to be done, and so shew their love to God, not as God biddeth (which saith, Si diligitis me, præcepta mea servate: i. If ye love me, keep my Commandments. And again, Qui habet præcepta mea & facit ea, hic est qui diligit me: i. He that knoweth my Precepts, and doth them, he loveth me,) but as they bid, Qui querunt, que sua sunt, non querunt Christi: i. Which seek their own things, not Christs: as though to the Mini were more than judgments, faith,

Anno
1555.In the people it is required
a judgment to discern, whether they took of their chalk for cheese.The blind earth many a fly.
Intolerable seculary and negligence in Church-men.

Better is in the Church a deformity, so that Christ be truly preached, than uniform ignorance & superstition in Ministry.

Anno 1558. And what is to live in state of Curates, but that be taught which said, Petre amas me? Pasce, pasce, pasce; Peter lovest thou me? Feed, feed, feed; which is now set aside, as though to love were to do nothing else; but to wear Rings, Myters and Rochets, &c. And when they err in right loving, how can the people but err in loving, and all of the new fashion, so his dishonour that suffered his passion, and taught the true kind of loving, which is now turned to piping playing, and curious singing, which will not be reformed (I trow) nisi per manum Dei validam. And I have both Saint Augustine and Saint Thomas, with divers others, that lex is taken not only for Ceremonies, but also for Morals, where it is said, Non estis sub lege, though your friends reprove the same. But they can make no division in a Christian Congregation. And whereas both you and they would have a soberness in our Preaching, I pray God send it unto us, whatsoever ye mean by it. For I see well, who so ever will be happy, and baste with vobis, he shall shortly after come coram nobis.

And where your friends think that I made a lye, when I said that I have thought in times past that the Pope had been Lord of the World, though your friends be much better learned than I, yet I am sure that they know not what either I think, or have thought better than I. Justa illud, Nemo novit que sunt hominis, &c. as though better Men than I have not thought so, as Bonifacius (as I remember) Othervus, the great Learned Man John of the Burnt Tower, Presbiter Cardinalis in his Book where he proveth the Pope to be above the Council General, and Special, where he saith that the Pope is Rex Regum, and Dominus Dominantium, i. King of Kings, and Lord of Lords, and that he is, Verus Dominus totius orbis, i. licet non factio. i. The true Lord of the whole World by good right, albeit in fact he be not so, and that Constantinus did but restore his own unto him, when he gave unto him Rome, so that in propria verba, as Saint John saith Christ did, & sic cum non reciperet: i. He came unto his own, and his own received him not; and yet I hear not that any of our Christian Congregations have reclaimed against him, until now of late dissension began. Who be your friends I cannot tell; but I would you would desire them to be my good Masters, and if they will do me no good, at the least way do me no harm, and though they can do you more good than I, yet I am sure I would be as loath to hurt you as they, either with mine opinions, manner of Preaching, or writing.

And as for the Pope's high Dominion over all, there is one Raphael Maruplus in London, an Italian, and in times past a Merchant of dysmatom, which I suppose would die in the quagrel, as Gods true Knight, and true Martyr. As touching Purgatory, and worshipping of Saints, I shewed to you my mind before my Ordinary: and yet I marvelled something, that after private Communication had with him, ye would (as it were) advise me to open my mind before him, not giving me warning before, saying I cannot interpret your evil doings towards me, and yet neither mine Ordinary, nor you disallowed the thing that I said, and I looked not to escape better than Doctor Cromer, but when I have opened my mind never so much, yet I shall be reported to deny my Preaching, of them that have belied my Preaching, as be was: Sed opus est magna patientia ad sustinendis calumniis malignantis Ecclesie: i. I shall have need of great patience to bear the false report of the Malignant Church.

Sir, I have had more business in my little Cure, since I spake with you, what with sick folks, and what with Marriages, than I have had since I came to it, or than I would have thought a Man should have in a great Cure. I wonder how Men can go quietly to Bed, which have great Cures and many, and yet peradventure are in none of them all. But I pray you to tell none of your friends that I said so foolishly, lest I make a dissension in a Christian Congregation, and divide a peace and a restful union, for tot quot, with Hæc requirit mea in seculum seculi. Sir, I had made an end of this scribbling, and was beginning to write it again more truly and more distinctly, and to correct it, but there came a Man of my Lord of London in haste, to be punished for such excesses as I committed at my last being there, so that I could not perform my purpose, I doubt whether ye can read it as it is, or as it will be: if not, I pray you send it me again, and that you so do, whether you can read it or not. Jesus mercy, what a World is this, that I shall be put to so great labour and pains, besides great cost, above my power, for preaching of a poor simple Sermon? But I trow our Saviour Christ said true, Oportet pati, & sic intrare: tam periculum est in Christo pie vivere velle: i. I must needs suffer, and so enter: so perillous a thing it is to live virtuously with Christ. Yea in a Christian Congregation. God make us all Christians, after the right fashion, Amen.

A publick and Authentick Instrument of the Bishops, for the abolishing, and inhibiting of the Scripture, and divers other Books to be read in English, in the time of King Henry the eighth. 1531.

IN the Name of God, Amen. Be it known to all and singular true and faithful People, to whom these present Letters testimonial, or this present publick and authentick Instrument shall come, or shall see, read, hear or understand the same, and whom this underwritten shall or may teach, or appertain in any manner of wise in time to come. William by the sufferance of Almighty God, Archbishop of Canterbury, Primate of all the Realm of England, sendeth greeting in our Lord God everlasting. We signifye unto you all, and let you well wit and know by these presents, that where the King our Sovereign Lord, hearing of many Books in the English Tongue, containing many detestable errors, and damnable opinions printed in parts beyond the Seas, to be brought into divers Towns, and sundry parts of this his Realm of England, and sown abroad in the same, to the great decay of our faith Catholick, and perillous corruption of his people, unless speedily remedy were briefly provided, his Highness willing evermore to employ all his study and mind in the high degree which Almighty God hath called him unto, to the Wealth of his Subjects, that they might live not only in tranquillity and peace, but also to be kept pure and clean of all contagion and wrong opinions in Christs Religion. Considering also that he being Defender of the Faith, would be full loath to suffer such evil feed sown amongst his people, and so take root, that it might overgrow the Corn of the Catholick Doctrine, before sprung in the Souls of his Subjects, for the repelling of such Books, calling unto him of his great goodness, and gracious disposition, not only certain of the chief Prelates and Clerks of his Realm, but also of each University a certain Number of the chief Learned Men of them, proposed such of the Books, as his Grace had ready: therefore unto them to be read, requiring to hear in that behalf their Advice and Judgment of them: who both by great diligence and mature deliberation, perusing over the said Books, found in them many errors and heresies, both detestable and damnable, being of such a sort, that they were like briefly to corrupt a great part of his people (if they might be suffered to remain in their hands any space) gathering also out of them many great errors, and pestilent heresies, and noting them in writing, to the intent to shew for what cause they reured the said Books damnable, of which hereafter out of each Book gathered, many do ensue. Albeit many more there be in the said Books, which Books totally do swarm full of Heresies, and detestable Opinions.

We cannot be without motions of evil desires: but we must mortifie them in resisting them. 52. page 2.

God commandeth us to exercise works of mercy: all other works in the Church be founded by avarice not commanded by God, &c. ibidem.

All very Christianity lieth in love of our neighbours for God and not in fasting, keeping of holy days, watching, praying, and fingings, long prayers daily, and all day hearing Mass, roving in pilgrimage, &c. 52. page 1. & 2.

Many Doctors in Theologia, and not only common people believeth that it is a part of a Christian Faith to believe that Jesus Christ hath lived here in Earth. 53. page 2. 54. page 1.

He that doth good against his will he doth evil. 56. page 1. 2.

No Man is righteous but that fulfilleth the Commandments with joyful Hearts. 57. page 1.

No Man doth more then he is bound to do, and therefore no Man may make other partakers of their good works. 59. page 1.

Christ hath gotten Heaven by his passion, but that right hath he no need of, but hath granted it to all them that believe in his promises. 59. page 1.

If God had promised us Heaven for our good works, we should ever be sure of our Salvation. 59. page 1.

Be our Sins never so great, that it seemeth impossible to us to be saved, yet without any doubt we shall believe to be saved. ibidem.

The salvation of a Christian Man lyeth not in this Life, but rather endeth: for we cannot be saved but by Anno death, and in this Life is no profit. 60. page 1.

It is but folly and infidelity to weep for death of our friends. 61. page 2.

It is a great Sin before God to ordain where thou wilt be buried, or what stone thou wilt have on thy Tomb, all is one before God, to be buried in the Church, or in any other place. 61. page 2.

In times passed, all that lived after the Gospel were Monks, and gave them to that life. 62. page 2.

First Monks were Helias, Heliseus, the Sons of Jonadab. 63. page 1.

The Monks after our Saviours ascension unto S. Benedict and Gregories days made no vows nor profession: they might, eat, drink, fast, pray, when they list. They had no certain Masses, nor howers to sing, daily. 63. page 2.

What is now the Life of Religion, but a superstitious subjection unto certain vain Ceremonies? 66. page 1.

If a Man vow to live chaste, and in poverty in a Monastery, then if he perceive that in the Monastery he liveth worse then he did before, as in fornication and theft, then he may leave the Cloyster and break his vow without Sin. 71. page 1.

Saint Augustine holdeth them for Hereticks, that faith that Religious Men should not labour with their hands. 81. page 1.

Bodily labour is commanded to all persons. ibid.

It is abomination to make sumptuous Monasteries, Chappels, Altar-clothes. 81. page 2.

If thou love thy Wife because she is thy Wife, that is no love before God: but thou shalt love her, because she is thy Sister in God. 83. page 1.

It is nothing but all incredulity to run with pilgrimage, and seek God in one certain place, which is like mighty in all places. 87. page 1.

Men should see that their Children come to Church to hear the Sermon. 89. page 1.

Four manner of people, or four parts of people liveth and are fed by one part, that is to say, by Citizens, Artificers and Husbandmen, which labour and getteth their own expences, and the expences of the other 4 parties, of Priests, Monks, of Lord Councillors, old People and Children, of Men of War, Theeves, Murthcers, Ruffians, common people and that getteth nothing, but spendeth all. 92. page 2.

Thou shalt not count at night how much Money thou hast gained. 97. page 2.

Thou shalt not vex or grieve by Justice, or otherwise the poor that oweth unto thee: for thou maist not do it without Sin. 97. page 2.

The good Christian shall not defend themselves by justice in no manner for any manner of wrong that they suffer, but recommend all to the good will of God. 98. page 1.

He that is rich, and liveth of his rents may not use to over-spend his goods as he will, but thy goods belong as well unto the poor as to thee. 68. page 2.

God hath not given Riches to Rich Men for to boast and brag therewith; Nor to make great cheer, neither to make themselves Lords, but to the intent that they should be servants unto all the World. 101. page 1.

It is not true that a Rich Man doth gain his goods, nor that he is Lord of his own goods, nor that he may not use them at his pleasure. 101. page 2.

A Man shall be reproved for no other thing at the day of Judgment, but for forgetting of the poor. 101. page 2.

Making of Churches, and foundations of Masses, Chauntries and Chappels, are rather invented by covetous mind of Men, then otherwise. 101. page 2.

There be two sorts of people: one is the Kingdom of God, to which belongeth all true Christian people, and in this Kingdom Christ is King and Lord, and it is impossible in this Kingdom, that is to say among very true Christian people, that the Sword of Justice temporal should have ought to do. 104. page 1. & 2.

There is another sort of people belongeth to the World, and they be unrighteous, and they had need of the sword of temporal Justice. 105. page 1.

No Man is under the secular power, but they that be of the Christian Estate, & out of Gods Kingdom. 106. page 2.

Jesus

Anno 1555. Iesus Christ hath not ordained in his spiritual Kingdom, which is all true Christians, any sword: but he himself is their King and Governor, without sword, or without outward Law, 108. page 2.

Christian Men amongst themselves have nought to do with the sword nor with the Law, for that is to them neither needful or profitable. The secular sword belongeth not to Christs Kingdom, for in it is none but good and just, 109. page 2.

The Gospel maketh all true Christian men servants to all the World, 101. page 1.

The Gospel is written for all Persons, Estates, Prince, Duke, Pope, Emperour, 112. page 2.

When Judges hath hope that an evil doer will amend, they must be always merciful, as Christ was to the Woman taken in adultery. The temporal Law must obey the Gospel, and them that we may amend by warning, we shall not correct them by justice, 113. page 2.

A true Christian Man never plaineth to the injury that men do unto him, 114. page 1.

By the Gospel Christian Men ought not to have suit and parties among them, 114. page 2.

The obedience of a Christian Man to temporal power is, as Christ was obedient to temporal puissance, and payed tribute Money, not because that he ought it, but because he would not offend: so must a Christian Man do: But when Lords ask nought, thou oughtest them nought before God, 116. page 2.

Men of War are not allowed by the Gospel, the Gospel knoweth Peace and not War, 117. page 1.

Doctors that say that War is a thing reasonable or good, understandeth not the Words of the Gospel, for of Saint John. Ibidem.

Saint John praised not War by his word, but rather forbade it, as teacheth all the Gospel, 118. page 1.

Some Texts of Canon-Law suffereth War, but the teaching of Christ forbiddeth all Wars. Nevertheless, when a City is besieged, or a Country invaded, the Lord of the Country is bound to put his Life in jeopardy for his Subjects, ibid.

So a Lord may use horrible War charitably and Christianly, 119. page 1.

A Servant should not be sorry that his Master will not suffer him to hear Mass, nor come to the Church, for God careth not what thing we do, nor in what place, 121. page 2.

Out of the Book of Beggars.

There be many Men of great Literature and Judgment, that for the love they have unto the Church, and unto the Commonwealth, have not feared to put themselves into the greatest infamy that may be in the objection of all the World, yea in the peril of death, to declare their opinion in this matter, which is that there is no Purgatory, but it is a thing invented by the covetousness of the Spirituality, only to translate all Kingdoms from other Princes unto them: and that there is not one word spoken of it in all Holy Scripture: God took Enoch away, that is to say, he departed out of this World like other Men, Primo male vertit, nam scriptura dicit transiit, non abfuit deinde falsum est, quod addit, nam ad Hebræos undecimo legimus, sicut Enoch translatus est, ne videret mortem & non inveniebatur, quia translatus illum dominus ecclesiasticæ, Enoch placuit Deo & translatus est in Paradisum, ut det gentium sapientiam.

Dauids good intent, and Matthews, in building the Temple, were nought: Et quid est quod dicit, 30 Reg. 2. quia cogitasti in corde tuo adificare domum nomine meo fecisti, hoc ipsum mente pertractus & ab illum propositus videtur David, illud præmiis a Deo tulisse, & ejus filij in regno ei succederent.

Out of the Primer.

He putteth in the Book of seven Psalms, but he leaveth out the whole Letany, by which it appeareth his erroneous opinion against praying to Saints.

He hath left out all the Hymns and Anthems of our Lady, by which appeareth his erroneous opinions against praying to our Lady.

The ungodly and erronious saying contained in an English work, inscribed an exposition upon the 7. Chap. of the first Epistle to the Corinthians.

Whoever in himself doth not feel this Godly thing, this gift of chastity, but doth feel incontinency, to him, I say, a commandment is given that he may be married, fol. 2.

Hereof doth follow that no person may make a vow or promise to live chaste or single, and that none is bound to keep any such vows, but rather to break them: And he that shall observe them, it is damnable, and by the Law of God already condemned, fol. eodem.

The touching of Women, some persons have compassed much freightly, so that they dare not touch a Womans hand or skin, moreover they imagined many, both Statutes and Ceremonies, to keep them from company of Women, as they thought that built Abbies, but how fortunately that hath come to pass; what place thereby hath been given to Satan, it were horrible to be spoken of, ibidem.

He that is compelled outwardly to abstain from Women, and is inwardly full of lust, is a dilember, and it is double lechery, fol. 3.

Mark what Soul-ayers they be that provoke foolish youth to a vow of chastity, compelling them to nourish inwardly hidden malice, fol. eodem.

All other evils may be suffered with a mean Conscience.

This cannot so be endured, this can be holpen by no medicine, but by marriage.

It is good for a Man not to touch a Woman, this word good is not understood of merit and deserving afore God, as though an unmarried Man were better afore him, then the married, like as Saint Jerome hath expounded this text; for it concerneth only faith, and no deed or work, but it is spoken of temporal quietness of this Life, so that the virgin and maid hath much more joy and tranquility, fol. 4.

Chastity is a good thing, if lust and incontinency make it not so common a thing as we have hitherto used to do, and yet do, but all amiss; but the Apostle will, that universally all Men be conjugal: but all the Bishops since his time hath destroyed this godly Ordinance, when they babble and rail in Pulpits, changing this word quisque into quidam, fol. 6.

Men ought to stint of their statutes making, for a better statute can none be then this, that men without any respect of time use their Wife, not to exempt certain days as they have which we call Vigils, and Women conceived, fol. 8.

Fasting is a measurable usage of meats, and drinks; Prayer is a crying, sigh, desire and mourning, fol. 9.

No Man ought to enforce and compel Men to fasting and prayer as they hitherto by Laws have done, fol. 11.

Before God, all things are like and equal, fol. 12.

Abominable they do sin which make Nuns swell in pride, when they babble, that their Religion is more precious then Matrimony, and then feign that they shall have a Crown or Garland of Gold, so maketh them arrogant, wicked, unfaithful; Chastity is a gift of God, and therefore can no Man neither promise, nor vow, nor keep it, fol. 13.

The Sects of all them that are called Religious, and of all manner of Shavelings, are falsely called the Spiritual Orders for Matrimony like as in very deed, so it ought to be called the spiritual state before other orders worldly and secular; Matrimony is of all other the highest Religion and most spiritual estate.

Matrimony is as Gold, the spiritual estate as Dung; the Spirit and such spiritual estates have no more agreement then Christ and Behol, the Day and the Night, the Spirit and the Flesh, Faith and our Senses or Reason, fol. 17.

Their prayer, their singing, doing their spiritual works, for so much as they have not the very Word of God to confirm them, God cannot be pleased with them, fol. 18.

Dico autem non nuptis & viduis, &c. Of this we have gathered that Paul had a Wife, and here he speaketh only of Widows; a Wife which either was dead, or for a time time left him for the Gospels sake, but the other Apostles led about their Wives, fol. 19.

By Testimony of Scriptures, all the Apostles and all the Bishops Successors were married, fol. 2.

Saint Paul sayth, that he ought to be chosen for to be a Bishop that is the Husband of one Wife.

Seeing ye choose not married Men to be Bishops, either Christ must be a fool and unrighteous which so did choose, or you Antichrists and deceivers.

You put away universally marriage from Priests contrary unto God, to nature, to reason, to right, only of presumption without all manner of cause, fol. 21.

There is no Sin, ne mischief in all the World so manifold, that can let a Man from Priesthood, but godly Matrimony, fol. 32.

Wicked traditions and Laws and ungracious constitutions leaveth Bigamy from Priesthood.

What other thing is it to say, that a Priest should not marry, thento say, that a Man should not be a Man? fol. 23.

The Body of a Christian Man must as well nourish feed, and beget Children and multiply, as the Body of Birds, Beasts and other lively things.

Every Man, as willeth Saint Paul, needeth to go to Matrimony, necessity so requirith, fol. 25.

This dare I be bold to say, that where is one chaste, there ought more then an hundred thousand to live married, fol. 26.

Saint Jerome which extollet chastity with most highest, but most perilous lauds, nevertheless confesseth, that he could not tame his Flesh; he belonged to the number of them that belonged to Matrimony. Such example shalst thou find in a Book De vitis Patrum, fol. 27.

To keep a young Man in Cloister to live chaste, is as much as to offer a Child to Molech, there to be burned, fol. 28.

If the one would be at one, and the other will not, the party that would be reconciled to love, may marry another, though the other be alive, fol. 23.

Whosoever doth not expel faith, is by reason of the same harmless, pure, clean, holy, profitable, fol. 35.

Infants be holy and clean, though they have not received Baptism, because their Parents be holy and clean.

The wretched Laws of the Pope binleth unmarried persons to abide, or the coming again of the other, that was his mate and that under pain (O presumption, O shame boldness!) of damnation, fol. 38.

To help a Man to God, or let a Man from God, cometh only of faith and unbelief, fol. 43.

Præsumptio est, &c. a general proverb, or sit sentence against all humane Laws and traditions: he sheweth what liberty is granted by the doctrine of Christ, and how that faith maketh all states and things equal, fol. 47.

Christ with his precious Blood hath redeemed and delivered us from all Sins and Laws, so that no longer any Law can bind us in Conscience, fol. 48.

All exterior things before God, are free, and that a Christian Man may use them according to his appetite either leaving or taking.

Thou owest nothing unto God, but faith and confession; by confession I mean not the whispering of Sins into the Priests ear, ne yet thy confession of thy Sins to God: but with Saint Paul if thou confest with thy Mouth that Jesus is Christ, and believe in thy heart that God hath raised him from death, thou shalt be saved: in all other things, he giveth thee liberty of thine own will, thou mayst do all things without jeopardy of Conscience, God careth not as concerning for himself, though thou didst forsake thy Wife, run from thy Lord or Master, and shouldst break all manner of covenants, that thou makest with all men, but for that thou art bound to thy neighbour, fol. 49.

Thou canst not perish or be damned whatsoever thing thou shalt outwardly either do, or else leave undone: we owe nothing unto any Man, save love only.

In Cloisters and Monasteries they do against faith, God, liberty, and Gods ordinances; They shall occupy seats appointed for them in the deep dungeon of Hell, fol. 52.

By this is overthrown the Devilish Doctrine of the brainless and doting Doctors and Preachers of the Devil, which do forge singular coronets for Nuns and Virgins; in Heaven only faith hath it, fol. 53.

Readings, founding of Organs, singing amongst religious be superstitious; and among them, the service and honour of God is suppressed and convicted, fol. 54.

Where the Apostles here are better, it is to be understood of goodness in this World, fol. 6.

The jolly and cruel Tyrants and soul Murderers that shut up youth in Cloisters.

AL which great errors and pestilent Heresies being contagious and damnable with all the Books containing the same with the translation also of Scripture corrupted by William Tyndal, as well in the Old Testament as in the New, and all other Books in English containing such error, the Kings Highness present in person, by one whole advice and assent of the Prelates and Clerks, as well of the Universities, as of all other assembled together, determined utterly to be repelled, rejected, and put away out of the hands of his people and not to be suffered to go abroad among his Subjects; And his Highness willeth further that his pleasure and determination should be notified by Preachers abroad unto the people as well for putting away of all such Books, as reading, retaining, or having hereafter of any other like, delivering unto certain Preachers, the form of a writing to be published in effect unto the people in their Sermons, whereof the form here followeth, willing them in all his Realm to publish the same.

Here followeth the bill in English to be published by the Preacher.

IT is the Office and duty of every Preacher and teacher of the Word of God, not only to shew and declare unto his audience that which might be profitable and wholesome for the wealth of their Souls, to be followed and taken, but also to note and signify unto them such things as be dangerous and contagious, to the intent they might be avoided and eschewed, and also as near as they can judge who be Teachers and Authors of the same; this example we have of our Saviour Christ, where he sayeth, Attendite a fallis Prophetis, &c. Saint Paul likewise many times groweth warning to such as be wrot unto, that they should beware of the false Apostles, that in his absence went about to corrupt the Doctrine that he had taught them being present. Wherefore considering that it hath pleased the Kings Highness like a noble, and a virtuous Prince, tendering not only the present Bodily Wealth and Tranquillity of all his Subjects, for his and the Worldly commodity and benefit, but most chiefly regarding the Wealth of their Souls and their due order towards God thereby to deserve and attain immortal glory, to assemble and call together the chief personages of his Prelates, and a great number of learned Men of both Universities, charging and commanding them for the discharge and exoneration of his Conscience, to find, read, examine, and discuss the contents of such Books as be now spread abroad within this his Gracious Realm in the English Tongue concerning the Points and Articles of our Faith, and after their Learning and Conscience to make relation unto his Highness, whether the same Books be expedient and profitable for his people, to the direction and ordering of their Conscience and Soul, or else contagious and pestiferous for the same: And whether the Opinions contained in them, were agreeable to Gods Word and Doctrine or no, for as much as the said Congregation and assembly had free Liberty and Licence granted unto every Man to say as his Conscience and Learning served him without any reproof or blame to be imputed or arrested for any thing to be spoken there, whose personsoever it touched, or any necessity to agree to the more part, but only to say that his own Learning and Conscience could maintain and justify; After mature Deliberation and Consultation had, it was there by a whole consent, no Man repugning or gainsaying determined and agreed that the Books now being abroad in the English Tongue contain false traditions and corrupt Doctrine, farre discrepant from the true Sense of the Gospel and Catholick understanding.

Anno of Scripture, only perswading pernicious Heresies to the 1555. destruction of the Soules of good Christian men, and that the certainty hereof, I can report unto you of mine own knowledge, being one of the said assembly and hearing and seeing the said Opinions read, declaired and examined, and by the true sense and meaning of Gods learning reproved and rejected: I think therefore my duty is, taking upon me the office of a Preacher, following the example of our Master Christ and Saint Paul as it aforesaid to warn and admonish you by the words of Christ, as I spake before: Attendite a falsis Prophetis, &c. And take heed of your self that ye be not infected by the contagion and infection of such Pseudo-Apostles as have in our English Tongue, set forth Books to seduce you from the true knowledge of Gods Lawes, and bring you by their false interpretations of Scripture into the detestable and abominable Heresies to the destruction of our Soules, wherefore you that have the Books called the obedience of a Christian man: the sum of Scripture, the Revelation of Antichrist, the Iuplication of Beggers, Mammona iniqui-tatis, the Matrimony of Tindal, the New Testament in English, of the translation which is now printed, and such other Books in English, the Authors whereof either dare not, or do not put to their names, be pernicious Books;
 detest them, abhor them, keep them not in your hands, deliver them to the Superiours (such as call for them: And if by reading them heretofore, any thing remaineth in your breasts of that teaching, either forget it, or by information of the Truth expel it and purge it, to the intent that ye being so purified and cleansed of that contagious Doctrine and pestiferous traditions may be fit and apt to receive, and retain the true Doctrine and understanding of Christs Lawes: thus to the comfort and edification of your Soules; thus I move and exhort you in God to do, this is your duty to do.

The Prelates of the Church having the cure and charge of your Soules ought to compel you, and your Prince to punish and correct you not doing of the same, unto whom as Saint Paul saith, the Sword is given by Gods ordinance for that purpose; ye shall also farther understand, that the Kings Highness, forasmuch as it was reported unto him that there is engendered an Opinion in divers of his subjects, that it is his Graces duty to cause the scripture of God to be translated into the English Tongue to be communicate unto the People, and that the Prelates, and also his Highness do wrong in binding of the same, his Highness therefore willed every man there present in the said assenbly, freely and frankly to shew and open unto him what might be proved, and conferred by Scripture, and holy Doctors in that behalf, to the intent that his Highness (as he there openly protested) might conform himself therunto, minding to do his duty towards his People, as he would they should do their duties towards him: In which matter, after the Scripture declared, holy Doctors and Authors alleged, and read, and all things said, which might be on both sides and for both parts spoken, deduced, and brought forth, finally it appeared, that the having of the whole Scripture in English is not necessary to Christian men, but that without having any such Scripture, endeavouring themselves to do well, and to apply their minds to take and follow such Lessons as the Preacher teacheth them, and so learned by his mouth, may as well edifie spiritually in their Soules, as if they had the same Scriptures in English. And like as the having of Scriptures in the vulgar Tongue, and in the common Peoples hands, hath been by holy Fathers of the Church heretofore in some times thought meet and convenient, so at another time, it hath been thought to holy Fathers not expedient to be communicate amongst them, wherefor as much as the Kings Highness, by the advice and deliberation of his Council, and the agreement of the great Learned men thinketh in his Conscience, that the divulging of the Scripture at this time in the English Tongue, to be committed to the People, considering such pestilent Books, and so evil Opinions, as be now spread amongst them, would rather be to their further confusion and destruction, then the edification of their Soules, and that as holy Doctors testify, upon such like considerations, the semblable hath been done in times past, it was thought therein: that assenbly to all and singular in that Congregation, that the Kings Highness, and the Prelates in so doing and not suffering the Scripture to be divulged and communicate in the English Tongue unto the People, at this time doth well.

 And also I think and judge the same, exhorting, and moving you, that in consideration his Highness did there openly say and protest that he would cause the New Testament to be, by Learned men faithfully and purely translated into the English Tongue, to the intent he might have it in his hands, ready to be given to his Peoples: he might see their manners and behaviour meet, apt, and convenient to receive the same, that ye will so detest these pernicious Books, so abhor these Heresies, and new Opinions, so decline from arrogancy of knowledge and understanding of Scripture after your fantasies, and show your self in counting and reasoning, so sober, quiet, meet and temperate, as all fear of misusing the gift of Scripture taken away ye may appear such in your princes eyes, and eyes of your Prelates, as they shall have no just cause to fear any such danger; perswading unto your self in the mean time without grudging or murmuring the very Truth, which is this, that we cannot require or demand Scripture to be divulged in the English Tongue, otherwise then upon the discretion of the Superiours, so as whensoever they think in their Conscience it may do you good, they may and do well, to give it unto you: And whensoever it shall be seen otherwise unto them, they do emit in suffering you to have it. Of and upon the which Decree, order and determination above recited his gracious Highness being in person in the Chappel, called the old Chappel, which sometime was called, St. Edwards Chamber, late on the East-side of the Parliament Chamber, within his Graces palace at Westminster, upon the 24. day of May, the year of our Lord God 1530. and in the two and twentieth year of his reign called before his Grace the three Notaries here under written, and then and there in the presence of all the Personages there assembled and gathered together, willed and required the said three No-taries to make publick and authentick instruments, and us to set thereunto our Seal accordingly in and for witness, and perpetual memory and monument of this his Graces desire, order and determination, and of all and singular the premises, and all the personages then and there being present, to testify the same, and bear Record and testimony thereupon: In witness of all, and singular the premises. We William Archbishop, Primate and Legate aforesaid, have commanded and obtained these present Letters testimonial, or present publick or authen-tick Instrument, containing therein the order, decree, and determination above-said, to be made, and to be subscribed, and signed by the hands of the Notaries hereafter named, and to be sealed with our own Seal. All which premises have been done in manner and form above specified, then and there being present the noble personage of Thomas Moor Knight, great Chancellor of England, our Reverend Brother in Christ Cuthbert, by the permission of God Bishop of Durham; and worshipful personages, Master
 Steven Gardiner Secretary, Master Richard Samson, Dean of the Chappel, Doctor of Law, Master Richard Wolman, Master of the Request, Master John Bell, Counsellor, Doctors of the holy Decrees, Master Nicholas
 Wilton the Kings Confessor, Master Richard Duck, Arch-deacon of Wiltshire, Doctors of Divinity; Mr.
 John Oliver, Master Edmund Steward, Doctors of the Law, Chaplains to our said Sovereign Lord the Kings Grace, Master Richard Mawdly, Master William Mortimer, Master Edward Crone, Master Edward Wiggins, Doctors also of Divinity; Master Robert Carter, Master
 Edward Leighton, Master Hugh Latimer, and Master William Latimer and Roger Tillson Masters of Art in both the Universities above-said with many more learned men of the said Universities, in a great number assembled then and there together witnesses to the premises required and exhibited: These being premised, now let us see the answer of Master Latimer again to this foresaid Testimonial or Instrument of the Bishops, in a Letter which the said Latimer wrote to King Henry the same time in that behalf.

Here followeth a Letter of Mr. Latimer written to King Henry the Eighth upon this occasion. Ye heard before of two sundry Proclamations, set out by the Bishops in the name of King Henry, the one in the year

1531, and the other set out An. 1546. In the which Proclamations, being authorized by the Kings name, were inhibited all English Books, either containing or tending to any matter of the Scripture. Where also we have exprest at large the whole Catalogue of all the Errors and Heresies, which the said Bishops fallily have excerpted, and maliciously imputed to godly Writers, with their places and quotations above assigned in the place aforesaid. Now Mr. Latimer growing in some favour with the King, and seeing the great decay of Christs Religion by reason of these Proclamations, and touched therefore with the zeal of Conscience, directeth unto King Henry this Letter hereunder ensuing, thereby intending by all means possible to persuade the Kings mind to set open again the freedom of Gods holy Word amongst his Subjects. The Copy and tenour of this Letter here followeth.

The Letter of Mr. Latimer written to King HENRY, for the restoring again of the free liberty of reading the holy Scriptures.

To the most Mighty Prince, King of England, HENRY the Eighth, Grace, Mercy, and Peace from God the Father, by our Lord Jesus Christ.

Another Letter of Mr. Latimer to King Henry, August ad Calaniam, Chrysol.

M^r Latimer teacheth his Conscience to write to the King.

What it is to be a traitor to the Truth.

The Kings wilfulness and pride, and the Pharisces.

THe wrote to Calaniam, faith, that he which for fear of any Power hideth the Truth, provoketh the wrath of God to come upon him: for he feareth men more than God. And according to the same, the holy man St. John Chrysostom faith, that he is not only a traitor to the Truth, which openly for truth teacheth a lye; but he also which doth not freely pronounce and shew the truth that he knoweth. These Sentences (most redoubted King) when I read now of late, and marked them earnestly in the inward parts of mine heart, they made me sore afraid, troubled, and vexed me grievously in my Conscience, and at the last drave me to this fruit, that either I must shew forth such things as I have read and learned in Scripture, or else be of that sort that provoke the wrath of God upon them, and be traitors unto the Truth: the which thing rather than it should happen, I had rather suffer extreme punishment.

For what other thing is it to be a traitor unto the Truth, than to be a traitor and a Judas unto Christ, which is the very truth, and cause of all truth? the which faith, that whosoever denieth him here before men, he will deny him before his Father in Heaven. The which denying ought more to be feared and dread, than the loss of all temporal goods, honour, promotion, fame, prison, slander, hurts, banishments, and all manner of torments and cruelties, yea, and death it self, be it never so shameful and painful. But alas, how little do men regard those sharp sayings of these two holy men? and how little do they fear the terrible judgment of Almighty God? and specially they which boast themselves to be Guides and Captains unto other, and challenging unto themselves the knowledge of holy Scripture, yet will neither shew the Truth themselves (as they be bound) neither suffer them that would. So that unto them it may be said, that which our Saviour Christ said to the Pharisees, Matt. 23. We be unto you Scribes and Pharisees, which shut up the Kingdom of Heaven before men, and neither will you enter in, nor suffer them that would to enter in. And they will, as much as in them lieth, debar, not only the Word of God, which David calleth, a light to direct and shew every man how to order his affections and lusts, according to the Commandments of God, but also by their subtle wilfulness they instruct, move, and provoke in a manner, all Kings in Christendom, to aid, licour, and help them in this their mischief; and especially in this your Realm they have so blinded your Liege People and Subjects with their Laws, Customs, Ceremonies, and Banbury Glosses, and punished them with Curfings, Excommunications, and other corruptions, (corrections, I would say,) and now at the last when they see that they cannot prevail against the open Truth (which the more it is persecuted, the more it increaseth by their tyranny) they have made it treason to your noble Grace to have the Scripture in English.

Here I beseech your Grace to pardon me a while, and patiently to hear me a word or two; yea, though it be so that, as concerning your high Majesty and Regal Power whereunto Almighty God hath called your Grace, there is as great difference between you and me, as between God and Man: For you be here to me and to all your Subjects, in Gods stead, to defend, aid and succour us in our right, and so I should tremble and quake to speak to your Grace. But again, as concerning that you be a mortal man, in danger of sin, having in you the corrupt nature of Adam, in the which all we be both conceived and born: so have you no less need of the merits of Christs passion for your salvation, than I and other of your Subjects have, which be all Members of the mystical Body of Christ. And though you be an higher Member, yet you must not disdain the lesser. For as St. Paul faith, Those Members that be taken to be most vile, and had in least reputation, be as necessary as the others, for the preservation and keeping of the body. This, most gracious King, when I considered, and also your favourable and gentle nature, I was bold to write this rude, homely, and simple Letter unto your Grace, trusting that you will accept my true and faithful mind even as it is.

Fifth, and before all things, I will exhort your Grace to mark the life and process of our Saviour Christ, and his Apostles, in preaching and setting forth of the Gospel, and to note also the words of our Master Christ, which he had to his Disciples when he sent them forth to preach his Gospel, and to these have ever in your mind the golden Rule of our Master Christ; The tree is known by the fruit. For by the diligent marking of these, your Grace shall clearly know and perceive who be the true followers of Christ, and teachers of his Gospel, and who be not. And concerning the first, all Scripture sheweth plainly that our Saviour Jesus Christs life was very poor.

Begin at his birth, and I beseech you, who ever heard of a poorer, and so poor as he was? It were too long to write how poor Joseph and the blessed Virgin Mary took their journey from Nazareth toward Bethlehem, in the cold and frosty Winter, having no body to wait upon them, but he both Master and Man, and the both Mistress and Maid. How vilely, thinks your Grace, were they intreated in the Inns and Lodgings by the way? and in how vile and abject place was this poor Maid, the Mother of our Saviour Jesus Christ, brought to Bed, without company, light, or any other thing necessary for a woman in that plight? was not here a poor beginning, as concerning this world? Yes truly. And according to this beginning was the process and end of his life in this world, and yet he might by his godly power have had all the goods and treasures of this world at his pleasure, when and where he would.

But this he did to shew us, that his Followers and Vicars should not regard and set by the riches and treasures of this world, but after the saying of David we ought to take them, which faith thus; If riches, promotions, and dignity happen to a man, let him not set his affiance, pleasure, trust, and heart upon them. So that it is not against the poverty in spirit, which Christ preacheth in the Gospel of St. Matthew, Chapter 5, to be rich, to be in dignity and in honour, so that their hearts be not fixed and set upon them so much, that they neither care for God nor good men. But they be enemies to this poverty in spirit, have they never so little, that have greedy and desirous minds to the goods of this world, only because they would live after their own pleasures and lusts. And they also be privy Enemies (and so much the worse) which have professed, as they say, wilful poverty, and will not be called worldly men, and they have Lords Lands, and Kings Riches, yea, rather than they would lose one jot of that which they have, they will set debate between King and King, Realm and Realm, yea, between the King and his Subjects, and cause Rebellion against the Temporal Power, to the which our Saviour Christ himself obeyed, and paid Tribute, as the Gospel declareth; unto whom the holy Apostle St. Paul teacheth every Christian man to obey. Yea, and beside all this, they will curse and ban, as much as in them lieth, even into the

Your Grace may see what means and craft the spirituality (as they will be called) imagine, to break and withstand the acts which were made in your Graces last Parliament against their superfluities. Wherefore they that thus do, your Grace may know them not to be true followers of Christ. And although I named the spirituality to be corrupt with this unthrifty ambition; yet I mean not all to be faulty therein, for there be some good of them. Neither will I that your Grace should take away the goods due to the Church, but take away all evil persons from the goods, and set better in their stead.

I name nor appoint no person nor persons, but remit your Grace to the rule of our Saviour Christ, as in Matthew the seventh Chapter, By their fruits you shall know them. As touching the words that our Saviour Christ spake to his Disciples when he sent them to preach his Gospel, they be read in Matthew the fifteenth Chapter, where he sheweth, that here they shall be hated and despised of all men worldly, and brought before Kings and Rulers, and that all evil should be said by them, for their preaching sake, but he exhorteth them to take patiently such persecution by his own example, saying, It becometh not the servant to be above the Master. And seeing they call me Belzebub, what marvel is it, if they call you devillish persons and Hereticks. Read the fourteenth Chapter of St. Matthews Gospel, and there your Grace shall see that he promised to the true Preachers no Worldly promotions or dignity, but persecution and all kinds of punishment, and that they should be betrayed even by their own Brethren and Children. In John also he saith, In the World ye shall have oppression and the World shall hate you: but in me ye shall have peace. And in the tenth Chapter of St. Matthews Gospel saith our Saviour Christ also, Lo I send you forth as sheep among Wolves. So that the true Preachers go like Sheep harmless, and be persecuted, and yet they revenge not their wrongs, but remit all to God; for yet is it off that they will persecute any other but with the Word of God only, which is their weapon. And so this is the most evident token that our Saviour Jesus Christ would that his Gospel and the Preachers of it should be known by that it should be despised among those Worldly wifemen, and that they should repute it but foolishness, and deceivable Doctrine, and the true Preachers should be persecuted and hated, and driven from Town to Town, yea, and at the last lose both goods and life.

And yett they that did this persecution, should think that they did well, and a great pleasure to God. And the Apostles remembering this lesson of our Saviour Christ, were content to suffer such persecutions, as you may read in the Acts of the Apostles and the Epistles. But we never read that they ever persecuted any man. The Holy Apostle Saint Paul saith, That every man that will live godly in Christ Jesus, should suffer persecution. And also he saith further in the Epistle written to the Philippians in the first Chapter, That it is not only given to you to believe in the Lord, but also to suffer persecution for his sake.

Wherefore take this for a sure conclusion, that there, where the Word of God is truly preached there is persecution, as well of the hearers, as of the teachers: and whereas is quietness and rest in Worldly pleasure, there is not the truth. For the World loveth all that are of the World, and hateth all things that are contrary to it. And to be short, St. Paul calleth the Gospel, the word of the Cross, the word of punishment. And the Holy Scripture doth promise nothing to the favourers and followers of it in this World, but trouble, vexation, and persecution, which these Worldly men cannot suffer, nor away withal.

Therefore please it your good grace, to return to this golden rule of our Master and Saviour Jesus Christ, which is this, By their fruits you shall know them. For where you see persecution, there is the Gospel, and there is the truth; and they that do persecute, be void and without all truth; nor caring for the clear light, which as our Saviour Jesus Christ saith in the third Chapter of St. Johns Gospel is come into the World, and which shall utter and shew forth every mans works. And they whose works be naught, dare not come to this light, but go about to stop it and hinder it, letting as much as they may, that the Holy Scripture should not be read in our Mother tongue, saying that it would cause Heresie and infurrection, and so they perfwade at the least way they would fain perfwade your Grace to keep it back. But here mark their shameles boldnes, which be not ashamed, contrary to Christs Doctrine, to gather figs of thorns, and grapes of busses, and to call light darkness, and darkness light, sweet sowe, and sowe sweet, good evil, and evil good, and to say, that that, which teacheth all obedience, should cause diffention and strife: but such is their belly wisdom, where with they judge and measure every thing, to hold and keep still this wicked Mammon, the goods of this World, which is their God, and hath so blinded the eyes of their hearts, that they cannot see the clear light of the sacred Scripture, though they babble never so much of it.

But as concerning this matter, other men have shewed your Grace their minds, how necessarie it is to have the Scripture in English. The which thing also your Grace hath promised by your last Proclamation: the which promise I pray GOD that your gracious Highness may shortly perform, even to day before to the morrow. Nor let the wickednes of these Worldly men detain you from your godly purpose and promise. Remember the subtille Worldly wise Counsellors of Hammon the Son of Naas, King of the Ammonites, which when David had sent his Servants to comfort the young King for the death of his Father, by crafty imaginations counselled Hammon, not only not to receive them gently, but to entreat them most shamefully and cruelly, saying, That they came not to comfort him, but to espie and search his land, so that afterward they bringing David word how every thing stood, David might come and conquer it. And they caused the young King to hear their heads, and to cut their coats by the points, and sent them away like fools; whom he ought rather to have made much of, and to have entreated them gently, and have given them great thanks and rewards, Oh wretched Counsellors! But see what followed of this carnal and Worldly wisdom. Truly nothing but destruction of all the whole Realm, and also of all them that took their parts.

Therefore good King, seeing that the right David, that is to say, our Saviour Christ hath sent his Servants, that is to say, his true Preachers, and his own word also to comfort our weak and sick Souls, let not these Worldly men make your Grace believe that they will cause infurrections and Heresies, and such mischiefs as they imagine of their own mad brains, lest that he be avenged upon you and your Realm, as was David upon the Ammonites, and as he hath ever been avenged upon them which have obstinately withstood and gain-said his word. But peradventure they will lay this against me, and say that experience doth shew, how that such men as call themselves followers of the Gospel regard not your Graces commandment, neither sit by your Proclamation, and that was well proved by those persons which of late were punished in London for keeping such books as your Grace had prohibited by Proclamation: and so like as they regarded not this, so they will not regard or esteem other your Graces laws, statutes, or ordinances. But this is but a craftie perfwasion.

For your Grace knoweth that there is no man living, specially that loveth Worldly promotion, that is so foolish to set forth, promote, or enhance his enemies, where by he should be let of his Worldly pleasures and fleshly desires: but rather he will seek all the wayes possible that he can, utterly to confound, destroy, and put him out of the way. And so as concerning your last Proclamation, prohibiting such books, the very true cause of it, and chiefe Counsellors (as men say, and of likelihood it should be) were they, whose evil living and cloaked hypocrite these books uttered and disclosed: And howbeit that there were three or four, that would have had the Scripture to go forth in English, yet it happened there, as it is evermore seen, that the most part overcometh the better, and so it might be that these men did not take this Proclamation as yours, but as theirs set forth in your name, as they have done many times more, which hath put this your Realm in great hinderance and trouble, and brought it in great penury, and more would have done, if GOD hath not mercifully provided to bring your Grace to knowledge of the felthood and privy treason, which their head and Captain was about; and by you sure not without adherents, if the matter be duly searched. For what marvel is it, that they being so nigh of your Council, and so familiar with your Lords, should provoke both your Grace and them to prohibit these books, which before by their own Authority have forbidden the New Testament, under pain of everlasting damnation: for such is their manner, to fend a thousand men to hell, ere they fend one to God, and yet the new Testament (and so I think by the other) was meckely offered to every man that would and could, to amend it, if there were any fault.

Moreover, I will ask them the causes of all insurrections, which have been in this Realm heretofore. And whence is it that there be so many Extortioners, Bribees, Murderers, and Theeves, which daily do not break only your Graces Laws, ordinances, and statutes, but also the laws and Commandments of Almighty God? I think they will not say these books, but rather their pardons which causeth many a man to sin in trust of them. For as for those malefactors which I now rehearsed, you shall not find one amongst a hundred, but that he will cry out both of these books, and also of them that have them, yes and will be glad to spend the good which he hath wrongfully gotten, upon Fagots to burn both the Books, and them that have them.

And as touching these men that were lately punished for these books, there is no man, I hear say, that can lay any word or deed against them that should found to the breaking of any of your Graces Laws, this only except, if it be yours, and not rather theirs. And be it so that there be some that have these books, that be evil, unruly and self-willed persons, not regarding Gods Laws, nor Mans, yet these books be not the cause thereof, no more than was the bodily preface of Christ and his words the cause that Judas fell, but their own froward mind and carnal wit, which should be amended by the virtuous example of living of their Curates, and by the true exposition of the Scripture. If the Lay People had such Curates, that would thus do their office, neither these books, nor the Devil himself could hurt them to go out of frame, so that the lack of good Curates is the destruction and cause of all mischief. Neither do I write these things because that I will either excuse these men lately punished, or to affirm all to be true written in these books, which I have not all read, but to shew that there cannot such inconvenience follow of them, and specially of the Scripture as they would make men believe should follow.

And though it be so that your Grace may by other books and namely by the Scripture itself, know and perceive the hypocrite wolves clad in Sheeps cloathing, yet I think myself bound in Conscience to utter unto your Grace such things as GOD put in my mind to write. And this I do (God so judge me) not for hate of any person or persons living, nor for that I think the Word of GOD should go forth without persecution, if your Grace had commanded that every man within your Realm should have it in his Mothers tongue. For the Gospel must needs have persecution unto the time that it be preached thoroughout all the World, which is the last sign that Christ shewed to his Disciples should come before the day of Judgement: so that if your Grace had once commanded that the Scripture should be put forth, the Devil would set forth some wile or other to persecute the truth. But my purpose is, for the love that I have to GOD principally, and the glory of his Name, which is only known by his Word, and for the true allegiance that I owe unto your Grace, and not to hide in the ground of my heart the talent given me of God, but to chaffer it forth to other, that it may increase to the pleasure of GOD, to exhort your Grace to avoyd and beware of these mischievous flatterers, and their abominable ways and Councils.

And take heed whose Counsels your Grace doth take in this matter: for there be some that for fear of losing of their Worldly worship and honour, will not leave of their opinion, which rashly, and that to please men withal by whom they had great promotion they took upon them to defend by writings, so that now they think that all their felicitie, which they put in this life, should be made, and their wisdom not so greatly regarded, if that which they have so slanderously oppressed should be now put forth and allowed. But alas, let these men remember Saint Paul, how fervent he was against the truth (and that of a good zeal) before he was called; he thought no shame to suffer punishment, and great persecutions for that which before he despised and called Herefie. And I am sure that their living is not more perfect than St. Pauls was, as concerning the outward works of the law, before he was converted.

Also the King and Prophet David was not ashamed to forsake his good intent in building of the Temple, after that the Prophet Nathan had shewed him that it was not the pleasure of God that he should build any House for him; and notwithstanding that Nathan had before allowed and praiseth the purpose of David, yet he was not ashamed to revoke and eat his words again, when he knew that they were not according to Gods will and pleasure.

Wherefore they be sore drowned in Worldly Wisdom, that think it against their worship to knowledge their ignorance; whom I pray to God that your Grace may escape, and take heed of their Worldly Wisdom, which is foolishness before God, that you may do that God com-mandeth, and not that seemeth good in your own sight without the Word of God, that your Grace may be found acceptable in his sight, and one of the members of his Church; and according to the office that he hath called your Grace unto, you may be found a faithful Minister of his gifts, and not a defender of his faith, for he will not have it defended by man or mans power, but by his word only, by the which he hath evermore defended it, and that by a way far above mans power or reason, as all the stories of the Bible make mention.

Wherefore, gracious King, remember your self, have pitye upon your Soule, and think that the day is even at hand when you shall give account of your office, and of the Blood that hath been shed with your sword. In the which day that your Grace may stand steadfastly, and not be ashamed, but be clear and reside in your reckoning, and to have (as they say) your Quintus ess, sealed with the Blood of our Saviour Christ which only serveth at that day, is my daily prayer to him that suffered death for our sins, which also praiseth to his Father for grace for us continually. To whom be all honour and praise for ever, Amen.
The Spirit of God preserve your Grace. Anno Domini 1530. 1. die Decembris.

In this Letter of Mr. Latimer to the King above prefixed, many things we have to consider: First, his good Conscience to God, his good will to the King, the dutie of a right Pastor unto truth, his tender care to the common wealth, and specially to the Church of Christ. Further, we have to consider the abuse of Princes Courts, how Kings many times be abused with flatterers and wicked Counsellors about them, and specially we may note the subtle practices of Prelates, in abusing the name and authoritie of Kings, to set forth their own malignant proceedings. We may see moreover, and rather marvel at in the said Letter, the great boldness and divine fountness in this man, who as yet being no Bishop, so freely and plainly without all fear of Death, adventuring his own life to discharge his Conscience, durst so boldly, to so mighty a Prince, in such a dangerous case, against the Kings Law and Proclamation set out in such a terrible time take upon him to write, and to admonish that, which no Counsellor durst once speak unto him in defence of Christs Gospel. Whose example if the Bishops and Prelates of this Realm, for their parts likewise in like cases of necessity would follow (as indeed they should) so many things peradventure would not be so out of frame as they be, and also for lack that the Officers of Gods Word do not their duty.

Finally, his moreover in the said Letter is to be noted, how blessedly Almighty God wrought with his faithful Servants bold adventure and wholehearted Counsel, though it did not prevail through the iniquity of the time, yet notwithstanding God so wrought with his Servant in doing his duty, that no danger, nor yet displeasure rose to him thereby, but rather thanks and good will of the Prince; for not long after the same he was advanced by the

the King to the Bishoprick of Worcester, as is above declared.

Seeing Master Latimer was so bold and plain with the King (as is above specified) no great marvel if he did use the like freedom and plainness toward other meaner persons in admonishing them of their misorder, especially if any such occasion were given, where truth and equity required his defence against injury and oppression. For example whereof we have another Letter of his, written to a certain Justice of the Peace in Warwickshire, who as he is long since departed, so he shall be here unnamed. The Letter although it may seem somewhat long and tedious; yet I thought here not to overpass the same for divers and sundry respects: First, that the virtue and faithful Conscience of this good Pastor may appear more at large; also for that all other Bishops and Pastors by this example may learn with like zeal and stomach to discharge their duty and Conscience in reforming things amiss, and in powdering with the Salt of Gods Word the sores of the People. Which thing if every Bishop for his part within his Diocess had done in King Edwards days, in redressing such corruption of that time with like diligence as this man did, verily I suppose that the persecution of Queen Mary had not so plagued the Realm as it did: but yet never a man almost liveth in due order, and yet never a Bishop will stir to seek redress, what can become of the Realm? Item, another respect is, because of the Justices and all other placed in room and office, which may take heed hereby, not to abuse their Authority to tread down truth, and bear down poor men with open wrong through extortion or partiality: And finally, that all injurious oppressors whatsoever, by the said Letter may take some fruit of wholesome admonition.

to a certain

Right Worshipful, salutem in Domino. And now, Sir I understand, that you be in great admirations at me, and take very grievously my manner of writing to you, adding thereunto that you will not bear it at my hand, no, not if I were the best Bishop in England, &c.

Ah Sir! I see well I may say as the common saying is, Well, I have sified and caught a Frog; brought little to pass with much ado. You will not bear it with me, you say. Why Sir? what will ye do with me? You will not fight with me, I trow. It may seem unseemly for a Justice of Peace to be a breaker of peace; I am glad the doing time of my foolish youth is gone and past. What will you then do with me, in that you say you will not bear it at my hand? What hath my hand offended you? Perchance you will convert me before some Judge, and call me into some Court. Deus bene vertat. Equidem non recuso judicium ullum. Accusatus invicem, ut emendemus alius alium in nomine Domini. Fiat iustitia in iudicio. I God turn it to good. I refuse no judgment. Let us accuse one another, that one of us may amend another, in the Name of the Lord. Let justice proceed in judgment. And then and there, do best, have best, for club half penny. Or peradventure ye will set pen to paper, and all to rattle me in a Letter, wherein confuting me you will defend your self and your Brother against me. Now that would I see, quoth long Robin, ut dicatur vulgariter. Non potero sane non vehementer probare ejusmodi industriam. I cannot chuse but must allow such diligence. For so should both your integrities and innocencies best appear, if you be able to defend both your own proceedings, and your Brothers doings in this matter to be upright. Et ego tam iustis rationibus victus, libenter cedam, culpam humiliter confessurus. And then will I gladly give place, confessing my fault humbly as one conquered with just reasons. But I think it will not be. But now first of all let me know what it is that ye will not bear at my hand? What have I done with my hand? What hath my hand trespassed you? Forsooth, that can I tell, no man better: For I have charitably admonished you in a secret Letter, of your supper dealing, and such like misbehaviour. O quam grata pasculam; i. What a fine matter is this? And will ye not bear so much with me? Will ye not take such a shew of my good will towards you, and toward the saving of your Soul at my hand? Oh Lord God, who would have thought that Mr. N. had been so impudent, that he would not bear a godly monition for the wealth of his Soul? I have in use to commit such trespass many times in a year with your betters by two or three degrees, both Lords and Ladies, and the best of the Realm, and yet hitherto I have not heard that any of them have said in their displeasure, that they will not bear it at my hand. Are you yet to be taught what is the office, liberty, and privilege of a Preacher? What is it else, but even arguere mundum; i. to rebuke the World of sin, without respect of persons: Quod quidem ipsum est ipsius Spiritus sancti peculiare in ecclesia munus & officium, sed non nisi per Predicatores legitimis exequendum. i. Which thing undoubtedly is the peculiar office of the Holy Ghost in the Church of God, so that it be practised by lawful Preachers. You could but ill bear (belike) to hear your fault openly reprov'd in the Pulpit, which cannot bear the same in a secret sealed up Letter, written both friendly, charitably, and truly; Nisi forte acriter reprehendere peccata, sit iam omni caritate, amicitia, veritate carere. i. Unless perhaps to rebuke sin sharply, be now to lack all charity, friendship, and truth. But Master N. if you will give me leave to be plain with you, I fear me you be so plunged in Worldly purchasings, and so drowned in the manifold dreggs of this deceitful World, that I ween you have forgotten your Catechism. Read therefore again the opening of the first Commandment, and then tell me whether you of me, or I of you have just cause to complain; &c.

Item Sir, you said further, that I am wonderfully abused by my neighbour, &c. How so, good Mr. N.? Wherein? Or how will you prove it to be true, and when? So you said, that he had abused you, and given you wrong information; but the contrary is found true by good testimony of M. Chamber, which heard as well as you what my neighbour said, and hath testified the same, both to you, and against you, full like himself. Mr. N. to forge and feign (which argueth an ill cause) that is one thing; but to prove what a man doth say, that is another thing. As though you were privileged to out-face poor men, and bear them in hand what you list, as may seem to make some maintenance for your naughty cause. Trust me, Mr. N. I was but a very little acquainted with my neighbour when this matter began; but now I have found him so conformable to honesty, upright in his dealings, and so true in his talk, that I esteem him better than I do some other whom I have perceived and found otherways. For I will flatter no man, nor yet claw his back in his folly, but esteem all men as I find them, allowing what is good, and disallowing what is bad: In omnibus hominibus sive amicis sive inimicis, juxta preceptum Paulinum, a filius hujus seculi in pretio non habui: Sitis, odii, inquit, prosequentes quod malum est, adhaerentes autem ei quod bonum est: Neque bonum malum, nec malum bonum in gratiam hominum affirmamus unquam, id quod filii hujus seculi vulgo faciunt, ut est videre ubique. Among all men, either Friends or enemies, according to Pauls precept, not esteemed of the Children of this World; Hate you, faith he, that which is evil, and cleave to that which is good. And let us not any time for the favour of men, call good evil, and evil good, as the Children of this World are commonly wont to do, as it is every where to be seen. And now what manner of man do you make me, Master N. when you note me to be so much abused by so ignorant a man, so simple, so plain, and so far without all wrinkles? Have I lived so long in this tottering World, and have I been so many ways tummoiled and tossed up and down, and so much as it were seasoned with the powder of so many experiences to and fro, to be now so far bewitched and alienated from my wits, as though I could not discern cheefe from chulk, truth from falsehood, but that every filthy Soul, and base witted man might easily abuse me to that enterprise he listed at his pleasure? Well, I say not nay, but I may be abused. But why do you not tell me how your Brother abused me,

M. Latimer
flattereth no man.

promising

promising before me and many more, that he would stand to your awardship, and now doth deny it? Why do you not tell me, how those two false faithless wretches abuse me, promising also to abide your award, and do it not? Yea, why do you not tell me, how you your self have abused me, promising me to redress the injury and wrong that your Brother hath done to my neighbour, and have not fulfilled your promise? These notable abuses be nothing with you, but only you must needs burthen me with my neighbours abusing me, which is none at all, as far forth as ever I could perceive, so God help me at my need. For if he had abused me as you and others have done, I should be soon at a point with him, for any thing further doing for him, &c.

Item, Sir, you said further, that I shall never be able to prove that either your Brother, or the two Tenants agreed to stand to your award, &c. No Sir, Mr. N. you say belike as you would have it to be, or as your Brother with his adherents have perwaded you to think it to be, so inducing you to do their request to your own shame and rebuke, if you persevere in the same, beside the peril of your Soul, for consenting, at least way, to the maintenance by falsehood of your Brothers iniquity. For in that you would your awardship should take none effect, you shew your self nothing inclinable to the redress of your Brothers unright dealing with an honest poor man, which hath been ready at your request to do you pleasure with his things, or else he had never come into this wrangle for his own goods with your Brother.

Ah Master N. what manner of man do you shew your self to be? or what manner of Conscience do you shew your self to have? For first as touching your Brother you know right well that Sir Thomas Caking with a Letter of his own hand-writing, hath witnessed unto your Brothers agreement; which Letter he sent to me unsealed, and I shewed the same to my neighbour, and other more ere I sealed it, and perchance have a Copy of the same yet to shew. With what Conscience then can you say that I shall never be able to prove it? Shall not three men upon their Oaths make a sufficient proof, trow you? Vel ipso Dicente Domino; In ore duorum vel trium, &c. The Lord himself saying in the mouth of two or three, &c. Yea, you think it true, I dare say, in your Conscience, if you have any Conscience, though I were in my grave, and so unable to prove any thing. And as for the two Tenants, they be as they be, and I trust to see them handled according as they be; for there be three men yet alive, that dare swear upon a Book, that they both did agree. But what should we look for at such men's hands, when you your self play the part you do? Verum vivit adhuc Deus, qui videt omnia, & judicat juxta, &c. But God is yet alive, which seeth all, and judgeth justly.

Item Sir, you said yet further, that the Justices of Peace in the Country think you very unnatural, in talking part with me before your Brother, &c. Ah Master N. what a sentence is this to come out of your mouth? For partaking is one thing, and ministering of justice is another thing; and a worthy minister of justice will be no partaker, but one indifferent between party and party. And did I require you to take my part, I pray you? No, I required you to minister justice between your Brother and my Neighbour, without any partaking with either other. But what manner of Justices be they, I pray you, which would so fain have you to take part naturally with your Brother, when you ought and should reform and amend your Brother? as you your self know, no man better. What? Justices? no, Jugglers you might more worthily call such as they be, than Justices. Be they those Justices which call you 'unnatural, for that you will not take your Brothers part against all right and Conscience, whom you had picked out and appointed to have the final hearing and determining of my Neighbours cause, after your substantial and final award making? Verily I think no less. Forsooth he is much beholding to you, and I also for his sake. Is that the wholesome counsel that you have to give your poor Neighbours in their need? Indeed you shew your self a worthy Juggler: Oh, I would have said a Justice, among other of your juggling and partaking Justices. Deum benum! O good God! what is in the world? Marry Sir, my Neighbour had spun a fair thread, if your partaking Justices through your good counsel had had his matter in ordering and finishing. I pray God save me and all my Friends, with all Gods flock, from the whole fellowship of your so natural and partaking Justices, Amen.

Lord God! who would have thought that there had been so many partaking Justices, that is to say, unjust Justices in Warwickshire, if Master N. himself one of the same order (but altogether out of order) and therefore knoweth it best, had not told us the Tale? But these call you, you say, very unnatural, &c. And why not rather, I pray you, too much natural? For we read, De natura duplici, integra & corrupta. Illa erat justitia plena: hac nisi reparata, semper manet injusta, injustitiae fructus alios post alios partitura, i. Of a double nature, sound and corrupt. That was full of Justice: this, unless it be restored, abideth always unjust, bringing forth the fruits of wickedness one after another: So that he that will not help his Brother, having a just cause in his need, may be justly called unnatural, as not doing juxta infinitum naturae, sive integritatis, sive reparatae, i. according to the infinit of nature, either as it was at the beginning, or as it was restored. But he that will take his Brothers part against right, as to ratify his Brothers wrong deceiving, he is too much natural, tantum sequens ingenium sive inclinationem naturae corruptae, contra voluntatem Dei, i. as one following the disposition and inclination of corrupt nature against the will of God; and so to be natural may seem to be Cater-cousin, or Cousin-germain with, to be Diabolical.

I fear me we have too many Justices that be too much natural, to their own perillment both Body and Soul. For worthy Justices having ever the fear and dread of God before their eyes, (quales sunt pauciores apud nos, quam vellemus) Of which sort we have a fewer amongst us, than I would) will have no respect at all in their Judgments and proceedings, ad propinquitatem sanguinis, i. to vicinity of Blood; but altogether ad dignitatem & aequitatem causae, ut quod injustum est semper judicent intuitu Dei, non quod injustum est intuitu hominum; of which number I pray God make you one, Amen. Justus est (saith John) qui facit justitiam. At qui facit peccatum (id quod facit, quisquis injuste facit in gratiam & favorem alius hominis) ex Diabolo est. He is just that doth Justice. But he that sinneth (as they all do, which do unjustly for favour and pleasure of men) is of the Devil (saith he) of which sort all our partaking and natural Justices be with all their partiality and naturality. Quare dignum & justum est, that as many as be such Justices, juste precor ut muerent, & amplius quoque plebentur pro suis quique facinorosis quantitate, ut vel sic tandem abscederent, tanquam nati in incommensurabilem reipublicae nostrae, qui nos conturbant, cum adjuvare debent, i. Be justly deprived of their offices, and further also be punished, according to the quantity or quality of their Crime, so that by that means they may be cut off, as men born and bred to the hurt and detriment of the Common-wealth, which trouble us, when they ought to help us, Amen.

Quare sponite justitiam, & sequimini naturam, as your Naturals and Diabolicals would have you to do, that is, even as just as German Lips, which came not together by nine mile, Ut vulgo dicunt, &c.

Item Sir, finally and last of all you added these words following: Well, quoth you, let Mr. Latimer take heed how he meddleth with my Brother, for he is like to find as crabbed and as froward a piece of him, as ever he found in his life, &c. Ah Sir? and is your Brother such an one as you speak of indeed? Merciful God! what a commendation is this for one Brother to give another? Esne ejusmodi glorioso tuae, mi amice? i. Is this your glorying my Friend? And were it not possible, trow you, to make him better? It is written, Vexatio dat intellectum, i. Vexation giveth understanding. And again, Bonum mihi, Domine, quod humiliasti me, i. It is good, O Lord, that thou hast humbled me. At least way, I may pray to God for him as David did for such like, Ad hunc modum; Chamo & fratri maxillas eorum confringe, qui non approximaunt ad te, i. After this sort; Bind fast Asses with bridle and snaffle, that they approach not near unto thee. never known either of you both; for so should I have been without this inward sorrow of my heart, to see such untowardness of you both to godliness; for I cannot be but heavy-hearted, to see such men so wickedly minded. Well, let us ponder a little better your words, where you say, I shall find him as crabbed and as froward a piece, &c. Mark well your own words. For by the tenor of the same it plainly appeareth, that you confesse your Brothers cause wherein he so stiffly standeth, to be unjust and very naught. For he that standeth so stiffly in a good quarrel and a just cause, as many good men have done, is called a fast man, a constant, a trusty man. But he that is so obstinate and untractable in wickedness and wrong doing, is commonly called a crabbed and froward piece, as you name your Brother to be.

Wherefore knowing so well your Brothers cause to be so naughty, why have you not endeavoured your self, as a worthy Justice, to reform him accordingly, as I required you, and you promised me to do, now almost twelve months ago, if not altogether. Summa Summarum, Master N. if you will not come off shortly, and apply your self thereunto more effectually hereafter, then you have heretofore, be you well assured thereof, I shall detect you to all the Friends that I have in England, both high and low, as well his crabbedness and frowardness, as your colourable supposition of the same; that I trust I shall be able thereby either to bring you both to some goodness, or at least way I shall so warn my Friends and all honest hearts to beware of your illness, that they shall take either no hurt at all, or at least way less harm by you through mine advertisement; in that, knowing you perfectly, they may the better avoid and shun your Company. You shall not stay me, Master N. no though you would give me all the lands and goods you have, as rich as you are noted to be. Ego nolo tam justam causam derelinquere, ego nolo peccatis alienis in hac parte communicare, &c. I will not forsake such a just cause, neither will I communicate with other mens sins. For whether it be per detestabilem superbiam, i. by detestable pride: whether per abominabilem avaritiam, i. by abominable avarice: or by both two linked together, it is no small inquiry to keep any poor man so long from his right and duty so stiff-neckedly and obstinately, or, whether ye will, crabbedly and frowardly. And what is it then any manner of ways to consent to the same? You know, I trow, Master N. Furtum quid sit, nempe, quovismodo auferre vel retinere alienam rem invito Domino, ut quidam definiunt. Si fir sit qui sic palam facit, quis erit qui facientem probat, tutatur, propugnat, vel quibuscunque ambagibus suffulcit? id est. What theft is, that is, to take or detain by any manner of way another mans good against his will that is the owner, as some define it. If he be a thief that so doth openly, what shall he be that approveth him which is the doer, defendeth, maintaineth, and supporteth him by any manner of colour? Consider with your self good Master N. Quid sit opprimere & fraudare in negotio fratrem, i. What it is to oppress, and to defraud your Brother in his business, and what followeth thereof. It is truly said, Non tollitur peccatum, nisi restituatur ablatum, i. The sin is not forgiven, nisi restituatur ablatum, i. The sin is not forgiven, except the thing be restored again that is taken away. No restitution, no salvation; which is as well to be understood, de rebus per fraudes, technas, & dolos, ut de rebus per manifestum furtum & latrocinium paritis, i. Of things gotten by fraud, guile, and deceit, as of things gotten by open theft and robbery. Wherefore let not your Brother, Master N. by cavillation continue in the Devils possession. I will do the best I can, and wrestle with the Devil, omnis viribus, to deliver you both from him. I will leave no one stone unmoved to have both you and your Brother saved. There is neither Archbishop nor Bishop, nor yet any learned man neither in Universities or elsewhere, that I am acquainted withal, that shall not write unto you, and in their writing by their learning confute you. There is no godly man of Law in this Realm that I am acquainted withal, but they shall write unto you, and confute you by the Law. There is neither Lord nor Lady, nor yet any noble personage in this Realm, that I am acquainted withal, but they shall write unto you, and godly threaten you with their Authority.

I will do all this; yea, and kneel upon both my knees before the Kings Majesty, and all his honourable Council, with most humble petition for your reformation, rather than the Devil shall possess you still, to your final damnation. So that I do not despair, but verily trust, one way or other, to pluck both you and also your crabbed Brother, as crabbed as you say he is, out of the Devils claws, maugre the Devils heart.

These premises well considered, look upon it, good Master N. that we have no further ado: Gods plague is presently upon us; therefore let us now diligently look about us, and in no wise defend, but willingly acknowledge and amend whatsoever hath been amiss. These were the capital points of your talk, as I was informed, after you had perused that may nipping and unpleasant Letter? and I thought good to make you some answer to them, if perchance I might so move you, the rather to call your self to some better remembrance, and so more earnestly apply your self to accomplish and perform what you have begun and promised to do, namely, the thing it self; being of such sort, as apparently tendeth both to your worship, and also to Gods high pleasure.

Thus, lo, with a mad head, but yet a good will, after long scribbling I wot not well what (but I know you can read it, and comprehend it well enough) I bid you most heartily well to fare in the Lord, with good health, and long life to Gods pleasure, Amen. From Boxley the 15 of June.

During the time that the said Master Latimer was Prisoner in Oxford, we read not of much that he did write, besides his Conference with Dr. Ridley, and his protestation at the time of his disputation. Otherwise, of Letters we find very few or none that he did write to his Friends abroad, save only these few lines, which he wrote to one Mrs. Wilkinson of London, a godly Matron, and an exile afterward for the Gospel sake. Who so long as she remained in England, was a singular Patroness to the good Saints of God, and learned Bishops, as to Master Hooper, to the Bishop of Hereford, to Master Coverdale, Master Latimer, Doctor Cramer, with many other. The Copie and effect of which his Letter to Mrs. Wilkinson here followeth.

A Letter sent to Mrs. Wilkinson of London Widow, from Mr. Hugh Latimer out of Bocardo, in Oxford.

If the gift of a pot of Water shall not be in oblivion with God, how can God forget your manifold and bountiful gifts, when he shall say to you; I was in Prison, and you visited me? God grant us all to do and suffer while we be here, as may be to his will and pleasure, Amen.

Yours in Bocardo,
Hugh Latimer.

Touching the memorable acts and doings of this worthy man, among many other this is not to be neglected, what a bold enterprize he attempted, in sending to King Henry a Present, the manner whereof is this. There was then, and remaineth still an old custom received from the old Romans, that upon New-years day being the first day of January, every Bishop with some handson New-Years gift should gratify the King; and so they did, some with gold, some with silver, some with a purse full of money, and some one thing, some another: but Mr. Latimer being Bishop of Worcester then, among the rest, presented a New Testament for his New-years gift, with a napkin having this pious about it, Fornicatores & adulteros judicabit Dominus.

And thus hast thou (gentle Reader) the whole life, both of M. Ridley, and of M. Latimer, two worthy doers in the Church of Christ, severally and by themselves set forth and described, withal their doings, writings, disputations, sufferings, their painful travels, faithful preachings, studious service in Christs Church, their patient imprisonment, and constant fortitude in that which they had taught, with all other their proceedings from time to time, since their first springing years, to this present time and month of Queen Marys being

Wherefore as we have heretofore declared both their Lives severally and distinctly one from the other; so now joyntly to couple them both together, as they were together both joynted in one society of Cause and Martyrdom, we will by the grace of Christ prosecute the rest that remaineth concerning their latter examination, degrading, and constant suffering, with the order and manner also of the Commissioners, which were Mr. White Bishop of Lincoln, Mr. Brooks Bishop of Gloucester, with others, and what were their Words, their Objections, their Orations there used, and what again were the Answers of these men to the same as in the process here followeth to be seen.

The order and manner of the Examination of Dr. Ridley, and Mr. Latimer had the 30th day of September, 1555.

The last examination of Mr. Ridley
and Mr. Latimer.

First, after the appearing of Thomas Cranmer Archbishop of Canterbury before the Popes Delegate, and the Queens Commissioners in St. Maries Church at Oxford, about the 12. day of September, whereof more shall be said (by the Lords grace) when we come to the death of the said Archbishop; shortly after, upon the 28. of the said month of September, was sent down to Oxford another Commission from Cardinal Pool Legate à latere, to John White Bishop of Lincoln, to Dr. Brooks Bishop of Gloucester, and to Dr. Holman Bishop of Bristol. The contents and verue of which Commission was, that the said John of Lincoln, James of Gloucester, and John of Bristol, they, or two of them should have full power and authority, to ascite, examine and judge Mr. Hugh Latimer, and Master Dr. Ridley, pretended Bishops of Worcester and London, for divers and sundry erroneous Opinions, which the said Hugh Latimer and Nicholas Ridley did hold and maintain in open Disputations had in Oxford, in the months of May, June, and July, in the year of our Lord 1554. as long before in the time of perdition, and since. The which Opinions if the named Persons would now recant, giving and yielding themselves to the determination of the Universal and Catholick Church, planted by Peter in the blessed See of Rome, that then they deputed Judges, by the said authority of their Commission, should have power to receive the said penitent Persons, and forthwith minister unto them the reconciliation of the holy Father the Pope; but if the said Hugh Latimer, and Nicholas Ridley would stoutly and stubbornly defend and maintain these their erroneous Opinions and Assertions, that then the said Lords by their Commission should proceed in form of judgment, according to the Law of Hereticks, that is, degrading them from their promotion and dignity of Bishops, Priests, and all other Ecclesiastical Orders, should pronounce them as Hereticks; and therefore cleane cut them off from the Church, and so yield them to receive punishments due to all such Heretic and Schism.

The effect of the Cardinals Commission sent

Oxford.

Dr. Ridley and Mr. Latimer
ascited to appear the last day of September.

Wherefore the last of September the said two persons, Nicholas Ridley and Hugh Latimer, were ascited to appear before the said Lords, in the Divinity School at Oxford, at eight of the Clock. At what time thither repaired the Lords, placing themselves in the high Seat, made for publick Lectures and Disputations, according to the usage of that School, being then fair set, and trimmed with Cloth of Tissue, and Cushions of Velvet: and after the said Lords were placed and set, the said Latimer and Ridley were sent for: and first appeared Master Dr. Ridley, and anon Mr. Latimer. But because it seemed good severally to examine them, Mr. Latimer was kept back until Dr. Ridley was thoroughly examined. Therefore, soon after the coming of Dr. Ridley into the School, the Commission was published by an appointed Notary, and openly read. But Dr. Ridley standing bareheaded, humbly expecting the cause of that his appearance, as if he had heard the Cardinal named, and the Popes Holiness, put on his Cap. Wherefore after the Commission was published, in form and sense above specified, the Bishop of Lincoln spake in sense following.

Bish. Ridley putteth on his Cap, at the hearing of the Popes name.

Lincoln. Master Ridley, although neither I, neither my Lords here, in respect of our own persons do look for Cap or Knee, yet because we bear and represent such persons as we do, that is my Lord Cardinals Grace, Legate à latere to the Popes Holiness, as well in that he is of a notable Parentage (and therewith Mr. Ridley moved his Cap with lowly obeysance) descending from the Regal Blood, as in that he is a man worthy to be revered with all humility, for his great knowledge and learning, noble vertues, and godly life, and especially in that he is here in England Deputy to the Popes Holiness, it should have become you at this name to have uncovered your head. Wherefore except you will of your own self take the pains to put your hand to your head, and at the nomination, as well of the said Cardinal, as of the Popes Holiness, uncover the same, lest that this your contumacy, exhibited now before us, should be prejudicial to the said most reverend Persons (which thing we may in no case suffer) you shall cause us to take the pain, to cause some man to pluck off your Cap from you. To whom Mr. Ridley making his petition for licence, answered:

Ridley. As touching that you said (my Lord) that you of your own persons desire no Cap nor Knee, but only require the same, in consideration that you represent the Cardinal Graces person, I do you to wit, and thereupon make my protestation, that I did put on my Cap at the naming of the Cardinals Grace, neither for any contumacy that I bear towards your own persons, neither for any derogation of honour toward the Lord Cardinals Grace. For I know him to be a man worthy of all humility, reverence, and honour, in that he came of the most Regal Blood, and in that he is a man indued with manifold graces of learning and vertue, and as touching these verities and points, I with all humility (therewith be put of his Cap, and bowed his Knee) and obeysance that I may, will reverence and honour his Grace; but in that he is Legate to the Bishop of Rome (and therewith put on his Cap) whose usurped Supremacy, and abused Authority I utterly refuse and renounce, I may in no wise give any obeysance or honour unto him, lest that my so doing, and behaviour might be prejudicial to mine Oath, and derogation to the verity of Gods Word: and therefore that I might not only by confession profits the verity in not reverencing the renounced Authority, contrary to Gods Word, but also in gesture, in behaviour, and all my doings express the same, I have put on my Cap, and for this consideration only; and not for any contumacy to your Lordships, neither contempt of this worshipful Audience, neither derogation of any honour due to the Cardinal his Grace, both for his noble Parentage, and also his excellent qualities, I have kept on my Cap.

Lincoln. Master Ridley, you excuse your self of that, with the which we pressed you not, in that you protest you keep on your Cap, neither for any contumacy towards us, (which look for no such honour of you) neither for any contempt of this Audience: which although justly they may, yet (as I suppose) in this case do not require any such obeysance of you; neither in derogation of any honour due to my Lord Cardinals Grace, for his Regal descent (at which word Mr. Ridley moved his Cap) and excellent qualities; for although in all the premises honour be due, yet in these respects we require none of you, but only in that my Lord Cardinals Grace is here in England, Deputy of the Popes Holiness (at which word the Lords and others put off their Caps, and Mr. Ridley put on his) and therefore we say unto you the second time, that except you take the pains your self, to put your hand to your head, and put off your Cap, you shall put us to the pain, to cause some man to take it from you, except you alledge some infirmity and sickness, or other more reasonable cause, upon the consideration whereof we may do as we think good.

Ridley. The premises I said only for this end, that it might as well appear to your Lordships, as to this worshipful Audience, why and for what consideration I used such kind of behaviour, in not humbling my self to your Lordships with Cap and Knee: and as for my sickness, I thank my Lord God, that I am as well at ease, as I was this long season; and therefore I do not pretend that which is not, but only this, that it might appear by this my behaviour, that I acknowledge in no point that usurped Supremacy of Rome, and therefore contemn

Then the Bishop of Lincoln, after the third admonition, commanded one of the Beadles (that is an Officer of the University) to pluck his Cap from his head. M. Ridley bowing his head to the Officers, gently permitted him to take away his Cap.

After this the Bishop of Lincoln in a long Oration exhorted Mr. Ridley to recant, and submit himself to the Universal Faith of Christ, in this manner.

Lincoln. Mr. Ridley, I am sure you have sufficiently pondered with your self the effect of this our Commission with good advantage, considering both points thereof, how that Authority is given to us, if you shall receive the true Doctrine of the Church (which first was founded by * Peter at Rome immediately after the death of Christ, and from him by lineal succession hath been brought to this our time) if you will be content to renounce your former Errors, recant your heretical and seditious Opinions, content to yield your self to the undoubted Faith, and Truth of the Gospel, received and always taught of the Catholic and Apostolick Church, the which the King and Queen, all the Nobles of this Realm, and Commons of the same, all Christian People have and do confess, you only standing alone by your self. You understand and perceive, I am sure, that Authority is given us to receive you, to reconcile you and upon due penance to adjoin and associate you again into the number of the Catholics and Christs Church, from the which you have so long strayed, without the which no man can be saved, the which thing I and my Lords here, yea and all, as well Nobles and Commons of this realm most heartily desire, and I for my part (where-with he put off his Cap) most earnestly exhort you to do.

Remember (Mr. Ridley) it is no strange Country whither I exhort you to return. You were once one of us, you have taken degrees in the School. You were made a Priest, and became a Preacher, setting forth the same Doctrine which we do now. You were made Bishop according to our Laws; and to be short, it is not so long ago, since you separated your self from us, and in the time of Heretic became a fether forth of that devilish and seditious Doctrine which in these later days was preached amongst us. For at what time the new Doctrine of only Faith began to spring, the Council willing to win my Lord Chancellor, sent you to him (I then being in my Lords house unknown as I suppose to you) and after you had talked with my Lord secretly, and were departed, immediately my Lord declared certain points of your talk, and means of your pervasion, and amongst other this was one, that you should say, (i) Tush my Lord, this matter of justification is but a trifle, let us not stick to contend herein to them; but for Gods love my Lord, stand stoutly in the verity of the Sacrament: for I fee they will assault that also. If this be true (as my Lord is a man credible enough in such a matter) hereby it is declared of what mind you were then, as touching the Truth of the most blessed Sacrament.

Also in a Sermon of yours at Pauls Crofs, you as effectually and as Catholicly spake of that blessed Sacrament, as any man might have done, whereby it appeareth that it is no strange thing, nor unknown place whereunto I exhort you. I wish you to return thither from whence you came: that is together with us to acknowledge the Church of God, wherein no man may err, to acknowledge the Supremacy of our most reverend Father in God the Popes Holiness, which (as I said) lineally taketh his descent from Peter, upon whom Christ promised before his death, to build his Church; the which supremacy or prerogative, the most ancient Fathers in all ages, in all times did acknowledge; and here he brought a place or two out of the Doctors, but especially stayed upon a saying of Saint Augustine, which is written in this manner, Totus orbis Christianus in transmarinis, & longe remotis terris Romanæ Ecclesiæ subiectus est, i. All the Christian Countries beyond the Sea are subject to the Church of Rome. Here you see, Mr. Ridley, that all Christendom is subject to the Church of Rome. What should I say you therefore to confess the same with St. Austin, and the other Fathers.

Then Mr. Ridley desired his patience; to suffer him to speak somewhat of the premises, lest the multitude of things might confound his memory; and having grant thereunto, he said in this manner.

Ridley. My Lord, I most heartily thank your Lordship, as well for your gentleness, as also for your sobriety in talk, and for your good and favourable zeal in this learned exhortation; in the which I have marked especially three points, which you used to persuade me to leave my Doctrine and Religion, which I perfectly know and am thoroughly persuaded to be grounded not upon mans imagination and decrees, but upon the infallible Truth of Christs Gospel, and not to look back, and to return to the Romish See, contrary to mine Oath, contrary to the Prerogative and Crown of this Realm, and especially (which moveth me most) contrary to the expressed Word of God.

The first point is this, that the See of Rome taking his beginning from Peter, upon whom you say Christ hath builded his Church, hath in all ages lineally from Bishop to Bishop been brought to this time.

Secondly, that even the holy Fathers from time to time have in their writings confessed the same.

Thirdly, that in that I was once of the same Opinion, and together with you I did acknowledge the same.

First, as touching the saying of Christ, from whence your Lordship gathereth the foundation of the Church upon Peter, truly the place is not so to be understood as you take it, as the circumstance of the place will declare. For after that Christ had asked his Disciples whom men judged him to be, and they had answered, that some had said he was a Prophet, some Helias, some one thing, some another, then he said, Whom say ye that I am? Then Peter said, I say that thou art Christ, the Son of God. To whom Christ answered, I say Tu es Petrus, & super hanc petram ædificabo Ecclesiam meam, i. Thou art Peter, and upon this stone I will build my Church; that is to say, upon this stone, not meaning Peter himself, as though he would have constituted a mortal man, so frail and bricke a foundation of his stable and infallible Church; but upon this Rock-stone, that is, this confession of thine, that I am the Son of God, I will build my Church. For this is the foundation and beginning of all Christianity, with word, heart, and mind to confess that Christ is the Son of God. Whosoever believeth not this, Christ is not in him; and he cannot have the mark of Christ printed in his forehead, which confesseth not that Christ is the Son of God.

Therefore Christ said unto Peter, that upon this Rock, that is, upon this his confession, that he was Christ the Son of God, he would build his Church; to declare, that without this Faith no man can come to Christ: so that this belief, that Christ is the Son of God is the foundation of our Christianity, and the foundation of our Church. Here you see upon what foundation Christs Church is built, not upon the frailty of man, but upon the stable and infallible Word of God.

Now as touching the lineal descent of the Bishops in the See of Rome, true it is, that the Patriarchs of Rome in the Apostles time, and long after, were great maintainers and letters forth of Christs glory, in the which above all other Countries and Regions there especially was preached the true Gospel, the Sacraments were most duly ministered; and as before Christs coming it was a City so valiant in prowels, and martial affairs, that all the world was in a manner subject to it, and after Christs Passion, divers of the Apostles there suffered persecution for the Gospels sake: so after that the Emperors, their hearts being illuminated, received the Gospel, and became Christians, the Gospel there, as well for the great power and dominion, as for the fame of the place, flourished most, whereby the Bishops of that place were had in more reverence and honour, most esteemed in all Councils and Assemblies, not because they acknowledged them to be their Head, but because the place was most revered and spoken of, for the great power and strength of the same. As now here in England, the Bishop of Lincoln in Sessions and Sittings hath the Preheminence of the other Bishops, not that he is the Head and Ruler of them; but for the dignity of the Bishoprick

The Perogative that the Doctors give to the See of Rome, and for what cause. The See of Rome, so long as it continues in formal Doctrine, was worthy to be revered. The Bishop of Rome proved to be a traitor.

(and therewith the People smiled.) Wherefore the Doctors in their Writings have spoken most reverently of this See of Rome, and in their writings preferred it, and this is the Prerogative which your Lordship did rehearse the ancient Doctors to give to the See of Rome.

Seemably, I cannot, nor dare not but commend, reverence, and honour the See of Rome, as long as it continued in the promotion, and setting forth of Gods glory, and in due preaching of the Gospel, as it did many years after Christ. But after that the Bishop of that See, seeking their own pride, and not Gods honour, began to set themselves above Kings and Emperours, challenging to them the title of Gods Vicars, the dominion and supremacy over all the world, I cannot but with St. Gregory a Bishop of Rome also, confess that the Bishop of that place is the very true Antichrist, whereof St. John speaketh by the name of the Whore of Babylon, and say with the said St. Gregory; he that maketh himself a Bishop over all the world, is worse than Antichrist.

The place of St. Lewis answered.

Four Patriarchs in the Church in Austine time.

Countries beyond the Sea subject to Rome, how and in what respect.

Rome may be Mother of Churches, and yet not supreme Head of Churches.

Now whereas you say St. Augustine should seem not only to give such a Prerogative, but also Supremacy to the See of Rome, in that he saith, all the Christian world is subject to the Church of Rome, and therefore should give to that See a certain kind of subjection: I am sure that your Lordship knoweth, that in St. Austins time there were four Patriarchs, of Alexandria, Constantinople, Antioch, and Rome, which Patriarchs had under them certain Countries; as in England the Archbishop of Canterbury hath under him divers Bishops in England and Wales, to whom he may be said to be their Patriarch. Also your Lordship knoweth right well, that at what time St. Austin wrote this Book, he was then Bishop in Africa. Farther you are not ignorant, that between Europe and Africa lieth the Sea called Mare Mediterraneum, so that all the Countries in Europe to him which is in Africa may be called Transmarinae, Countries beyond the Sea. Hereof St. Austin saith, Totus orbis Christianus in transmarinis & longe remotis terris, Ecclesie Romanæ subiectus est. i. All the Christian Countries beyond the Seas and far Regions, are subject to the See of Rome. If I should say all Countries beyond the Sea, I do except England, which to me now being in England, is not beyond the Sea. In this sense St. Austin saith, All the Countries beyond the Sea are subject to the See of Rome, declaring thereby that Rome was one of the Sees of the four Patriarchs, and under it Europe, by what subjection I pray you? only for a preeminence, as we here in England say, that all the Bishops in England are subject to the Archbishop of Canterbury and York.

For this preeminence also the other Doctors (as you recited) say, that Rome is the Mother of Churches, as the Bishoprick of Lincoln is Mother to the Bishoprick of Oxford, because the Bishoprick of Oxford came from the Bishoprick of Lincoln, and they were both once one, and so is the Archbishoprick of Canterbury Mother to the other Bishopricks which are in her Province. In like sort the Archbishoprick of York is Mother to the North-Bishopricks; and yet no man will say, that Lincoln, Canterbury or York, is supreme Head to other Bishopricks; neither then ought we to confess the See of Rome to be supreme Head, because the Doctors in their Writings confess the See of Rome to be Mother of Churches.

Now where you say, I was once of the same Religion which you are of, the truth is, I cannot but confess the same. Yet so was St. Paul a persecutor of Christ. But in that you say, that I was one of you not long ago, in that I doing my message to my Lord of Winchester, should desire him to stand stout in that gross opinion of the Supper of the Lord; in very deed I was sent (as your Lordship said) from the Council to my Lord of Winchester, to exhort him to receive also the true confession of Justification; and because he was very refractory, I said to him, Why, my Lord, what make you so great a matter herein? You see many Anabaptists rise against the Sacrament of the Altar; I pray you, my Lord, be diligent in confounding of them: for at that time my Lord of Winchester and I had to do with two Anabaptists in Kent. In this sense I would say

Lord to be stiff in the defence of the Sacrament against the detestable errors of Anabaptists, and not in the confirmation of that gross and carnal Opinion now maintained.

In like sort as touching the Sermon which I made at St. Pauls, you shall understand that there were at St. Pauls, and divers other places, fixed railing Bills against the Sacrament, terming it Jack of the Box, the Sacrament of the Halter, Round Robin, with such like unseemly terms; for the which cause, I to rebuke the un-reverend behaviour of certain evil disposed persons, preached as reverently of that matter as I might, declaring what estimation and reverence ought to be given to it, what danger ensued the mishandling thereof, affirming in that Sacrament to be truly and verily the Body and Blood of Christ, effectually by grace and spirit; which words the unlearned understanding not, supposed that I had meant of the gross and carnal being which the Romish Decrees set forth, that a Body having life and motion, should be indeed under the shapes of Bread and Wine.

With that the Bishop of Lincoln somewhat interrupting him, said:

Line. Well, Mr. Ridley, thus you wrest places to your own pleasure; for whereas St. Augustine saith, that the whole Christian world is subject to the See of Rome without any limitation, and useth these words, In transmarinis & longe remotis terris, only to express the latitude of the Dominion of the See of Rome, willing thereby to declare that all the world, yea Countries far distant from Rome, yet nevertheless are subject to that See, yet you would wrest it, and leave it only to Europe. I am sure ye will not deny, but that Totus mundus is more than Europe.

Rid. Indeed, my Lord, if St. Austin had said simpliciter totus mundus, and not added in transmarinis, it had been without limitation; but in that he said, Totus mundus in transmarinis partibus, all the Countries beyond the Seas, he himself doth limit the universal proposition, declaring how far he meant by totus mundus.

The Bishop not staying for his answer, did proceed, saying:

Line. Well, if I should stay upon this place, I could bring many more places of the Fathers for the confirmation thereof; but we have certain instructions, according to the which we must proceed, and came not hither to dispute the matter with you, but only to take your answers to certain Articles, and used this in the way of disputation, in the which you interrupted me; wherefore I will return thither again.

Ye must consider that the Church of Christ lieth not hidden, but is a City on the Mountain, and a Candle on the Candlestick. Ponder with your self, that the Church of Christ is Catholica, Catholick, which is deduced of καθολος, that is, per omnia: so that Christs Church is universally spread throughout the world, not contained in the * allegation of places, not comprehended in the circuit of England, not contained in the compass of Germany and Saxony, as your Church is.

Wherefore (Mr. Ridley) for Gods love be ye not singular; acknowledge with all the Realm the Truth, it shall not be (as you alledge) prejudicial to the Crown; for the King and Queen their Majesties have renounced that usurped Power taken of their predecessors, and justly have renounced it. For I am sure you know that there are two Powers, the one declared by the Sword, the other by the Keys. The Sword is given to Kings and Rulers of Countries; the Keys were delivered by Christ to Peter, and of him left to all the Successors. As touching our goods, position and lives, we with you acknowledge us subjects to the King and Queen, who hath the temporal Sword; but as concerning matters of Religion, as touching Gods quarrel and his Word, we acknowledge another Head: and as the King and the Queen their Highness do in all the worldly affairs justly challenge the Prerogative and Primacy, so in Spiritual and Ecclesiastical matters they acknowledge themselves not to be Heads and Rulers, but members of Christs Body. Why therefore should ye stick at that matter, the which their Majesties have forsaken and yielded.

Where-

Anno 1555.

Dr. Ridley mistaken in his Sermon.

Lincoln answered.

And why then do you allege it to the City of Rome?

Two Powers, of the Keys, and of the Sword.

England, how subject to the King, and how to the Pope.

ANNO 1555.
B. Ridley exposed to fellow him fell the Popes.

Wherefore (Mr. Ridley) you shall not onely not do injury to the Crown, and be prejudicial to their Majesties honour; in acknowledging with all Christendom the Popes Holiness to be supreme Head of Christs Church here militant in earth, but do a thing most detestable in their sight, and most desired of his Holiness. Thus if you will do, revoking together all your errors, acknowledging with the residue of the Realm the common and the publick fault, you shall do that all men most heartily desire; you shall bring quietness to your Conscience, and health to your Soul; then shall we with great joy, by the Authority committed to us from the Cardinals Grace, receive you into the Church again, acknowledging you to be no longer a rotten, but a lively member of the same: but if you shall still be singular, if you shall still and obstinately persevere in your errors, stubbornly maintaining your former Heresies, then we must against our will, according to our Commission, separate you from us, and cut you off from the Church, lest the rottenness of one part in process of time purrifie and corrupt the whole body, then must we confesse and publish you to be none of ours; then must we yield you up to the temporal Judges, of whom, except it otherwise please the King and Queens Highness, you must receive punishment by the Laws of this Realm, due for Heresicks.

Fear of punishment brought him before him.

* But that office you your selves have assigned unto them.

Wherefore, Mr. Ridley, consider your state, remember your former degrees, spare your body, especially consider your Soul, which Christ so dearly bought with his precious Blood, do not you rashly cut away that which was precious in Gods sight; enforce not us to do all that we may do, which is not onely to publish you to be none of us, to cut you off from the Church: we do not, nor cannot condemn you to discontinue, as most untruly hath been reported of us; but that is the temporal Judges Office; we onely declare you to be none of the Church, and then must you, according to the tenour of them, and pleasure of the Rulers, abide their determination, so that we, after that we have given you up to the temporal Rulers, have no further to do with you.

But I trust (Master Ridley) we shall not have occasion to do that we may. I trust you will suffer us to rest in that point of our Commission, which we most heartily desire, that is, upon recantation and repentance to receive you, to reconcile you, and again to adjoyn you to the Unity of the Church.

Then Master Ridley, with often interruption, at length spake.

Ridley My Lord, I acknowledge an unpotted Church of Christ, in the which no man can err, without the which no man can be saved, the which is spread thorough all the World, that is, the Congregation of the faithful; neither do I alligate or bind the same to any one place, as you said, but confesse the same to be spread thorough out all the World; and where Christs Sacraments are duly ministred, his Gospel truly preached and followed, there doth Christs Church shine as a City upon an hill, and as a candle in the candlestick: but rather it is such as you that would have the Church of Christ bound to a place, which appoint the same to Rome, that there and no where else is the foundation of Christs Church. But I am fully perswaded that Christs Church is every where founded, in every place where his Gospel is truly received, and effectually followed. And in that the Church of God is in doubt, I use herein the wise Counsel of Vincentius Lyrinensis, whom I am sure you will allow, who giving precepts how the Catholick Church may be in all Schisms and Heresies known, writeth in this manner: When (saith he) one part is corrupted with Heresies, then preferre the whole World before that one part; but if the greatest part be infected, then preferre antiquity.

In like sort now, when I perceive the greatest part of Christianity to be infected with the poison of the See of Rome, I repair to the usage of the Primitive Church, which I find clean contrary to the Popes decrees; as in that the Priest receiveth alone, that it is made unlawful to the Laity to receive in both kinds, and such like: Wherefore it requirith, that I preferre the Antiquity of the Primitive Church, before the Novelty of the Romish Church.

Lincoln. Master Ridley, these faults which you charge the See of Rome withal, are indeed no faults. For first, it was never forbid the Laity; but that they might, if they demanded, receive under both kinds. You know also; that Christ after his resurrection, at what time he went with his Apostles to Galilee, opened himself by breaking of Bread. You know that Saint Paul after his long sayling towards Rome brake Bread, and that the Apostles came together in breaking of Bread, which declareth that it is not unlawful to minister the Sacrament under the form of Bread only: and yet the Church had just occasion to decree, that the Laity should receive in one kind only, thereby to take away an opinion of the unlearned, that Christ was not wholly both Flesh and Blood under the form of Bread. Therefore to take away their opinion, and to establish better the Peoples Faith, the Holy Ghost in the Church thought fit to decree, that the Laity should receive onely in one kind; and it is no news for the Church upon just consideration to alter Rites and Ceremonies. For you read in the Acts of the Apostles, that Saint Paul writing to certain of the Gentiles, which had received the Gospel, biddeth them to abstain a suffocato & sanguine, from things stifted, and from Blood, so that this seemeth to be an expresse commandment; yet who will say but that it is lawful to eat bloodings? how is it lawful, but by the permission of the Church.

the Bishop

of the Apostles of struggled and bloodings:

ve hath

Answer.
The precept of the Apostles was but for a time, and for a purpose, by little and little to win
the Jews.

Ridley. My Lord, such things as St. Paul enjoined to the Gentiles for a sufferance, by a little and little to win the Jews to Christ, were onely commandments of time, and respected not the successors: but Christs Commandment, Do this (that is, that which he did in remembrance, which was not to minister in one kind onely) was not a commandment for a time, but to persevere to the Worlds end.

But the Bishop of Lincoln, not attending to this answer, without any stay proceeded in this Oration.

So that the Church seemeth to have Authority by the Holy Ghost, whom Christ said he would send after his ascension, which should teach the Apostles all truth, to have power and jurisdiction to alter such points of the Scripture, ever reserving the foundation: but we came not, as I said before, in this sort to reason the matter with you, but have certain instructions ministred unto us, according to the tenour of the which we must proceed, proposing certain Articles, unto the which we require your answer directly, either affirmatively, or negatively to every of them, either denying them or granting them without farther disputations or reasoning; for we have already stretch our instructions, in that we suffered you to debate and reason the matter, in such sort as we have done: the which Articles you shall hear now; and to morrow at eight of the clock in Saint Maries Church we will require and take your answers; and then according to the same proceed: and if you require a copy of them, you shall have it, pen, ink, and paper, also such books as you shall demand, if they be to be gotten in the University.

The Articles.

Examination upon the said Articles.

Al these Articles I thought good here to place together, that as often as hereafter rehearshall shall be of any of them, the Reader may have recourse hither, and peruse the same, and not to trouble the story with several repetitions thereof.

Lincoln. After these Articles were read, the Bishops took Councell together. At the last the Bishop of Lincoln said: These are the very same Articles which you in open disputation here in the University did maintain and defend. What say you unto the first? I pray you answer affirmatively, or negatively.

Ridley. Why, my Lord, I supposed your gentleness had been such, that you would have given me space untill to morrow, that upon good advisement I might bring a determinate answer.

Lincoln. Yes, Mr. Ridley, I mean not that your answers now shall be prejudicial to your answers to morrow. I will take your answers at this time, and yet notwithstanding it shall be lawful to you to add, diminish, alter, and change of these answers to morrow what you will.

The Catholics promise faith, but they perform nothing.

The high priests had not power to put Christ to death but they had power to commit him to Pilate, neither would they suffer him to be absolved.

D. Weston sheweth his bold.

Rid. Indeed, in like manner at our last disputations I had many things promised, and few performed. It was said, that after disputations I should have a copy thereof, and license to change nine answers, as I should think good. It was met also that I should have seen what was written by the Notaries at that time. So your Lordship pretended great gentleness in giving me a time; but this gentleness is the same that Christ had of the high Priests. For you, as your Lordship saith, have no power to condemn me, neither at any time to put a man to death: so in like sort the high Priests said, that it was not lawful for them to put any man to death, but committed Christ to Pilate, neither would suffer him to be absolved Christ, although he fought all the means therefore that he might.

Then spake Doctor Weston, one of the audience.

West. What? do you make the King Pilate?

Rid. No, Mr. Doctor; I do but compare your deeds with Caiaphas his deeds and the high Priests, which would condemn no man to death, as ye will not, and yet would not suffer Pilate to absolve and deliver Christ.

Lincoln. Mr. Ridley, we mind not but that you shall enjoy the benefit of answering to morrow, and will take your answers now as now, to morrow you shall change, take out, add, and alter what you will. In the mean season we require you to answer directly to every Article, either affirmatively or negatively.

The protestation of D. Ridley.

Rid. Seeing you appoint me a time to answer to morrow, and yet will take mine answers out of hand: first, I require the Notaries, to take and write my protestation, that in no point I acknowledge your Authority, or admit you to be my Judges, in that point you are authorized from the Pope. Therefore whatsoever I shall say or do, I protest, I neither say it, neither do it willingly, thereby to admit the Authority of the Pope; and if your Lordship will give me leave, I will shew the causes, which move me thereunto.

Lincoln. No, Mr. Ridley, we have instructions to the contrary. We may not suffer you.

Rid. I will be short; I pray your Lordships suffer me to speak in few words.

D. Ridley can not be suffered to speak.

Lincoln. No, Master Ridley, we may not abuse the hearers ears.

Rid. Why, my Lord, suffer me to speak three words.

Lincoln. Well, Mr. Ridley, to morrow you shall speak forty. The time is far past; therefore we require your answer determinately. What say you to the first Article? and thereupon rehearsed the same.

Rid. My protestation alwayes saved, that by this mine answer I do not condescend to your Authority, in that you are Legate to the Pope, I answer thus: In a sense the first Article is true, and in a sense it is false; for if you take really for verè, for spiritually by grace and efficacy, then it is true that the natural Body and Blood of Christ is in the Sacrament verè & realiter, indeed and really; but if you take these terms so grossly, that you would conclude thereby a natural Body having motion, to be contained under the forms of Bread and Wine, verè & realiter, then really is not the Body and Blood of Christ in the Sacrament, no more then the Holy Ghost is in the element of water in our Baptism. Because this answer was not understood. The Notaries wist not how to note it; wherefore the Bishop of Lincoln willed him to answer either affirmatively, or negatively, either to grant the Article, or to deny it.

Ridley. My Lord, you know that where any equivocation (which is a word having two significations) is, except distinction be given, no direct answer can be made; for it is one of Aristotle's fallacies, containing two questions under one which cannot be satisfied with one answer. For both you and I agree herein, that in the Sacrament is the very true and natural Body and Blood of Christ, even that which was born of the Virgin Mary, which ascended into Heaven, which sitteth on the right hand of God the Father, which shall come from thence to judge the quick and the Dead, only we differ in modo, in the way and manner of being: we confess all one thing to be in the Sacrament, and differ in the manner of being there. I being fully by Gods Word thereunto perswaded, confess Christs natural Body to be in the Sacrament indeed by Spirit and grace, because that whosoever receiveth worthily that Bread and Wine, receiveth effectually Christs Body, and drinketh his Blood, that is, he is made effectually partaker of his passion; and you make a grosser kind of being, enclosing a natural, a lively, and a moving Body, under the shape or form of Bread and Wine.

Now, this difference considered, to the question thus I answer, that in the Sacrament of the Altar is the natural Body and Blood of Christ verè & realiter, indeed and really for spiritually by grace and efficacy; for so every worthy receiver receiveth the very true Body of Christ: but if you mean really and indeed, so that thereby you would include a lively and a movable Body under the forms of Bread and wine, then in that sense is not Christs Body in the Sacrament really and indeed.

This answer taken and penned of the Notaries, the Bishop of Lincoln proposed the second question or Article. To whom he answered:

Rid. Alwayes my protestation reserved, I answer thus; that in the Sacrament is a certain change, in that that Bread, which was before common Bread, is now made a lively presentation of Christs Body, and not only a figure, but effectually representeth his Body, that even as the mortal Body was nourished by that visible Bread, so is the internal Soul fed with the heavenly food of Christs Body, which the eyes of faith see, as the bodily eyes see only Bread. Such a Sacramental mutation I grant to be in the Bread and Wine, which truly is no small change, but such a change as no mortal man can make, but only that Omnipotency of Christs Word.

Then the Bishop of Lincoln willed him to answer directly, either affirmatively or negatively, without further declaration of the matter. Then he answered:

Rid. That notwithstanding the Sacramental mutation of the which he spake, and all the Doctors confessed, Sacrament of the true substance and nature of Bread and wine remaineth: with the which the Body is in like sort nourished, as the Soul is by grace and Spirit with the Body of Christ. Even so in Baptism the Body is washed with the visible water, & the Soul is cleansed from all filth by the invisible Holy Ghost, and yet the water ceaseth not to be water, but keepeth the nature of water still: In like sort in the Sacrament of the Lords Supper the Bread ceaseth not to be Bread.

Anno 1555.

The real presence in the Sacrament may have a double sense. Equivocation in the word really. How the Body of Christ may be said to be really, and how not really in the Sacrament.

Questions under one.

The Papists & Protestants in granting the presence disagree only in the manner of being they differ. How Christs Body is effectually received in the Sacrament.

How Christ may be really in the Sacrament, and how not.

What change is in the Sacramental Bread. Sacramental mutation. The substance of Bread and Wine in the Sacrament not changed.

Comparison between the Sacrament of the Communion and of Baptism.

ANNO Then the Notaries penned, that he answered affirmatively to the second Article. The Bishop of Lincoln declared a difference between the Sacrament of the Altar and Baptism, because that Christ said not by the Water, this is the holy Ghost, as he did by the Bread; This is my Body.

Then Mr. Ridley recited St. Austin which conferred both the Sacraments the one with the other: but the Bishop of Lincoln notwithstanding thereupon recited the third Article, and required a direct answer. To whom Ridley said?

Rid. Christ, as Saint Paul writeth, made one perfect sacrifice for the sins of the whole world, neither can any man reiterate that Sacrifice of his, and yet is the Communion an acceptable Sacrifice to God of praise and thanksgiving; but to say that thereby sins are taken away (which wholly and perfectly was done by Christs passion, of the which the Communion is only a memory) that is a great derogation of the merits of Christs passion: for the Sacrament was instituted, that we receiving it, and thereby reconciling and remembering his passion, should be partakers of the merits of the same. For otherwise doth this Sacrament take upon it the office of Christs passion, whereby it might follow, that Christ died in vain.

The Notaries penned this his answer to be affirmatively. Then said the Bishop of Lincoln:

Lin. Indeed as you alleage out of Saint Paul, Christ made one perfect oblation for all the whole world, that is, that bloody sacrifice upon the Cross: yet nevertheless he hath left this sacrifice, but not bloody, in the remembrance of that by the which sins are forgiven; the which is no derogation of Christs passion.

Then recited the Bishop of Lincoln the fourth Article, to the which Mr. Ridley answered:

Rid. That in some part the fourth was true, and in some part false; true, in that those his assertions were condemned as Heresies, although unjustly; false, in that it was said they were condemned Scientia Scholastica, in that the disputations were in such sort ordered, that it was far from any School Axiom.

This answer penned of the Notaries, the Bishop of Lincoln rehearsed the fifth Article. To the which he answered:

Rid. That the premises were in such sort true, as in these his answers he had declared. Whether that all men spake evil of them, he knew not, in that he came not so much abroad to hear what every man reported.

This answer also written of the Notaries, the Bishop of Lincoln said:

Lin. To morrow at eight of the Clock you shall appear before us in S. Maries Church, and then because we cannot well agree upon your answer to the first Article (for it was long before he was understood) if it will please you to write your Answer, you shall have pen, ink, and paper, and Books, such as you shall require; but if you write any thing saving your answers to these Articles, we will not receive it: so he charging the Mayor with him, declaring also to the Mayor that he should suffer him to have a pen and ink, dismissed Mr. Ridley, and sent for Mr. Latimer, who being brought to the Divinity School, there tarried till they called for him.

Mr. Latimer appeareth before the Commissioners.

Now after Mr. Ridley was committed to the Mayor, then the Bishop of Lincoln commanded the Bayliffs to bring in the other Prisoner, who effusions as he was placed, said to the Lords.

Lat. My Lords, if I appear again I pray you not to send for me until you be ready. For I am an old man, and it is great hurt to mine old age to tarry so long gazing upon the cold walls. Then the Bishop of Lincoln.

Lin. Mr. Latimer, I am sorry you are brought so soon, although it is the Bayliffs fault, and not mine; but it shall be amended.

Then Mr. Latimer bowed his knee down to the ground, holding his hat in his hand, having a Kerchief on his head and upon it a night-Cap or two, and a great Cap (such as Townsmen use, with two broad flaps to button under the Chin) wearing an old three-bare Byssow Frie gown girded to his Body with a penny leather Girdle, at the which hanged by a long string of leather his Tiltament, and his spectacles without case, depending about his neck upon his breast. After this the Bishop of Lincoln began on this manner.

Lin. Mr. Latimer, you shall understand, that I and my Lords here have a Commission from my Lord Cardinal Pools Grace, Legate a latere to this Realm of England, from our most reverend Father in God, the Popes Holiness, to examine you upon certain Opinions and Assertions of yours; which you as well here openly in disputations in the year of our Lord 1554, as at sundry and at divers other times did affirm, maintain, and obstinately defend. In the which Commission be specially two points; the one which we must desire you is, that if you shall now recant, revoke, and disannul these your Errors, and together with all this Realm, yea all the world confess the Truth; we upon due repentance of you part shall receive you, reconcile you, acknowledge you no longer a strayed sheep, but adjoin you again to the unity of Christ Church, from the which you in the time of Schism fell. So that it is no new place to the which I exhort you; I desire you to return thither from whence you went.

Consider, Mr. Latimer, that without the unity of the Church is no salvation, and in the Church can be no Errors. Therefore what should stay you to confess that which all the Realm confesseth, to forsake that which the King and Queen their Majesties have renounced, and all the Realm recanted: it was a common Error, and it is now of all confessed, it shall be no more shame to you, than it was to us all. Consider, Mr. Latimer, that within these twenty years this Realm also with all the world confessed one Church, acknowledged in Christs Church an Head, and by what means and for what occasion it cut off itself from the rest of Christianity, and renounced that which in all times and ages was confessed, it is well known, and might be now declared upon what good foundation the See of Rome was forsaken, save that we must spare them that are dead, to whom the rehearsal would be opprobrious: it is no usurped Power, as it hath been termed, but founded upon Peter by Christ, a sure foundation, a perfect builder, as by divers places, as well of the ancient Fathers, as by the express Word of God may be proved.

With that Mr. Latimer, which before leaned his head to his hand, began somewhat to remove his Cap and Kerchief from his ears.

The Bishop proceeded, saying, For Christ spake expressly to Peter saying, Pasce oves meas, & reges oves meas, the which word doth not only declare a certain ruling of Christs Flock, but includeth also a certain pre-eminence and government; and therefore is the King called, Rex à regendo: so that in saying reges, Christ declared a power which he gave to Peter, which jurisdiction and power Peter by hand delivered to Clement, and so in all Ages hath it remained in the See of Rome. This, if you shall confess with us, and acknowledge with all the Realm your Errors and false Assertions, then shall you do that which we most desire, then shall we rest upon the first part of our Commission, then shall we receive you, acknowledge you one of the Church, and according to the Authority given unto us, minister unto you, upon due repentance, the benefit of absolution, to the which the King and Queen their Majesties were not averse to submit themselves, although they of themselves were unpotted, and therefore needed no reconciliation; yet lest the putrefaction and rottenness of all the Body might be noysom, and do damage to the head also, they (as I said) most humbly submitted themselves to my Lord Cardinal his Grace, by him, as Legate to the Popes Holiness, to be partakers of the reconciliation. But if you shall stubbornly persevere in your blindness, if you will not acknowledge your Errors, if you, as you now stand alone, will be singular in your Opinions, if by Schism and Heresie you will divide your self from your Church, then must we proceed to the second part of the Commission, which we would be loth to do, that is, not to condemn you, for that we cannot do (that the temporal Sword of the Realm, and not we, will do) but to separate you from Christ.

Therefore M. Latimer, for Gods love consider your estate, remember you are a Learned man, you have taken degrees in the School, born the office of a Bishop; remember you are an old man, spare your body, accelerate your death, and specially remember your Souls health, quiet of your Conscience; consider that if you should die in this state, you shall be a stinking sacrifice to God; for it is the cause that maketh the Martyr, and not the death: consider that if you die in this state, you die without grace, for without the Church can be no salvation. Let not vain-glory have the upper hand, humiliate your self, captivate your understanding, subdue your reason, submit your self to the determination of the Church, do not force us to do all that we may do, let us rest in that part which we most heartily desire, and I, for my part (then the Bishop put of his Cap) again with all my heart exhort you.

After the Bishop had somewhat paused. then M. Latimer lift up his head (for before he leaned on his elbow) and asked whether his Lordship had said; and the Bishop answered, Yea.

Lat. Then will your Lordship give me leave to speak a word or two?

Ergo, the

Lat. Your Lordship gently exhorted me in many words to come to the unity of the Church. I confess (my Lord) a Catholick Church, spread throwout all the world, in the which no man may err, without the which unity of the Church no man can be saved: but I know perfectly by Gods Word, that this Church is in all the world, and hath not his foundation in Rome only, as you say; and me thought your Lordship brought a place out of the Scriptures to confirm the same, that there was a Jurisdiction given to Peter, in that Christ bade him regere, govern his People. Indeed, my Lord, St. Peter did well and truly his office, in that he was bid regere: but since the Bishops of Rome have taken a new kind of regere. Indeed they ought regere, but how my Lord? not as they will themselves: but this regere must be hedged in and ditched in. They must regere, but secundum Verbum Dei; they must rule, but according to the Word of God.

Regere secundum
verbum turned to regere secundum
voluntatem.

But the Bishops of Rome have turned regere secundum Verbum Dei, into regere secundum voluntatem suam: they have turned the Rule according to the Word of God, into the Rule according to their own pleasures, and as it pleaseth them best: as there is a Book set forth which hath divers points in it, and amongst other, this point is one, which your Lordship went about to prove by this word Regere, and the Argument which he bringeth forth for the proof of that matter, is taken out of Deuteronomy, where it is said, If there arise any controversy among the People, the Priests, Leviti generis, of the order of Levi, shall decide the matter secundum Legem Dei, according to the Law of God; so it must be taken. This Book perceiving this Authority to be given to the Priests of the old Law, taketh occasion to prove the same to be given to the Bishops and other the Clergy of the new Law: but in proving this matter, whereas it was said there, as the Priests of the order of Levi should determine the matter according to Gods Law, that (according to Gods Law) is left out, and only is recited, as the Priests of the order of Levi shall decide the matter, so it ought to be taken of the People; a large Authority I ensure you. What gelding of Scripture is this? what clipping of Gods Coin? With the which terms the Audience smiled. This is much like the Regere which your Lordship talked of. Nay, nay, my Lords, we may not give such Authority to the Clergy, to rule all things as they will. Let them keep themselves within their Commission. Now I trust, my Lord, I do Anno not rail yet.

Lincoln. No, Mr. Latimer, your talk is more like taunts than railing: but in that I have not read the Book which you blame so much, nor know not of any such, I can say nothing therein.

Lat. Yes, my Lord, the Book is open to be read, and is intuled to one which is Bishop of Gloucester, whom I never knew, neither did at any time fee him to my knowledge. With that the People laughed, because the Bishop of Gloucester fate there in Commission.

Then the Bishop of Gloucester stood up, and said, it was his Book.

Lat. Was it yours, my Lord? indeed I knew not your Lordship, neither ever did I see you before, neither yet see you now, through the brightness of the Sun shining betwixt you and me. Then the Audience laughed again; and Mr. Latimer spake unto them, saying; Why, my Masters, this is no laughing matter. I answer upon life and death, Vae vobis qui ridetis nunc, quoniam flebitis.

The B. of Lincoln commanded silence, and then said: Line. Mr. Latimer, if you had kept your self within your bounds, if you had not used such scoffs and taunts this had not been done.

After this the Bishop of Gloucester said in excusing of his Book.

Gloucester. Mr. Latimer, hereby every man may fee what learning you have.

Then M. Latimer interrupted him, saying:

Lat. Lo you look for learning at my hands which have gone so long to the School of oblivion, making the bare walls my Library, keeping me, so long in Prison without Book, or pen and ink? and now you let me loose to come and answer to Articles. You deal with me as though two were appointed to fight for life and death, and over night the one through friends and favour, is cherished, and hath good counsel given him how to encounter with his enemy. The other, for envy or lack of friends, all the whole night is set in the Stocks. In the morning when they shall meet, the one is in strength and lusty; the other is stark of his limbs, and almost dead for feebleness. Think you, that to run thorough this man with a Spear is not a goodly victory?

But the Bishop of Gloucester interrupting his answer, proceeded, saying:

Glouc. I went not about to recite any places of Scripture in that place of my Book; for then I had not recited it faithfully, you might have had just occasion of reprehension: but I only in that place formed an Argument à majore, in this sense; that in the old Law the Priests had power to decide matters of Controversie, much more then ought the Authority to be given to the Clergy in the new Law: and I pray you in this point what availeth their rehearsal, secundum legem Dei?

Lat. Yes, my Lord, very much. For I acknowledge Authority to be given to the Spiritually to decide matter of Religion, and as my Lord said even now, regere: but they must do it secundum Verbum Dei, and not secundum voluntatem suam, according to the Word and Law of God, and not after their own will, after their own imaginations and fantasies.

The Bishop of Gloucester would have spoken more, saying that the Bishop of Lincoln said, that they came not to dispute with Mr. Latimer, but to take his determinate answers to their Articles, and so began to propound the same Articles which were propounded to Mr. Ridley. But Mr. Latimer interrupted him, speaking to the Bishop of Gloucester; Well, my Lord, I could wish more faithful dealing with Gods Word, and not to leave out a part, and snatch a part here, and another there, but to rehearse the whole faithfully.

But the Bishop of Lincoln, not attending to this saying of Mr. Latimer, proceeded in the rehearsing the Articles in form and sense as I declared before in the examination of the Articles, propounded to Mr. Ridley, and required Mr. Latimers answer to the first. Then Master Latimer making his protestation, that notwithstanding these his answers it should not be taken that thereby he would acknowledge any Authority of the Bishop of Rome, saying, that he was the King and Queen their Majesties Subject, and not the Popes, neither could serve two Masters at one time, except he should now renounce one of them; required the Notaries so to take his protestation, that whatsoever he should say or do, it should not be taken as though he did thereby agree to any Authority that came from the Bishop of Rome.

1. Article. Linc. The Bishop of Lincoln said, that his Protestation should be so taken; but he required him to answer briefly, affirmatively, or negatively to the first Article, and so recited the same again: and Mr. Latimer answered as followeth.

Lati. I do not deny (my Lord) that in the Sacrament by spirit and grace is the very Body and Blood of Christ, because that every man, by receiving bodily that Bread and Wine, spiritually receiveth the Body and Blood of Christ, and is made partaker thereby of the merits of Christ's Passion: but I deny that the Body and Blood of Christ is in such sort in the Sacrament, as you would have it.

Linc. Then Master Latimer, you answer affirmatively.

Lati. Yes, if you mean of that gross and carnal being, which you do take.

The Notaries took his answer to be affirmatively.

2. Article. Linc. What say you M. Latimer to the second Article? and recited the same.

Lati. There is, my Lord, a change in the Bread and Wine, and such a change as no power, but the Omnipotency of God can make, in that that which before was Bread, should now have the dignity to exhibit Christ's Body, and yet the Bread is still Bread, and the Wine still Wine: for the change is not in the nature, but in the dignity, because now that which was common Bread hath the dignity to exhibit Christ's Body: for whereas it was common Bread, it is now no more common Bread, neither ought it to be so taken, but as holy Bread sanctified by Gods Word.

With that the Bishop of Lincoln smiled, saying:

Linc. Lo Master Latimer, see what steadfastness is in your Doctrine. That which you abhorred and despised most, you now most establish: for whereas you most rail'd at holy Bread, you now make your Communion holy Bread.

Lati. Truly, a rush for holy Bread. I say the Bread in the Communion is an holy Bread indeed.

But the Bishop of Lincoln interrupted him, and said:

Linc. O, ye make a difference between holy Bread and holy Bread, (with that the Audience laughed.) Well, Mr. Latimer, is not this your answer, that the substance of Bread and Wine remaineth after the words of Consecration?

Lati. Yes verily, it must needs be so. For Christ himself calleth it Bread, St. Paul calleth it Bread, the Doctors confess the same, the nature of a Sacrament confirmeth the same, and I call it holy Bread, not in that I make no difference betwixt your holy Bread and this, but for the holy office which it beareth, that is, to be a figure of Christ's Body, and not only a bare figure, but effectually to represent the same.

So the Notaries penned his answer to be affirmatively.

3. Article. Linc. What say you to the third question? and recited the same.

Lati. No, no, my Lord, Christ made one perfect sacrifice for all the whole world, neither can any man offer him again, neither can the Priest offer up Christ again for the sins of man, which he took away by offering himself once for all (as St. Paul saith) upon the Cross, neither is there any propitiation for our sins, saving his Cross only.

So the Notaries penned his answer to this Article also to be affirmatively.

4. Article. Linc. What say you to the fourth, Mr. Latimer? and recited it. After the recital whereof, when Mr. Latimer answered not, the Bishop asked him whether he heard him or no?

Lati. Yes, but I do not understand what you mean thereby.

Linc. Marry only this, that these your Assertions were condemned by Master Dr. Weston as Heresies; is it not so Mr. Latimer?

Lati. Yes, I think they were condemned. But how unjustly, he that shall be judge of all, knoweth.

So the Notaries took his answer to this Article also to be affirmatively.

Linc. What say you Mr. Latimer to the fifth Article? and recited it.

Lati. I know not what you mean by these terms. I am no Lawyer, I would you would propose the matter plainly.

Linc. In that we proceed according to the Law, we must use their terms also. The meaning only is this, that these your Assertions are notorious, evil spoken of, and yet common and frequent in the mouths of the People.

Lati. I cannot tell how much, nor what men talk of them. I come not so much among them, in that I have been secluded a long time. What then report of them I know not, nor care not.

This answer taken, the Bishop of Lincoln said:

Linc. Mr. Latimer, we mean not that these your Answers shall be prejudicial to you. To morrow you shall appear before us again, and then it shall be lawful for you to alter and change what you will. We give you respite till to morrow, trusting that after you have pondered well all things against to morrow, you will not be ashamed to confess the truth.

Lati. Now, my Lord, I pray you give me licence in three words, to declare the causes why I have refused the Authority of the Pope.

Linc. Nay, Mr. Latimer, to morrow you shall have licence to speak 40. words.

Lati. Nay, my Lords, I beseech you to do with me now as it shall please your Lordships: I pray you let not me be troubled to morrow again.

Linc. Yes, Mr. Latimer, you must needs appear again to morrow.

Lati. Truly, my Lord, as for my part I require no respite, for I am at a point; you shall give me respite in vain: therefore I pray you let me not trouble you to morrow.

Linc. Yes, for we trust, God will work with you against to morrow. There is no remedy, you must needs appear again to morrow at eight of the Clock in Saint Maries Church. And forthwith the Bishop charged the Mayor with Mr. Latimer, and dismissed him, and then brake up their Session for that day, about one of the Clock at Afternoon.

Here followeth the second Session.

The next day following (which was the first day of the next Session) somewhat after eight of the Clock, the said Lords repaired to St. Maries Church, and after they were set in a high Throne well trimmed with cloth of Tissue and Silk, then appeared Mr. Ridley, who was set at a framed Table a good space from the Bishops seat, which Table had a Silk-cloth cast over it, the which place was compassed about with framed Seats in quadrate form, partly for Gentlemen which repaired thither (for this was the Session-day also of Gaol-delivery) and Heads of the University to sit, and partly to keep off the press of the Audience: for the whole Body, as well of the University as of the Town, came thither to see the end of these two Persons. After Mr. Ridley's appearance, and the silence of the Audience, the Bishop of Lincoln spake in manner following:

Linc. Mr. Ridley, yesterday when that we challenged you for not uncovering your head, you excused your self of that whereof no man accused you, in saying you did not put on your Cap for any obliquity towards us, which as touching our own persons desired no such obedience of you, but only in respect of them whose persons we bear; neither (you said) for any contempt that you bear to this worshipful Audience, which although justly may, yet in this case require no such humility of you; neither for any derogation of honor to my Lord Cardinals grace, in that he is defended from the Regal Blood, in that he is a man most Noble, both for his excellent qualities and singular Learning: for as touching those points, you said, you with all humility would honor, reverence, and worship his Grace; but in that he is Legate to the most reverend Father in God the Popes Holiness (with that the Bishop with all then present, put off their Caps, but M. Ridley moved not his) you said you neither could, nor would by any means be induced to give him honor: but forasmuch as this is the point as we told you yesterday, why we require honor and reverence of you, we tell you now as we did then, except you take the pains to move your Bonet, we will take the pains to cause your Bonet to be taken from you, except you pretend sickness, as yesterday you did not.

B. Ridley refused to put off his Cap to the Pope, or to them which came from the Pope.

Rid. I pretend now none other cause, than I did yesterday, that is, only that hereby it may appear that not only in word and confession, but also by all my gesture and behaviour, in no point I agree or admit any authority or power that shall come from the Pope, and not for any pride of mind (as God is my judge) neither for contempt of your Lordships, or of this worshipsful Audience, neither for derogation of honor due to my Lord Cardinals grace as concerning those points which your Lordship spake of, that is, his noble Parentage and singular graces in learning. And as for taking my Cap away, your Lordship may do as it shall please you; it shall not offend me, but I shall be content with your ordinance in that behalf.

Line. Forasmuch as you do answer now as you did yesterday, we must do also as we did then, and forthwith one of his Beadles very hastily snatched his Cap from his head.

After this the Bishop of Lincoln began the Examination in sense following.

The last examination of B. Ridley.

Line. Master Ridley, yesterday we took your answer to certain Articles, which we then proposed unto you: but because we could not be thoroughly satisfied with your answer then to the first Article, neither could the Notaries take any determinate answer of you, we (you requiring the same) granted you licence to bring your answer in writing, and thereupon commanded the Major that you should have pen, paper and ink, yea a new Books also that you would require, if they were to be gotten: we licenced you then also to alter your former answers this day at your pleasure: Therefore we are come now hither, to see whether you are in the same mind now that you were in yesterday, (which we would not wish) or contrary, contented to revoke all your former assertions, and in all points consent to submit your self to the determination of the universal Church, and I for my part most earnestly exhort you (and therewith he put of his Cap) not because my Conscience pricketh me, as you said yesterday, but because I see you a rotten member, and in the way of perdition.

The words of the B. of Lincoln.

Yesterday I brought forth amongst other St. Austin, to prove that authority hath always been given to the See of Rome, and you wrested the words far contrary to St. Austin's meaning, in that that you would have totus mundus to be applied only to Europe, which is but the third part of all the world, whereas indeed the process of St. Augustine's words will not admit that your interpretation. For he saith not totus mundus Christianus in transmarinis, &c. but first totus mundus Christianus Romanus Ecclesie subiectus est: all the Christian world is subject to the Church of Rome, and afterward addeth, in transmarinis partibus, beyond the Sea, but only to augment the dominion of the See of Rome.

The place of St. Austin's words is expressed, transmarinis
partibus.

Rid. But Mr. Ridley still persevered in his former answer, saying; I am sure my Lord, you have some skill in Geography, in the which you shall understand that there is a Sea called Mare mediterraneum, cast between Europe, and Africa, in the which he meant Europe beyond the Sea, even as I should say the whole world beyond the Sea, excepting England in the which I stand: and here many words were spent upon the interpretation of the same place of St. Austin.

Line. After long disputation, the B. of Lincoln said, that the meaning of St. Augustine might be known by the content of other the Doctors, and rehearsed divers.

How the Ca-tholick doctrine is alleged the Doctors.

Rid. But Mr. Ridley required the rehearsal of the places, and to read the very words of the Doctors, saying, that perhaps those which the Bishop rehearsed, being proposed in other terms in the Doctors, would admit a contrary meaning and interpretation: but in that Book, out of the which the Bishop rehearsed them, was none of

of the Doctors, but only the sentences drawn out of the Doctors by some Readers: in that he could not recite the very words of the Doctors.

Line. Then after, he came to Cyrillus, which, as he said, made against M. Ridley in the Sacrament, even by Philip Melancthon his own alleging in his common places, and forthwith called for Melancthon's, but in vain, because all such Books were burned a little before, wherefore he pulled it over.

Cyrillus also in another place, proving to the Jews that Christ was come, useth this reason, Altars are erected in Christs name in Britain, and in far Countries: Ergo, Christ is come. But we may use the contrary, of that reason; Altars are plucked down in Britain: Ergo, Christ is not come. A good argument a contrariis. I will stand to it in the Schools by and by with any man. Ye see what a good argument this your Doctrine maketh for the Jews, to prove that Christ is not come.

Dr. Ridley smiling answered; your Lordship is not ignorant that this word Altare in the Scripture signifieth as well the Altar whereupon the Jews were wont to make their burnt Sacrifices, as the Table of the Lords Supper. Cyrillus meaneth there by this word Altare, not that the Jewish Altar, but the Table of the Lord, and by that saying (Altars are erected in Christs name, Ergo Christ is come) he meaneth that the communion is ministered in his remembrance, Ergo Christ is come: for the strength of his argument is, because the remembrance of a thing cannot be, except it first be past: then could not all Countries celebrate the Communion in remembrance of Christs Passion, except Christ had been come and suffered. As for the taking down of the Altars, it was done upon just considerations, for that they seemed to come too nigh to the Jews usage. Neither was the Supper of the Lord at any time better ministered, more duly received, than in those latter days, when all things were brought to the rites and usage of the Primitive Church.

Line. A goodly receiving I promise you, to set an Oyfter Table instead of an Altar, and to come from puddings at Westminster to receive: and yet when your Table was constituted, you could never be content, in placing the same now East, now North, now one way, now another, until it pleased God of his goodness to place it clean out of the Church.

Rid. Your Lordships unreverent terms do not elevate the thing. Perhaps some men came more devoutly from Puddings, than other men now do from other things.

Line. As for that, M. Ridley, you ought to be judge of no man: but by this your reasoning you cause us to stretch and enlarge our instructions. We came not to reason, but to take your determinate answers to our Articles, and oftentimes he read the first Article in manner above specified.

Now Mr. Ridley, what say you to the first Article. If you have brought your answer in writing, we will receive it: but if you have written any other matter, we will not receive it.

Rid. Then Mr. Ridley took a sheet of Paper out of his bosom, and began to read that which he had written: but the Bishop of Lincoln commanded the Beadle to take it from him. But he desired licence to read it, saying that it was nothing but his answers, but the Bishop would in no wise suffer him.

Rid. Why my Lord, will you require my answer, and not suffer me to publish it? I beseech you my Lord, let the Audience bear witness in this matter. Your Lordships may handle it at your pleasure: therefore let the Audience be witness to your doings.

Line. Well, M. Ridley, we will first see what you have written, and then if we shall think it good to be read, you shall have it published; but except you will deliver it first, we will take none at all of you.

With that M. Ridley, seeing no remedy, delivered it to an Officer, which immediately delivered it to the Bishop of Lincoln, who after he had secretly communicated it to the other two Bishops, declared it false, but would not read it as it was written, saying, that it contained words of blasphemy: therefore he would not bill the ears of the Audience therewithall, and to shew their patience:

Anno 1555. patience, notwithstanding Mr. Ridley desired very instantly to have it published, saying, that except a line or two, there was nothing contained but the ancient Doctors saying for the confirmation of his assertions.

After the said Bishops had secretly viewed the whole, then the Bishop of Lincoln said: In the first part, Mr. Ridley, is nothing contained but your protestation, that you would not have these your Answers so to be taken, as though you seemed thereby to consent to the Authority or jurisdiction of the Popes Holiness.

Rid. No, my Lord, I pray you read it out that the audience may hear it: but the Bishop of Lincoln would in no wise, because (he said) there were contained words of blasphemy.

2. Article. Then the Bishop of Lincoln recited the first Article, and required Mr. Ridley's Answer to it. Then Mr. Ridley said, that his Answer was there in writing, and desired that it might be published: but the Bishop would not read the whole, but here and there a piece of it. So the Notaries took his Answer, that he referred him to his Answer in writing exhibited now, and also before at the time of disputation, Mr. Doctor Weston being Prolocutor.

3. Article. In like wise the Bishop of Lincoln recited the second Article, and required an answer, and Mr. Ridley referred him to his answer in writing, exhibited now, and also before at the time of disputation: and like Answers were taken to all the residue of the Articles.

These answers in this manner rehearsed, taken and penned of the Notaries, the Bishop of Gloucester began an exhortation to move Mr. Ridley to turn.

3. Article. Glo. If you could empty your stomach, captivate your senses, subdue your reason, and together with us consider what a feeble ground of your Religion you have, I do not doubt but you might easily be perduced to acknowledge one Church with us, to confide one Faith with us, and to believe one Religion with us. For what a weak and feeble stay in Religion is this I pray you? Latimer leane to Cranmer, Cranmer to Ridley, and Ridley to the singularity of his own wit: so that if you overthrow the singularity of Ridley's wit, then must needs the Religion of Cranmer and Latimer fall also. You remember well, Mr. Ridley, that the Prophet speaketh most truly, saying; Ve, ve, We be to them which are singular and wise in their own conceits.

But you will say here, it is true that the Prophet saith: but how know you that I am wise in mine own conceit? Yes, Mr. Ridley, you refuse the determination of the Catholick Church; you must needs be singular and wise in your own conceit, for you bring Scripture for the probation of your assertions, and we also bring Scriptures; you understand them in one sense, and we in another. How will you know the truth herein? If you stand to your own interpretation, then you are singular in your own conceit: but if you say you will follow the minds of the Doctors and ancient Fathers, seemingly you understand them in one meaning, and we take them in another; how will ye know the truth herein? If you stand to your own judgment, then are you singular in your own conceit, then can you not avoid the ve and wo which the Prophet speaketh of.

Wherefore if you have no stay but the Catholick Church in matters of controversy, except you will rest upon the singularity and wisdom of your own brain, if the Prophet most truly saith, ve, ve wo, be to them that are wise in their own conceit: then for Gods love, Mr. Ridley, stand not singular, be not you wise in your own conceit, please not your self over much. How were the Arians, the Manichees, Eutychians, with other divers Hereticks which have been in the Church, how I pray you were they suppressed and convinced? By reasoning in disputations? No truly, the Arians had no more places of Scripture for the confirmation of their Heresie, than the Catholicks for the defence of the Truth. How then were they convinced? only by the determination of the Church. And indeed except we do constitute the Church our foundation, stay, and judge, we can have no end of controversies, no end of disputations. For in that we all bring Scriptures and Doctors for the probation of our assertions, who should be judge of this our controversy? If we our selves, then be singular and wise in your own conceits, then cannot we avoid the wo that the Prophet speaketh of.

It remaineth therefore that we submit our selves to the determination and arbitrement of the Church, with whom God promised to remain to the worlds end, to whom he promised to send the Holy Ghost which should teach it the Truth. Wherefore, Mr. Ridley, if you will avoid the wo that the Prophet speaketh of, be not you wise in your judgment: if you will not be wise and singular in your own judgment, captivate your own understanding, subdue your reason, and submit your self to the determination of the Church.

This is briefly the sum of the Oration of the Bishop of Gloucester, by the which he endeavoured in many more words, amplifying and enlarging the matter eloquently with sundry points of Rhetorick to move affections, to persuade Mr. Ridley to recant and forsake his Religion.

To whom Mr. Ridley answered in few words, that he said most truly the Prophet, wo be to him that is wise in his own conceit, but that he acknowledged no such singularity in him, nor knew any cause why he should attribute so much to himself. And whereas he said Mr. Cranmer leane to him, that was most untrue, in that he was but a young Scholar in comparison of Mr. Cranmer: for at what time he was a young Scholar, then was Mr. Cranmer a Doctor, so that he confessed that Mr. Cranmer might have been his School-Master these many years. It seemed that he would have spoken more, but the B. of Gloucester interrupted him saying:

Glo. Why Mr. Ridley, it is your own confession, for Mr. Latimer at that time of his disputation, confessed his learning to lie in Mr. Cranmers Books, and Mr. Cranmer also said, that it was your doing.

Linc. Likewise the B. of Lincoln with many words, and gently holding his Cap in his hand, desired him to turn. But Mr. Ridley made an absolute answer, that he was fully persuaded, the Religion which he defended to be grounded upon Gods Word, and therefore without great offence towards God, great peril and damage of his Soul, he could not forsake his Master and Lord God, but desired the Bishop to perform his grant, in that his Lordship said the day before, that he should have licence to shew his cause why he could not with a safe Confidence admit the Authority of the Pope: But the Bishop of Lincoln said, that whereas then he had demanded licence to speak three words, he was contented then that he should speak forty and that grant he would perform.

Then stepped forth Doctor Weston, which sat by, and said, why my Lord, he hath spoken four hundred already.

Mr. Ridley confessed he had, but they were not of his prescribed number, neither of that matter. The Bishop of Lincoln bade him take his licence: but he should speak but forty, and he would tell them upon his fingers, and effsoons Mr. Ridley began to speak: but before he had ended half a sentence, the Doctors sitting by cried and said, that his number was out, and with that he was put to silence.

After this the Bishop of Lincoln, which sat in the midst, began to speak as followeth.

Linc. Now I perceive, Mr. Ridley, you will not permit nor suffer us to stay in that point of our Commission which we most desired: for I ensure you, there is never a word in our Commission more true than, solentes & gementes. For indeed I for my part, I take God to witness, am sorry for you. Whereupon Mr. Ridley answered.

Rid. I believe it well my Lord, forasmuch as one day it will be burdensome to your Soul.

Linc. Nay, not so Mr. Ridley, but because I am sorry to see such stubbornness in you, that by no means you may be persuaded to acknowledge your Errors, and receive the Truth: but seeing it is so, because you will not suffer us to persist in the first, we must of necessity proceed to the other part of our Commission. Therefore I pray you hearken what I shall say, and forthwith he did read the sentence of Condemnation, which was written in a long process: the tenor of which, because it is sufficiently already expressed before we thought meet in this place to omit, forasmuch as they are rather words of court, than things devised upon deliberation. Howbeit indeed the effect was, that forasmuch as the said Nicholas Ridley did affirm, maintain, and stubbornly defend certain Opinions, Assertions, and Heresies, contrary to the Word of God, and the received Faith of the Church, as in denying the true and natural Body of Christ, and his natural Blood to be in the Sacrament of the Altar: Secondly, in affirming the substance of Bread and Wine to remain after the words of the Consecration: Thirdly, in denying the Mass to be a lively sacrifice of the Church for the quick and the dead, and by no means would be perduced and brought from these his Heresies: they therefore the said I. of Lincoln, James of Gloucester, John of Bristol, did judge and condemn the said Nicholas Ridley, as an Heretick, and so adjudged him presently both by word, and also in deed to be degraded from the degree of a Bishop, from Priesthood and all Ecclesiastical Order; declaring moreover the said Nicholas Ridley to be no member of the Church and therefore, committed him to the Secular Powers, of them to receive due punishment according to the tenor of the temporal Laws: and further excommunicating him by the great excommunication.

Commissioners.

His sentence being published by the Bishop of Lincoln, Mr. Ridley was committed as a Prisoner to the Mayors, and immediately Mr. Latimer was sent for: but in the mean season the carpet or Cloth which lay upon the Table whereat Mr. Ridley stood, was removed, because (as men reported) Mr. Latimer had never the degree of a Doctor, as Mr. Ridley had. But ere long as Mr. Latimer appeared, as he did the day before, perceiv- ing no Cloth upon the Table, he laid his hat, which was an old felt, under his elbows, and immediately spake to the Commissioners, saying,

Lat. My Lords, I beseech your Lordships to set a better order here at your entrance: for I am an Old man, and have a very evil Back, so that the press of the multitude doth me much harm.

Line. I am sorry, Mr. Latimer, for your hurt. At your departure we will see to better order.

With that Mr. Latimer thanked his Lordship, making a very low courtesy. After this the Bishop of Lincoln began on this manner.

The Bishop of Lincoln words to
Mr. Latimer.

Line. Mr. Latimer, although yesterday after we had taken your answers to those Articles which we proposed, we might have justly proceeded to Judgment against you, especially in that you required the same, yet we having a good hope of your returning, desiring not your destruction, but rather that you would recant, revoke your Errors, and turn to the Catholick Church, deferred farther process till this day, and now according to the appointment, we have called you here before us, to hear whether you are content to revoke your Heretical assertions and submit your self to the determination of the Church, as we most heartily desire, and I for my part, as I did yesterday, most earnestly do exhort you, or to know whether you persevere still the man that you were, for the which we would be sorry.

It seemed that the Bishop would have further proceeded, saying that Mr. Latimer interrupted him, saying,

Mr. Latimer

the Commissioners.

Lat. Your Lordship often doth repeat the Catholick Church, as though I should deny the same. No, my Lord, I confess there is a Catholick Church, to the determination of which I will stand, but not the Church which you call Catholick, which sooner might be termed Diabolick. And whereas you joyn together the Romish and Catholick Church, stay there I pray you. For it is one thing to say Romish Church, and another thing to say Catholick Church: I must use here in this mine Answer, the counsel of Cyprian, who at what time he was asked before certain Bishops that gave him leave to take deliberation and counsel, to try and examine his Opinion, he answered them thus: In sticking and persevering in the Truth, there must no counsel nor deliberation be taken. And again, being demanded of them sitting in judgment, which was most like to be of the Church of Christ, whether he which was persecuted, or they which did persecute? Christ said he, hath foretold, that he that doth follow him, must take up his Cross, and follow him. Christ gave knowledge that the Disciples should have persecution and trouble. How think you then my Lords, is it like that the See of Rome, which hath been a continual persecutor, is rather the Church, or that small flock which hath continually been persecuted of it, even to death? Also the flock of Christ hath been but few in comparison to the refuse, and ever in subjection: which he proved beginning at Noahs time even to the Apostles.

Line. Your cause and St. Cyprian is not one, but clean contrary: for he suffered persecution for Christs sake and the Gospel; but you are in trouble for your errors and false assertions, contrary to the Word of God, and the received Truth of the Church.

Lat. Mr. Latimer interrupting him, said; Yes verily, my cause is as good as St. Cyprian: for his was for the Word of God, and so is mine.

But Lincoln goeth forth in his talk.

Also at the beginning and foundation of the Church, it could not be but that the Apostles should suffer great persecution. Further, before Christs coming, continually there were very few which truly served God: but after his coming began the time of Grace, then began the Church to increase, and was continually augmented, until it came unto this perfection, and now hath justly that Jurisdiction which the unchristian Princes before by tyranny did resist: there is a divers consideration of the estate of the Church now in the time of Grace, and before Christs coming. But, Mr. Latimer, although we had instructions given us determinately to take your answer to such Articles as we should propose, without any reasoning or disputations, yet we hoping by talk somewhat to prevail with you, appointed you to appear before us yesterday in the Divinity School, a place for disputations. And whereas then notwithstanding you had licence to say your mind, and were answered to every matter, yet you could not be brought from your Errors; We thinking that from that time ye would with good advisement consider your estate, gave you respite from that time yesterday when we dismissed you, until this time, and now have called you again here in this place, by your answers to learn whether you are the same man you were then or no? Therefore we will propose unto you the same Articles which we did then, and require of you a determinate answer, without further reasoning, and ere long recited the first Article.

Lat. Always my protestation saved, that by these mine Answers it should not be thought that I did contend and agree to your Lordships Authority, in that you are legaced by Authority of the Pope, so that there by I might seem to consent to his Jurisdiction: To the first Article I answer now as I did yesterday, that in the Sacrament the worthy receiver receiveth the very Body of Christ, and drinketh his Blood by the Spirit and Grace. But after a corporal being, which the Romish Church prescribeth, Christs Body and Blood is not in the Sacrament under the forms of Bread and Wine.

The Notaries took his answer to be affirmatively. For the second Article he referred himself to his answers made before.

Line. After this the Bishop of Lincoln recited the third Article, and required a determinate Answer.

Lat. Christ made one oblation and sacrifice for the sins of the whole world, and that a perfect sacrifice, neither needeth there to be any other, neither can there be any other propitiatorie sacrifice.

The Notaries took his answer to be affirmatively. In like manner did he answer to the other Articles, not varying from his answers made the day before.

After his Answers were penned of the Notaries, and the Bishop of Lincoln had exhorted him in like sort to recant as he did Mr. Ridley, and revoke his Errors and false Assertions, and Mr. Latimer had answered that he neither could, nor would deny his Master Christ, and his verity, the Bishop of Lincoln desired Mr. Latimer to learn to him: and then, Mr. Latimer hearing for some new matter and other talk, the Bishop of Lincoln read his condemnation, after the publication of the which the said three Bishops brake up their Sessions, and dismissed the Audience.

against
Mr. Latimer.

But

Anno 1555. But M. Lat. required the Bishop to perform his promise in saying the day before, that he should have licence briefly to declare the cause why he refused the Popes Authority.

Linc. But the Bishop said that now he could not hear him, neither ought to talk with him.

Then Mr. Latimer asked him, whether it were not lawful for him to appeal from this his judgment. And the Bishop asked him again to whom he would appeal. To the next general Council (quoth Mr. Latimer) which shall be truly called in Gods name. With that appellation the Bishop was content: but he said it would be a long season before such a convocation as he meant would be called.

Then the Bishop committed Mr. Latimer to the Mayor, saying; now he is your Prisoner, Mr. Mayor. Because the press of the People was not diminished, each man looking for farther process, the Bishop of Lincoln commanded avoidance, and willed Mr. Latimer to tarry till the press were diminished, lest he should take hurt at his egression, as he did at his entrance. And so continued Bishop Ridley, and Mr. Latimer, in duration till the 16. day of the said month of October.

A Communication between Dr. Brooks, and Dr. Ridley, in Mr. Ilish his House, the 15. day of October, at which time he was degraded.

IN the mean season upon the 5. day in the morning, and the same year also, said, the Bishop of Gloucester, Dr. Brooks, and the Vicechancellor of Oxford Dr. Marshall, with divers other of the chief, and Heads of the same University, and many other more accompanying them, came unto Mr. Ilish his House then Mayor of Oxford, where Dr. Ridley late Bishop of London was close Prisoner. And when the Bishop of Gloucester came into the Chamber where the said Dr. Ridley did lie, he told him for what purpose their coming was unto him, saying; that yet once again the Queens Majesty did offer unto him, by them, her gracious mercy, if that he would receive the same, and come home again to the Faith which he was baptized in, and revoke his Erroneous Doctrine that he of late had taught abroad to the destruction of many. And further said, that if he would not recant and become one of the Catholick Church with them, then they must needs (against their wills) proceed according to the Law, which they would be very loth to do, if they might otherwise. But faith he, we have been oftentimes with you, and have requested that you would recant this your fantastical and devilish Opinion, which hitherto you have not, although you might in so doing win many, and do much good. Therefore, good Mr. Ridley, consider with your self the danger that shall ensue both of Body and Soul, if that you shall so wilfully cast your self away in refusing mercy offered unto you at this time.

My Lord, quoth Dr. Ridley, you know my mind fully herein; and as for the Doctrine which I have taught, my Conscience affureth me that it was found, and according to Gods Word (to his glory be it spoken) the which Doctrine, the Lord God being my helper, I will maintain so long as my Tongue shall wag, and breath is within my Body, and in confirmation thereof Seal the same with my Blood.

Brook. Well, you were best, Mr. Ridley, not to do so but to become one of the Church with us. For you know this well enough, that whosoever is out of the Catholick Church, cannot be saved: Therefore I say once again, that whilst you have time and mercy offered you, receive it, and confite with us the Popes Holiness to be the chief Head of the same Church.

Rid. I marvel that you will trouble me with any such vain and foolish talk. You know my mind concerning the usurped Authority of that Romish Antichrist. As I confided openly in the Schools, so do I now, that both by my behaviour and talk, I do no obedience at all unto the Bishop of Rome, nor to his usurped Authority, and that for a good and godly considerations. And here Dr. Ridley would have reasoned with the said Brooks B. of Gloucester, of the Bishop of Romes Authority, but was interrupted by the Mayor, and yet he spake so earnestly against the Pope therein, that the Bishop told him, if he would not hold his peace, he should be compelled against his will. And seeing, faith he, that you will not receive the Queens mercy now offered unto you, but stubbornly refuse the same, we must, against our wills, proceed according to our Commission to degrading, taking from you the dignity of Priesthood. For we take you for no Bishop, and therefore we will the sooner have done with you: so committing you to the Secular Power, you know what doth follow.

Rid. Do with me as it shall please God to suffer you, I am well content to abide the same with all my heart.

Brook. put off your Cap, Mr. Ridley, and put upon you this Surple.

Rid. Not I truly.

Evek. But you must.

Rid. I will not.

Brook. You must, therefore make no more ado but put this Surple upon you.

Rid. Truly if it come upon me, it shall be against my will.

Brook. Will you not do it upon you?

Rid. No, that I will not.

Brook. It shall be put upon you by one or other.

Rid. Do therein as it shall please you, I am well contented with that, and more than that; the servant is not above his Master. If they dealt so cruelly with our Saviour Christ, as the Scripture maketh mention, and he suffered the same patiently, how much more doth it become us his Servants? and in saying of these words, they put upon the said Dr. Ridley the Surple, with all the Trinkets appertaining to the Mass. And as they were putting on the same, Dr. Ridley did vehemently inveigh against the Romish Bishop, and all that foolish apparel, calling him Antichrist, and the apparel foolish and abominable, yea too fond for a vice in a play, inasmuch that Brooks was exceeding angry with him, and bade him hold his peace, for he did but rail. Dr. Ridley answered him again, and said; So long as his Tongue and Breath would suffer him, he would speak against their abominable doings, whatsoever happened unto him for so doing.

Brook. Well, you were best to hold your peace, lest your mouth be stopped. At which words one Edrige, the Reader then of the Greek lecture standing by said to Dr. Brooks: Sir, the Law is he should be gagged, therefore let him be gagged. At which words Dr. Ridley looking earnestly upon him that so said, wagged his head at him, and made no answer again, but with a sigh said: Oh well, well, well.

So they proceeded in their doings, yet nevertheless Dr. Ridley was ever talking things not pleasant to their ears, although one or other bade him hold his peace, lest he should be caused against his will.

When as they came to that place whereas Dr. Ridley should hold the Chalice and the Wafer-cake (called the Singing-bread) they bade him hold the same in his hands. And Dr. Ridley said, they shall not come in my hands: for if they do, they shall fall to the ground for all me. Then there was one appointed to hold them in his hand, while Bishop Brooks read a certain thing in Latine, touching the degradation of Spiritual persons according to the Popes Law.

Afterward they put a Book in his hand, and willed read (as is before said) a certain thing in Latine, the effect whereof was: We do take from you the office of preaching the Gospel, &c. At which words Dr. Ridley gave a great sigh, looking up towards Heaven, saying; O Lord God forgive them this their wickedness.

And as they put upon him the Mass-gear, so they began with the uppermost garment, in taking it away again, reading a thing in Latine, according to the order contained in the said Book of the Popes Law. Now when all was taken from him, saving only the Surple left on his back as they were reading and taking it away, Dr. Ridley laid unto them, Lord God, what Power be you of, that you can take from a man that which he never had? I was never finger in all my life, and yet you will take from me that which I never had.

D. Ridley refused to put on the Surple.

B. Ridley inveigheth against the B. of Rome and his foolish apparel. The Surple here is called a foolish apparel.

So when all this their abominable and ridiculous degradation was ended very solemnly. Dr. Ridley said unto Doctor Brooks, Have you done? If you have done, then give me leave to talk with you a little concerning these matters. Brooks answered and said; Mr. Ridley, we may not talk with you, you be out of the Church, and our Law is that we may not talk with any that be out of the Church. Then Mr. Ridley said; Seeing that you will not suffer me to talk, neither will you chafe to hear me, what remedy but patience? I refer my cause to my heavenly Father, who will reform things that be amiss, when it shall please him.

A praise of Bertrams Book upon
ment.

At which words they would have been gone, but Mr. Ridley said; My Lord, I would wish that your Lordship would vouchsafe to read over and peruse a little Book of Bertrams doings, concerning the Sacrament. I promise you, you shall find much good learning therein, if you will read the same with an indifferent judgment. Doctor Brooks made no answer to this, but would have been gone away. Then Mr. Ridley, said, Oh, I perceive that you cannot away with this manner of talk. Well, it boots not, I will say no more, I will speak of worldly affairs. I pray you therefore my Lord hear me, and be a mean to the Queens Majesty, in the behalf of a great many of poor men, and especially for my poor Sister and her Husband which standeth there. They had a poor Living granted unto them by me, whiles I was in the See of London, and the same is taken away from them, by him that now occupieth the same room, without all Law or Conscience.

Note the charity of the Supplic.

Here I have a supplication to the Queens Majesty in their behalfs. You shall hear the same read, so shall you perceive the matter the better. Then he read the same, and when he came to the place in the supplication, that touched his Sister by name, then he wept, so that for a little space he could not speak for weeping. After that he had left off weeping, said; This is nature that moveth me. But I have now done, and wish that read out thereof, and delivered the same to his Brother, commanding him to put it up to the Queens Majesty, and to sue, not only for himself, but also for such as had any Leases or Grants by him, and were put from the same by Dr. Borer, then Bishop of London. Whereunto Brooks said, indeed Mr. Ridley, your request in this supplication is very lawful and honest: therefore I must needs in Conscience speak to the Queens Majesty for them.

B. Ridley's Sister put in her Letter by R. Borer.

Rid. I pray you for Gods sake do so.

Brooks. I think your request will be granted, except one thing let it, and that is (I fear) because you do not allow the Queens proceedings, but obstinately withstand the same, that it will hardly be granted.

Rid. What remedy? I can do no more but speak and write. I trust I have discharged my Conscience therein, and Gods will be done.

Brook. I will do what lieth in me.

Leases.

IT may please your Majesty for Christ our Saviours sake in a matter of Conscience (and now not for my self, but for other poor men) to vouchsafe to hear and understand this humble supplication. It is so (honourable Prince) that in the time whiles I was in the Ministry of the See of London, divers poor men, Tenants thereof, have taken new Leases of their Tenancies and holdings, and some have renewed and changed their old, and therefore have payed fines and sums of money both to me, and also to the Chapter of Pauls, for the confirmation of the same.

This Bishop
was Dr. Borer.

Now I joy, that the Bishop which occupieth the same room now, will not allow the foresaid Leases, which must redound to many poor mens utter ruine and decay. Wherefore this is mine humble supplication unto your honourable Grace, that it may please the same for Christs sake to be unto the foresaid poor men their gracious Patroness and Defender, either that they may enjoy their foresaid Leases and years renewed, as I suppose when their matter shall be heard with Conscience, both justice, Conscience, and Equity shall require, for that their Leases shall be found (I trust) made without fraud or cunning, either of their part, or of mine, and always also the old Rents reserved to the See without any kind of damage thereof: or if this will not be granted, then that it may please your gracious Highness, to command that the poor men may be restored to their former Leases and years and to have rendered to them again such sums of money as they paid to me and to the Chapter-house for their Leases and years, so now taken from them. Which thing concerning the Fines paid to me, may be easily done, if it shall please your Majesty to command some portion of those goods which I left in my house when I fled in hope of pardon for my Trespasses towards your Grace, which goods (as I have heard) be yet reserved in the same house. I suppose that half of the value of my Plate that I left in mine offices, and specially in an Iron-Chest in my bed-Chamber, will go nigh to restore all such Fines received, the true sums and parcels whereof are not set in their Leases: and therefore if that way shall please your Highness, they must be known by such ways and means, as your Majesty by the advice of men of wisdom and Conscience shall appoint: but yet for Christs sake I crave and most humbly beseech your Majesty of your most gracious pity and mercy, that the former way may take place.

I have also a poor Sister that came to me out of the North, with three fatherless Children, for her relief, whom I married after to a Servant of mine own house: she is put out of that I did provide for them. I beseech your Honourable Grace, that her case may be mercifully considered, and that she rather, in contemplation that I never had of him, which suffered endurance at my entrance into the See of London, not one penny of his movable goods, for it was almost half a year after his deposition, afore I entered into this place: yea, and also if any were left, known to be his, he had licence to carry it away, or there for his wife it did lie safe, as his Officers do know. I paid for the Lead which I found there, when I occupied any of it to the behoof of the Church, or of the house. And moreover, I had not only no part of his movable goods, but also (as his old Receiver, and then mine, called Mr. Stanton, can testify) I paid for them towards his Servants common liveries and wages, after his deposition, 53 or 55 pounds, I cannot tell whether. In all these matters I beseech your Honourable Majesty to hear the advice of men of Conscience, and in especial the Archbishop of York, which for that he was continually in my house a year and more, before mine imprisonment, I suppose he is not altogether ignorant of some part of these things, and also his Grace doth know my Sister, for whose succour, and some relief, now unto your Highness I make most humble sute.

The 26. of October, Anno 1555. N. R.

This Degradation being past, and all things finished, Doctor Brooks called the Bayliffs, delivering to them Mr. Ridley with this charge, to keep him fairly from any man speaking with him, and that he should be brought to the place of Execution when they were commanded. Then Mr. Ridley in praising God, burst out with these words, and said; God I thank thee, and to thy praise be it spoken, there is none of you all able to lay to my charge any open or notorious Crime: for if you could, it should surely be laid in my lap, I fee very well. Whereunto Brooks said, he played the part of a proud Pharisee, exalting and praising himself.

But Master Ridley said No, no, no, as I have said before, to Gods glory be it spoken. I confess my self to be a miserable wretched sinner, and have great need of Gods help and mercy, and do daily call, and cry for the same: therefore I pray you have no such Opinion of me. Then they departed, and in going away, a certain Warden of a Colledge, of whose name I am not very sure, bade Dr. Ridley repent him, and forsake that erroneous Opinion. Whereunto Mr. Ridley said; Sir, repent you, for you are out of the Truth: and I pray God (if it be his blessed will) have mercy upon you, and grant you the understanding of his Word. Then the Warden being in a chafe thereof, said; I trust that I shall never be of your erroneous and devilish Opinion, either yet to be in that place whither you shall go. He is, fifth he, the most obstinate and wilful man that ever I heard talk since I was born.

The behaviour of Dr. Ridley at his Supper, the Night before his suffering.

THe Night before he suffered, his Beard was washed and his Legs, and as he fate at Supper, the same Night at Mr. Irishes (who was his Keeper) he bade his Hostess, and the rest at the Boord to his marriage: for, faith he, to morrow I must be married, and so shewed himself to be as merry as ever he was at any time before. And withing his Sister at his marriage, he asked his Brother sitting at the Table, whether she could find in her heart to be there or no: and he answered, Yea, I dare say, with all her heart: at which word he said, He was glad to hear of her so much therein. So at this talk Mistress Irish wept.

Mrs. Irish a great Papist before, wept for Dr. Ridley.

But Mr. Ridley comforted her, and said, O Mrs. Irish, you love me not now, I see well enough; for in that you weep, it doth appear you will not be at my marriage, neither are content therewith. Indeed you be not so much my Friend, as I thought you had been. But quiet your self, though my Breakfast shall be somewhat sharp and painful, yet I am sure my Supper shall be more pleasant and sweet, &c.

When they arose from the Table, his Brother offered him to watch all Night with him. But he said, No, no, that you shall not. For I mind (God willing) to go to bed, and to sleep as quietly to Night, as ever I did in my life. So his Brother departed, exhorting him to be of good cheer, and to take his Cross quietly, for the reward was great, &c.

B. Ridley careless at his death.

A Table describing the burning of B. R. Ridley, and Father Latimer at Oxford, D. Smith there preaching at the time of their Martyrdom.

The behaviour of Dr. Ridley and Mr. Latimer, at the time of their death, which was the 16. of October, 1555.

UPon the North-side of the Town, in the Ditch over against Baily-Colledge, the place of Execution was appointed: and for fear of any Tumult that might arise, to let the burning of them, the Lord Williams was commanded by the Queens Letters, and the householders of the City to be there assisitant, sufficiently appointed; and when every thing was in a readines, the Prisoners were brought forth by the Mayor and the Bayliffs.

Mr. Ridley had a fair black Gown furred, and faced with Foins, such as he was wont to wear being Bishop, and a Tipper of Velvet furred likewise about his neck, a Velvet Night-cap upon his head, and a Corner-cap upon the same, going in a pair of Slippers to the Stake, and going between the Mayor and an Alderman, &c.

After him came Mr. Latimer in a poor Brishow free, Frock all worn, with his buttoned Cap, and a Kerchief on his head, all ready to the Fire, a new long Shroud hanging over his Hofs down to the feet: which at the first light stirred mens hearts to rue upon them, beholding on the one side, the honour they sometime had, and on the other, the calamity whereunto they were fallen.

Mr. Doctor Ridley, as he passed toward Beards, looked up where Mr. Cranmer did ly, hoping belike to have seen him at the Glas-window, and to have spoken unto him. But then Mr. Cranmer was busie with Frier

Soto and his Fellows disputing together, so that he could not see him through that occasion. Then Mr. Ridley, looking back, espied Mr. Latimer coming after. Unto whom he said, Oh, be ye there? Yea, said Mr. Latimer, have after as fast as I can follow. So he following a pretty way off, at length they came both to the Stake, the one after the other, where first Dr. Ridley entring the place, marvellously and earnestly holding up both his hands, looked towards Heaven: then shortly after espying Mr. Latimer, with a wondrous chearful look he ran to him, imbraced and kissed him, and as they that stood near reported, comforted him, saying, Be of good heart, Brother, for God will either asswage the fury of the flames, or else strengthen us to abide it.

With that went he to the Stake, kneeled down by it, kissed it, and effectually prayed, and behind him Mr. Latimer kneeled, as earnestly calling upon God as he. After they arose the one talked with the other a little while, till they which were appointed to see the Execution removed themselves out of the Sun. What they said I can learn of no man.

Then Dr. Smith, of whose Recantation in King Edwards time ye heard before, began his Sermon to them upon this Text of St. Paul, in the 13th Chapter of the first Epistle to the Corinthians; Si corpus meum tradidero igni, charitatem autem non habeam, nihil mihi prodest: capio; this is, If I yield my Body, to the fire to be burnt, and have not Charity, I shall gain nothing thereby. Wherein he alledged that the goodnets of the cause and not the order of death, maketh the holiness of the person; which he confirmed by the examples of Judas, and and of a woman in Oxford that of late hanged her self, for that they and such like as he recited, might then be adjudged righteous, which desperately hindered their lives from their bodies, as he feared that those men that stood before him would do. But he cried still to the People to beware of them, for they were Hereticks, and died out of the Church. And on the other side, he declared their diversities in opinions, as Lutherans, Oecolampadians, Zuinglians, of which sect they were he said, and that was the worst: but the old Church of Christ, and the Catholick faith believed far otherwise. At which place they lifted up both their hands and eyes to heaven, as it were calling God to witness of the truth. The which countenance they made in many other places of his Sermon, whereas they thought he spake amiss. He ended with a very short exhortation to them to recant and come home again to the Church, and save their lives and Souls, which else were condemned. His Sermon was scant in all a quarter of an hour.

Doctor Ridley said to Master Latimer, will you begin to answer the Sermon, or shall I? Master Latimer said, begin you first I pray you. I will, said Master Ridley.

Then the wicked Sermon being ended, Doctor Ridley, and Mr. Latimer kneeled down upon their knees towards my Lord Williams of Tame, the Vice-chancellor of Oxford, and divers other Commissioners appointed for that purpose, which sate upon a form thereby. Unto whom Mr. Ridley said: I beseech you my Lord, even for Christs sake, that I may speak but two or three words: and whil实现 my Lord bent his head to the Mayor and Vice-chancellor, to know (as it appeared) whether he might give him leave to speak, the Bayliffs and Doctor Marshall Vice-chancellor, ran hastily unto him, and with their hands stopped his mouth, and said, Master Ridley, if you will revoke your erroneous opinions, and recant the same, you shall not onely have liberty so to do, but also the benefit of a subject, that is, have your life. Not otherwise, said Master Ridley. No, quoth Doctor Marshall: therefore if you will not to do, then there is no remedy but you must suffer for your defaults Well (quoth Mr. Ridley) so long as the breath is in my body, I will never deny my Lord Christ, and his known truth: Gods will be done in me. And with that he rose up, and said with a loud voice, Well, then I commit our cause to Almighty God, which shall indifferently judge all.

To whose saying, Mr. Latimer added his old Poise, Well, there is nothing hid but it shall be opened: and when he said, he could answer Smith well enough, if he might be suffered. Incontinently they were commanded to make them ready, which they with all meekness obeyed. Mr. Ridley took his gown and his tippet, and gave it to his Brother in Law Mr. Shipside, who all his time of imprisonment, although he might not be suffered to come to him, lay there at his own charges to provide him necessities, which from time to time he sent him by the Sergeant that kept him. Some other of his apparel that was little worth, he gave away, the other Bayliffs took.

He gave away besides, divers other small things to Gentlemen standing by, and divers of them pitifully weeping, as to Sir Henry Lea he gave a new groat, and to divers of my Lord Williams Gentlemen, some napkins, some nutmegs, and races of Ginger, his Dial, and such other things as he had about him, to every one that stood next him. Some plucked the points off his hose. Happy was he that might get any rag of him.

Master Latimer gave nothing, but very quietly suffered his Keeper to pull off his hose, and his other array, which to look unto was very simple: and being stripped into his shroud, he seemed as comely a person to them that were there present, as one should lightly see; and whereas in his clothes he appeared a withered and crooked silly old man, he now stood bolt upright, as comely a father as one might lightly behold.

Then Master Ridley, standing as yet in his truss, said to his Brother, It were best for me to go in my truss still. No, quoth his Brother, it will put you to more pain: and the truss will do a poor man good. Whereunto Master Ridley said: Be it, in the Name of God, and so unlaced himself. Then being in his shirt, he stood upon the forefild stone, and held up his hand and said:

O! heavenly Father, I give unto thee most hearty thanks, for that thou hast called me to be a professor of thee, even unto death. I beseech thee Lord God take mercy upon this Realm of England, and deliver the same from all her enemies.

Then the Smith took a chain of Iron, and brought the same about both Doctor Ridleys, and Mr. Latimers middles: and as he was knocking in a staple, Doctor Ridley took the chain in his hand, and flaked the same, for it did gird in his belly, and looking aside to the Smith, said; Good fellow, knock it in hard, for the flesh will have his course. Then his Brother did bring him Gun-powder in a bag, and would have tied the same about his neck, Master Ridley asked what it was. His Brother said, Gun-powder. Then said he, I will take it to be sent of God, therefore I will receive it as sent of him. And have you any said he, for my Brother, meaning Master Latimer? Yea Sir, that I have (quoth his Brother:) Then give it unto him (said he) betime, lest ye come too late. So his Brother went, and carried of the same Gun-powder unto Master Latimer.

In the mean time Doctor Ridley spake unto my Lord Williams, and said; My Lord, I must be a suter unto your Lordship in the behalf of divers poor men, and specially in the cause of my poor Sister: I have made a supplication to the Queens Majesty in their behalfs. I beseech your Lordship for Christs sake, to be a mean to her grace for them. My Brother here hath the supplication, and will refer to your Lordship to certify you hereof. There is nothing in all the World that troubleth my Conscience (I praise God) this onely excepted. Whil实现 I was in the See of London, divers poor men took leaflets of me, and agreed with me for the same. Now I hear say the Bishop that now occupieth the same room, will not allow my grants unto them made, but contrary unto all law and Conscience, hath taken from them their livings, and will not suffer them to enjoy the same. I beseech you my Lord, be a mean for them: you shall do a good deed, and God will reward you.

Then they brought a faggot, kindled with fire, and laid the same down at D. Ridleys feet. To whom Mr. Latimer spake in this manner; Be of good comfort Mr. Ridley, and play the man, we shall this day light such a candle by Gods grace in England, as I trust shall never be put out.

And so the fire being given unto them, when Doctor Ridley saw the fire flaming up towards him, he cried with a wonderful loud voice; In manus tuas, Domine, commendo spiritum meum: Domine recipe spiritum meum, and after repeated this later part often in English, Lord, Lord, receive my Spirit: Master Latimer crying as vehemently on the other side, O Father of Heaven receive my Soul: who received the flame as it were embracing of it. After that he had stroaked his face with his hands, and as it were bathed them a little in the fire, he soon died (as it appeareth) with very little pain or none. And thus much concerning the end of this old and blessed Servant of God, Master Latimer, for whose laborious travels, fruitful life, and constant death, the whole Realm hath cause to give great thanks to Almighty God.

But Master Ridley by reason of the evil making of the fire unto him, because the wooden faggots were laid about the gods, and over high built, the fire burned first beneath, being kept down by the wood. Which when he felt, he desired them for Christs sake to let the fire come unto him, Which when his Brother in law heard, but not well understood, intending to rid him out of his pain (for the which cause he gave attendance) as one in such sorrow, not well advised what he did, heaped faggots upon him, so that he clean covered him, which made the fire more vehement beneath, that it burned clean all his neather parts, before it once touched the upper, and that made him leap up and down under the faggots, and often desire them to let the fire come unto him, saying; I cannot burn. Which indeed appeared well: for after his legs were consumed by reason of his frugling through the pain (whereof he had no release, but only his contentation in God) he fiewed that side toward us clean, shirt and all untouched with flame. Yet in all this torment he forgot not to call unto God still, having in his mouth, Lord have mercy upon me, intermingling his cry, let let the fire come unto me, I cannot burn. In which pains he laboured till one of the standers by with his bill pulled off the Faggots above, and where he saw the fire flame up, he wrested himself unto that side. And when the flame touched the Gun-powder, he was seen flirring more, but turned on the other side, falling down at Master Latimers feet. Which some said, happened by reason that the chain loosed, other said, that he fell over the chain by reason of the poise of his body, and the weakness of the weather limbs.

Some said that before he was like to fall from the stake, he desired them to hold him to it with their bills. However it was, surely it moved hundreds to tears, in beholding the horrible sight. For I think there was none, that had not clean exiled all humanity and mercy, which would not have lamented to behold the fury of the fire to rage upon their bodies. Signs there were of sorrow on every side. Some took it grievously to see their deaths, whose lives they held full dear. Some pitied their persons, that thought their Souls and no need thereof. His Brother moved many men, seeing his miserable case, seeing (I say) him compelled to such infelicity, that he thought then to do him best service when he hastened his end. Some cried out of the luck, to see his endeavour, who most dearly loved him, and fought his release, turn to his greater vexation, and increase of pain. But who considered their preferences in time past, the places of honour that they sometime occupied in this Common wealth, the favour they were in with their Princes, and the opinion of learning they had, could not choose but sorrow with tears, to see so great dignity, honour and estimation, so necessary members sometime accounted, so many godly virtues, the study of so many years, such excellent learning, to be put into the fire, and consumed in one moment. Well, dead they are, and the reward of this World they have already. What reward remaineth for them in Heaven, the day of the Lords Glory, when he cometh with his Saints, shall shortly I trust, declare.

Albeit I have deferred and put over many treatises, letters, and Exhortations, belonging to the story of the Martyrs, unto the later appendix in the end of this volume; thinking also to have done the like with these Farewells and Exhortations following of B. Ridley, yet for certain purposes moving me thereunto, and especially considering the fruitful admonitions, wholesome doctrine, and necessary exhortations contained in the same, I thought best here to bestow, and consequently to adjoin the said tractations of that learned Pastor, with the life and Story of the Author. Whereof the two first be in a manner his farewells, the one to his kinsfolks, and generally to all the faithful of the number of Christs Congregation: the other more special to the prisoners, and banished Christians in the Gospels cause: the third containeth a fruitful and general admonition to the City of London, and to all other, with necessary precepts of Christian office, as by the tenor of them here followeth in order to be seen.

A Treatise or Letter written by D. Ridley, instead of his last fare-well, to all his true and Faithful Friends in God, with a sharp admonition withal unto the Papists.

The first fare-well of B. Ridley to his Friends.

AT the Name of Jesus, let every knee bow, both of things in Heaven, and things in earth, and things under the earth, and let every tongue confess, that Jesus Christ is the Lord, unto the glory of God the Father, Amen.

As a man minding to take a far journey, and to depart from his familiar Friends commonly and naturally hath a desire to bid his Friends farewell before his departure: so likewise now I looking daily, when I should be called to depart hence from you (O all ye my dearly beloved Brethren and Sisters in our Saviour Christ, that dwell here in this World) having alike mind towards you all (and blessed be God for such time and leisure, whereof I right heartily thank his heavenly goodness) to bid you all my dear Brethren and Sisters (I say in Christ) that dwell upon the earth, after such manner as I can, Farewell.

Farewell my dear Brother, George Shipside, whom I have ever found faithful, trusty, and loving in all rates and conditions, and now in the time of my Cause, ever all other to me most friendly & devout, and that which asked me best over all other things in Gods cause ever hearty.

Farewell my dear Sister Alice his Wife. I am glad to hear of thee, that thou dost take Christs Cross which is laid now (blessed be God) both on thy back and mine, in good part. Thank thou God that hath given thee a godly and loving husband: see thou honour him and obey him, according to Gods Law. Honour thy Mother in Law his Mother, and love all those that pertain unto him, being ready to do them good, as it shall lie in thy power. As for thy Children, I doubt not of thy husband, but that he which hath given him an heart to love and fear God, and in God them that pertain unto him, shall also make him friendly and beneficial unto thy Children, even as if they had been gotten of his own body.

Farewell my dearly beloved Brother John Ridley of the Walton, and you my gentle and loving Sister Elizabeth: whom besides the natural league of amity, your tender love, which you were said ever to bear towards me above the rest of your Brethren, doth bind me to love. My mind was to have acknowledged this your loving affection, and to have acquitted with deeds, and not with words alone. Your Daughter Elizabeth I bid farewell, whom I love for the meek and gentle Spirit that God hath given her, which is a precious thing in the sight of God.

Farewell my beloved Sister of Umbank, with all your Children, Nephews and Nieces. Since the departing of my Brother Hugh, my mind was to have been unto them instead of their Father, but the Lord God must and will be their Father, if they would love and fear him, and live in the trade of his Law.

Farewell my welbeloved and worshipful Cousins, Mr. Nich. Ridley of Willmouthe, and your Wife, and I thank you for all your kindness shewed both to me, and also to all your own kinsfolk and mine. Good Cousin, as God hath set you in our stock, and kindred (not for any respect of your person, but of his abundant grace and goodness) to be as it were the Bell-weather to order and conduct the rest, and hath also induced you with his manifold gifts of grace both Heavenly and Worldly above others: so I pray you good Cousin (as my trust and hope is in you) continue and increase in the maintenance of the truth, honesty, righteousness, and all true godliness, and to the uttermost of your power, to withstand falsehood, untruth, unrighteousness, and all ungodliness which is forbidden and condemned by the Word and Laws of God.

Farewell my young Cousin Ralph Whitfield. Oh! your time was very short with me. My mind was to have done you good, and yet you caught in that little time a loss, but I trust it shall be recompensed, as it shall please Almighty God.

Farewell all my whole Kindred and countreyemen, farewell in Christ all together. The Lord, which is the father, cher of secrets, knoweth that according to my hearts desire, my hope was of late that I should have come among you, and to have brought with me abundance of Christs blessed Gospel, according to the duty of that office and ministry, whereunto among you I was chosen, named and appointed by the mouth of that our late peerless Prince, King Edward, and so also denounced openly in his Court, by his privy Council.

I warn you all my welbeloved Kinsfolk and Countrymen, that ye be not amazed or astonished at the kind of my departure and dissolution: for I ensure you, I think it the most honour that ever I was called unto in all my life: and therefore I thank my Lord God heartily for it, that it hath pleased him to call me of his great mercy unto this high honour, to suffer death willingly for his sake, and his cause; unto the which honour he hath called the Holy Prophets, and dearly beloved Apostles, and his blessed chosen Martyrs. For know ye that I doubt no more, but that the causes wherefore I am put to death, are Gods causes, and the causes of the Truth, then I doubt that the Gospel which John Wrote is the Gospel of Christ, or that Pauls Epistles are the very Word of God. And to have a heart willing to abide, and stand in Gods cause, and in Christs quarrell even unto death, I ensure thee (O man) it is an ineffable and an honourable gift of God, given only to the true Elect, and dearly beloved Children of God and Inheritors of the Kingdom of Heaven. For the Holy Apostle and also Martyr in Christs cause, Saint Peter, saith, If ye suffer rebuke in the Name of Christ, that is, in Christs cause, and for his truths sake, then are ye happy and blessed, for the glory of the Spirit of God resteth upon you. If for rebukes sake suffered in Christs Name, a man is pronounced, by the mouth of that Holy Apostle, blessed and happy: how much more happy and blessed is he that hath the grace to suffer death also? Wherefore, all ye that be my true lovers and Friends, rejoyce, and rejoyce with me again, and render with me hearty thanks to God our heavenly Father, that for his Sons sake my Saviour and Redeemer Christ, he hath vouchsafed to call me, being else without his gracious goodness, in my self but a sinful and vile wretch, to call me (I say) unto this high dignity of his true Prophets, of his faithful Apostles, and of his holy elect and chosen Martyrs, that is, to die and to spend this temporal life in the defence and maintenance of his eternal and everlasting truth.

Ye know that be my country-men dwelling upon the borders, where (alas) the true man suffereth oftentimes much wrong at the thieves hand, if it chance a man to be slain of a thief (as it often doth there) which went out with his neighbour to help him to reserve his goods again, that the more cruelly he be slain, and the more stedfastly he stuck by his neighbour in the fight against the faith of the thief, the more favour and friendship shall all his posterity have for the slain mans sake, of all them that be true, as long as the memory of this fact, and his posterity doth endure: Even so ye that be my kinsfolk and country-men, know ye (howsoever the blind, ignorant, and wicked World hereafter shall rail upon my death, which thing they cannot do worse than their Fathers did, of the death of Christ our Saviour, of his Holy Prophets, Apostles, and Martyrs:) know ye (I say) that both before God, and all them that be godly, and that truly know, and follow the Laws of God, ye have, and shall have by Gods Grace, ever cause to rejoyce, and to thank God highly, and to think good of it, and in God rejoyce of me your Flesh and Blood, whom God of his goodness hath vouchsafed to associate unto the blessed company of his Holy Martyrs in Heaven: and I doubt not in the infinite goodness of my Lord God, nor in the faithful fellowship of his elect and chosen People, but at both their hands in my cause, ye shall render him the more favour and grace: for the Lord saith, that he will be both to them and theirs that love him, the more loving again in a thousand generations: the Lord is so full of mercy to them (I say) and theirs which do love him indeed. And Christ saith again, that no man can draw more love than to give his life for his Friend.

Now also know ye, all my true lovers in God, my kinsfolk and country-men, that the cause wherefore I am put to death, is even after the same sort and condition, but touching more neer Gods cause, and in more weighty matters, but in the general kind all one: For both is Gods cause, both is in the maintenance of right, and both for the Common-wealth, and both for the weal also of the Christian Brother, although yet there is in these two no small difference, both concerning the enemies, the goods stoll, and the manner of the fight. For know ye all, that like as there when the poor man is robbed by the thief of his goods truly gotten (whereupon he and his household should live) he is greatly wronged, and the thief in stealing and robbing with violence the poor mans goods, doth offend God, doth transgress his Law, and is injurious both to the poor man, and to the Common-wealth: so I say, know ye that even here in the cause of my death, it is with the Church of England, I mean the Congregation of the true chosen Children of God in this Realm of England, which I know ledge not only to be my neighbours, but rather the Congregation of my Spiritual Brethren and Sisters in Christ, yea, members of one body, wherein by Gods Grace, I am and have been grafted in Christ. This Church of England hath of late of the infinite goodness, and abundant grace of Almighty God, great substance, Anno great riches of heavenly treasure, great plenty of Gods true sincere Word, the true and wholesome administration of Christs Holy Sacraments, the whole profession of Christs Religion, truly and plainly set forth in Baptism, the plain declaration and understanding of the same, taught in the Holy Catechisms, to have been learned of all true Christians.

The Church had also a true and sincere form and manner of the Lords Supper, wherein according to Jesus Christs own ordinance, and Holy Institution, Christs Commandments were executed and done. For upon the Bread and Wine set upon the Lords Table, thanks were given, the commemoration of the Lords death was had; the Bread, in the remembrance of Christs Body torn upon the Cross, was broken, and the cup in the remembrance of Christs Blood shed, was distributed, and both communicated unto all that were present and would receive them, and also they were exhorted of the minister so to do.

All was done openly in the vulgar tongue, so that every thing might be most easily heard, and plainly understood of all the People, to Gods high glory, and the edification of the whole Church. This Church had of late the whole divine services, all common and publick prayers ordained to be said and heard in the common Congregation, not only framed and fashioned to the true vein of Holy Scripture, but also set forth according to the commandment of the Lord, and St. Pauls Doctrin for the Peoples edification, in their vulgar tongue.

It had also holy and wholesome Homilies in commendation of the principal virtues, which are commended in Scripture: and likewise other Homilies against the most pernicious and capital vices that use (alas) to reign in this Realm of England. This Church had in matters of controverfie, Articles so penned and framed after the Holy Scriptures, and grounded upon the true understanding of Gods Word, that in short time if they had been universally received, they should have been able to have set in Christs true Religion, and to have expelled many false errors and Heresies, wherewith this Church, alas, was almost overgon.

But alas, of late into this spiritual possession of the Heavenly treasure of these godly riches, are entred in thieves, that have robbed and spoiled all this treasure away. I may well complain on these things, and cry out upon them with the Prophet saying, Desertus est templum domus domus tua, &c. Psal. 72. O Lord God, the Gentiles, Heathen Nations, are come into thy heritage: They have defiled thy Holy Temple, and made Jerusalem an heap of stones, that is, They have broken and beaten down to the ground thy Holy City. This Heathenish generation, these thieves be of Samaritan, these Sabai and Chaldei, these robbers have rusted out of their dens, and have robbed the Church of England of all the foresaid Holy Treasure of God; they have carried it away, and overturned it, and instead of Gods Holy Word, the true and right administration of Christs Holy Sacraments, as of Baptism, and others, they mixt their Ministry with mans foolish fantasies, and many wicked and ungodly traditions withal.

In stead of the Lords Holy Table, they give the People with much solemn disguising a thing which they call their Mass, but indeed and in truth, it is a very masking and mockery of the true Supper of the Lord, or rather I may call it a crafty juggling, whereby these false thieves and jugglers have bewitched the minds of the simple People, that they have brought them from the true worship of God, unto pernicious Idolatry, and make them to believe that to be Christ our Lord and Saviour, which indeed is neither God nor man, nor hath any life in it self, but in substances is the creature of Bread and Wine, and in use of the Lords Table is the Sacrament of Christs Body and Blood: and for this holy use, for the which the Lord hath ordained them in his Table, to represent unto us his blessed Body torn upon the Cross for us, and his Blood there shed, it pleased him to call them his Body and Blood: which understanding Christ declareth to be his true meaning, when he saith, Do this in remembrance of me. And again, Saint Paul, likewile doth set out the same more plainly, speaking of the same Sacrament, after the words of Consecration, saying, As often as ye shall eat of this Bread, and drink of this Cup, ye shall set forth (he meaneth with the same) the Lords Death until his coming again. And here again these Thieves have robbed also the People of the Lords Cup, contrary to the plain words of Christ, written in his Gospel.

Prayers turned into an unknown Tongue.

Now for the common Publick Prayers which were in the Vulgar Tongue, these Thieves have brought in again a strange Tongue, whereof the People understand not one word. Wherein what do they else, but rob the People of their Divine Service, wherein they ought to pray together with the Minister? And to pray in a strange Tongue, what is it, but (as S. Paul calleth it) barbarousness, childishness, unprofitable folly, yea, and plain madness.

For the godly Articles of Unity in Religion, and for the wholesome Homilies, what do these Thieves place in the head of them, but the Popes Laws and Decrees, lying Legends, feigned Fables, and Miracles to delude and abuse the simplicity of the rude People? Thus this robbery and theft is not only committed, nay, sacrilege and wicked spoil of heavenly things, but also in the stead of the same, is brought in and placed the abominable defecation of the Tyrant Antichrist, of proud Sacerdotes, of the shameless faced King, and of the Babylonical Beast. Unto this Robbery, this Theft and Sacrilege, for that I cannot confesse, nor (God willing, ever shall so long as the breath is in my Body, because it is Blasphemy against God, high Treason unto Christ our heavenly King, Lord, Master, and our only Saviour and Redeemer, it is plainly contrary to Gods Word, and to Christs Gospel, it is the subversion of all true Godliness, and against the everlasting salvation of mine own Soul, and of all my Brethren and Sisters, whom Christ my Saviour hath so dearly bought, with no less price than with the effusion and shedding forth of his most precious Blood: Therefore all ye my true lovers in God, my Kinsfolks and Country-men, for this cause (I say) know ye that I am put to death, which by Gods grace I shall willingly take, with hearty thanks to God therefore, in certain hope without any doubting, to receive at Gods hand again, of his free mercy and grace, everlasting life.

Although the cause of the true man slain of the Thief, helping his Neighbour to recover his Goods again, and the cause wherefore I am to be put to death, in a generality is both one (as I said before); yet know ye that there is no small difference. These Thieves against whom I do stand, are much worse than the Robbers and Thieves of the Borders. The Goods which they steal are much more precious, and their kinds of fight are far divers. These Thieves are worse (I say) for they are more cruel, more wicked, more false, more deceitful and crafty: for those will but kill the Body, but these will not stick to kill both Body and Soul. Those, for the general Theft and Robbery, be called, and are indeed Thieves and Robbers; but these, for their spiritual kind of robbery, are called Sacerdotes, as ye would say, Church-robbers. They are more wicked: for those go about to spoil men of worldly things, worldly riches, gold and silver, and worldly substance; these go about in the ways of the Devil their Ghostly Father, to steal from the Universal Church, and particularly from every man, all heavenly Treasure, true Faith, true Charity, and hope of Salvation in the Blood of our Saviour Jesus Christ, yea, to spoil us of our Saviour Jesus Christ, of his Gospel, of his heavenly Spirit, and of the heavenly heritage of the Kingdom of Heaven, so dearly purchased unto us, with the death of our Master and Saviour Christ. These be the Goods and godly Substance whereupon the Christian before God must live, and without the which he cannot live: These Goods (I say) these Thieves, these Church-robbers go about to spoil us of. The which Goodness to the Man of God, they excel and far pass all worldly Treasure; so to withstand even unto the death such Thieves as go about to spoil both us and the whole Church of such Goods, is most high and honourable Service done unto God.

These Church-robbers; so much more false, crafty, and deceitful than the Thieves upon the borders; for these have not the craft so to commend their Theft, that they dare avouch it, and therefore as acknowledging themselves to be evil, they steal commonly upon the night, they dare not appear at Judgments and Sessions, where Justice is executed, and when they are taken and brought thither, they never hang any man, but they be oft times hanged for their faults. But these Church-robbers can so cloak and colour their spiritual Robbery, that they can make People to believe falsehood to be truth, and truth falsehood, good to be evil, and evil good, light to be darkness, and darkness light, Superstition to be true Religion, and Idolatry to be the true Worship of God, and that which is in Substance the Creature of Bread and Wine, to be none other Substance but only the Substance of Christ the living Lord, both God and Man. And with this their falsehood and craft, they can so juggle and bewitch the Understanding of the Simple, that they dare avouch it openly in Court and in Town, and fear neither hanging nor heading, as the poor Thieves of the Borders do; but stout and strong like Nemrobath, dare condemn to be burned in flaming fire, quick and alive, whosoever will go about to bewray their falsehood.

The kind of fight against these Church-robbers, is also of another sort and kind, than is that which is against the Thieves of the Borders. For there the true men go forth against them with Spear and Lance, with Bow and Bill, and all such kind of bodily Weapons as the true men have: but here, as the Enemies be of another nature, so the Watchmen of Christs Flock, the Warriors that fight in the Lords War, must be armed, and fight with another kind of Weapons and Armour. For here the Enemies of God, the Souldiers of Antichrist, although the Battel is set forth against the Church by mortal men, being flesh and blood, and nevertheless Members of their Father the Devil, yet for that their grand Master is the Power of Darkness, their Members are Spiritual Wickedness, wicked Spirits, Spirits of Errors, of Heresies, of all Deceit and Ungodliness, Spirits of Idolatry, Superstition and Hypocrisie, which are called of S. Paul, Principalities and Powers, Lords of the World, Rulers of the darkness of this World, and spiritual subtilties concerning heavenly things, therefore our Weapons must be fit and meet to fight against such, not Carnal nor Bodily Weapons, as Spear and Lance, but Spiritual and Heavenly: we must fight against such with the Armour of God, not intending to kill their Bodies, but their Errors, their false Craft and Heresies, their Idolatry, Superstition, and Hypocrisie, and to save (as much as lieth in us) both their Bodies and their Souls.

And therefore as S. Paul teacheth us, we fight not against flesh and blood, that is, we fight not with bodily Weapon to kill the man, but with the weapons of God to put to flight his wicked Errors and Vice, and to save both Body and Soul. Our Weapons therefore are Faith, Hope, Charity, Righteousness, Truth, Patience, Prayer unto God, and our Sword wherewith we smite our Enemies, beat and batter and bear down all falsehood, is the Word of God. With these Weapons, under the Banner of the Cross of Christ, we do fight, ever having our eye upon our grand Master, Duke and Captain, Christ; and then we reckon our selves to triumph and to win the Crown of everlasting Bliss, when induring in this Battel without any shrinking or yielding to the Enemies, after the example of our grand Captain Christ our Master, after the Example of his holy Prophets, Apostles, and Martyrs, when (I say) we are slain in our mortal bodies of our Enemies, and are most cruelly and without all mercy murdered down like a many of Sheep. And the more cruel, the more painful, the more vile and spiteful is the kind of death whereunto we be put; the more glorious in God, the more blessed and happy we reckon (without all doubts) our Martyrdom to be.

And thus much, dear Lovers and Friends in God, my Country-men and Kinsfolk, I have spoken for your comfort, lest of my death (of whose life you looked peradventure sometimes to have had honesty, pleasures, and commodities) ye might be ashamed or think any evil: whereas ye have rather cause to rejoyce (if ye love me indeed) for that it hath pleased God to call me to a greater honour and dignity, than ever I did enjoy before, either in Rockester, or in the See of London, or ever should have had in the See of Durham, whereunto

I was last of alielected and named : yea, I count it greater honour before God indeed to dye in his cause (whereof I nothing doubt) than is any earthly or temporal promotion or honour that can be given to a Man in this World. And who is he that knoweth the cause to be Gods to be Christs quarrell, and of his Gospel, to be the common weal of all the elect and chosen Children of God, of all the inheritors of the Kingdom of Heaven ; who is he (I say) that knoweth this assuredly by Gods Word, and the testimony of his own Conscience (as I through the infinite goodness of God, not of my self, but by his Grace acknowledge my self to do) who is he (I say) that knoweth this and both loveth and feareth God indeed and in truth, loveth and believeth his Master Christ and his blessed Gospel, loveth his brotherhood, the chosen Children of God, and also lusteth and longeth for everlasting life, who is he (I say again) that would not or cannot find in his heart in this cause to be content to die? The Lord forbid that any such should be that should forsake this Grace of God. I trust in my Lord God, the God of mercies and the Father of all comfort through Jesus Christ our Lord, that he which hath put this mind, will, and affection by his Holy Spirit in my heart, to stand against the face of the enemy in his cause, and to chuse rather the loss of all my Worldly Substance, yea and of my Life too, than to deny his known truth ; that he will comfort me, aid me, and strengthen me evermore even unto the end, and to the yielding up of my Spirit and Soul into his holy hands ; whereof I most heartily beseech his most holy sacred Majesty of his infinite Goodness and Mercy, through Jesus Christ our Lord, Amen.

The cause of Martyrs is the common cause of all Christians, and of all his Majesty's Subjects.

Let no Man shrink to die in such a blessed and common quarrel.

Benefits bestowed to Ridley in Cambridge.

Worshipful Hall in Cambridge. Commendation of Farel's Hall to be a better fourth cover of the Gospel. Dr. Ridley learned the Epistles of Saint Paul and Peter without Book in Cambridge Hall.

Now that I have taken my leave of my Contrimen and Kinstoke, and the Lord doth lend me Life, and give me leisure, I will bid my other good friends in God of other places also, farewel. And whom first or before other, then the University of Cambridge, where I have dwelt longer, found more faithful and hearty friends, received more benefits (the benefits of my natural Parents only excepted) than ever I did even in mine own native Country wherein I was born.

Farewel therefore (Cambridge) my loving Mother and tender Nurse. If I should not acknowledge thy manifold benefits, yea, if I should not for thy benefits at the least love thee again, truly I were to be accounted too ungrate and unkind. What benefits hadst thou ever, that thou wast to give and bestow upon thy best beloved Children, that thou thoughtest too good for me? Thou didst bestow on me all thy School degrees, the common Offices, the Chaplainship of the University, the Office of the Proctorship, and of a common Reader; and of thy private commodities and emoluments in Colleges, what was it that thou madest me not partner of? First to be Scholar, then to be Fellow, and after my departure from thee, thou calledst me again to a Mastership of a Right Worshipful College. I thank thee, my loving Mother, for all this thy kindness, and I pray God that his Laws, and the sincere Gospel of Christ may ever be truly taught and faithfully learned in thee.

Farewel Pembroke Hall, of late mine own Colledge, my Cure and my charge: what case thou art in now God knoweth, I know not well. Thou wast ever named since I knew thee, which is not thirty years ago, to be studious, well learned, and a great setter forth of Christs Gospel, and of God true Word ; so I found thee, and blessed be God, so I left thee indeed. Wo is me for thee mine own dear Colledge, if ever thou suffer thy self by any means to be brought from that trade. In thy Orchard (the walls, butts, and trees, if they could speak would bear me witness) I learned without Book almost all Pauls Epistles, yea, and I went all the Canonical Epistles, save only the Apocalyps. Of which study, although in time a great part did depart from me, yet the sweet smell thereof I trust I shall carry with me into Heaven : for the profit thereof I think I have felt in all my Life time ever after, and I ween of late (whether thy bide now or no, I cannot tell) there was that did like thee. The Lord grant that this zeal and love toward that part of Gods Word, which is a key and true commentary to all the Holy Scripture, may ever abide in that Colledge so long as the World shall endure.

From Cambridge I was called into Kent by the Archbishop of Canterbury Thomas Crommer, that most reverend Father and Man of God, and of him by and by sent to be Vicar of Herne in East-Kent. Wherefore farewel Herne, thou worshipful and wealthy parish, the first Cure whereunto I was called to Preach Gods Word. Thou hast heard of my Mouth oft-times the Word of God Preached, not after the Popish trade, but after Christs Gospel : Oh that the fruit had answered to the feed. And yet I must acknowledge me to be thy debtor for the doctrine of the Lords Supper, which at that time I acknowledge God had not revealed unto me: but I bless God in all that Godly vertue and zeal of Gods Word, which the Lord by Preaching of his Word did kindle manifestly both in the heart and in the Life and works of that Godly Woman there, my Lady Phineas, the Lord grant that his word took like effect there in many other more.

Farewel thou Cathedral Church of Canterbury, the Metropolitick See, whereof once I was a member. To speak things pleasant unto thee I dare not for danger of Conscience, and displeasure of my Lord God, and to say what lieth in my heart were now too much and I fear were able to do thee now but little good. Nevertheless, for the friendship I have found in some there, and for charity sake I wish thee to be walked clean of all Worldliness and ungodliness, that thou might be found of God after thy name Christs Church in deed and in truth.

Farewel Rochester, sometime my Cathedral See, in whom (to say the truth) I did find much gentleness and obedience, and I trust thou wilt not say the contrary; but I did use it to Gods Glory and into thine own profit in God. Oh that thou hadst and mightst have continued and gone forward in the trade of Gods Law wherein I did leave thee ; then thy charge and burden should not have been so terrible and dangerous, as I suppose verily it is like to be (alas) in the latter day.

To Westminster other advertisement in God I have not now to say, then I have said before to the Cathedral Church of Canterbury, and so God give thee of his Grace, that thou mayest learn in deed and in truth to please him after his own Laws : and thus fare you well.

Oh London, London, to whom now may I speak in thee, or whom shall I bid farewel? Shall I speak to the Prebendaries of Pauls? Alas, all that loved Gods Word, and were the true setters forth thereof, are now (as I hear say) some burnt and slain, some exiled and banished, and some held in hard Prison, and appointed daily to be put to most cruel death for Christs Gospel sake. As for the rest of them, I know they could never brook me well, nor could I ever delight in them.

Shall I speak to the See thereof, wherein of late I was placed almost, and not fully by the space of three years? But what may I say to it, being (as I hear say I am) deposed and expelled by judgment as unjust usurper of that room. O judgment, judgment. Can this be just judgment to condemn the chief Minister of Gods Word, the Pastor and Bishop of the Diocess, and never bring him into judgment, that he might have heard what crimes were laid to his charge, nor ever suffer him to have any place or time to answer for himself? Thinkest thou that hereafter when true Justice shall have place, this judgment can ever be allowed either of God or Man? Well, as for the cause or whole matter of my deposition, and the spoil of my goods which thou possidest yet, I refer it unto God which is a just judge ; and I beseech God, if it be his pleasure, that that which is but my personal wrong, be not laid to thy charge in the latter day, this only I can pray for.

O thou now wicked and Bloody See, why dost thou set up again many Altars of Idolatry, which by the Word of God were justly taken away? Why hast thou overthrown the Lords Table? Why dost thou daily delude thy people, masking in thy Masses in stead of the Lords Holy Supper, which ought to be common as well (saith Christ himself, yea the Lord himself) to the People as to the Priest? How darrest thou deny to the People of Christ, contrary to his express Commandment in the Gospel, his Holy Cup? Why bablest thou to the People the Common-Prayer in a strange Tongue, wherein

S. Paul commandeth in the Lords Name, that no man should speak before the Congregation, except it should be by and by declared in their Common Tongue, that all might be edified? Nay, hearken thou who is Bawd of Babylon, thou wicked Limb of Antichrist, thou bloody Wolf, why sleepest thou down, and makest havock of the Prophets of God? Why murderest thou so cruelly Christs poor filly Sheep, which will not hear thy voice, because thou art a Stranger, and will follow none other but their own Pastor Christs his voice? Thinkest thou to escape, or that the Lord will not require the blood of his Saints at thy hands? Thy God, which is the work of thy hands, and whom thou sayest thou hast Power to make, that thy deaf and dumb God (I say) will not indeed, nor can (although thou art not ashamed to call him thy Maker) make thee to escape the revenging hand of the High and Almighty God. But be thou assured, that the living Lord our Saviour and Redeemer, which sitteth on the right hand of his Father in glory, he seeth all thy wicked ways and cruelty done to his dear Members, and he will not forget his holy Ones, and his hands (O thou whorish Drab) shall thou never escape. Instead of my farewell to thee, now I say fye upon thee, fye upon thee filthy Drab, and all thy false Prophets.

Yet thou (O London) I may not leave thee thus. Although thy Episcopall See, now being joynd in league with the Seat of Satan, thus hath now both handled me and the Saints of God, yet I do not doubt, but in that great City there be many privy Mourners, which do daily mourn for that mischief, the which never did nor shall consent to that wickedness, but do detest and abhor it as the ways of Satan. But these privy Mourners here I will pass by, and bid them farewell with their Fellows hereafter, when the place and occasion shall more conveniently require. Among the worshipfull of the City, and specially which were in Office of Mayoralty, yea, and in other Cities also (whom to name now it shall not be necessary) in the time of my Ministry, which was from the latter part of Sir Rowland Hills's year, unto Sir George Barnes's year, and a great part thereof, I do acknowledge that I found no small humanity and gentleness as me thought; but (to say the truth) that I do esteem above all other for true Christian kindness, which is shewed in Gods cause, and done for his sake. Wherefore, O Dohi, Dohi, Alderman and Knight, thou in thy year didst win my heart for evermore, for that honourable act, that most blessed work of God, of the erection and setting up of Christs holy Hospitals, and truly religious Houses, which by thee, and through thee were begun. For thou like a man of God, when the matter was moved for the relief of Christs poor filly Members to be holpen from extrem misery, hunger, and famine, thy heart, I say, was moved with pity, and as Christs high honourable Officer in that cause, thou calledst together thy Brethren the Aldermen of the City, before whom thou brackest the matter for the Poore; thou didst plead their cause, yea, and not only in thine own person thou didst set forth Christs cause, but to further the matter, thou broughtest me into the Council Chamber of the City before the Aldermen alone, whom thou hadst assembled there together to hear me speak what I could say, as an Advocate by office and duty, in the poor mens cause. The Lord wrought with thee, and gave thee the consent of thy Brethren; whereby the matter was brought to the Common Council, and so to the whole Body of the City; by whom, with an uniform consent, it was committed to be drawn, ordered, and devised by a certain number of the most wily Citizens and Politicks, endued also with godliness, and with ready hearts to set forth such a noble act, as could be choke in all the whole City: and they like true and faithful Ministers both to their City and their Master Christ, to order, devise, and brought forth the matter, that thousands of filly poor Members of Christ, which else for ever had hunger and misery should have famished and perished, shall be relieved, holpen, and brought up, and shall have cause to bless the Aldermen of that time, the Common Council, and the whole Body of the City, but specially thee, O Dohi, and those chosen men, by whom this honourable work of God was begun and wrought; and that so long throughout all Ages, as that godly work shall endure; which I pray Almighty God may be ever unto the worlds end, Amen.

And thou, O Sir George Barnes, the truth is to be confessed to Gods glory, and to the good example of other, thou wast in thy year not only a furtherer and continuer of that which before thee by thy Predecessor was well begun; but also didst labour so to have perfected the work, that it should have been an absolute thing and perfect spectacle of true Charity and Godliness unto all Christendom. Thine endeavour was to have set up an house of Occupations, both that all kind of Poverty, being able to work, should not have lacked, whereupon profitably they might have been occupied to their own relief and to the profit and commodity of the Commonwealthe of the City, and also to have retired thither the poor Babes brought up in the Hospitals; when they had come to a certain age and strength, and also all those which in the Hospitals afore said had been cured of their Diseases. And to have brought this to pass, thou obtainedst, not without great diligence and labour both of thee, and of thy Brethren, and of that godly King Edward, that Christian and peerless Prince's hand, his Princely place of Bridewell, and what other things to the performance of the same, and under what condition it is not unknown. That this thine endeavour hath not had like success, the fault is not in thee, but in the condition and state of the time, which the Lord of his infinite mercy vouchsafe to amend when it shall be his gracious will and pleasure.

Farewell now all ye Citizens that be of God, of what state and condition soever ye be. Undoubtedly in London ye have heard Gods Word truly preached. My hearts desire and daily prayer shall be for you, as for whom, for my time, I know to my Lord God I am countable, that ye never swerve, neither for loss of life nor worldly goods, from Gods holy Word, and yield unto Antichrist: whereupon must needs follow the extrem displeasure of God, and the loss both of your bodies and souls into perpetual damnation for evermore.

Now that I have gone through the places where I have dwelt any space in the time of my Pilgrimage here upon Earth, remembering that for the space of King Edward's Reign, which was for the time of mine Office in the Sees of London and Rochester, I was a Member of the higher House of the Parliament; therefore (seeing my God hath given me leisure, and the remembrance thereof) I will bid my Lords of the Temporality farewell. They shall have no just cause (by Gods grace) to take it that I intend to say in ill part. As for the Spiritual Prelacy that now is, I have nothing to say to them, except I should repeat again a great part of that I have said before now already to the See of London. To you therefore my Lords of the Temporality will I speak, and this would I have you first to understand, that when I wrote this, I looked daily when I should be called to the change of this life, and thought that this my writing should not come to your knowledge, before the time of the dissolution of my body and soul should be expired; and therefore know ye, that I had before mine eyes only the fear of God, and Christian Charity toward you, which moved me to write; for of you hereafter I look not in this world, either for pleasure or displeasure. If my talk shall do you never so much pleasure or profit, you cannot promote me, nor if I displease you, can ye hurt me or harm me; for I shall be out of your reach. Now therefore if you fear God, and can be content to hear the talk of him that seeketh nothing at your hands, but to serve God, and to do you good: hearken what I say. I say unto you as S. Paul saith to the Galatians; I wonder my Lords what hath bewitched you, that ye so suddenly are fallen from Christ unto Antichrist; from Christs Gospel unto mans Traditions, from the Lord that bought you, unto the Bishop now of Rome. I warn you of your peril; be not deceived, except you will be found willingly consenters unto your own death. For if you think thus; We are Lay-men, this is a matter of Religion, we follow as we are taught and led; if our Teachers and Governours teach us and lead us amiss, the fault is in them, they shall Eccl. 3. bear the blame: My Lords, this is true (I grant you) that both the false Teachers, and the corrupt Governour, shall be punished for the death of their Subject, whom they have falsely taught and corruptly led, yea, and his blood shall be required at their hands: but yet nevertheless shall the Subject dye the death himself also, that is, he shall also be damned for his own sin; for if the blind lead the blind, Christ saith, not the leader only, but he saith, both shall fall into the Ditch. Shall the Synagogue and the Senate of the Jews (trow ye) which forsook Christ, and consented to his death, therefore be excused, because Ananias and Caiaphas, with the Scribes and Pharisees and their Clergy, did teach them amiss? yea, and also Pilate their Governour and the Emperours Lieutenant by his tyranny, did without cause put him to death: Forsooth no my Lords, no. For notwithstanding that corrupt Doctrine, or Pilates washing of his hands, neither of both shall excuse either that Synagogue or Scignory, or Pilate; but at the Lords hand, for the effusion of that innocent blood, on the later day all shall drink of the deadly whip. Ye are witty, and understand what I mean; therefore I will pass over this, and return to tell you how ye are fallen from Christ to his Adversary the Bishop of Rome.

And left (my Lords) ye may peradventure think, thus barely to call the Bishop of Rome Christs Adversary, or (to speak in plain terms) to call him Antichrist, that is done in mine Anguish, and that I do but rage, and as a desperate man, do not care what I say, or upon whom I do rail; therefore that your Lordships may perceive my mind, and thereby understand that I speak the words of truth and sobriety (as S. Paul said unto Festus) be it known unto your Lordships all, that as concerning the Bishop of Rome, I neither hate the Person nor the Place. For I ensueure your Lordships (the living Lord beareth me witness, before whom I speak) I do think many a good holy man, many Martyrs and Saints of God have lit and taught in that place Christs Gospel truly, which therefore justly may be called Apostolick, that is, true Disciples of the Apostles, and also that Church and Congregation of Christians to be a right Apostolick Church: yea, and that certain hundred years after the same was first erected and builded upon Christ, by the true Apostolick Doctrine taught by the mouths of the Apostles themselves. If ye will know how long that was, and how many hundred years, to be curious in pointing the precise number of the years, I will not be too bold, but thus I say; So long and so many hundred years as that See did truly teach and preach that Gospel, that Religion, exercised that Power, and ordered every thing by those Laws and Rules which that See received of the Apostles, and (as Terullian saith) the Apostles of Christ, and Christ of God, so long (I say) that See might well have been called Peter and Pauls Chair and See, or rather Christs Chair, and the Bishop thereof Apostolick, or true Disciple and Successour of the Apostles, and a Minister of Christ.

But since the time that that See hath degenerated from the Trade of Truth and true Religion, the which it received of the Apostles at the beginning, and hath preached another Gospel, hath set up another Religion, hath exercised another Power, and hath taken upon it to order and rule the Church of Christ by other strange Laws, Canons, and Rules than ever it received of the Apostles, or the Apostles of Christ, which things it doth at this day, and hath continued so doing (alas, alas) of too too long a time; since the time (I say) that the state and condition of that See hath thus been changed, in truth it ought of duty and of right to have the names changed both of the See and of the latter therein. For understand, my Lords, it was neither for the privilege of the place or person thereof, that that See and Bishops thereof were called Apostolick; but for the true trade of Christs Religion which was taught and maintained in that See at the first, and of those godly men. And therefore as truly and justly as that See then, for that true trade of Religion, and confanquinity of Doctrine with the Religion and Doctrine of Christs Apostles, was called Apostolick; so as truly and as justly for the contrary of Religion, and diversity of Doctrine from Christ and his Apostles, that See and Bishop thereof, at this day both ought to be called, and are indeed Antichristian.

The See is the See of Satan, and the Bishop of the same, that maintaineth the Abominations thereof, is Antichrist himself indeed. And for the same causes this See at this day is the same which S. John calleth in his Revelation, Babylon, or the Whore of Babylon, and fit-ritual Sadoma and Egyptus, the Mother of Fornication, and of the Abominations upon the Earth. And with this Whore doth spiritually tmeddle, and lyeth with her, and committeth most flinking and abominable Adultery before God, all those Kings and Princes, yea and all Nations of the Earth which do consent to her Abominations, and use or practise the same; that is (of the innumerable multitude of them to rehearse some for examples like) her Dispensations, her Pardons and Pilgrimages, her Invocation of Saints, her worshipping of Images, her false counterfeit Religion in her Monks and Friars, and her Traditions, whereby Gods Laws are de- ed; as her massing and false ministring of Gods Word and the Sacraments of Christ, clean contrary to Christs Word and the Apostles Doctrine, whereof in particular I have touched something before in my talk had with the See of London, and in other Treatises more at large; wherein (if it shall please God to bring the same to light) it shall appear, I trust by Gods grace, plainly to the man of God, and to him whose rule in judgment of Religion is Gods Word, that that Religion, that Rule and Order, that Doctrine and Faith which this Whore of Babylon, and the Beast whereupon she doth sit, maintaineth at this day with all violence of Fire and Sword, with Spoil and Banishment (according to Danels Prophecie) and finally with all falsehood, deceit, hypocrisy, and all kind of ungodliness, are as clean contrary to Gods Word, as darkness is unto light, or light unto darkness, white to black, or black to white, or as Belial unto Christ, or Christ unto Antichrist himself.

I know my Lords, and foresaw when I wrote this, that so many of you as should see this my writing, not being before ended with the Spirit of Grace and the Light of Gods Word, so many (I say) would at these my words Lord-like stamp and spurn, and spit thereat. But sober your selves with patience, and be still, and know ye that in my writing of this, my mind was none other, but in God (as the living God doth bear me witness) both to do you profit and pleasure. And otherwise, as for your displeasure, by that time this shall come to your knowledge, I trust by Gods grace to be in the hands and protection of the Almighty, my heavenly Father and the living Lord, which is, (as S. John saith) the greatest of all, and then I shall not need (I trow) to fear what any Lord, no nor what King or Prince can do unto me.

My Lords, if in times past ye have been contented to hear me sometimes in matters of Religion before the Prince in the Pulpit, and in the Parliament House, and have not seemed to have despised what I have said (when as else if ye had perceived just occasion, ye might then have suspected me in my talk, though it had been reasonable, either desire of worldly gain, or fear of displeasure) how hath then your Lordships more cause to hearken to my word, and to hear me patiently, seeing now ye cannot justly think of me, being in this case appointed to dye, and looking daily when I shall be called to come before the eternal Judge, otherwise but that I only study to serve my Lord God, and to say that thing which I am persuaded assuredly by Gods Word shall and doth please him, and profit all them to whom God shall give grace to hear and believe what I do say? And I do say even that I have said heretofore both of the See of Rome and of the Bishop thereof, I mean after this their present state at this day, wherein if ye will not believe the Ministers of God, and true Preachers of his Word, verily I denounce unto you in Verbo Domini, except ye do repent betime, it shall turn to your confusion, and to your smart on the later day. Forget not what I say my Lords, for Gods sake forget not, but remember it upon your bed. For I tell you moreover, as I know I must be countable of this my talk, and of my speaking thus, to the eternal Judge (who will judge nothing amiss) so shall you be countable of your duty in hearing, and you shall be charged, if ye will not hearken to Gods Word, for not obeying to the truth. Alas my Lords, how chanceth this, that this matter is now anew again to be perfwaded unto you? Who would have thought mercy, for ye know that the trial of your Faith bringeth forth patience, and patience shall make us perfect, whole and sound on every side, and such, after trials, ye know) shall receive the Crown of Life, according to the Promise of the Lord made to his dear Beloved; let us therefore be patient unto the coming of the Lord. As the Husbandman abideth patiently the former and later rain for the encrease of his Crop, so let us be patient, and pluck up our hearts, for the coming of the Lord approacheth apace. Let us (my dear Brethren) take example of patience in tribulation of the Prophets, which spake likewise Gods Word truly in his Name. Let Job be to us an example of Patience, and the end which the Lord sufficeth, which is full of mercy and pity. We know, my Brethren, by Gods Word, that our Faith is much more precious than any corruptible Gold, and yet that is tried by the fire: even so our Faith is therefore tried likewise in tribulations, that it may be found, when the Lord shall appear, laudable, glorious, and honourable. For if we for Christs cause do suffer, that is grateful before God; for thereunto are we called, that is our state and vocation, wherewith let us be content. Christ we know suffered for us afflictions, leaving us an example that we should follow his footsteps; for he committed no sin, nor was there any guile found in his mouth: when he was railed upon, and all to be reviled, he railed not again: when he was evil intreated, he did not threaten, but committed the punishment thereof to him that judgeth aright.

Let us ever have in fresh remembrance those wonderful comfortable Sentences spoken by the mouth of our Saviour Christ; Blessed are they which suffer Persecution for Righteousness sake, for theirs is the Kingdom of Heaven. Blessed are ye when men revile you, persecute you, and speak all evil against you for my sake: rejoice and be glad, for great is your reward in Heaven; for so did they persecute the Prophets, which were before you. Therefore let us always bear this in our minds, that if any incommmodity do chance unto us for righteousness sake, happy are we whatsoever the world doth think of. Christ our Master hath told us before hand, that the Brother should put the Brother to death, and the Father the Son, and the Children should rise against their Parents and kill them, and that Christs true Apostles should be hated of all men for his Names sake; but he that shall abide patiently unto the end, shall be saved.

Let us then endure in all troubles patiently, after the example of our Master Christ, and be contented therewith, for he suffered being our Master and Lord: how doth it not then become us to suffer? For the Disciple is not above his Master, nor the Servant above his Lord. It may suffice the Disciple to be as his Master, and the Servant to be as his Lord. If they have called the Father of the Family, the Master of the Household, Beelzebub, how much more shall they call so them of his Household? Fear them not then (saith our Saviour) for all privies shall be made plain: there is now nothing secret, but it shall be shewed in light. Of Christs words let us neither be ashamed nor afraid to speak them; for so Christ our Master commandeth us, saying, That I tell you privily, speak openly abroad, and that I tell you in your ear, preach it upon the house top. And fear not them which kill the body, for the soul they cannot kill; but fear him which can cast both body and soul into hell fire.

Know ye that the heavenly Father hath ever a gracious eye and respect toward you, and a Fatherly providence for you, so that without his knowledge and permission nothing can do you harm. Let us therefore cast all our care upon him, and he shall provide that which shall be best for us. For if of two small Sparrows, which both are sold for a mite, one of them lighteth not on the ground without your Father, and all the hairs of our head are numbered, fear not them (saith our Master Christ) for ye are more worth than many small Sparrows. And let us not stick to confess our Master Christ for fear of danger, whatsoever it shall be, remembering the promise that Christ maketh, saying, Whosoever shall confess me before men, him shall I confess before my Father which is in Heaven: but whosoever shall deny me, him shall I likewise deny before my Father which is in Heaven. Christ cannot to give unto us here a carnal amity, and a worldly peace, or to knit his unto the world in ease and peace.

but rather to separate and divide from the World, and to joyn them unto himself: in whose cause we must, if we will be his, forsake Father and Mother, and stick unto him. If we forsake him or shrink from him for trouble or deaths sake, which he calleth his Croſſe, he will none of us, we cannot be his. If for his cause we shall lose our temporal lives here, we shall find them again, and enjoy them for evermore: but if in his cause we will not be contented to leave nor lose them here, then shall we lose them so, that we shall never find them again, but in everlasting death. What though our troubles here be painful for the time, and the sting of death bitter and unpleasant? yet we know that they shall not last, in comparison of Eternity, no not the twinkling of an eye, and that they patiently taken in Christs cause, shall procure and get us unmeasurable heaps of heavenly Glory, unto the which these temporal pains of death and troubles compared, are not to be esteemed, but to be rejoiced upon.

2 Cor. 4.

1 Pet. 3.

Wonder not, faith S. Peter, as though it were any strange matter that ye are tried by the fire, he meaneth of tribulation, which things, faith he, is done to prove you; nay, rather in that ye are Partners of Christs afflictions, rejoyce that in his glorious Revelation ye may rejoyce with merry hearts. If ye suffer rebukes in Christs Name, happy are ye, for the Glory and Spirit of God resteth upon you. Of them God is reviled and dishonoured, but of you he is glorified.

Let no man be ashamed of that he suffereth as a Christian, and in Christs cause; for now is the time that judgment and correction must begin at the House of God: and if it begin first at us, what shall be the end of those, think ye, which believe not the Gospel? And if the righteous shall be hardly saved, the wicked and the finner, where shall he appear? Wherefore they which are afflicted according to the will of God, let them lay down and commit their souls to him by well doing, as to a trusty and faithful Maker. This, as I said, may not seem strange to us, for we know that all the whole Fraternity of Christs Congregation in this World is served with the like, and by the same is made perfect. For the fervent love that the Apostles had unto their Master Christ, and for the great commodities and increase of all godliness which they felt by their faith to issue of Afflictions in Christs cause, and thirdly for the heaps of heavenly joys which the same do get unto the godly, which shall endure in Heaven for evermore; for these causes (I say) the Apostles of their Afflictions did joy, and rejoyced in that they were had and accounted worthy to suffer contumelies and rebukes for Christs Name. And Paul, as he gloryeth in the grace and favour of God, wherunto he was brought and stood in by faith; so he rejoyced in his Afflictions for the heavenly and spiritual profits which he numbered to rise upon them: yea, he was so far in love with that that the carnal man loatheth so much, that is, with Christs Croſſe, that he judged himself to know nothing else but Christ crucified; he will glory (he saith) in nothing else but in Christs Croſſe, yea, and he bleſseth all those, as the only true Israelites and elect People of God with peace and mercy, which walk after that rule and after none other.

2 Tim. 2.

2 Tim. 3.

O Lord, what a wonderful Spirit was that that made Paul, in setting forth of himself against the vanity of Satans Pseudo-Apostles, and in his claim there, that he in Christs cause did excel and pass them all? What wonderful Spirit was that (I say) that made him to reckon up all his troubles, his labours, his beatings, his whippings and scourgings, his shipwracks, his dangers and perils by water and by land, his famine, hunger, nakedness, and cold, with many more, and the daily care of all the Congregations of Christ, among whom every mans pain did pierce his heart, and every mans grief was grievous unto him? O Lord, is this Paul's Primacy, wherewith he thought so much good that he did excel other? Is not this Paul's saying unto Timothy his own Scholar? and doth it not pertain to whosoever will be Christs true Souldiers? Bear thou (saith he) affliction like a good Souldier of Jesus Christ. This is true: If we dye with him (he meaneth Christ) we shall live with him; if we suffer with him, we shall reign with him; if we deny him, he shall deny us; if we be faithles, he remaineth faithful, he cannot deny himself. This, Paul would have known to every body; for there is none other way to Heaven but Christ and his way: and all that will live godly in Christ, shall (saith S. Paul) suffer Persecution. By this way went to Heaven the Patriarchs, the Prophets, Christ our Master, his Apostles, his Martyrs, and all the godly since the beginning. And as it hath been of old, that he which was born after the flesh, persecuted him which was born after the spirit, for so it was in Isaacs time: so said S. Paul, it was in his time also. And whether it be so or no now, let the spiritual man, the self same man I mean, that is indued with the Spirit of Almighty God, let him be judge. Of the croſs of the Patriarchs, as ye may read in their Stories, if ye read the Book of Genesis, ye shall perceive. Of others, S. Paul in few words comprehendeth much matter, speaking in a generality of the wonderful afflictions, death, and torments which the men of God in Gods cause, and for the Truths sake willingly and gladly did suffer. After much particular rehearsal of many, he saith, Other were racked and despoiled and would not be delivered, that they might obtain a better Resurrection. Other again were tried with mockings and scourgings, and moreover with Bonds and Imprisonment; they were stoned, hewn asunder, tempted, fell, and were slain upon the edge of the Sword, some wandered to and fro in Sheeps Pitches, in Goats Pitches, forsaken, oppressed, afflicted, such godly men as the world was unworthy of, wandering in Wildernesses, in Mountains, in Caves, and in Dens, and all these were commended for their faith. And yet they abide for us the servants of God, and for those their Brethren which are to be slain as they were for the Word of Gods sake, that none be shut out, but that we may all go together to meet our Master Christ in the air at his coming, and so to be in bliss with him in body and soul for evermore.

Cor. 1.

Body,

Anno 1555. Body, which loatheth and beareth down the Spirit, that it cannot so well perceive heavenly things; in the which so long as we dwell, we are absent from God.

Wherefore understanding our state in that we be Christians, that if our mortal Body, which is our earthly house, were destroyed, we have a building, a house not made with hands, but everlasting in Heaven, &c. therefore we are of good cheer, and know that when we are in the Body, we are absent from God; for we walk by faith, and not by clear sight. Nevertheless we are bold, and had rather be absent from the Body, and present with God. Wherefore we strive, whether we be present at home, and absent abroad, that we may always please him. And who that hath true faith in our Saviour Christ, whereby he knoweth somewhat truly what Christ our Saviour is, that he is the eternal Son of God, life, light, the wisdom of the Father, all goodness, all righteousness, and whatsoever is good that heart can desire, yea infinite plenty of all these, above that Mans heart can either conceive or think (for in him dwelleth the fulness of the Godhead corporally) and also that he is given us of the Father, and made of God to be our wisdom, our righteousness, our holiness, and our redemption: who (I say) is he that believeth this indeed, that would not gladly be with his Master Christ? Paul for this knowledge coveted to have been loosed from the Body, and to have been with Christ, for that he counted it much better for himself, and had rather to be loosed than to live. Therefore these words of Christ to the thief on the Cross, that asked of him mercy, were full of comfort and solace: This day thou shalt be with me in Paradise. To die in the defence of Christs Gospel it is our bounden duty to Christ, and also to our neighbour. To Christ, for he died for us, and rose again that he might be Lord over all. And seeing he died for us, we also (saith Saint John) should jeopard, yea give our Life for our Brethren. And this kind of giving and losing, is getting and winning indeed: for he that giveth or loseth his Life thus, getteth and winneth it for evermore. Blessed are they therefore that die in the Lord, and if they die in the Lords cause, they are most happy of all. Let us not then fear death, which can do us no harm, otherwise than for a moment to make the Flesh to smart: but that our faith, which is surely fastened and fixed unto the Word of God, telleth us that we shall be anon after death in peace, in the hands of God, in joy, in solace, and that from death we shall go straight unto Life. For Saint John saith, He that liveth, and believeth in me, shall never die. And in another place, He shall depart from death unto Life. And therefore this death of the Christian is not to be called death, but rather a gate or entrance unto everlasting life. Therefore Paul calleth it but a dissolution and resolution, and both Peter and Paul, a putting off this Tabernacle or dwelling house: meaning thereby the mortal Body, as wherein the Soul or Spirit doth dwell here in this World for a small time. Yea this my death may be called to the Christian, an end of all miseries. For so long as we live here, we must pass through many tribulations before we can enter in the Kingdom of Heaven. And now, after that death hath shorn his bolt, all the Christian Mans enemies have done what they can; after that, they have no more to do. What could hurt or harm poor Lazarus that lay at the Rich Mans gate? His former penury and poverty? his misery, beggary, and horrible sores and sickness? For so soon as death had stricken him with his dart, so soon came the Angels, and carried him straight up into Abrahams bosom. What lost he by death, who from misery and pain is let by the Ministry of Angels, into a place both of joy and solace.

Farewel (dear brethren) farewel, and let us comfort our hearts in all troubles, and in death, with the Word of God, for Heaven and Earth shall perish, but the Word of the Lord endureth for ever.

Another Treatise of Bishop Ridley, wherein is contained first a lamentation for the change of Religion in England; then a comparison between the Doctrine of the Gospel, and the Romish Religion; with wholesome instructions in the end to all Christians, how to behave themselves in time of trial.

As what misery is thy Church brought unto (O Lord) at this day? Where of late the Word of the Lord was truly Preached, was read and heard in every Town, in every Church, in every Village, yea and almost in every Honest Mans House, Alas now it is exiled and banished out of the whole Realm. Of late who was not taken for a lover of Gods Word, for a reader, for a ready bearer, and for a learner of the same? And now (alas) who dare bear any open countenance toward it, but such as are content in Christs cause, and for his words sake to stand to the danger and loss of all they have?

Of late there was to be found of every age of every degree and kind of people, that gave their diligence to learn (as they could) out of Gods Word, the Articles of the Christian Faith, the Commandments of God, and the Lords Prayer: The Babes and young Children were taught these things of their parents, of their Masters, and weekly of their Curates in every Church: and the aged folk, which had been brought up in blindness, and in ignorance of those things, which every Christian is bound to know, when otherwise they could not, yet they learned the same by often hearing their Children, and servants repeating the same: but now (alas, and alas again) the false Prophets of Antichrist which are past all shame, do openly Preach in Pulpits unto the people of God, that the Catechism is to be counted heresie; wher by their old blindness is brought home again: for the aged are afraid of the higher powers, and the youth is abashed and ashamed, even of that which they have learned, though it be Gods Word, and dare no more meddle.

Of late in every Congregation throughout all England was made Prayer and Petition unto God, to be delivered from the tyranny of the Bishop of Rome, and all his detestable enormities; from all false Doctrine and Heresie; and now alas, Sathan hath persuaded England by his falsehood and craft, to revoke her old Godly Prayer, to recant the same, and provoke the fearful wrath and indignation of God upon her own pate.

Of late by straight Laws and Ordinances, with the consent of the Nobles and Commonalty, and full agreement and Counsel of the Prelates and Clergy, was banished hence the Beast of Babylon, with Laws (I say) and with oaths and all means that then could be devised for so godly a purpose: but now (alas) all these Laws are trodden under foot; the Nobles, the Commonalty, the Prelates and Clergy are quite changed, and all those Oaths, though they were made in Judgment, Justice and Truth, and the matter never so good, doth no more hold than a bond of rushes or of a barley straw, nor publick perjury no more feareth them, than a shadow upon the wall.

Of late it was agreed in England of all hands, according to Pauls Doctrine, and Christs Commandment (as Paul saith plainly) that nothing ought to be done in the Church, in the publick Congregation, but in that Tongue which the congregation could understand, that all might be edified thereby, whether it were Common Prayer, administration of the Sacraments, or any other thing belonging to publick ministry of Gods holy and wholesome Word: but (alas) all is turned upside down, Pauls Doctrine is put apart, Christs Commandment is not regarded: For nothing is heard commonly in the Church, but a strange Tongue, that the people doth nothing understand.

Of late all Men and Women were taught after Christs Doctrine.

2 Cor. 14

Ignorance in Prayer.

doctrine, to pray in that Tongue which they could understand, that they might pray with Heart that which they should speak with their Tongue: Now (alas) the unlearned people is brought into that blindness again, to think that they pray, when they speak with their Tongue they cannot tell what, nor whereof their hearts is nothing mindful at all, for that it can understand never a whit thereof.

Of late the Lords Supper was duly Miniftred and taught to be made common to all that are true Christians with thanksgiving and setting forth of the Lords Death and Passion until his returning again, - to judge both quick and dead: but now (alas) the Lords Table is quite overthrowen, and that which ought to be common to all Godly, is made private to a few Ungodly, without any kind of thanksgiving, or any setting forth of the Lords Death at all, that the people is able to understand.

Of late all that were endued with the light and Grace of understanding of Gods holy Myfteries, did blefs God which had brought them out of that horrible blindness and ignorance, whereby in times past being seduced by Satans subtilties, they believed that the Sacrament was not the Sacrament, but the thing it self whereof it is a Sacrament, that the Creature was the Creator, and that the thing which hath neither Life nor Sense (alas such was the horrible blindness) was the Lord himself, which made the Eye to see, and hath given all Senses and Understanding unto Man but now, alas, England is returned again like a Dogg to her own vomit and spuing, and is in worse case than ever she was: For it had been better never to have known the truth, than to forsake the truth once received and known: and now, not only that light is turned into darkness, and Gods Grace is received in vain, but also Laws of Death are made by high Court of Parliament, matterfully to maintain by Sword, Fire, and all kind of violence that haynous Idolatry, wherein that adoration is given unto the liveless and dumb Creature, which is only due unto the everliving God: yea, they say they can, and do make of Bread both Man and God, by their Transubstantiation. O wicked Men, and Satans own Brood!

Of late was the Lords Cup at his Table distributed according to his own Commandment, by his express words in the Gospell, as well to the Laity as to the Clergy, which order Christs Church observed so many hundred years after, as all the Ancient Ecclesiastical Writers do testifie, without contradiction of any one of them, that can be shewed unto this day: but now (alas) not only the Lords Commandment is broken, his Cup is denied to his Servants, to whom he commandeth it should be distributed, but also with the same is set up a new Blasphemous kind of Sacrifice to satisfy and pay the price of Sins both of the dead and the quick, to the great and intolerable contumely of Christs our Saviour his Death and Passion, which was and is the one only sufficient and everlasting available sacrifice satisfactory for all the elect of God, from Adam the first, to the last that shall be born in the end of the World.

Of late the Commandment of God, Thou shalt not make to thy self any graven Image, nor any similitude or likeness of any thing in Heavens above, or in Earth beneath, or in the Water under the Earth, thou shalt not bow down to them nor worship them: This Commandment of God, I say, was graven almost every where in Churches, was learned of every Body both young and old; whereupon Images that provoked the simple and ignorant people unto Idolatry, as the wife Man faith, were taken out of the Churches, and straightly forbidden that none should any where either bow down to them or worship them: but now (alas) Gods Holy Word is blotted and razed out of Churches, and stocks and stones are set up in the place thereof. God commanded his Word so to be ordered, that it might be had in continual remembrance at all times, and in every place: and on the other side he forbade Images and Idols so to be either made or set in any place, where any should bow or worship them: but now (alas) that which God commanded is not passed upon, and that which he forbiddeth, is matterfully maintained by faithhood and craft, and wickedly upholden.

Of late all Ministers that were admitted to the publick Office and Ministry of Gods Holy Word, in their admission made a solemn profession before the Congregation, that they should teach the people nothing, as doctrine necessary to attain eternal Salvation, but that which is Gods own Holy Word, or may be thereon grounded without any doubt; whereby vanished and melted away of themselves many vain, yea wicked traditions of Man, as wax before the fire: but now at one burst they are revived, and are in full hope also to return again in as great strength as ever they have been. And how can any Man look for any other thing, but when you have received the head, you must also receive the whole Body withal, or else how can the head abide? The head, under Satans, of all mischief is Antichrist and his Brood, the same is he which is the Babylonical Beast. The Beast is he, whereupon the Whore sitteth. The Whore is that City, faith John in plain words, which hath empire over the Kings of the Earth. This Whore hath a Golden Cup of abominations in her hand, whereof she maketh to drink the Kings of the Earth, and of the Wine of this Harlot have of all nations drunk, yea and Kings of the Earth have liven by this Whore, and Merchants of the Earth by virtue of her pleafant Merchandise have been made rich.

Now what City is there in all the whole World, that when John wrote, ruled over the Kings of the Earth; or what City can be read of in any time, that of the City it self challenged the Empire over the Kings of the Earth, but only the City of Rome, and that since the usurpation of that See hath grown to her full strength? And is it not read, that the Old and Ancient Writers understand Peters former Epistle to be written at Rome, and it to be called of him in the same Epistle in plain terms Babylon? By the Abominations thereof I understand all the whole trade of the Romish Religion, under the name and Title of Christ, which is contrary to the only Rule of all true Religion, that is, Gods Word. What Word of God hath that devilish Drabb for the maintenance of her manifold abominations, and to set to Sale such Merchandise, wherewith (alas) the madness of Man) the wicked Harlot hath bewitched almost the whole World? Did not Peter the very true Apostle of Christ (of whom this stinking flumpt beareth her self so high, but fallily and without all iust cause) did not he, I say, give all the World warning of her self and trash, of her false Doctors and Apstles (for this Whore and Beast will be called Domus Apstolorum, whosever say nay) after this manner in his latter Epistle? There was a Peter: among the people in times past false Prophets, as there shall be among you in time to come false Teachers, which shall privily bring in pestilent sects, even denying the Lord which hath bought them and redeemed them, procuring to themselves swift Damnation, and many shall follow their damnable ways, by whom the way of truth shall be railed upon, and through covetousness by counterfeit tales or sermons, they shall (saith Peter) make merchandise upon you, &c. And doth not John likewise in his Revelation, after he hath reckoned up a great rabblement of this Whores mystical Merchandise, at the last (as though he would knit up all in plain words, without any mist at all, setting out the Whores Merchandise) reckon up amongst the rest, and conclude, saying; Et animas hominum, that is to say, the Souls of Men too? Whereupon I pray you else rose this true Proverb in Latin, Omnia Romae venalia, Stranger.

All things for Money are set to sale at Rome? Was not that a worthy commendation of Christs Vicar in Earth, that was written of our Holy Father, one of the Alexanders, a Bishop of Rome, thus I ween in Latin? Vendit Alexander cruce, altaria, Christum: Vendere jure potest; emerat ille prius. These two Verses in Latine I have read thus of one translated into English rime.

Alexander our Holy Father the Pope of Rome, Sells for Money both right and doom: And all kind of holines the Holy Father doth not shun. To set to sale, ready money for to get, And eke Christ himself he dare be sold, To chop and change for Silver and Gold. And why should any think this to be true? For what doth he sell but that he bought before?

Verbes against Pope Alexander.

I grant these Verbes to be light gear, and the Verbe is but rude; but (alas) such Conditions were more, wicked and lewd than any wit could express. If these had been but the faults of one or a few in number, they had been less pernicious, and might have been taken for personal crimes, and not to be imputed unto that See: but now (alas) the matter is more than evident to all that have godly understanding, that these Crimes be grounded upon Laws, be established by Custom, and set forth by all kind of wicked doctrine, falshood, and craft; and therefore now are not to be esteemed for any one mans, or a few mens personal crimes, but are now by laws, custom, and doctrine incorporated into that wicked See, and maketh indeed the body of the Beast whereupon the abominable Whore doth sit.

But you would know which be those Merchandises which I said this Whore fetterh for to sell, for the which all her false Prophets, with all their juggling and crafty glosses cannot bring one jot of Gods Word Surely, surely, they be not only all these abominations which are come into the Church of England already (whereof I have spoken somewhat before) but also an innumerable rabblement of abominations and wicked abuses, which now must needs follow: as Popish Pardons, Pilgrimages, Romish Purgatory, Romish Masses, Placebo and Dirige, with Trentals and Scala Calvi, Dispensations and Immunities from all godly Discipline, Laws and good Order, Pluralities, Unions, and Tenures, with a thousand more. Now shall come in the flattering Priers and the false Pardners, and play their old pranks and knavery as they were wont to do. Now shall you have (but of the See of Rome only, and that for money) canonizing of such Saints as have stood stout in the Popes cause, shrinking of Reliques, and from any kind of wickedness (if you will pay well for it) clear Absolution a peccatis & culpa, for thousands of years, yea, and at every poor Bishops hand and Suffragan, ye shall have hallowing of Churches, Chappels, Altars, Super-altars, Chaltres, and of all the whole Household-stuff and Adornment which shall be used in the Church after the Romish guise, for all these things they must be esteemed of such high price, that they may not be done but by a consecrate Bishop only. O Lord, all these things are such as thy Apostles never knew. As for conjuring (they call it hallowing, but it is conjuring indeed) of water and salt, of christening of Bells, and such like things, what need I to speak? for every Priest that can but read, hath power (they say) not only to do that, but also hath such power over Christs Body, as to make both God and Man once at the least every day of a Water Cake.

After the rehearsal of the said Abominations, and remembrance of a number of many more, which (the Lord knoweth) it keth me to think upon, and were too long to describe; when I consider on the other side the eternal Word of God that abideth for ever, and the undefiled Law of the Lord which turneth the soul from all wickedness, and giveth wisdom unto the innocent Babes, I mean that milk that is without all guile, as Peter doth call it, that good Word of God, that Word of Truth which must be graven within the heart, and then is able to save mens souls; that wholsome Seed, not mortal, but immortal, of the eternal and everlasting God, whereby the man is born anew, and made the child of God, that Seed of God, whereby the man of God so being born, cannot sin, as John saith (he meaneth so long as that Seed doth abide in him) that holy Scripture which hath not been deviled by the wit of man, but taught from Heaven by the inspiration of the Holy Ghost, which is profitable to teach, to reprove, to correct, to instruct, and to give order in all righteousness, that the man of God may be whole and sound, ready to perform every good work: when (I say) I consider this holy and wholesome true Word that teacheth us truly our bounden duty towards our Lord God in every point, what his blessed will and pleasure is, what his infinite great goodness and mercy is; what he hath done for us, how he hath given us his own only dearly beloved Son to death for our Salvation, and by him hath sent us the revelation of his blessed will and pleasure, what his eternal Word willeth us both to believe, and also to do, and hath for the same purpose inspired the holy Apostles with the Holy Ghost, and sent them abroad into all the world, and also made them and other Disciples of Christ inspired by the same Spirit, to write and leave behind them the same things that they taught (which as they did proceed of the Spirit of Truth, so by the confession of all them that ever were endued with the Spirit of God, were sufficient to the obtaining of eternal Salvation:) and likewise when I consider that all that man doth profess in his regeneration when he is received into the holy Catholick Church of Christ, and is now to be accounted for one of the lively Members of Christs own Body, all that is grounded upon Gods holy Word, and standeth in the profession of that Faith, and obedience of those Commandments which are all contained and comprised in Gods holy Word: And furthermore, when I consider whom our Saviour Christ pronounceth in his Gospel to be blessed, and to whom Moses giveth his Benedictions in the Law, what ways the Law, the Prophets, the Psalms, and all holy Scriptures, both new and old, do declare to be the ways of the Lord, what is good for man to obtain and abide in Gods favour, which is that Faith that justifieth before God, and what is that Charity that doth pass and excel all, which be the properties of heavenly wisdom, and which is that undefiled Religion which is allowed of God, which things Christ himself calleth the weighty matters of the Law, what thing is that which is only available in Christ, and what knowledge is that that Paul esteemed so much, that he counted himself only to know, what shall be the manner of the extreme judgment of the latter day, who shall judge, and by what he shall judge, and what shall be required at our hands at that fearful day, how all things must be tried by the fire, and that only shall stand for ever, which Christs words shall allow, which shall be the Judge of all flesh to give sentence upon all flesh, and every living soul, either of eternal damnation, or of everlasting salvation, from which sentence there shall be no place to appeal, no wit shall serve to delude, nor any power to withstand or revoke: When (I say) I consider all these things, and confer to the same again and again all those ways wherein standeth the substance of the Romish Religion (whereof I spake before) it may be evident easie to perceive, that these two ways, these two Religions, the one of Christ, the other of the Romish See, in these latter days be as far distant the one from the other, as light and darkness, good and evil, righteousness and unrighteousness, Christ and Belial. He that is hard of belief, let him note and weigh well with himself the places of holy Scriptures which be appointed in the Margent, whereupon this talk is grounded, and by Gods grace he may receive some light. And unto the Contemner I have nothing now to say, but to rehearse the saying of the Prophet Esaie, which Paul spake to the Jews in the end of the Acts of the Apostles. After he had expounded to them the truth of Gods Word, and declared unto them Christ out of the Law of Moses and the Prophets, from morning to night all the day long, he said unto them that would not believe: Well (said he) shall the Holy Ghost unto our Fathers, saying, Go unto this people and tell them, ye shall hear with your ears, and not understand, and seeing ye shall behold, and not see the thing: for the heart of this people is waxed gross and dull, and with their ears they are hard of hearing, and they have shut together their eyes, that they should not see, nor bear with their ears, nor understand with their hearts, that they might return, and I should heal them, saith the Lord God.

Alas, England, alas, that this heavy Plague of God should fall upon thee. Alas my dearly beloved Country, what thing is it now that may do thee good? Undoubtedly thy plague is so great, that it is utterly incurable, but by the bottomless mercy and infinite power of Almighty God. Alas my dear Country, what hast thou done, that thou hast provoked the wrath of God, and caused him to pour out his vengeance upon thee for thine own deserts? Canst thou be content to hear thy faults told thee? Alas, thou hast heard of, and wouldst never amend. England, thy faults of all degrees and sorts of men, of Magistrates, of the Ministers, and of the common People, were never more plainly told since thou bearest that name, than thou didst hear them of late, even before the Magistrates in King Edwards days, but thou hearest them only, and didst amend never a whit.

For even of thy greatest Magistrates, some (the Kings Highness then, that innocent, that godly-hearted and people's young Christian Prince excepted) evermore unkindly and ungently, against those that went about most boldly, and most wholly to cure their forefathers, spurned privily, and would not spare to speak evil of them, even unto the Prince himself, and yet would they towards the same Preachers outwardly bear a jolly countenance and a fair face.

I have heard that Cramer, and another whom I will not name, were both in high displeasure, the one for shewing his Confidence secretly, but plainly and fully in the Duke of Somersetts caule, and both of late, but especially Cramer for repugning, as they might against the Law, the Loyall of the Church goods, taking away only by commandment of the higher powers, without any Law or order of Justice, and without any request or leave of them to which they did belong. As for Lattimer, Leveson, Bradford, and Knox, their Tongues were so sharp, they tipped in deep in their galled backs to have purged them (no doubt) of that filthy matter that was in them: (1.) their hearts of insatiable covetousness, of filthy carnal and voluptuousness, of intolerable ambition and pride, of ungodly loathfulness to hear poor Mens Cautes, and to hear Gods Word, that these Men, of all others, these Magistrates then, could never abide. O how there were very godly Men, well learned, that went about by the wholekin Plainers of Gods Word, I saw after a more soft manner of handling the matter; but (alas) all spired off. For all that could be done on either hands, their diffeide did not minish, but daily did increase, which (no doubt) is no small occasion in this state of the heavey plague of God that is poured upon England, as at this day. As for the common sort of other Astrictor Magistrates, as Judges of the Lawes, Iudices of Peace, Sergeants, Common Lawyers, it may be truly said of them, as of the most part of the Clergy of Curates, Vicars, Parsons, Prebendaries, Doctors of the Law, Archdeacons, Deans, &c. I may say of Bishops also, for me, for the most part, (although I doubt not but God had, and hath ever, whom heineverly state knew and knoweth to be his) but for the most part, [say] they were never perverted in their hearts, but from the teeth forward, and for the Kings sake, in the truth of Gods Word, and yerall these did diffeble, and bear a Copy of a countenance: as if they had been found worthy.

And this diffimulation Sathan knew well enough, and therefore desired; and hath ever gone about, that the high Magistrates by any manner of means might be deceived in matters of Religion; for then he being of Counsel with the diffimulation in the Worldly, knew well enough that he should bring to pass, and rule all ever after his own will.

Hypocrits a double evil

This Hypocrite and Diffamulation S. Hieron. doth call well a double wickedness; for neither loveth the truth (which is one great evil) and also fully intendeth to deceive the people for another thing. This Hypocrite and Diffamulation with God, in matters of Religion, no doubt, hath wholly also provoked the anger of God. And as for the common people, although there were many good, where they were well and diligently taught: yet (God knoweth) a great number received Gods true Word, and built hearts with unthankful hearts. For it was great pity, and a lamentable thing to have seen in many places the people so foolishly and unreasonably to come to the Holy Communion, and to receive it accordingly, and to the Common Prayers, and other divine Service, which were according to the true vein of Gods Holy Word, and in all points so godly and wholly set forth, in comparison of that blind zeal, and a direct deviation which they had sometimes to those things, whereof they understood never one whit, nor could be edified by them any thing at all.

The blackness that was in the time to go works.

And again, as for our almshouses, which are taught in Gods Word, whereby we are certain that God is pleased with them and doth and will require such at our hands, which are a part of true Religion, as St. James faith, and such as he faith himself he fetcheth more by than by Sacrifice, as to provide for the Fatherless, Infants and Orphans, for the lame, aged and impotent poor needy folk, and to make publick provision that the poor that misbelabour, I shoul have wherewith to labour upon, and fo be kept from shameful beggary and feasting in ths works: I say how way-worship were many in comparisn I mean of that great prodigality whereby in times past they (pared not to spend upon flatterers, Friers, false pardoners, painting and goulding of houses and houses, to be fet up, and honoured in Churches, plainly against Gods Words? And yet because no place is to be defrauded of their just commendation, London, I must confes, for such godly works in Sir Richard Bde, Knight, then Lord Mayor, his year began marvellous well: The Lord grant the same may so likewise perforce, continue, yea and increase, to the comfort and relief of the needy and helpless, that was so godlyly begun, Amen.

All these things do minister more matter of mourning and bewailing the miserable state that now is: for by this it may be perceived, how England hath deserved this just plague of God. And also it is greatly to be feared that those good things, whatsoever they were that had their beginning in the time when Gods word was so freely Preached, now with the exile and banishment of the same, will depart again.

But to return again to the consideration of this miserable state of Christs Church in England, and to leave farther and more exquisite searching of the causes thereof unto Gods secret and unfeinable judgments, let us see what is best now to be done for Christs little Flock. This is one maxim and principle in Christs Law; He that denieth Christ before Men, him shall Christ deny before his Father and all his Angels in Heaven. And therefore every one that looketh to have by Christ our Saviour Everlasting Life, let him prepare himself, howbeit he deny not his Master Christ, or else he is but a cast-away, and a wretch, howsoever he be counted or taken here in the World.

Now then, being the Doctrine of Antichrist is returned again into this Realm, and the higher powers (also) are so deceived and bewitched, that they are perverted it to be truth, and Christs true Doctrine to be error and heresie, and the Old Laws of Antichrist are allowed to return with the power of their Father again: what can be hereafter looked for, by reason to the Man of God and true Christian, abiding in this Realm but extreme violence of death, or else to deny his Master? I grant the Hearts of Princes are in Gods hands, and whosoever he will he can make them bow and also that Christian Princes in Old Time use a more gentle kind of punishment, even to them which were Heretics indeed, as degradation, and depoument out of their rooms and Offices, Exile and Banishment out of their Dominions and Countries; and also (as it is read) the true Bishops of Christs Church were sometime intercessors for the Heretics unto Princes, that they would not kill them, as is read of Saint Augustine. But as yet Antichrists kingdom was not so erected at that time, nor is now accustomed to order them that will not fall down and worship the Beast and his Image (but even as all the World knoweth) after the same manner that both Jehoiachin and Daniel had prophesied before, that is, by violence of death; and Daniel declareth farther, that the kind of death accustomed should be by Sword, Fire, and Imprisonment.

Therefore if thou, O Man of God, dost purpose to abide in this Realm, prepare and arm thy self to die: for both by Antichrists accustomed Laws, and these prophesies, there is no appearance or likelihood of any other thing, except thou wilt deny thy Master Christ, which is the loss at the last both of Body and Soul unto everlasting death. Therefore my good Brother or Sister in Christ, whatsoever thou be, to thee that canst and mustst do, that counsel that I think is the best safeguard for thee, both for thy Body, and most surety for thy Soules health; that which I shall hence thee hereafter. But first I will warn thee to understand me to speak to him or her, which be not in captivity, or called already to confess Christ, but are at liberty abroad.

My Counsel, I say, therefore is this, to fly from the plague, and get thee hence. I consider not only the falsities of Satan, and how he is able to deceive by his false persuasions (if it were possible) even the chosen of God, and all the great Sins, which is oftentimes more in a Man, than he doth know in himself, which in the time of temptation then will utter it self: I do not only consider these things, I say; but that our Master Christ, whose Life was and is a perfect rule of the Christian Mans Life, that he himself avoided offences: the fury and madness of the Jews, by departing from the Country or place.

Paul likewise when he was saught in Damasco, and the gates of the City were laid in wait for him, was conveyed by night, being let down in a basket out at a Window over the wall: and Helias the Prophet fled the persecution of wicked Jesabel: And Christ our Saviour faith in the Gospel; When they persecute you in one City, fly unto another: and so did many good, great, learned, and vertuous Men of God, which were great and stout Champions nevertheless, and stout confessors and maintainers of Christ and his truth, in due time and place. Of such was the great Clerk Athanasius. But this is so plain to be lawful by Gods Word, and Examples of holy Men, that I need not to stand in it.

Having this for my ground, I say to thee, O Man of GOD, this seemeth to me to be the most sure way for thy safeguard, to depart and flee far from the plague, and that swiftly also: for truly before GOD, I think, that the abomination that Daniel prophesied of so long before, is now set up in the holy place. For all the Doctrine of Antichrist, his Laws, Rites, and Religion contrary to Christ, and so to the true serving and worshipping of God, I understand to be that abomination: Therefore now is the time in England for those words of Christ, Tunc inquit qui in Iudaea sunt, fugiant ad montes. Then (saith he) (mark this Christs then) for truly I am perfwaded, And I trust by the Spirit of God, that this (then) is commanded; Then (saith Christ) they that be in Jewry, let them flee into the Mountains, and be that is on the house top, let him ray come down to take away any thing out of his house, and he that is abroad in the field, let him not return to take his cloaths. We be to the great-bellied Women, and to them that give suck; but pray (saith Christ) that your flight be not in summer, or on the Sabbath day.

The abomination of idolatry set up in England.

Christ commanded us to fly to the mountains.

Their words of Christ are myfical, and therefore had need of Interpretation. I understand all those to be in Jewry spiritually, which truly confesse one true living God, and the whole truth of his Word, after the doctrine of the Gospel of Christ: Such as they whom Christ here biddeth, in the time of the Reign of Antichrists abominations to flee unto the Mountains; which signifieth places of safeguard, and all such things which are able to defend from the plague. That he biddeth him that is on the house top, not to come down, and him that is in the field, not to return to take with him his cloaths; he meaneth that they should speed them to get them away betime, lest in their tarrying and trifling about working provision, they be trapped in the snare ere ever they be aware, and caught by the back, and for gain of small worldly things, endanger and cast themselves into great perils of more weighty matters. And where he saith, We be to the great-bellied Women, and to them that give suck; Women great with Child and nigh to their lying down, and to be brought to bed, and not able to travel; and also those Women, which are brought to bed, and now give their babes suck: By these therefore Christ spiritually understandeth all such to be in extreme danger, which this word (two) signifieth all such, I say, as are so letted by any manner of means, that they no ways be able to flee from the plague. And where Christ saith, Pray you that your flight be not in the Winter, nor on the Sabbath day: In Winter, the common course of the year teacheth us, that the ways be foul, and therefore it is a hard thing then to take a far journey, for many incommodities and dangers of the waies in that time of the year; and on the Sabbath day it was not lawful to journey, but a little way. Now Christ therefore meaneing that we should have need, both to speed our journey quickly, which cannot be done in winter, for the incommodities of the waies, and also to go far, which cannot be done on the Sabbath day: he biddeth us therefore pray that our flight be not in the Winter, nor on the Sabbath day: that is to pray that we may flee in time and also far enough from the danger of the plague. Now; the cause why we should flee, follow in the same place of Saint Matthews Gospel, which I now pass over; thou maist read them there.

And in the eighteenth Chapter of the Revelation, the Angel is said to have cried mightily with a loud voice, *Flee my people out of Babylon, lest you be infected with her faults, and so be made partners of her plagues: for her offences and sins are grown so great, that they swell &c. are come unto the heavens: certainly the time doth approach, and the Lords day is at hand. Hear, I beseech you, alio holy Paul, that blessed Apostle, he plainly forbiddeth us, Ducere jugum cum incredulis, that is, To joyn or couple our selves with the unfaithful: for what fellowship can there be, faith he, of righteousness with unrighteousness; what company hath light with darkness; or what agreement hath Christ with Belial? or what part can the faithful have with the unfaithful? or how doth the Temple of God agree with Images or Idols? for you are the Temple of the living God: as God, Cot. 6. hath sayd, I will walk and dwell in them, I will be their God, and they shall be my people: wherefore depart from amongst them, and get you from them, saith the Lord, and touch no unclean thing: and I will receive you, and be to you in the stead of your Father, and you shall be unto me as my Sons and Daughters, saith the Almighty God.*

This Counsell to depart the Realm, I do not marvel it doth seem to divers (even of them I mean that bear favour to God-ward) diversly. Many (I trust) that be learned shall think the counsell good. Others there be peradventure, that will think it rather a thing to be more tolerable, and that it may be indeed by Gods Word lawfully done, rather than to be Counsell'd to be done; for they will peradventure say, we should Counsell a Man alwaies to do that, which is best of all, and of most perfection: but boldly in Christs cause to spend a Mans Life, is best of all, and of most perfection, and to flee it may seem to be finell of cowardlines. In many things, that which is best for one at sometimes, is not best for all at all times, and it is not most perfection, nor meet for a Child to cover to run, before he can go. I will not make here a discourse in this matter, what might here be objected, and what might be answered again; I leave that to the witty and eloquent Men of the World.

Counsell to depart the Realm. Doubtless due to flee or to carry, debated.

This is my mind, which I would thou shouldst know, O Man of God, as I would with, and I do pray to Almighty GOD it may be that every true Christian, either Brother or Sister (after they be called, and brought into the wrestling place, to strive in Christs cause for the best game, that is, to confesse the truth of the Gospel, and of the Christian Faith, in hope of Everlasting Life) should not shrink, nor relent one inch, nor give back, whatsoever shall befall, but to stand to their tackle, and stick by it even unto death, as they will Christ shall stick by them at the latter day: so likewise I dare not with nor counsel any, either Brother or Sister, of their own swinge, to start up into the stage, or to cast themselves either before, or farther in danger than time and need shall require: for undoubtedly when God seeth his time, and his pleasure is, that his Glory shall be set forth, and his Church edified by thy death and confession, means shall be found by his fatherly universal providence, that thou without thine own presumptuous provocation shalt be lawfully called, to do thy feat, and to play thy part. The miserable end that one Quintus came unto, may be a warning, and a fearful example for all Men to beware of presumption, and rashness in such things (as Eusebius writeth in Ecclesiastical Historia) for evermore.

Presumptuous provocation and rash running in danger forbidden. Enrich Exile, still lib. 4. of 15.

But a third sort of Men there be, which also will be counted favorers of Gods Word, and are (I fear) in number far more, and worle to be perfwaded to that which is the Godly mean. I mean of such as will peradventure say or think, that my former Counsell, which was to flee the infection of the Antichristian doctrine by departing out of the Realm, is more than needeth, and other waies and means may be found, both to abide, and also to be clear out of danger of the foresaid plague. If that could be found, both to abide, and also to be clear out of danger of the foresaid plague, truly agreeable to Gods Word, I would be as glad to hear it, God is my witness, as who is the other. Yes, peradventure will some say, say, thus it may be: Thou mayst keep thy self, thy faith, and thy Religion close to thy self, and inwardly and privily worship God in Spirit and Truth, and outwardly see thou be no open medler, nor talker, nor a siffer of common order: so maist thou be suffered in the Common Weald, and yet use thy Religion without offence of thy Confidence. In other Countries somewhere this peradventure might be used, but in England what shall be, God wot: but it was never yet, so far as ever I have known or heard. And also how can it be, but either thou must transgress the common order, and the Romish Laws and Customs, which have been used in England, in the times past of Popery, and now (it is certain) they return again: I say, thou must either be a breaker of these Rites, Laws, and Customs, and so bewray thy self, or else if thou be indeed a Man of GOD, thou shalt offend thy Confidence: for in observing of them, thou shalt be compelled to break Gods Law, which is the rule of confidence to the Man of God. For how canst thou resort every holy-day to the Church, and bare a face to worship the Creature for the Creator, as thou must do, and peradventure confesse it too with thy Mouth, and to sprinkle thy self with the conjured Water.

Thou must be contributor also to the charges of all their Popery, as of Books of Antichrists service, of lights of the Rood loft, of the Sepulchre for setting up and painting of Images (nay indeed of Idols) and thou must bear a face to worship them also, or else thou must be had by the back. Thou must serve the turn, to give the holy leaves as they call it, which is nothing else but a very mockery of the Lords Holy Table. Thou must be a contributor to the charges of all the disguised apparils, that the Popish Sacrificing Priests, like unto Aaron must play his part in. Yea, when the pander goeth about, or the flattering Friar to beg for the maintenance of superstition, except thou do as thy neighbours do, look not long to live in rest. If any of thy household dye, if thou wilt not pay Money for ringings, and singings, for Requiem, Masses, Diriges, and commendations, and such like trumpery of the Antichristian Religion, thinkest thou that thou shalt be reckoned for a Catholic Man, or for amicus Caesar? A hundred things more may be reckoned, and many of more weight, and of more evident superstition and idolatry, than some of these which I have now rehearsed, which God knoweth be illenough: but these are enow to declare, and to set before thine eyes, the thing that I intend, that is, if thou abide and wilt dwell in England, thou must either do these, and many other more contrary to Gods Word, which forbiddeth not only the thing which is evil, but also faith, Ab omni specie mali abstinete vos, Abstain from all things that have any appearance of evil; or else if thou wilt not do them, how thou canst live in England in rest safe from the stake, truly I cannot tell.

But peradventure (as a Man is ready to find, and invent some colour to cloak his Confidence, to do that thing that his heart desireth) thou wilt say, though at any time I shall be forced to do any of these things and suchlike, yet will I have no confidence in them, but outwardly with my body I will keep mine heart unto God, and will not do that of mine own mind willingly neither, but to avoid another inconvenience: I trust therefore God will hold me excused, for he shall have my heart: what can I do more?

O my friend, beware for Gods sake, and know that the subtilties of Satan are deep. He that is not able by Gods Word to perceive them, is heavily laden. Pay therefore love with David, Lord let me not have a mind to invent excuses to cloak my Sins: amine my dear friend, these thy wily waies with the Word of GOD, and if they do agree, thou maist use them: if not, know, though they may seem never so fine and goodly, yet indeed they be of Satans Brood. Gods Word is certain, that forbiddeth to worship the Creature for the Creator, for that is heinous Idolatry, and against the first Commandment of God, and it is also against the second Commandment of the first table to bow down, or to worship unto any Images of God, or of any other thing: And Gods Word requirith not only the belief of the heart, but also the confession of the Mouth: and to bear part of the charges, to the maintenance of things ungodly, what is that, but in thy doing a consent to the thing done? Now consents and the doers Gods Word accounteth to be guilty both:

And it is not lawful, by St. Pauls Doctrine, which was inspired him by the Spirit of GOD, to do it, that therefore of the thing which is good may come.

Thy heart, thou saist, God shall have, and yet wilt suffer thy Body to do the thing that God doth abhor. Beware O Man, take heed what thou saist: Man may be deceived, but no Man may deceive God, for he is called and is truly examiner, that is to say, the searcher of the Heart. Now, to give God thy Heart, is to give him thy whole Heart, to love him, to dread him, and to trust in him above all other things. He that hath my Commandments, saith Christ, and observeth and keepeth them, it is he that loves me: and to dread God above all others, is rather willingly to incur the danger and peril of all fearful things, than wittingly to do that thing which is contrary to his blessed will and Commandment; and to trust in him above all things, is assuredly to trust to his promise of his reward, and of his tuition, and of his goodness and mercy, and to prefer that above all things in the World, seem they never so strong, so wise, or so good. Now, how canst thou say truly, that GOD hath thy heart after this manner of fort (which is to have thy heart indeed) when thy deeds do declare far another thing? Thy Body, O Man, is Gods, and all the parts thereof, even as thy Soul is: he made them both, and Christ with his Blood redeemed them both and is Lord of both, for he hath bought them both dearly; and dardest thou suffer any part of either of them to do service to Satan? Surely in so doing, thou committest Sacrilege and dost rob God, thou defilest the living Temple of the living God, if thou suffer thy Body to do Satans service. Do you not know (saith St. Paul) that your Body is a lively Temple of God? And may a Man then take and use any part thereof but in the Service of God? No surely: it is not lawful so to do for the Man of God; neither with Hand, Tongue, nor Feet, nor any part of the whole Body.

Doth not Paul command that to the Romans, which pertaineth to every Christian Soul? As you have in times past, saith he, given your members to do service unto uncleanliness and wickedness, from one wickedness to another; so now give your members to do service unto righteousness, that you may be sanctified. And I pray thee, good Brother, what dost thou think it is to bear the mark of the beast in the forehead, and in the hand that Saint John speaketh of? I know we ought wailly to speak of Gods mysteries, which he shewed by the Spirit of prophesying to our servant John, yet to read them with reverence, and to pray for the same so much as God knoweth is necessary for our time to know, I think is necessary and good. Wherefore what I suppose is to bear the beasts mark, I will tell thee, and commit the judgment of mine interpretation, as in all other things, to the Spiritual Man. I suppose he beareth the beast of Babels mark in his forehead, which is not ashamed of the beasts waies, but will profess them openly to set forth his Master the beast of Abaddu. And likewise he beareth his mark in his hand, that wil and doth practise the works of the beast with his power and hand. And likewise I will not let to tell thee, what I think to be signed in the forehead for the servant of God is, whereof John also speaketh, reckoning up many thousands so to have been signed of every Tribe. I suppose he is signed in the forehead for the Servant of God, whom God hath appointed of his infinite goodness, and hath given him Grace and strength stoutly to confesse him, and his truth before the World. And to have Grace and Strength to confesse Christ, and the Doctrine of the Cross, and to lament and mourn for the abominations of Antichrist, I suppose is to be signed with Tau, whereof Ezekiel the Prophet doth speak. Thus I suppose these prophecies are spiritually to be understood: and to look for other corporal markings, to be seen in Mens foreheads, or in their handis, nothing else but to look that there should come some brute beast out of Babel, or some Elephant, Leopard, Lyon, or Camel, or some other such monstrous beast with ten horns, that should do all the wonderful things spoken in John; and yet of a beast speaketh John, but I understand him so to be called, not for that he shall be any such brute beast, but for that he is and shall be the Child of perdition, which for his cruelty and beastly manners, is well called a beast.

Infidels.

The carnal Jews knew there was a Promise made, that Helias should come before Christ the Messias, the appointed of God, to prepare his ways; they knew also there was a Promise of Messias, that he should come, and be a King, and Reign in the House of David for evermore: but they understood all so grossly, and so carnally, that they neither knew Helias, nor Messias, when they came: for they looked for Helias to come down from Heaven in his own Person, and for Messias to come and reign in worldly pomp, power, riches, and glory, when as the prophecies of both were spiritually to have been understood: Of Helias, that he should come not in Person, but in Spirit, that is, one that should be indued with the spirit and gifts of grace of Helias, which was indeed John Baptist, as Christ himself did declare to his Apostles: And of Messias reign, all the Prophets were to be understood of the reign of his spiritual Kingdom over the House of Jacob, and the true Israelites for evermore. And so by that their gross and carnal understanding, they mistook both Helias, and the true Messias, and when they came, knew neither of them both. So likewise, I fear me, nay it is certain, the world that wanteth the light of the Spirit of God (for the world is not able to receive him, faith John) neither doth, nor shall know the Beast, nor his Marks, though he rage cruelly, and live never so beastly, and though his marked men be in number like the Sand of the Sea. The Lord therefore vouchsafe to open the eyes of the blind with the light of grace, that they may see and perceive, and understand the words of God, after the mind of his Spirit. Amen.

The Pope marked men.

Here remain two Objections, which may seem weighty, and the which may peradventure move many not to follow the former counsel. The former reason is, A man will say, O Sir, it is no small matter ye speak of, to depart from a mans own Native Country into a strange Realm. Many men have so great lets, as how is it possible for they can, or may do so? Some have Lands and Possessions, which they cannot carry with them: Some have Father, Mother, Wife, Children, and Kinsfolk, from whom to depart is as hard a thing (and all one almost) as to suffer death, and to go to a strange Country that thou knowest not, neither the manner of the People, nor how thou maist away either with the People, or with the Country: or what a hard thing it is to live among a strange People, whose tongue thou dost not understand, &c.

Carnal Objections answered.

I grant here thou maist heap a number of worldly incommodities, which are surely very like to ensue the departure out of a mans own Native Country, I mean out of the whole Realm into a strange Land: but what of all these, and a thousand more of the like sort? I will set unto them one saying of our Saviour Christ, which unto the faithful Child of God, and to the true Christian, is able to countervail all these, yea, and to weigh them down. Christ our Saviour faith in Luke, If any come to me, and do not hate his Father and Mother, (he meaneth, and will not in his cause forsake his Father and Mother) his Wife, Children, and Brethren, yea and his life too, he cannot be my Disciple: and whosoever doth not bear my Cross and come after me, he cannot be my Disciple. And in the same place he declareth by the two Parables, one of a Builder, and the other of a King that is a Warriour, that every man that will not in Christs cause forsake all that ever he hath, he cannot be his Disciple. Look the places who will; the matter is so plainly set forth, that no glosses, nor cloaking of Conscience to the man of God, can serve to the contrary. Many places there be for the same purpose, for the embracing of Christs Cross, when Christ and his Cause layeth it upon our back; but this is so plain, that I need here to rehearse no more.

Another
worldly Objection answered.

This later Reason and Objection, wherof I spake before, is of more force, and includeth a necessity, which after the common saying, hath no Law, and therefore it is more hard to shapre for it a good Answer. This may be objected of some, Alas Sir, grant all these things do grieve me, and because I understand they do not agree with Gods Word, which is the rule of my Conscience, I loath either to look on them, or to hear them. But, Sir, alas I am an impotent man, an aged man, a sick man, a lame man, or I have so many small Infants, and a lame Wife, which all live by my labour, and by my provision: if I leave them they shall starve, and I am not able to carry them with me, such is my state. Alas, Sir, what shall I do? And these causes may chance to some men of God, whereby either it shall be for them utterly impossible to depart the Country, or else in departing they shall be enforced to forsake such in extrem necessities, of whom both God and Nature hath committed unto them the care.

Alas, what counsel is here to be given? O lamentable state! O sorrowful heart! that neither can depart, and without extrem danger and peril is not able to tarry still. And these are they whom our Saviour Christ saw before should be, and called them in his Prophecies of the later time, great-bellied or travelling Women, and Women that give, after they be brought to Bed, their small Babes suck. Of the state of such as are not able to fly the infection of the pestiferous plague of Antichrists Abominations, Christ lamenting, and not cursing, faith, We be to the great bellied and travelling Women; and Women that give suck in those days. For these, alas, my heart mourneth the more, the less I am able to give any comfortable counsel, but this; that always, as they look for everlasting life, they abide still in the confession of his truth, whatsoever shall befall, and for the rest, to put their trust now wholly in God, which is able to save them against all appearance: And commonly in extremities, when all worldly comfort faileth, and the danger is at highest, then unto his he is wont, after his accustomed mercy, to be most ready to put his helping hand. Daniel God suffered to be cast into the Den of Lyons, and the three Children into the hot burning Furnace, and yet he saved them all. Paul was plucked out of the mouth of the Lion (as he faith of himself) and in Asia he was brought into such trouble, that he looked for no other thing but for present death, and yet he that raised the dead to life again, did bring him out of all his troubles, & taught him and all other that be in troubles for Christs cause; not to trust to themselves, but in Almighty God.

A lesson to trust to the Lord, who is always a help in extremity of need.

Of Gods gracious aid in extrem perils toward them that put their trust in him, all Scripture is full both of old and new. What dangers were the Patriarchs oftentimes brought into, as Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob, but of all other Joseph, and how mercifully were they delivered again? In what perils was Moses when he was fain to fly for the safeguard of his life? And when was he sent again to deliver the Israelites from the servile bondage? Not before they were brought into extrem misery. And when did the Lord mightily deliver his People from Pharaoh his Sword? Not before they were brought into such frights, that they were so compassed on every side (the main Sea on the one side, and the main Host on the other) that they could look for none other (yea, what did they indeed else look for?) but either to have been drowned in the Sea, or else to have fallen on the edge of Pharaoh his Sword. Those Judges, which wrought most wonderful things in the delivery of the people, were ever given when the people was brought to most misery before, as Othniel, Ehud, Samgar, Gedeon, Jephthah, Sampson. And so was Saul endued with strength and boldness from above, against the Ammonites, Philistines, and Amalekites, for the defence of the People of God. David likewise felt Gods help most sensibly ever in his extrem Persecutions. What shall I speak of the Prophets of God, whom God suffered to oft to be brought into extrem perils, and so mightily delivered them again; as Helias, Jeremy, Daniel, Micheas, and Jonas, and many other, whom it were but too long to rehearse and set out at large? And did the Lord use his Servants otherwise in the New Law after Christs Incarnation? Read the Acts of the Apostles, and you shall see no. Were not the Apostles cast into Prison, and brought out by the mighty hand of God? Did not the Angel deliver Peter out of the strong Prison, and bring him out by the Iron Gates of the City, and set him free? And when I pray you Even the same night before Herod appointed to have brought him to Judgment to have slain him, as he had a little before killed James the brother of John. Paul and Silas, when after they had been fore scourged, and were put into the inner Prison, and there were laid fast in the Stocks, I pray you what appearance was there that the Magistrates should be glad to come the next day themselves to them, to desire them to be content, and to depart in peace? Who provided for Paul, that he should be safely conducted out of all danger, and brought to Felix the Emperours Deputy, when as both the High Priests, the Pharisees, and Rulers of the Jews had conspired to enquire judgment of Death against him, he being fast in Prison, and also more than forty men had sworn each one to another, that they would neither eat nor drink, until they had slain Paul? A thing wonderful, if it no reason could have invented, or man could have looked for: God provided Paul his own Sisters Sons young men, that disappointed that Conspiracy, and all their former Conjurament. The manner how the thing came to pass, thou shalt read in the Thirtieth and twentieth of the Acts. I will not be tedious unto thee with the rehearsal thereof.

Now to descend from the Apostles to the Martyrs that followed next in Christs Church, and in them likewise to declare how gracious our good God ever hath been to work wonderfully with them which in his cause have been in extremest perils, it were matter enough to write a long Book. I will here name but one man and one woman, that is, Athanasius the great Clerk and godly man stoutly standing in Christs Cause against the Arians, and that holy woman Blandina, standing so constantly in all extremest pains, in the simple Confession of Christ. If thou wilt have examples of more, look and thou shalt find them in the lives of many, and an hundred more, in Ecclesiastical History of Eusebius, and in Tripartite History.

But for all these Examples, both of holy Scripture, and of other Histories, I fear me the weak man of God, incumbered with the frailty and infirmity of the flesh, will have now and then such thoughts and quakings (as they call them) to run over his heart, and to think thus: All these things which are rehearsed out of the Scripture I believe to be true, and of the rest truly I do think well, and can believe them also to be true; but all these we must needs grant were special miracles of God, which now in our days are ceased, we see; and to require them at Gods hands, were it not to tempt God?

God worketh great miracles in our time, although every man doth not see them.

Wellbeloved Brothers, I grant such were great wonderful works of God, and we have not seen many of such miracles in our time, either for that our fight is not clear (for truly God worketh with his, his part in all times) or else because we have not the like faith of them for whose cause God wrought such things, or because after that he had set forth the truth of his Doctrine by such miracles then sufficiently, the time of so many miracles to be done was expired withal. Which of these is the most special cause of all other, or whether there be any other, God knoweth; I leave that to God. But know thou this, my wellbeloved in God, that Gods hand is as strong as ever it was, he may do what his gracious pleasure is, and he is as good and gracious as ever he was. Man changeth the Garment doth: But God our heavenly Father is even the same now that he was, and shall be for evermore.

The world without doubt (this I do believe, and therefore I say) draweth towards an end, and in all Ages God hath led his own manner, after his secret and unsearchable wisdom, to use his Elect, sometimes to deliver them, and to keep them safe, and sometimes to suffer them to drink of Christs cup, that is, to feel the smart, and to feel of the whip. And though the flesh smareth at the one, and feeleth ease in the other, is glad of the one, and forevexed in the other: yet the Lord is all one towards them in both, and loveth them no less when he suffereth them to be beaten, yea, and to be put to bodily death, than when he worketh wonders for their marvellous delivery. Nay, rather he doth more for them, when in anguish of the torments he smareth by them, and strengtheneth them in their faith, to suffer in the confession of the truth and his faith, the bitter pangs of death, than when he openeth the Prison door and letteth them go loose: for here he doth but respite them to another time, and leaveth them in danger to fall in like peril again; and there he maketh them perfect, to be without danger, pain, or peril, after that for evermore. But this his love towards them, howsoever the world doth judge of it, is all one, both when he delivereth, and when he suffereth them to be put to death. He loved as well Peter, and Paul, when (after they had, according to his blessed will, pleasure and providence, finished their courses, and done their services appointed them by him here in preaching of his Gospel) the one was beheaded, and the other was hanged or crucified of the cruel Tyrant Nero, as the Ecclesiastical History saith, as when he sent the Angel to bring Peter out of Prison, and for Pauls delivery he made all the doors of the Prison to fly wide open, and the foundation of the same, like an Earthquake, to tremble and shake.

Thinkest thou, O thou man of God, that Christ our Saviour had less affection to the first Martyr Stephen, because he suffered his Enemies even at the first conspired to stone him to death? No surely, nor James Johns brother, which was one of the three that Paul calleth Primitives or Principals amongst the Apostles of Christ. He loved him never a whit the worse than he did the other, although he suffered Herod the Tyrants sword to cut off his head. Nay, doth not Daniel say, speaking of the cruelty of Antichrists time, Es deus in populo docuit plurimos, & ruerunt in gladio & in flamma, & in captivitate, & rapina dierum, &c. Es de crudelis venit ut confiteretur & dignetur, & dealbenetur, &c. That is, and the Learned (he meaneth truly learned in Gods Law) shall teach many, and shall fall upon the sword, and in the flame (that is, shall be burned in the flaming fire) and in captivity (that is, shall be in prison, and be spoiled and robbed of the same goods for a long season.) And after a little in the same place of Daniel it followeth; and of the learned there be, which shall fall or be overthrown, that they may be known, tried, chosen, and made white; he meaneth, be bournished and scoured anew, picked and chosen, and made fresh and lusty. If that then was foreseen to be done to the godly learned, and for so gracious causes, let every one to whom any such thing by the will of God doth chance, be merry in God and rejoyce, for it is to Gods glory, and to his own everlasting wealth. Wherefore well is he that ever he was born, for whom thus graciously God hath provided, having grace of God, and strength of the Holy Ghost to stand stedfastly in the height of the storm. Happy is he that ever he was born, whom God his heavenly Father hath vouchsafed to appoint to glorify him, and to edifie his Church by the effusion of his blood.

To dye in Christs cause is an high honour, to the which no man certainly shall or can aspire, but to whom God vouchsafeth that dignity: for no man is allowed to presume to take unto himself any office of honour, but he which is thereunto called of God. Therefore John saith well, speaking of them which have obtained the victory by the blood of the Lamb, and by the word of his Testimony, that they loved not their lives, even unto death. And our Saviour Christ saith, He that shall lose his life for my cause shall find it. And this manner of speech pertaineth not to one kind of Christians (as the worldly doth wickedly dream) but to all that do truly pertain unto Christ. For when Christ had called unto him the Multitude together with his Disciples, he said unto them (mark that he said not this to the Disciples and Apostles only, but he said it to all) whosoever will follow me, let him forsake or deny himself, and take up his Cross and follow me: for whosoever will save his life, shall lose it; he meaneth whosoever will, to save his life, forsake or leave him and his truth) and whosoever shall lose his life for my cause and the Gospels sake, shall save it. For what shall it profit a man if he shall win the whole world, and lose his own soul, his own life? or what shall a man give to recompense that loss of his own life, and of his own soul? Whosoever shall be ashamed of me and my words (that is, to confess me and my Gospel) before this adulterous and sinful Generation, of him shall the Son of Man be ashamed, when he cometh in the glory of his Father, with the holy Angels. Know thou, O man of God, that all things are ordained for thy behoof, and to the furtherance of thee, towards thy salvation. All things, saith Paul, worketh with the good to goodness, even the Enemies of God, and such kind of punishments whereby they go about to destroy them, shall be forced by Gods power, might, and fatherly providence, to do them service.

It is not as the wicked thinketh, that Poverty, Adversity, Sickness, Tribulation, yea painful Death of the godly be tokens that God doth not love them, but even clean the contrary, as all the whole course of Scripture doth evidently declare: for then he would never have suffered his most dearly beloved, the Patriarchs to have had such troubles, his Prophets, his Apostles, his Martyrs, and

Of the which some were racked (as the Apostle saith) and would not be delivered, that they might receive a better Resurrection. Some were tried by mockings and scourgings, yea, moreover by bonds and imprisonment: they were stoned, they were hewn and cut a-funder, they were tempted, they were slain with the sword, they wandered up and down in Sheepskins and Goatskins, being forsaken, afflicted, and tormented, such men as the world was not worthy to have, wandering in Wildernesses, in Mountains, in Dens and Caves of the Earth. All these were approved by the testimony of Faith, and received not the Promise, because God did provide better for us, that without us they should not be consummated. They tarry for us now undoubtedly, longing for the day: but they are commanded to have patience yet (saith the Lord) a little while, until the number of their Fellow-servants be fulfilled, and of their Brethren which are yet to be slain, as they were.

Now (thou O man of God) for our Lords sake, let us not for the love of this life, tarry then too long, and be occasion of delay of that glorious consummation, in hope and expectation whereof they departed in the Lord, and the which also the living indwelt with Gods Spirit, ought earnestly to desire and to groan for with all the Creatures of God. Let us all, with John the Servant of God, cry in our hearts unto our Saviour Christ, Veni Domine Iesu, Come Lord Jesus, come. For then when Christ, which is our life, shall be made manifest, and appear in glory, then shall the children of God appear what they be, even like unto Christ: for this our weak body shall be transfigured and made like unto Christs glorious body, and that by the power whereby he is able to subdue unto himself all things. Then, that which is now corruptible, shall then be made incorruptible: that which now is vile, shall be made glorious: that which is now weak, shall rise then mighty and strong; that which is gross and carnal, shall be made fine and spiritual: for then we shall see and have the unspeakable joy and fruition of the glorious Majesty of our Lord even as he is.

Who, or what then shall let us to jeopard, yea, to spend this life which we have here in Christs cause? in our Lord Gods cause? O thou therefore man of God, thou that art laden, and so letted like unto a great-bellied Woman, that thou canst not fly the plague, yet if thou lust after such things as I have spoken of, stand fast whatsoever shall befall, in thy Masters cause: and take this thy letting to fly, for a calling of God to fight in thy Master Christs cause. Of this be thou certain, they can do nothing unto thee, which thy Father is not aware of, or hath not foreseen before: they can do no more than it shall please him to suffer them to do for the furtherance of his glory, edifying of his Church, and thine own salvation. Let them then do what they shall, seeing to thee (O man of God) all things shall be forced to serve, and to work with thee unto the best before God. O be not afraid, and remember the end.

All this which I have spoken for the comfort of the lamentable case of the man whom Christ called great-bellied Woman, I mean to bespeak likewise to the captive and prisoner in Gods cause: for such I count to be as it were already summoned and pressed to fight under the Banner of the Cross of Christ, and as it were Souldiers allowed and taken up for the Lords Wars, to do their Lord and Master good and honourable service, and to stick to him, as men of trusty service in his cause, even unto death, and to think their life lost in his cause, is to win it in eternal glory for evermore.

Therefore, now to conclude and make an end of this Treatise, I lay unto all that love God our heavenly Father, that love Christ Jesus our Redeemer and Saviour; that love to follow the ways of the Holy Ghost which is our Comforter and Sanctifier of all; unto all that love Christs Spouse and Body, the true Catholick Church of Christ, yea, that love life and their own souls health; I lay unto all these, hearken my dear Brethren and Sisters, all you that be of God, of all sorts, ages, dignities, or degrees; hearken to the word of our Saviour Jesus Christ spoken to his Apostles, and meant to all his, in S. Matthews Gospel, Fear not them which kill the body, for they cannot kill the soul; but fear him more which may destroy and cast both body and soul into Hell fire. Are not two small Sparrows sold for a mite, and one of them shall not fall or light upon the ground without your Father? All the hairs of your head be numbered. Fear them not, you are much more worth than are the little Sparrows. Every one that confesseth me before men, him shall I likewise confess before my Father which is in Heaven. But whosoever shall deny me before men, I shall deny him likewise before my Father which is in Heaven.

The Lord grant us therefore of his heavenly grace and strength, that here we may so confess him in this world as amongst this adulterous and sinful Generation, that he may confess us again at the latter day before his Father which is in Heaven, to our glory and everlasting comfort, joy, and salvation.

To our heavenly Father, to our Saviour and Redeemer Jesus Christ, and to the Holy Ghost, be all glory and honour now and for ever, Amen.

Thus with the death and martyrdom of these two learned Pastors and constant Souldiers of Christ, Mr. Latimer and Bishop Ridley, you have divers of their Letters and other Writings of theirs expressed, with the Farewells also of Bishop Ridley, wherein he took his leave of the world, taking his Journey to the Kingdom of Heaven. Divers and sundry other Treatises of his remain also in my hand both in Latin and English, to be remembered by the leave of the Lord in time and place convenient.

The death and end of Stephen Gardiner Bishop of Winchester.

The next Month after the burning of Dr. Ridley, and Mr. Latimer, which was the Month of November, Stephen Gardiner Bishop and Chancellor, a man hard of God and all good men, ended his wretched life. Concerning the qualities, nature, and disposition of which man, so far as somewhat hath been declared before in the story of King Edwards Reign, I shall need therefore the less now to stand greatly upon the same. First, This Vipers Bird crept out of the Town of Bury in Suffolke, was brought up most part of his youth in Cambridge; his Wit, Capacity, Memory, and other Endowments of Nature were not to be complained of, if he had well used and rightly applied the same; wherein there was no great want of Gods part in him, if he had not rather himself wanted to the goodness of his Gifts. Through this promptness, activity, and towardsness of his, he profited not a little in such Studies as he gave his head unto, as first in the Civil Law, then in Languages and such other like, especially in those Arts and Faculties which had any prospect to Dignity and Preferment to be hoped for. Besides other ornaments or helps of Nature, Memory chiefly seemed in him very beneficial, rather than diligence of Study.

To these gifts and qualities were joyned again his great or greater vices, which not so much followed him, as overtook him, not so much burdened him, as made him burdensome to the whole Realm. He was of a proud stomach, and high-minded, in his own opinion and conceit flattering himself too much; in wit, crafty and subtle, toward his Superiours flattering and fair spoken, to his Inferiours fierce, against his Equal stout and envious, namely, if in judgment and sentence he any thing withstood him, as appeared between the good L. Cromwel and him in the Reign of King Henry, being of like haughtiness of stomach as the Poets write of Pelides, Odere vulgus. Who, although he would give no place to men, yet notwithstanding I wish he would have given place to truth, according as he seemed not altogether ignorant of that truth. What his knowledge was therein, it is evident, partly you understand as well by his Book De vera Obedientia, as also by his Sermon before King Edward; also by his Answer to the Council the same time, and moreover by his own words it may be gathered in sundry places, as more plainly may appear by that which hereafter followeth.

Upon his Estimation and Fame he stood too too much, more than was meet for a man of his Coat and Calling, whose Profession was to be crucified unto the world, which thing made him so stiff in maintaining that he had once begun to take upon him. I will not here speak of that which hath been constantly reported to me touch-

The death of Stephen Gardiner, touching to Gods Word.

The vices of Stephen Gardiner, as overtook him.

in the monstrous miking and misshaped fashion of his letters, the nails whereof were said not to be like to characters, but to crook downward, and to be sharp like the claws of ravenous Beasts. What his Learning was in the Civil and Canon Law I have not to say: Yet he was in other Liberal Sciences and Arts, this I suppose, that neither his continuance in study, nor diligence in reading was such (by reason of his too much labouring in Princes matters) as could truly well merit unto him the title of a deep learned man. But what leaving or cunning forever it was he had, so it fared in him, as it doth in Butchers, which use to blow up their flesh: or on so lie with boldness and stoutness, and specially with authority, made those gifts that he had to appear much greater than they were in very deed. Whereunto, his peradventure, also and experience abroad, brought no little helps, rather than either quickness of wit, or happiness of education.

And as touching Divinity, he was so variable, wavering with time, that no constant censure can be given what to make of him. If his doings and writings were according to his Conscience, no man can rightly say whether he was a right Protestant or Papist. If he wrote otherwise than he thought, for fear, or to bear with time, then was he a double deep dissembler before God and man, to say, and unsay, to write and unwite, to swear and forswear so as he did. For first in the beginning of Queen Anne's time, who was so forward or so buile in the matter of the Kings Divorce as Stephen Gardiner, who was first sent to Rome, and then to the Emperor with Edward Foxe, as chief Agent in the behalf of the Lady Anne? By whom also he was preferred to the Bishoprick of Winchester, and Edward Boner was preferred to the Bishoprick of London. Again, at the abolishing of the Pope, who so ready to swear, or so vehement to write against the Pope as he, as not only by his Sermons, but also by his Book De Obedientia may appear? In which Book De Obedientia, left any should think him drawn thereunto otherwise than by his own consent, he plainly declares, how not rashly nor upon a sudden, but upon a long deliberation and advertisement in himself about the matter, he at length uttered his judgment: Whereof read before. And moreover, so he uttered his judgment in writing against the usurped Supremacy of the Pope, that coming to Leovene afterward, he was there accounted for a person excommunicate and a Schismatick, inasmuch that he was not permitted in their Church to say Mass; and moreover, in their publick Sermons they openly cried out against him. Whereof read hereafter following.

And thus long continued he firm and forward, so that who but Winchester during all that time and reign of Queen Anne? After her decease that time by little and little carried him away, till at length the emulation of Cromwell's estate, and especially (as it seemeth) for his much favouring of Boner (whom Winchester at that time in no case could abide) made him an utter Enemy both against him, and also his Religion: till again in King Edwards day, she began a little to rebate from certain points of Popery, and somewhat to smell of the Gospel, as both by his Sermons before King Edward, as also by his subscribing to certain Articles, may appear: and this was an half turn of Stephen Gardiner from Popery again to the Gospel, and (no doubt) he would have further turned, had not the unluckey decay of the Duke of Somerset cleave turned him away from true Divinity, to plain Popery; wherein he continued a cruel Persecutor to his dying day.

And thus much concerning the Trade and Profession of Stephen Gardiner's Popish Divinity. In which his Popish Trade, whether he followed more true judgment, or else time, or rather the spirit of Ambition and Vain-glory, it is doubtful to say, and so much the more doubtful, because in his doings and writings a man may see him not only contrary to himself, but also in some points contrary to other Papists. And furthermore, where he agreeeth with them, he seemeth thereunto more to move, to follow his own sense, as the mind and meaning of Perseus; out of whose Book the great part of Winchester's Divinity seemeth to be borrowed.

And therefore as in the true knowledge of Gods holy Word and Scripture he appeareth no body; so in his pen and style of writing no less far is he from commendation, than he is from all plainness and perspicuity. In whole obscure and perplex kind of writing, although peradventure some sense may be found with some searching, yet shall no Reader find any sweetness in his reading.

What moved him to be so sturdy against Mr. Cheek, and Sir Thomas Smith, for the Greek pronunciation, others may think what they please: I speak but what I think, that so he did, for that he saw it a thing rather newly begun, than truly impugned. Such was the disposition of that man (as it seemeth) that of purpose he ever affected to seem to be a Patron of old Customs, though they were never so rotten with age. Amongst other matters, this one thing I cannot but marvel at in my mind, when I see how proudly he braggeth, and vainly vaunteth himself (as well in his Letters to the Lord Protector, and others of King Edwards Council, as also in his long matter articulated and exhibited by him unto the Archbishop of Canterbury, and other the Kings Commissioners) of the high favour he had of the noble King of famous memory, King Henry the Eighth, when indeed nothing was less true; neither did the King less favour any of his Council, than him, affirming very often, that he greatly suspected the said Bishop to be a secret maintainer of the Bishop of Rome's usurped Authority, and a stout disturber and hinderer of his proceedings in reformation of Religion. And therefore he did so much dislike him, that he did not only mind (if the Lord had sent his Highness longer life) to have held the extremity of Law against him, upon very sore and just matter of old, committed by him (and yet not taken away by any pardon) commanding thereupon often the Lord Payer, then his Secretary, to keep safe certain writings which he had against him; but also commanded that he should be put clean out of his last Will and Testament, not suffering him either to be any of his Executors, or else in any case of his Sons Council, no, although he were earnestly intreated to the contrary by sundry of the Lords, and others of his Highnesses Council, saying, he was a wise, troublesome, and headstrong man, and not meet to be about his Son, or to have any thing to do by his will. Now amongst other causes that moved the King thus to suspect his fidelity towards his godly proceedings in Religion, I find this to be one. It pleased his Majesty after the abolishing of the Bishop of Rome's usurped Authority (amongst other Embassages to foreign Princes) to send the said Bishop of Winchester, and Sir Henry Knevet Knight, as joynt Ambassadors to the Emperour, being then at a Diet or Council at Ratisbona, appointing also Sir John Barkley, Sir William Blunt, Knights, and Mr. Andrew Bainton Esquire (his Highnesses Servants) to give their attendance upon the said Sir Henry Knevet, for the more honouring of his Embassage. It happened also at that time, that Sir Henry Knevet entertained into his service (as Steward of his Household) one William Wolfe, who had in the same place and room before served Sir Thomas Wyatt Knight, the Kings former Ambassador there, and by that means had good acquaintance in those parts, as well in the Emperours Court, as elsewhere. This Wolfe, towards the latter end of the Diet or Council, happened to walk (as often he did) towards the Emperours Palace to hear some news, where he met with one Lodovico, an Italian Merchant of Banker, one of his old acquaintance. Who, supposing the said Wolfe to have attended upon the Bishop of Winchester (not knowing of any other joynt Ambassador) required Wolfe for old acquaintance, to do him a pleasure; whereunto he willingly granted. Whereupon Lodovico shewed him, that the Popes Legate, or Ambassador to the Emperour (which was Cardinal Cantarene) departing the day before towards Rome, and having no leisure to end his business himself, had put the said Lodovico in trust for the accomplishing of them: and amongst all other things he had especially charged him that he should repair to the Ambassador of England, and require of him an answer of the Popes Letters, which the Legate did of late send unto him, addressed to him from Rome, and that upon the receipt thereof he should send them after with all all speed; and therefore if his Lord Ambassadors would write by that Currier, he prayed Wolfe to tell him that it was time to write, for the Currier went away within a day or two. At this tale Wolfe being abashed, and yet partly ghesling which Ambassadors he meant, thought it not meet to tell him whose Servant he was, but by other soothing talk perceived that he meant the Bishop of Winchester. And to the end that Ludovick should suspect nothing, he answered him, that he being not the Ambassadors Secretary, could say little therein; howbeit he would not mis to put his Secretary in remembrance of it: which thing Ludovick also desired him to do, for that he had no other acquaintance with the Ambassadors, and so for that time they departed. This matter seeming to Wolfe of some importance, did straightways reveal it to Sir Henry Knevet his Master: Who weighing also the greatness of the case, and what disadvantage it were upon one mans so bare a report to attempt ought, in a place and time, whereby such a person was to be touched, charged Wolfe well to advise himself, that no affect of hate, displeasure, or other passion, did move him to disclose this, but truth only. Wolfe replied, That he weighed well the weightiness of the cause, meet, as to his own respect, to be passed over in silence, for avoiding of his private displeasure, if duty of Allegiance bound him not otherwise. But Sir (quoth he) if you think not my hearing thereof, one to one, to be sufficient, I warrant you to devise means, that some others of your Servants shall hear the like words at Ludovicks own mouth as well as I. Upon which talk Sir Henry Knevet devised which of his Servants he might use to that purpose, and at last rested upon Mr. Thomas Chalenor his Secretary, because he had the Italian Tongue. Not yet making him privy of any matter, but willed Wolfe to take him abroad with him as of his own private motion, for they were very familiar friends. Whereupon the next morning, being Sunday, Wolfe came to Chalenor's Chamber, and prayed him familiarly to go walk with him abroad to the Piazza, or Market-stead, which he gladly granting, so did, not knowing of any special cause why. When they came to the Piazza, over against the Emperours Palace, (near whereunto also the Popes Legate had lodged) and had there walked a while together, there came thither the said Ludovick, and espying Wolfe, saluted him very friendly, and entred into talk about the Exchange, and sundry other matters, Chalenor being still with them. At last upon occasion, they entred into like talk about the former Letters that the Ambassadors of England had received from Rome by the Popes Legate, of which Ludovick had in charge to receive an answer, affirming, that the Post did depart the next day, and therefore prayed Wolfe to put the Ambassadors Secretary in remembrance of them. Whereunto Wolfe answered, That he would willingly do it; but he did not well know which Ambassadors he meant, for that there were two: one, the Bishop of Winchester, and the other, a Gentleman of the Kings Privy Chamber. To whom Ludovick replied, that he meant not the Gentleman of the Privy Chamber, but the Bishop. By which talk, and much such like (as upon the former day) Mr. Chalenor being moved (and not knowing yet of his Masters and Wolfe's purpose) after the departure of Ludovick from them, said unto Wolfe, that Ludovick had had but homely talk with him, not to be passed over lightly, and therefore he would tell his Master of it. To whom Wolfe answered, Do as you will, if you think any matter therein. And therefore at his return home, he told Sir Henry Knevet what speech he had heard at Ludovicks mouth. Sir Henry Knevet being thus further assured of the matter, opened the whole to Sir John Barksley, Sir William Blunt, and to Mr. Bainton, who all agreed yet to make a further trial thereof. And therefore devised that Wolfe should procure Ludovick to bring certain Velvet, and other Silks, unto Sir Henry Knevet's Lodging, as well for himself, as for the other Gentlemen; which that Afternoon he did accomplish, and brought Ludovick unto Sir Henry, where also were the other Gentlemen: After they had a while viewed the Silks, and had some talk about the prices, Wolfe took occasion again to ask Ludovick if Sir Henry were the Ambassador of whom he was to demand an Answer of the Letters sent by the Popes Legate? To whom the Merchant answered, No, it was not his Seigniori, but it was a Bishop, tearing him Reverendissima, whereby they easily perceived whom he meant. Sir Henry Knevet hereupon somewhat dissembling the matter, entred into further talk therabouts, whereby Ludovick opened as much in effect to them, as he had done before to Wolfe: but yet at last perceiving that as well Sir Henry, as also the other Gentlemen, did behold him somewhat firedly, he brake off his talk. Wherewith Sir Henry Knevet; making as though he had noted nothing; did lovingly dismiss him, praying him, that when he had received the Bishops Letters, he would also repair to him for a Packet to an English Gentleman of his acquaintance at Mullen; which he promised to do, and so departed again. When Sir Henry had thus made sufficient trial of this matter, he forthwith wrote his Letters unto the Kings Majesty, signifying unto him the whole at large, as he had learned. In the mean while Ludovick the next morning repaired unto the Bishop of Winchester's Lodging, to demand an answer of those Letters the Legate had sent unto him: but how he used himself, or whether he uttered the talk he had with Sir Henry Knevet and with Wolfe, whom he supposed at the first to be the Bishops man, it is not certainly known. But the Bishop perceiving that by mistaking one for another (and in supposing Wolfe to be the Bishops Servant) Ludovick had uttered all his Message from the Legate unto Wolfe, and that thereby his practices would come to light; in great hasty rage, caused Ludovick to be stayed in his own house, while in the mean time himself went to Gravela, one of the Emperours Council, and so practised with him, that Ludovick was secretly committed unto Prison, in the custody of one of the Emperours Marshals, so as he could be no more talked withal, all the time of their abode there. And then sending in great haste to Sir Henry Knevet to come and speak with him (which he did) he fell into very hot speech with him, saying, that he had poison in his dish, and that a Knave was suborned to be his destruction; with many such like words. Sir Henry told him again, how he understood it; and prayed him that Ludovick might be brought face to face, to be examined in both their Prefences. Which the Bishop would in no case agree unto, affirming, that he had so declared the case to Gravela, being indifferent (as he thought) to them both, that he would not meddle with Ludovick, nor speak with him: but that the Emperours Council should examine him, and try what he was, for him. To whom Sir Henry Knevet again very earnestly objected, That he marvelled that the Bishop, in matter touching the Kings Majesty, their Master, would use the aid or means of Gravela, a foreign Princes Minister, to make him privy of their question. But say and do what he could, he would never come to the speech of Ludovick any more ever after. Whereupon there rose great and long controversies between them (both writing Letters unto the King about that matter) until at last the Kings Majesty perceiving his Affairs otherwise to slack thereby, wrote unto them both that they should lay all those things under foot, and joyn together in his Service as before; which they did accordingly. But howsoever this matter was afterward salved here with the Kings Majesty, as either by the death of Sir Henry Knevet (which I think was not long after) or by other friends the Bishop had here at home, I know not: yet Wolfe, who within two months after died of a long cough of the Longues, upon his Death-bed did again affirm the Premises to be most true; and therefore in the presence of Sir Henry Knevet, and divers other of his Servants, he protested, that he had not invented, sought, or procured this at Ludovicks hands, for any malice or displeasure born to the Bishop, but only for discharge of his faith and duty unto the Kings Majesty, desiring that the same his Protestation might be inserted in the end of his last Will and Testament, which was then presently done, and thereunto he set his hand.

Now, whether this was the matter that the King moved so often Mr. Secretary Paget (being after Lord Keeper) to keep safe as fore matter against the Bishop, I know not; but yet it appears by some Depositions of the Nobility, and others, in the Process against him had in King Edward's days, that the Kings Majesty, Henry 8. had this matter even in his mind: for in every general pardon that he granted by Parliament after this practice, he did still except all Treasons committed beyond the Seas, meaning thereby, as it was supposed, that the Bishop should not take any benefit by any general pardon, if at any time his Majesty would call him to account: and therefore all things well weighed, he had small cause to vaunt of his great favour he had with King Henry his Master. Howbeit, it seemeth he was brought into this fools Paradise by the Lord Poyer; who (as he himself reporteth in his Depositions) in his Messages from the King to the said Bishop, deluded him, telling him much otherwise than the King had spoken, and concealing always the Kings hard speeches against him, which thing puffed up this vain glorious Threfo not a little. All which premises appear more at large by the Depositions of the Nobles and others, examined in the long Process against him in King Edwards reign, as appears in our first Edition of Acts and Monuments, from page 804. unto the end of that Process, in that Book at large mentioned.

But whosoever he was, seeing he is now gone, I refer him to his judgement, to whom he shall stand or fall. As concerning his Death, and manner thereof, I would they which were present there, would testify to us what they saw. This we have all to think, that his death happened so opportunely, that he had hath a mighty cause to give thanks to the Lord therefore: not so much for the great manner he had done in this world, as for his perverting his Princes, in bringing in the Mass, which murdering Gods Saints, in despising Christ, and his Religion, &c. but also and especially for that he had done, not to have brought to pass in murdering a good man. *Q. On what now is it did (no doubt) proceed from the bloody Bishop, who was the cause thereof. And if it be certain which we have heard, that her Highness being in the Tower, a Writ came down from certain of the Council, for her Execution, it is out of controversy, that wily Winchester was the only Deceiver and framer of that Engine, who (no doubt) in that one day had brought this whole Realm into woful ruin, had not the Lords most gracious Counsel, through Mr. Bridger, then the Lieutenant, coming in haste to the Queen, crushed her of the matter, and prevented Adams bloody devices. For the which, thanks be to the same our Lord and Saviour, in the Congregation of all English Churches, Amen.*

Of things uncertain, I must speak uncertainly, for lack of fuller information, or else peradventure they be in the Realm that can say more than here I have expressed. For as Boner, Story, Thornton, Harpfield, Dunning, with other, were occupied in putting the poor Branches of Gods Saints to death: so this Bishop for his part bent all his devices, and had spent all his powder in assailing the Root, and in casting such a Platform (as he himself in words at his death is said to confess) to build his Popery upon, as he thought should have stood for ever and a day. But (as I said before) of things uncertain I can speak but uncertainly. Wherefore as touching the manner and order of his death, how rich he died, what words he spake, what little repentance he shewed, whether he died with his tongue swollen and out of his mouth, as did Thomas Cromwell, Archbishop of Canterbury, or whether he flunk before he died, as Cardinal Wolsey did, or whether he died in despair, as Latimus and others did, &c. All this I refer either to their reports of whom I heard it, or leave it to the knowledge of them which know it better.

Notwithstanding, here by the way, touching the death of this forsaid Bishop, I thought not to over-pass a certain hear-say, which not long since came to me by information of a certain worthy and credible Gentlewoman, and another Gentleman of the same name and kindred, which Mrs. Monday, being the Wife of one Mr. Monday, a Secretary sometime to the old Lord Thomas, Duke of Northfolke, a present witness of this that is testified, thus openly reported in the house of a worshipful Citizen, bearing yet office in this City, in words and effect as followeth. The same day, when as Bishop Ridley and Mr. Lattimer suffered at Oxford, being about the 19. day of October, there came into the House of Stephen Gardiner, then a Deacon of Northfolke, with the foresaid Mr. Monday his Secretary above named, to register hereof. The old aged Duke there waiting and tarrying for his Dinner, the Bishop being not yet disposed to dine, deferred the time to 3 or 4. of the Clock at Afternoon. At length, about 4. of the Clock cometh his Servant posting in all possible speed from Oxford, bringing intelligence to the Bp. what he had heard and seen: of whom the said Bishop diligently inquiring the truth of the matter, and hearing by his man, that fire most certainly was set unto them, cometh out rejoicing to the Duke; Now, faith he, let us go to dinner. Whereupon, they being set down, meat immediately was brought, and the Bishop began merrily to eat. But what followed? The bloody Tyrant had not eaten a few bits, but the sudden stroke of Gods terrible hand fell upon him in such sort, as immediately he was taken from the Table, and so brought to his Bed, where he continued the space of 15 days in such intolerable anguish and torments, that all that mean while, during the 15 days, he could not avoid by Urine, or otherwise, any thing that he received: whereby his body being miserably inflamed within (who had inflamed so many good Martyrs before) was brought to a wretched end. And thereof no doubt, as most like it is, came the thrusting out of his tongue from his mouth so swollen and black, with the inflammation of his body. A spectacle worthy to be noted and beheld of all such bloody burning Persecutors.

But to proceed further in the sequel of our story: I could name the man (but I abstain from names) who being then present, and a great doer about the said Winchester, reported to us concerning the said Bishop, that when Dr. Day, Bishop of Gloucester, came to him, and began to comfort him with words of Gods promise, and with the free Justification in the Blood of Christ our Saviour, repeating the Scriptures to him; Winchester hearing that, What may Lord (quoth he) will you open that Gap now? then farewell altogether. To me, and such other in my case, you may speak it, but open this Window to the People, then farewell altogether.

Moreover, what Dr. Boner then saw in him, or what he heard of him, and what words passed between them about the time of this extremity, betwixt him and him be it. If Boner did there behold any thing which might turn to his good example, I exhort him to take it, and to beware in time, as I pray God he may. Here I could bring in the frivolous Epitaph which was made of his death, devised of a Papist for a Popish Bishop: but I pretermitt it, and instead thereof I have here inferred certain gatherings out of his Sermons, Words, and Writings, wherein may appear first, what an earnest and vehement Enemy he was to the Pope, if he would have been constant in himself; then how inconstantly he varied from himself; and thirdly, how he standing upon a singularity of his own wit, varied also from other Papists in certain points. In the gathering whereof although there be some pains, and tediousness also in reading; yet I thought not to pretermitt the same, upon certain Considerations, namely, for that so many yet to this day there be, which stick so much to Gardiners wit, learning, and religion, taking him for such a doughty Pillar of the Popes Church. To the intent therefore, that such as hitherto have been deceived by him, may not longer be abused therein, if they will either credit his own Works, Words, Sermons, Writings, Disputations; or else will be judged by his own wimelles of his own party produced, we have here collected such manifest Probations, which may notoriously declare how effectually first he withstood the Popes Supremacy: and likewise afterward may declare manifest contrariety and repugnancy of the said Gardiner, first with other Writers, and lastly with himself: first beginning with his Sermon preached before K. Edward. The sum and effect of which Sermon briefly collected by Mr. Udal, hereunder followeth to be seen.

The sum and effect of the Sermon which Gardiner Bishop of Winchester preached before King Edward, Anno 1550.

The Gospel beginneth, Cum venisset Iesus in partes Cesarea Philippi, &c. When Iesus was come into the parts of Cesarea a City that Philippus builded, he asked his Disciples, and said; Whom do Men say that the Son of Man is? They said, Some say that thou art John the Baptist, some that thou art Ely, some that thou art Jeremy, or some one of the Prophets. He said to them, But whom say ye that I am? Then answered Simon Peter, and said, Thou art Christ, the Son of the living God, &c. I cannot have time, I think, to speak of the Gospel thoroughly, for other matters that I have here now to say, but I shall note unto you such things as I may, and first of the diversity of opinions concerning Christ, which were among the People variable: but among this, that is, the Disciples of Christs School, there was no variety, they agreed all together in one truth, and among them there was no variety. For when Peter had for all the rest, and in the name of all the rest made his answer, that Christ was the Son of God, they all confessed with one consent, that he had spoken the truth. Yet these opinions of Christ that the people had of him, though they were sundry, yet were they honorable and not slanderous: for to say that Christ was Ely, and John the Baptist, was honorable. For some thought him so to be, because he did frankly, sharply, and openly rebuke vice. They that called him Jeremy, had also an honourable opinion of him, and thought him so to be, because of his great learning which they perceived in him, and marvelled where he had it. And they that said he was some of the Prophets, had an honourable opinion of him, and favoured him, and thought well of him.

But there was another sort of people that spake evil of him, and slandered him, and raised on him, saying that he was a glutton, and a drinker of Wine, that he had a devil in him, that he was a deceiver of the people, that he was a Carpenter's Son, as though he were the worse for his Fathers craft. But of these he asked no question: for among these none agreed with the other. Wherein ye shall note that Man of his own power and strength can nothing do: no, nothing that good is he can do of his own invention or device, but erreth and faileth; when he is left to his own invention, he erreth in his imagination. So proud is Man, and so stout of his own courage, that he deviseth nothing well, whensoever he is left to himself without God; and then never do any such agree in any truth, and wander and err in all that they do. As Men of Law if they be asked their opinion in any point touching the Law, ye shall not have two of them agree in opinion; in any point touching the Law, ye shall not have two of them agree in opinion, one with the other. If there be two or three of them asked their opinion in any matter, if they should answer all one thing, they fear lest they should be supposed and thought to have no learning. Therefore be they never so many of them, they will not agree in their answers, but devise each Man a sundry answer in any thing that they are asked.

The Philosophers that were not of Christs School errered every one in their own opinions, and no one of them agreed with the other.

Yea, Men of simplicity, though they mean well, yet being out of Christs School, they agree not, but vary in their opinions. As these simple people here spoken of, because they were not perfect Disciples of Christs School, they varied and agreed not in their opinions of Christ, though they thought well of him. Some said, he was John, some Ely, some Jeremy, but none made the right answer. He that answered here, was Simon the Son of Jonas, and he said; Thou art Christ, the Son of the living God.

Where ye shall note the properties that were in Peter. He was called Simon, which is obedience, and Jonas is a fish obedient; so that in him that is of Christs School, must be these two properties, obedience and simplicity. He must be humble and innocent as a Dove, that will be of Christs School. Pride is a let of Christs School; for as the wilful man faith, God rethelth the proud, and giveth Grace to the humble and meek. And according to the same doth Christ in the Gospel say, Oh Father, I confess unto thee, that I, I laud and magnific thee; for that thou hast hidden these things from the wise, and hast opened them unto the little ones. Whereupon faith Saint Augustine, that the gifts of learning and knowledge of Sciences are no let to Christs School, but a furtherance thereunto, if they be well applied and used as they ought to be: but he that is proud, and feedeth himself with his own conceit and opinion of himself, and abuseth the gifts of God, applying his learning and knowledge to the satisfying and following of his own fantasies, is no right Disciple of Christ, but falleth into error. Dicentes se sapientes esse, &ulti facti sunt: When they said and affirmed themselves to be wise, they were made fools.

The Philosophers had every one a sect of his own, and had many gay sentences for the commendation of their opinions, and every Man thought his own opinion to be best: but because they applied all to their own pride and glory, and not to the honour of God, nor humbled themselves as they ought to have done, but followed their own fantasies, they errered, and fell out of the way, and were not of Christs School: and all that have gone out of Christs School, pride hath brought them out of it, and such as have not errered, have kept themselves out of it with pride likewise: therefore all such as will be Scholars of Christs School and Disciples, must be humble and meek; otherwise, Dicentes se sapientes esse, &ulti facti sunt.

He that cannot learn this lesson of Peter, and humbly confess with Peter, that Christ is the Son of the living God, is no Scholar of Christs School, be he otherwise never so well learned, never so well seen in other sciences. But now concerning the answer of Peter, Matthew here in this place faith he answered, Tu es Christus filius Dei vivis. Saint Luke faith he answered, Tu es Christus Dei. And Saint Mark faith he answered, Tu es Christus. But in all that is no variety: for to say Christus filius Dei vivis, and to say Christus Dei, and to say Christus, is in effect all one, and no diversity in it, for Christus alone is the whole, and he that confesseth thoroughly Christ, is thoroughly a Christian Man, and doth therein confess him to be the Lord and Saviour of the World. But now we must consider what Christ is. Christ was sent to be our Messias, our Saviour: he was sent to be our Bishop and also our Sacrifice: he was sent from the Trinity to be our Mediator between God and us, and to reconcile us to the favour of God the Father, he was the Bishop that offered for our Sins, and the Sacrifice that was offered; and as he is our Bishop, so is he our mean to pacify God for us, for that was the office of a Bishop, to sacrifice for the Sins of the people, and to make intercession for the people; and as he was our Sacrifice, so was he our reconciliation to God again.

But we must confess and believe him thoroughly I say: for as he was our Bishop then, so is he that still keepeth us in favour with God: and like as his Sacrifice then made was sufficient as to deliver us from our Sins, and to bring us in favour with God, so to continue us in the same favour of God, he ordained a perpetual remembrance of himself, he ordained himself for a memory of himself at his last Supper, when he instituted the Sacrament of the Altar, not for another redemption, as though the World needed a new redemption from sin, but that we might thoroughly remember his most holy passion, he instituted the Sacrament by his most holy Word, saying: This is my Body, which word is sufficient to prove the Sacrament, and maketh sufficiently for the substance thereof. And this daily Sacrifice he instituted to be continued among Christian Men, not for need of another redemption or satisfaction for the Sins of the World, for that was sufficiently performed by the Sacrifice of his Body and Blood done upon the Cross; neither that he is now our Bishop for need of any further Sacrifice to be made for sin, but to (a) continue us in the remembrance of his passion suffered for us, to make us strong in believing the fruit of his passion, to make us diligent in thanksgiving for the benefit of his passion, to establish our Faith, and to make it strong in acknowledging the efficacy of his Death and Passion suffered for us. And this is the true understanding of the Mass, not for another redemption, but that we may be strong in believing the benefits of Christ's Death and Blood-shedding for us upon the Cross. And this it is that we must believe of Christ, and believe it thoroughly: and therefore by your patience, as Peter made his confession, so will I make confession, wherein by your Majesties leave and sufferance, I will plainly declare what I think of the state of the Church of England at this day, how I like it, and what I think of it.

Where I laid of the Mass, that it was a Sacrifice offered to make us the more strong in the faith and remembrance of Christ's passion, and for commending unto God the Souls of such as be dead in Christ (for these two things are the special causes why the Mass was instituted) the Parliament very well ordained Mass to be kept; and because we should be the more strong in the Faith and Devotion towards God; it was well done of the Parliament, for moving the people more and more to devotion, to ordain that the Sacrament should be received in both kinds: Therefore I say that the Act of Parliament for receiving of the Sacrament of the Altar in both kinds, was well made.

I say also, that the Proclamation which was made, That no Man should unreverently speak of the Sacrament, or otherwise speak of it than Scripture teacheth them, was well made. For this Proclamation stoppeth the Mouths of all such as will unreverently speak of the Sacrament for in Scripture there is nothing to be found that maketh any thing against the Sacrament, but all maketh with it. Wherefore if they were the Children of obedience, they would not use any unreverend talk against the Sacrament, nor Blaspheme the Holy Sacrament. For no word of the Scripture maketh any thing against it.

But here it may be said unto me, Why Sir: is this your opinion? It is good you speak plainly in this matter, and halt nothing, but declare your mind plainly, without any colouring or covert speaking. The Act for the dissolving and suppressing of the Chauntries seemeth to make against the Mass, how like you that Act? What say you of it? or what would you say of it, if you were alone? I will speak what I think of it, I will use no colourable or covert words, I will not use a devised speech for a time, and afterward (b) go from it again. If Chauntries were abused by applying the Mass for the satisfaction of sin, or to bring Men to Heaven, or to take away sin, or to make Men of wicked just, I like the Act well, and they might well be dissolved, for the Mass was not instituted for any such purpose: yet nevertheless for them that were in them (I speak now, as in the cause of the poor) it were well done that they were provided of livings. The Act doth graciously provide for them during their lives, and I doubt not but that your Majesty, and the Lords of your most Honorable Council have willed and taken order, that they should be well looked unto; but yet how they shall be used at the hands of under officers, God knoweth; full hardly, I fear. But as for the Chauntries themselves, if there were any such (c) abuse in them concerning the Mass, it is no matter if they be taken away.

King Henry the Eighth, a Noble and Wise Prince, not without great pain maintained the Mass, and yet in his Doctrine it was confessed that Masses of Scala Calvi were not to be used, nor allowed, because they did pervert the right use and institution of the Mass. For when Men add unto the Mass an opinion of Satisfaction, or of a new redemption, then do they put it to another use than it was ordained for. That allow Mass so well, and I that allow praying for the dead as indeed the dead are of Christian Charity to be prayed for yet can agree with the Realm in that matter of putting down Chauntries.

But yet ye would say unto me, There be fewer Masses by putting away the Chauntries. So were there when Abbeyes were dissolved: So be there when ye unite many Churches in one. But this is no injury nor prejudice to the Mass; it consisteth not in the number nor in the multitude, but in the thing it self: so that the decay of the Mass by taking away the Chauntries, is answered by the Abbeyes. But yet I would have it considered for the persons that are in them. I speak of the poor Mens livings.

I have now declared what I think of the Act of Parliament made for the receiving of the Sacrament of the Body and Blood of our Saviour Jesus Christ in both kinds. Ye have my mind and opinion concerning a Proclamation that came forth for the same Act, and I have shewed my mind therein even plainly as I think, and I have ever been agreeable to this point, I have oftentimes reasoned in it, I have spoken and also written in it, both beyond the Seas, and on this side the Seas; my Books be abroad, which I cannot unwrite again. I was ever of this opinion, that it might be received in both kinds, and it was a constitution Provincial, scarce two hundred years ago, made by Peckam, then Archbishop of Canterbury, that it should be received in both kinds, or at leastwise in Eccelesius majoribus, that is, in the great Churches, for in the smaller Churches it was not thought to be so expedient. Thus have I ever thought of this matter, I have never been of other mind, nor have I changed my Confession, but I have obeyed and followed the order of the Realm, and I pray you to obey orders as I have obeyed, that we may all be the Children of obedience.

Now I will return to the Text. When Simon had answered, Tu es Christus, filius Dei vivi; Thou art Christ, the Son of the living God: Then Christ said unto him, Blessed art thou Simon Barionah, for Flesh and Blood have not opened unto thee, but my Father which is in Heaven, and I say unto thee, that thou art Peter, and upon this Rock will I build my Church, and the Gates of Hell shall not prevail against it. Blessed art thou (faith he) for Flesh and Blood have not opened unto thee. For otherwise in John, Andrew told of Christ, and said, I have found the Messias, which is Christ. But that is not enough. He that shall confess Christ, must have an inward teaching, and must be spiritually taught by the Father of Heaven, for Andrew's Confession was nothing but a carnal Confession, and such a one as any other might have made by Natural Reason: but the Confession of Peter was above reason of Man: for Christ was there a very Man, and Peter's Eyes told him that he was a Man, and nothing else; but he was inwardly taught by the Father of Heaven, and had a secret knowledge given him from Heaven, not by Flesh and Blood, that is to say, by Mans reason, but inwardly by the Father of Heaven: and seeing this was above reason, it is a marvellous thing that reason should be used to impugn faith, which is not within the precinct of carnal Men, and such as use grois reason.

But Peter had another reason inwardly taught him, and because he could his lesson, Christ gave him a new name: for Petra is a stone, a new name of a Christian Man, for upon this Confession of thy Faith, here I will build my Church, that is, I will stablish all those which I intend to gather unto thee; Et Demones non prevalebunt adversus eam, that is, and the Devils shall not prevail against it: for he that with a good Heart, and pure Faith confesseth this, he is sure from all evil: this World nor Satan can do him no harm.

But now for a farther Declaration, it is a marvellous thing, that upon these words the Bishop of Rome, should found his Supremacy: for whether it be super Petram, or petram, Petrum, all is one matter, it maketh nothing at all for the purpose to make a foundation of any such Supremacy. For otherwise (when Peter spake carnally to Christ as in the same Chapter a little following) Satan was his name, where Christ said, go after me Satan, more than: so that the name of Peter is no Foundation for the Supremacy, but as it is said in Scripture fundatus est super fundamentum Apostolorum & Prophetarum, that is, the Head of things by participation (for Godly participation giveth names as River of things) he might be called the Head of the Church, as the Head of the River is called the Head, because he was the first that made this Confession of Christ, which is not an Argument for dignity, but for the quality that was in the Man. For the first Man is not

Anno evermore the best. The Head-man of a Quest is not always the best Man in the Quest, but is chosen to be the Head-Man for some other quality that is in him. Virtue may allure Men, so that the inferior person in dignity may be the better in place, as the King sometime chooseth a mean Man to be of his Council, of whom he hath a good opinion, yet is the King the King still. And in some case the King of England might send to Rome, and if the Bishop of Rome were a Man of such Wisdom, Vertue and Learning, that he were able in matter of controversie concerning Religion, to set an unity in the Church of England, the King might well enough send to him for his Counsel and help, and yet should not in so doing give the Bishop of Rome any superiority over the King. For if a King be sick, he will have the best Physician; if he have war, he will have the best Captain; and yet are not these the superiors, but the inferiors.

To a Person A Schoolmaster is a Subject, a Physician is a Subject, a Captain is a Subject, Counsellors are Subjects, yet do these order and direct the King. Wherefore leaving the Bishop of Rome, this I say to declare of what opinion I am of. I do not now speak what I could say. I have spoken beyond the Seas, I have written, my Books be broad. But this is not the place here. I say that this place maketh nothing for the Bishop of Rome, but for Christ only, for none can put Aliud fundamentum nisi id quod possumus esse, qui est Christus Jesus.

Winches But now to go forth declaring my mind; in my time had come many alterations. First a great alteration it was to renounce the Bishop of Rome's authority, and I was one that stood in it. A great alteration it was that Abbeyes were dissolved. A great alteration it was that Images were pulled down: and to all these I confounded, and yet have I been counted a maintainer of superstition, and have been called a Master of Ceremonies and of outward things, and I have bin noted to take that Religion which consisteth in outward things, as though he were a right Christian that fulfilled the outward Ceremonies, whereof I promised to declare my Conscience, and so will I, and how I have esteemed Ceremonies, and that I have never been of other opinion than I am concerning Ceremonies, and mine opinion I have gathered of Augustine, and Jerome, ancient fathers and Doctors of the Church.

Ceremonies Ceremonies serve to move Men to serve God, and as long as they be used for that purpose, they may be well used in the Church: but when Man maketh himself servant to them, and not them to serve him, then be our Ceremonies brought to an abuse. If by over much familiarity of them Men abuse them, they do evil. For we must not serve Creatures, but Deo. We had Monks, Nunnery, Friery, of a wondrous number, much variety of garments, variety of devices in dwelling, many sundry orders and fashions in moving of the Body. These things were first ordained to admonish them of their duty to God, to labour for the necessity of the poor, and to spare from their own bellies to the poor; and therefore was their fare ordained and prepared. And because they abused these things, and set them in an higher place than they ought to do, not taking monition thereby the better to serve God, but esteeming perfection to consist in them, they were dissolved, their Houses and Garments were taken away.

Vow of chastity But one thing King Henry would not take away, that was the vow of Chastity. The vow of Obedience he converted to himself, the vow of Chastity he willeth still to remain with them.

W. who We had many Images whereto Pilgrimages were done, and many Tombs that Men used to visit, by reason whereof they fell in a fancy of Idolatry and superstition, above the things that they might have been taken for, because they had not the use that they were ordained for, they were left. When Men put the Images in a higher place than they served for, then were they taken clean away: as give a Child a gay Book to learn upon, and then if he gaze upon the gorgeousness of his Book, and learn not his lesson, according to the intent that that Book was given for, the Book is taken away from him again: So the Images, when Men devised and fell to have them in higher place and estimation than they were first set up in the Church for, then they might be taken away: and I was never of other mind, nor ever had other opinion of them. Divers things that be in the Church which be in the liberty of the Ruler, or as he will, he may cause; and he that is Ruler, may either let them stand, or else may cause them to be taken away.

There be two manner of reformations. We have had two manner of reformations in the Church, the which if they be abused, may not be taken away. As I say, if it be abused, there may not another thing be put in the place of it, but the thing must be reformed, and brought to the right use again. Allso Preaching, if it be abused, may not be taken away, but must be reformed, and brought to the right use: but there be other things used in the Church, in which the Rulers have liberty either to reform them or to take them away. And because it was an easier way to take them away, than to bring them to the right use that they were ordained for, they were all clean taken away, way all and so they might be. Ye say, will ye say, but ye have maintained and defended them, and have Preached against such persons as despised them. It is truth I have Preached against the despisers of them, and have said, that Images might be suffered and used in the Church as Lay-Mens Books, yet I never otherwise defended them, but to be used for such purpose as they were first set up in the Church for; but now that men be waxed wanton, they are clean taken away, wherein our Religion is no more touched, that when Books were taken away for abusing of them.

There was an order taken for Books not to be used, wherein some might have said, the Books are good, and I know how to use them, I may therefore use them well enough. I will therefore use them though they be forbidden: But if thou have any charity, thou oughtest to be contented rather to have them clean taken away, than to declare thy self to have another opinion then thou oughtest to have.

As touching Ceremonies, I esteem them all as Paul esteemeth them, things indifferent, where he saith, Regnum Dei non est esca & potus. So of Ceremonies. Nevertheless we have time, place, and number, as a certain number of Psalms to be said at times, which may be done without superstition; but these things must serve us, and not we serve them. Yet if an order be set in them by such as have power, we must follow it, and we must obey the rulers that appoint such time, place, and number to be kept. Ye may not say, if the time will serve me, then I will come an hour after. No sir, ye must keep this time, and this hour, because it is so appointed by the Rulers, not for the things, but for the order that is set. I have been ever of this opinion.

We had Palms and Candles taken away, which things may indifferently have either of the two Reformations above said. When they were in place, they should have put Men in remembrance of their duty and devotion towards God, but because they were abused, they were and might be taken away. But the Religion of Christ is not in these exercises, and therefore in taking away of them the Religion of Christ is nothing touched nor hindered. But Men must in such things be comfortable, not for the Ceremony, but for obedience sake. Saint Paul saith, that we should rebuke every Brother that walketh inordinately. I have told you mine Opinion, and my Conscience telleth me that I have spoken plainly, that ye may know what I am, and that ye may not be deceived in me, nor be slandered in me, nor make any further search to know my heart.

I like well the Communion, because it provoketh Men more and more to devotion. I like well the Proclamation, because it stoppeth the Mouths of all such as have recently speak or rail against the Sacrament. I like well the rest of the Kings Majesties proceedings concerning the Sacrament. I have now told you what I like. But shall I speak nothing of that I mislike? ye will then say I speak not. I will therefore shew you my Conscience plainly.

I mislike those Preachers which Preach by the Kings Licence, and those Readers which by the Kings Permission and sufferance do read open Lectures, do openly and Blasphemously talk against the Mass, and against the Sacrament. And to whom may I liken such Readers and Preachers? I may liken them unto Poets, for the Prophet saith, that Poets do bear truth in their words.

Letters

Letters, and lies in their mouths : and so do they, and to speak for against the Sacrament, it is the most marvelous matter that ever I saw or heard of. I would wish therefore that there were a lay and an order in this behalf, and that there might be but one order or rule ; for as the Poet saith, (I may use the Verse of a Poet well enough, for so doth Paul of the great Poet)

Οὐκ ἀγαθὸν πολυμεταμενέειν, εἰς καθάρσιν ἔστιν.

And let no man of his own head begin matters, nor go before the King. They call it going before the King, and such make themselves Kings. Well, what misliketh me else ?

Ep. Gardiner misliketh the breaking of a vow of Chastity.

It misliketh me that Priests, and men that vowed chastity, should openly marry, and avow it openly : which is a thing that since the beginning of the Church hath not been seen at any time, that men that have been admitted to any Ecclesiastical Administration should marry. We read of married Priests, that is to say, of married men chosen to be Priests and Ministers in the Church. And in Epiphanius we read, that some such for necessity were winked at. But that men being Priests already should marry, was never yet seen in Christs Church from the beginning of the Apostles time. I have written in it, and flouted for it ; and the very same places that are therein alleged to maintain the marriage of Priests, being diligently read, shall plainly confound them that maintain your Priests to marry, or at the farthest within two lines after.

Ep. Gardiner against marriage of Priests.

Thus have I shewed my opinion in order, proceeding from the Inferiours, and in order proceeding from the higher Powers. And thus I have (as I trust) plainly declared my self, without any covering or counterfeiting. And I beseech your most excellent Majesty to effect and take me as I am, and not to be slandered in me ; for I have told you the plain truth as it is, and I have opened my Conscience unto you. I have not played the Poet with you, to carry truth in my Letters, and lies in my Mouth : for I would not for all the world make a lye in this place ; but I have disclosed the plain truth as it lieth in my mind. And thus I commit your most excellent Majesty, and all your most honourable Counsellors, with the rest of the devout audience here present, unto God. To whom be all honour, laud, and glory, world without end.

Ep. Gardiner agreeing to reformation of Religion, how fast, and whereto.

Thus having comprised the sum and chief purpose of his Sermon, with other such matter above storied, wherein may appear the double-fac'd doings of this Bishop in matters of Religion : now for the more fortification of that which hath been said, if any shall deny this foresaid Sermon, or any part thereof to be true, to confirm therefore the same, we will here adjoyn certain brief notes and specialties in manner of a summary Table, collected as well out of the Testimonies and Depositions of his own Friends and Servants, and other which were sworn truly to declare their knowledge in this behalf, as also out of his own Writings and Works agreeing with the same. In all which foresaid Allegations it may remain notorious and famous to all men, how, in what points, and how far the said Bishop of Winchester agreed with the Reformation of Religion received, not only in King Henries, but also in King Edwards days.

And because it would be long, and a double labour to repeat all the words and testimonial sayings of every witness particularly, the same being expressed sufficiently in our first impression before ; it shall therefore suffice by quotations briefly to assign the place to the Reader, where he may find all those Points of Reformation, whereunto the said Bishop Gardiner fully agreed with the Doctrine now received, and first in withstanding the Popes Supremacy, as is hereunder noted.

Item, How the said Bishop Gardiner would not grant that the said Authority was received generally. ibid. p. 827. col. 2.

Item, That the Church was builded upon Christs Faith, and not upon Peter, read the Depositions of Robert Willenton, p. 836. col. 2.

And though Peter was called Princeps Apostolorum, The Head-man of the Church, that was nothing else, but like as it is in an Enquest, where the Fore-man, or Head-man is not so called, because he is best or chiefest of that Company, but because he speaketh first, read in the Deposition of Mr. Bassett, p. 850. col. 2. p. 836. col. 2.

Item, That when the Keys were given, they were given generally to all the Apostles, read the Depositions of Robert Willenton, p. 836. col. 2.

Item, How the said Bishop taketh away all such Scriptures which are thought to serve for the Popes Supremacy, as Super hanc Petram, Pasce oves meas, Princeps Apostolorum, &c. proving that they serve nothing for his Authority, read likewise in the same Book in the Depositions of Mr. Bassett, his own Servant, p. 850. col. 2.

Item, How the said Bishop in his Book De vera Obedientia, did not only write against the Popes Supremacy, but also did defend the same at Lovane, p. 802. And moreover, in his Sermons did alledge and preach the same, p. 874. col. 2. and that also vehemently, p. 850. col. 2. l. 50. Publicly, p. 846. col. 1. l. 31.

Earnestly, p. 843. col. 1. l. 75.

Very earnestly, p. 843. col. 1. l. 44.

Very forwardly, p. 827. col. 2. l. 82.

And not only did so vehemently, pithily, earnestly and forwardly preach himself against the Popes Supremacy, but also did cause Mr. White, then Schoolmaster, after Bishop of Winchester, to make certain Verses extolling the Kings Supremacy against the usurped Power of the Pope, encouraging also his Scholars to do the like, read the Depositions of John White, Schoolmaster of Winchester, p. 845. col. 2.

Item, How he for the space of fourteen years together preached against the Popes Supremacy in divers Sermons, and especially in one Sermon before King Henry, read the Depositions of John Poringe, p. 844. col. 1. l. 1.

Places noted wherein Bishop Gardiner impugned Ceremonies, Monks, Images, Chauntries, &c.

Item, For Ceremonies and Images which were abused, to be taken away by Publick Authority, he did well allow it, as a Child to have his Book taken from him, when he abuseth it, or delighteth only in the golden Cover. Read in the foresaid old Book the Depositions of Christopher Malton, p. 846. col. 2. p. 849. col. 2. p. 841. col. 1.

Item, The Dissolving of Monasteries and Religious Houses, he alloweth and granteth that they were justly suppressed. Read the Depositions of Dr. Wilson, p. 845. col. 1. p. 837. col. 1. p. 851. col. 1.

To these notes and places of Dr. Ridley, let us also adjoin other twelve places or Articles of the like affinity, taken out of this Book called the examination of the proud Hunter, noted in the latter end of Dr. Turners second counseil. By these Articles it may appear how the Bishop sweareth no less from the found Truth of Christs Gospel than he did in the other, both from himself and also from other his fellow Brethren of his own Catholick Mother Church of Rome. The Articles in sum are these:

Twelve new found Articles of Stephen Gardiners Creed, taught in his Book called the Examination of the Hunter.

1. The Ceremonies and Traditions which the Bishop of Rome hath ordained, and are now allowed in England, are the Pale of the Church of England, fol. 7.

2. The Popes Ceremonies and Traditions are good and politick Laws, whereby God hath enclosed the Kings Subjects under his Majesty alone, ibid.

3. As King Richard, an evil man, made a good politick Law for the Body and Commonwealth of England, so can the Pope, an evil man, make good Laws and wholsom Doctrine for mans Soul, and Christs Church, fol. 23.

4. Whatsoever is good, spoken and used by man, is much more of God, than Christs Doctrine is his Fathers Doctrine, fol. 33.

5. He that saith, that the Law of the Gospel ought only to be holden in Christs Church, and is sufficient alone for it, speaketh so far out of reason, that he is not worthy to be reasoned withal, fol. 37.

6. They that hold, that the Cross of silver or gold ought not to be worshipped with kissing of it, and bowing and kneeling to it, are Enemies to Christs true Cross, and take away the means that might set out the glory of Christs Cross, fol. 49.

7. Neither Paul nor the Cross can be worshipped with goodly honour, fol. 61.

8. As Christ used Clay for an instrument to heal the blind mans eyes withal, and hath saved divers by Faith, and made it an instrument of salvation; and as God hath ordained Timothy to be an instrument of salvation both to himself, and for others; so may the Pope ordain holy Water to be an instrument of salvation, both of Body and Soul, to all them that are sprinkled with it, fol. 64.

9. No man can commit Idolatry with his Body alone; and in only kissing of an Image or Idol; and in only kneeling to it can no Idolatry be committed; fol. 52.

10. Forasmuch as God understandeth them that sing in Latin, though they understand not themselves, their Prayer is acceptable before God, fol. 76.

11. As a Father may forbid certain of his Children to marry; so may a King in his Kingdom forbid certain of his Subjects to marry; that is to say, all the Priests of this Realm, fol. 83.

12. He that would take away the Popes Ceremonies out of the Church, should drive away all godliness and seemliness, all religious and devout behaviour out of the Church, fol. 94.

Here hast thou (good Reader) this stout Prelate of Winchester, with all his prosperities, doings, and qualities, as in a certain Anatomy proportioned out unto thee, whereby thou maist boldly judge (and nothing err in thy Judgment) what is to be esteemed of him by his fruits, as who neither was true Protestant; nor right Papist; neither constant in his Error, nor yet steadfast in the Truth; neither friend to the Pope, and yet a perfect enemy to Christ: false in King Henries time, a dissembler in King Edwards time, double perjured, and a murderer, in Queen Marias time, mutable and inconsistent in all times. And finally, where in his Letter to the Lord Protector and others, usually he vaunteth so much of his late Sovereign Lord King Henry the Eighth; and of the great reputation that he was in with him, read, I beseech thee, and behold in the depositions of the Lord Payer, in the old Book, pag. 806. fol. 1. and also in the depositions of the Earl of Bedford, pag. 824. and there you shall see the King before his death, both excepting him out of his Pardons, and quite striking him out of his last Will and Testament, so detested and abhorred him as he did no English man more. And whereas the L. Payer being sent in message from the King to the Bishop, by other words than the Kings mind and will was, of his own dexterity gave to him good and gracious words, which indeed the King neither knew; nor yet were sent by him: the Bishop perfwading himself otherwise of

To describe and paint out the unstable mutability of this Bishop aforesaid, albeit here need no more to be added besides that which is already declared: yet notwithstanding, seeing the matter is not long, it shall not be out of the way to annex with unto the premises, a piece of Drianders Letter written to one Crispine Phyitian in Oxford, sent from Antwerp, concerning the doings and behaviour of this Bishop of Winchester, whose story we have now in hand. The Copy of which Drianders Letter, written to the said Crispine his Friend, beginneth thus.

BEfore my departure from the City of Paris, I wrote unto you by our Friend the English-man, &c.

Now you shall be contented onely with the narration of your Bishop of Winchester, who (as appertained to the Ambassadour of so noble a Prince) came to Louvaine with a great bravery, and was there received at one Jeremies house, and most honourably entertained, where the Faculty of Divines, for honours sake, presented him Wine in the name of the whole Univerfity. But our famous Doctors, and learned Masters, for that they would more deeply search and understand the learning and excellency of the Prelate, perused and scanned a certain Oration made by him, and now extant, intituled de vera Obedientia, in the which his Oration he did impugn the Supremacy of the Bishop of Rome, and preferred his Lords and Kings Authority before the Holy Apostolick See (as they term it) which being read and considered by them, they did not onely repent them for giving him such honour, but also recanted that which they had done: and did not so much honour him aforesaid, but now they were as earnest and as spiteful against him. Richard Lathomas, Interpreter of terms, with the favourers of that fraternity, and other Champions of the falling Church, disputed with him concerning the Popes Supremacy. This Bishop stoutly defended his said Oration. The Divines contrary stiffly maintained their opinion, and divers times openly with exclamations, called the said Bishop an excommunicate person, and a Schismatick, to no little reproach and infamy of the English Nation. The Bishop not long after minding to say Mass in Saint Peters Church, they did deny unto him, as to an Excommunicate Person, the Ornaments and Vestments meet for the same; wherewith he being highly offended, suddenly halted his Journey from thence. The Dean the next day after made an eloquent Oration, wherein he openly disgraced and defamed him. You have heard now a true story, for our Doctor was a beholder of the whole Tragedy, &c.

And this now being sufficient for Gardiners story, to leave him to his Judges, and to let him go, we shall return and proceed (by the grace and leave of the Lord) as the course of these doleful days shall lead us, to prosecute the residue of Christs Martyrs, as now in order followeth.

The burning of John Webbe Gentleman, George Roper and Gregory Parke at Canterbury, as followeth.

NExt after the Death and constant Martyrdom of the two most worthy Champions and standard-bearers of Christs Army, Doctor Nicholas Ridley, and Master Hugh Latimer, (of whom ye have heard at large) followed three other stout and bold Souldiers, that is to say, John Webbe Gentleman, George Roper, and Gregory Parke.

November 30.
Mr. Webbe,
G. Roper,
G. Parke,
Martyrs.

This John Webbe was brought before the Bishop of Dover, and Nicholas Harpsfield, or some other deputed in their room, long before the other two, Webbes the 16 day of September, and there had propounded unto him such Ordinary Articles as (it kenecl) were commonly ministred by Boner to those of his Jurisdiction, and being willed for that present to depart, and to deliberate with himself upon the matter, against the next time of his appearance, he made answer that he would no otherwise say (by Gods grace) than he had already said, which was this: As touching the Sacrament of Christs Body, I do believe (quoth he) it to be left unto his Church (with thanksgiving in commemoration of his death and passion, until his coming again. So that it is left in remembrance of his Body, and not by the words of Consecration to be made his body, really, substantially, and the same body that was born of the Virgin Mary: I utterly deny that.

Answer of Mr. Webbe to the Bishops Articles.

After this (besides sundry other times) the third day of October, the said John Webbe, and George Roper, and Gregory Parke, were brought all three together before the said Judges: who there and then agreeing, and steadfastly allowing the former answer made before by Master Webbe, were by the Bloody Prelates adjudged Hereticks, and therefore about the end of the same month of October, or else as I otherwise find, in the latter end of November, they together were taken and brought out of prison to the place of Martyrdom. Who by the way going towards the stake, said certain Psalms mournfully.

Roper was a younger man of a fresh colour, courage, and complexion, the other two were somewhat more elderly, all going in white linen, with their gowns upon Roper, at his coming to the stake putting off his gown, set a great leap. So soon as the flame was about him, the said Roper put out both his arms from his body like a Rood, and so stood steadfast, continuing in that manner, not plucking his arms in, till the fire had consumed them, and burnt them off.

George Roper

And thus these aforesaid Martyrs of Christs being brought (as I said) to the stake, and there compassed about with a chain, were burnt and consumed all three together in one fire at Canterbury, abiding most patiently their torments, and counting themselves happy and blessed of the Lord, that they were made worthy to suffer for Christs Gospel sake.

William Wiseman.

THe 13. of December in the Lollards Tower died William Wiseman, a Clothworker of London, where he was in prison and bonds for the Gospel and Word of God: How, and whereupon he deceased, it is not fully certain. Some thought that either through famine, or ill handling of some murdering Papists, he was made away. By reason whereof the Crowner, named John Gibbs, Gentleman, with an Inquest of twelve men, were fain to fit upon him, who although to the outward appearance were fain to find nothing in him else but onely Gods visitation, yet what other privie causes there might be of his death, the Lord knoweth, I have not to say.

W. Wiseman
died in Loll.
Tower, and cast into the fields.

After the said William was departed (as is said) in the Tower, the Holy Catholick Church men cast him out into the fields, commanding that no man should bury him, according as their devout manner is to do with all such as die in like sort, whom they account as prophane, and worthy of no burial, but to be cast to Dogges and Birds, indeus vulgum, as the Pope saith. And yet all this their merciles commandment notwithstanding, some good Tobies there were, which buried him in the evening as commonly they did all the rest, thrown out in like sort, whom they were wont privily by night to cover, and many times the Archers in the Fields standing by, and singing together Psalms at their burial.

The Process and History of Master John Philpot, examined, condemned, and martyred for the maintenance and defence of the Gospel Cause, against the Antichristian See of Rome.

NExt followeth the constant Martyrdom of Master John Philpot, of whom partly ye heard before in the beginning of Queen Mary's time, in prosecuting the disputation of the convocation-house. He was of a worshipful house, a Knights Son, born in Hampshire, brought up in the New Colledge in Oxford, where he studied the Civil Law the space of 6. or 7. years, besides the study of other liberal Arts, especially of the Tongues, wherein very forwardly he profited, namely, in the knowledge of the Hebrew Tongue, &c. In wit he was pregnant and happy, of a singular courage, in spirit fervent, in Religion zealous, and also well practised and exercised in the same (which is no small matter in a true Divine) of nature and condition plain and apt, far from all flattery, farther from all hypocrisy and deceitful dissimulation. What his learning was, his own examinations penned of his own hand can declare.

From Oxford, desirous to see other Countries as occasion served thereunto, he went over into Italy, and places thereabouts, where he coming upon a time from Venice to Padua, was in danger through a certain Franciscan Friar, accompanying him in his journey, who coming to Padua, sought to accuse him of Heresie. At length returning into England his Country again, as the time mislived more boldness to him in the days of King Edward, he had divers conflicts with Gardiner the Bishop in the City of Winchester, as appeareth by divers of Winchester Letters, and his Examinations. Whereof read before.

After that, having an advowson by the said Bishop, he was made there Archdeacon of Winchester, under Dr. Poinet, who then succeeded Gardiner in that Bishoprick. Thus during the time of King Edward, he continued to no small profit of those parts thereabout. When that blessed King was taken away and Mary his Sister came in place, whose study was wholly bent to alter the state of Religion in the world Realm of England, first she caused a Convocation of the Prelats and learned men to be congregated to the accomplishment of her desire.

In the which Convocation, Mr. Philpot being present according to his room an l degree, with a few other suftained the cause of the Gospel manfully against the adversary part (as is above recited) for the which cause notwithstanding the liberty of the house promised before, he was called to account before Bishop Gardiner the Chancellor, then being his Ordinary, by whom he was first examined, although that Examination came not yet to our hands. From thence again he was removed to Boker and other Commissioners, with whom he had divers and sundry conflicts, as in his Examinations here following may appear.

The first Examination of Master John Philpot before the Queens Commissioners, Master Cholmley, Mr. Roper and Dr. Story, and one of the Scribes of the Arch-bishop, at Newgate Sessions-Hall, Octob. 2. 1555.

DOCTOR Story, before I was called into an inner Parlour where they fate, came out into the Hall where I was, to view me among other that there were, and passing by me said: Ha, Mr. Philpot, and in returning immediately again, staid against me, beholding me, and saying that I was well fed indeed.

Phil. If I be fat, and in good liking (Mr. Doctor) it is no marvel, since I have been stalled up in Prison this twelve months and a half, in a close corner. I am come to know your pleasure wherefore you have sent for me.

Story. We hear that thou art a suspect person, and of heretical Opinions, and therefore we have sent for thee.

Phil. I have been in Prison thus long, only upon the occasion of disputation made in the Convocation-house, and upon suspicion of setting forth the report thereof.

Story. If thou wilt revoke the same, and become an honest man, thou shalt be set at liberty, and do right well; or else thou shalt be committed to the Bishop of London. How saist thou, wilt thou revoke it or no?

Phil. I have already answered in this behalf to mine Ordinary.

Story. If thou answerest thus when thou comest before us anon, thou shalt hear more of our minds, and with that he went into the Parlour, and I within a little while after was called in.

The Scribe. Sir, what is your name?

Phil. My name is John Philpot. And so he intitled my name.

Archdeacon of Winchester.

fore deceased.
In 1557.

Story. This Man was Archdeacon of Winchester, of D. Poinets presentment.

Philpot. I was Archdeacon indeed, but none of his presentment, but by vertue of a former Advowson, given by my Lord Chancellor that now is.

Story. Ye may be sure that my Lord Chancellor would not make any such as he is Archdeacon.

Roper. Come hither to me Mr. Philpot. We hear say that you are out of the Catholick Church, and have been a disturber of the same; out of the which whofo is, he cannot be the Child of salivation. Wherefore, if you will come into the same, you shall be received, and find favour.

Phil. I am come before your worshipful Masterships at your appointment, understanding that you are Magistrates authorized by the Queens Majesty, whom I own and will do my due obedience to the uttermost. Wherefore I desire to know what cause I have offended in, wherefore I am now called before you. And if I cannot be charged with any particular matter done contrary to the Laws of this Realm, I desire your Masterships that I may have the benefit of a subject, and be delivered out of my long wrongful imprisonment, where I have lien this Twelve month and this half, without any calling to answer before now, and my living taken from me without all Law.

Roper. Though we have no particular matter to charge you withal, yet we may by our Commission and by the Law drive you to answer to the suspicion of a slander going on you: and besides this, we have Statutes to charge you herein withal.

Phil. If I have offended any Statute, charge me therewithal, and if I have incurred the penalty thereof punish me accordingly. And because you are Magistrates and Executors of the Queens Majesties Laws, by force whereof you do now sit, I desire that if I be found no notorious Transgressor of any of them, I may not be burdened with more than I have done.

Cholmley. If the Justice do suspect a Felon, he may examine him upon suspicion thereof, and commit him to prison though there be no fault done.

Story. I perceive whereabouts this man goeth. He is plain in Cardmakers case, for he made the selfe same allegations. But they will not serve thee; for thou art an Heretick, and holdest against the blessed Maf: how faiest thou to that?

Phil. I am no Heretick.

Story. I will prove thee an Heretick. Whofoever hath holden against the blessed Maf: is an Heretick: but thou hast holden against the same, therefore thou art an Heretick.

Phil. That which I spake, and which you are able to charge me withal, was in the Convocation, where by the Queens Majesties will and her whole Council, liberty was given to every man of the house to utter his Confidence, and to say his mind freely of such questions in Religion, as there were propounded by the Prolocutor, for the which now I thought not to be molested and imprisoned as I have been, neither now be compelled of you to answer to the same.

Story. Thou shalt go to the Lollards Tower, and be handled there like an Heretick as thou art, and answer to the same that thou there didst speak, and be judged by the Bishop of London.

Phil. I have already been convented of this matter before my Lord Chancellour mine Ordinary, who this long time hath kept me in Prison: therefore if his Lordship will take my life away, as he hath done my liberty and living, he may; the which I think he cannot do of his Confidence, and therefore hath let me lie thus long in Prison: wherefore I am content to abide the end of him herein that is mine Ordinary, and do refuse the authority of the Bishop of London, because he is an incompetent Judge for me, and not mine Ordinary.

Story. But Sir, thou spakest words in the Convocation-house, which is of the Bishop of London Diocess, and therefore thou shalt be carried to the Lollards Tower, to be judged by him for the words thou spakest in his Diocess against the blessed Maf:.

Phil. Sir, you know by the Law, that I may have Exceptionem fori: and it is against all equity, that I should be twice vexed for one cause, and that by such as by Anno the Law have nothing to do with me.

Roper. You cannot deny, but that you spake against the Maf: in the Convocation-house.

Story. Dost thou deny that which thou spakest there, or no?

Phil. I cannot deny that I have spoken there, and if by the Law you may put me to death therefore, I am here ready to suffer whatsoever I shall be judged unto.

The Scribe. This man is fed of vain glory.

Cholm. Play the wife Gentleman and be conformable, and be not stubborn in your Opinions, neither cast your self away. I would be glad to do you good.

Philpot. I desire you, Sir, with the rest here that I be not charged further at your hands, than the Law chargeth me, for that I have done, since there was no Law directly against that wherewith I am now charged. And your Master Doctor (of old acquaintance in Oxford) I trust will shew me some friendship, and not extreme animity.

Story. I tell thee, if thou wouldst be a good Catholick man, I would be thy Friend, and spend my Gown to do thee good; but I will be no friend to an Heretick, as thou art, but will spend both my Gown and my Coats: but I will burn thee. How sayst thou to the Sacrament of the Altar?

Phil. Sir, I am not come now to dispute with your Masterhip, and the time now serveth not thereto, but to answer to that I may be lawfully charged withal.

Story. Well, since thou wilt not revoke that thou hast done, thou shalt be had into the Lollards Tower.

Phil. Sir, since you will needs shew me this extremity, and charge me with my Confidence, I do desire to see your Commission, whether you have this authority to do, and after the view thereof I shall (according to my duty) make you further answer, if you may by the vertue thereof burthen me with my Confidence.

Roper. Let him see the Commission: is it here?

Story. Shall we let every vile person see our Commission?

Cholm. Let him go from whence he came, and on Thursday he shall see our Commission.

Story. No, let him lie in the mean while in the Lollards Tower; for I will sweep the Kings Bench and all other Prisons also of these Hereticks, they shall not have that resort as they have had, to scatter their Heretics.

Philpot. You have Power to transfer my Body from place to place at your pleasure; but you have no Power over my Soul. And I pass not whether you commit me, for I cannot be worse intreated than I am, kept all day in a close Chamber: wherefore it is no marvel that my flesh is put up, wherewithal Master Doctor is offended.

Story. Marshal, take him home with you again, and see that you bring him again on Thursday, and then we shall rid your fingers of him and afterward of your other Hereticks.

Phil. God hath appointed a day shortly to come, in the which he will judge us with righteousness, howsoever you judge of us now.

Roper. Be content to be ruled by M. Doctor, and shew your self a Catholick man.

Phil. Sir, if I should speak otherwise than my Confidence is, I should but dissemble with you: and why be you so earnest to have me shew my self a dissembler both to God and you, which I cannot do?

Roper. We do not require you to dissemble with us to be a Catholick man.

Phil. If I do stand in any thing against that, wherein any man is able to burthen me with one jot of the Scripture, I shall be content to be counted no Catholick man, or an Heretick, as you please.

Story. Have we Scripture, Scripture? and which that he rose up, saying: Who shall be judge, I pray you? This man is like his fellow Woodman, which the other day would have nothing else but Scripture. And this is the beginning of this Tragedy.

John Philpot lying in Prison a year and a half before he was called to his answer.

No particular matter against M. Philpot, but only suspicion.

The Major is not universally true, for in the time of K. Edm. he thus spake against the Maf: as M. Thomas did, by whose Laws, was no Heretick, but a perfect Christian.

I. Philpot appointed to his Ordinary by M. Philpot having published leave, spake in the Convocation. M. Roper, he must be committed to Lollards Tower by D. St. in Legalle.

Now consisteth in the Butchers Ass.

M. Philpot requests to see their Commission.

Bishop will not dissemble against his Confidence.

Anno
1555.

The second Examination of Mr. Philpot before the Queens Commissioners, Mr. Cholmley, Roper, D. Story, Dr. Cooke, and the Scribe, the 24. of October, 1555. at Newgate Sessions-Hall.

The second Examination of Mr. Philpot before the Commissioners.

AT my coming, a Man of Aldgate of mine acquaintance said unto me, God have mercy on you, for you are already condemned in this world; for D. Story said, that my Lord Chancellor had commanded to do you away. After a little consultation had between them, M. Cholmley called me unto him, saying:

Cholm. Mr. Philpot shew your self a wife man, and be not stubborn in your own opinion, but be conformable to the Queens proceedings, and live, and you shall be well assured of great favour and reputation.

Phil. I shall do as it becometh a Christian man to do.

Story. This man is the rankest Heretick that hath been in all my Lord Chancellors Diocess, and hath done more hurt than any man else there: and therefore his pleasures, that he should have the Law to proceed against him, and I have spoken with my Lord herein, and he willeth him to be committed to the Bishop of London, and there to recant or else burn. He howled and wept in the Convocation-house, and made such ado as never man did, as all the Hereticks do when they lack Learning to answer. He shall go after his fellows. How fallest thou, wilt thou recant?

Phil. I know nothing I have done that I ought to recant.

Story. Well; then I pray you let us commit him to the Lollards-Tower, there to remain until he be further examined before the Bishop of London; for he is too fine fed in the Kings-Bench, and he hath too much favour there: For his Keeper said at the door yesterday, that he was the finest Fellow, and one of the best Learned in England; and with this he rose up and went his way.

Cook. This man hath most stoutly maintained Heresies since the Queens coming in, above any that I have heard of; therefore it is most meet he should be adjudged by the Bishop of London, for the Heresies he hath maintained.

Phil. I have maintained no Heresies.

Cook. No, have you not? Did you not openly speak against the Sacrament of the Altar in the Convocation-house? Call you that no Heresie? wilt thou recant that, or not?

Phil. It was the Queens Majesties pleasure that we should reason thereof, not by my seeking, but by other mens procuring, in the hearing of the Council.

Cook. Did the Queen give you leave to be an Heretick? you may be sure her Grace will not so do. Well, we will not dispute the matter with you; my Lord of London shall proceed by inquisition upon thee, and if thou wilt not recant, thou shalt be burned.

Phil. My Lord of London is not mine Ordinary in this behalf, and I have already answered unto mine Ordinary in this matter: and therefore (as I have said before) you shall do me great wrong, to vex me twice for one matter, since I have sustained this long Imprisonment, besides the loss of my living.

Roper. You were a very unmeet man to be an Archdeacon.

Phil. I know I was as meet a man as he that hath it now.

Cook. A meet man, quoth he? He troubled Mr. Roper and the whole Country.

Phil. There was never poor Archdeacon so handled at your hands as I am, and that without any just cause ye be able to lay unto me.

Cook. Thou art no Archdeacon.

Phil. I am Archdeacon still, although another be in possession of my Living; for I was never deprived by any Law.

Cook. No Sir, that needeth not: for a notorious Heretick should have no ordinary proceeding about his deprivation; but the Bishop may upon knowledge thereof proceed to deprivation.

Phil. Master Doctor, you know that the Common Law is otherwise; and besides this, the Statutes of this Realm be otherwise, which give this benefit to every person, though he be an Heretick, to enjoy his Living until he be put to death for the same.

Cholm. No, there thou art deceived.

Philpot. Upon the living I pass not. But the unjust dealing grieveth me, that I should be thus troubled for my Conscience, contrary to all Law.

Cholmley. Why, will not you agree that the Queens Majesty may cause you to be examined of your Faith?

Phil. Ask you Master D. Cook, and he will tell you that the temporal Magistrates have nothing to do with matters of Faith, for determination thereof. And S. Ambrose saith Divina Imperatoria Majestas non sunt subiecta; That the things of God are not subject to the Power and Authority of Princes.

Cook. No? may not the temporal Power commit you to be examined of your Faith to the Bishop?

Phil. Yea Sir. I deny not that; but you will not grant that the same may examine any of their own Authority.

Cook. Let him be had away.

Phil. Your Mastership promised me the last time I was before you, I should see your Commission by what Authority you do call me, and whether I by the same be bound to answer to so much as you demand.

Roper. Let him see the Commission.

The Scribe. Then he exhibited it to Mr. Roper, and was about to open the same.

Cook. No, what will ye do? he shall not see it.

Phil. Then do you me wrong, to call me and vex me, not shewing your Authority in this behalf.

Cook. If we do you wrong, complain on us; and in the mean while thou shalt lie in the Lollards Tower.

Phil. Sir, I am a poor Gentleman; therefore I trust of your gentleness you will not commit me to so vile and straight a place, being found no haynous Trespasser.

Cook. Thou art no Gentleman.

Phil. Yes, that I am.

Cook. An Heretick is no Gentleman: for he is a Gentleman that hath gentle conditions.

Phil. The offence cannot take away the state of a Gentleman as long as he liveth, although he were a Traytor: but I mean not to boast of my Gentlemanship, but will put it under my foot, since you do no more esteem it.

Story. What, will you suffer this Heretick to prate with you all this day?

Cook. He saith he is a Gentleman.

Story. A Gentleman, quoth he? he is a vile Heretick knave: for an Heretick is no Gentleman. Let the keeper of the Lollards Tower come in, and have him away.

The keeper. Here Sir.

Story. Take this man with you to the Lollards Tower, or else to the Bishops Cole-house.

Phil. Sir, if I were a Dog you could not appoint me a worse and more vile place: but I must be content with whatsoever injury you do offer me. God give you a more merciful heart; you are very cruel upon one that hath never offended you. I pray you Master Cholmley, shew me some friendship, that I be not carried to so vile a place. And he called me aside, and said:

Cholm. I am not skilful of their doings, neither of their Laws; I cannot tell what they mean. I would I could do you good.

Phil. I am content to go whither you will have me. There was never man more cruelly handled than I am at your hands, that without just cause known should thus be entreated.

Story. Shall we suffer this Heretick thus to reprove us? have him hence.

Phil. God forgive you, and give you more merciful hearts, and shew you more mercy in the time of need; Et quod facis, fac citius, Do quickly that you have in hand.

Story. Do you not hear how he maketh us Judases?

Phil. That is after your own understanding.

After this, I with four other more were brought to the Keepers House in Paternoster-Row, where we supped, and after supper I was called up to a Chamber by the Archdeacon of London's Servant, and that in his Masters name,

Whether an Heretick suspected may without order by process be deprived of his Living by his Ordinary before his death, and by what Law.

John Philpot signs requirith to see their Commission, and yet it could not be seen, and that also against the Law.

John Philpot commanded to Lollards Tower by D. Story.

Cholmley talketh with Mr. Philpot apart.

who offered me a Bed for that night. To whom I gave thanks, saying, That it should be a grief to me to lye well one night, and the next worse: wherefore I will begin (said I) as I am like to continue, to take such part as my fellows do. And with that we were brought through Paternoster-Row to my Lord of London's Cole-houfe;

unto the which is joynd a little blind Houfe, with a Anno great pair of Stocks, appointed both for hand and foot: but thanks be to God we have not played of those Organs yet, although some before us have tried them, and there we found a Minister of Essex, a married Priest, a man of godly zeal, with one other poor Man. And this Minister (at my coming) desired to speak with me, and did greatly lament his own infirmity, for that through extremity of Imprisonment he was constrained by writing to yield to the Bishop of London: whereupon he was once set at liberty, and afterward felt such a Hell in his Conscience, that he could scarce refrain from destroying himself, and never could be at quiet until he had gone unto the Bishops Register, desiring to see his Bill again, the which as soon as he had received, he tore it in pieces; and after he was as joyful as any man might be. Of the which when my Lord of London had understanding, he sent for him, and fell upon him like a Lion, and like a manly Bishop buffeted him well, so that he made his Face black and blew, and plucked away a great piece of his Beard: but now, thanks be to God, he is as joyful under the Cross as any of us, and very sorry of his former infirmity. I write this, because I would all men to take heed how they do contrary to their Conscience; which is, to fall into the pains of Hell. And here an end.

The Bishop sent unto me Mr. Johnson his Register, with a mess of Meat, and a good Pot of Drink, and Bread, saying, That my Lord had no knowledge before of my being here, for which he was sorry: therefore he had sent me and my Fellows that Meat, knowing whether I would receive the same.

I thanked God for my Lords Charity, that it pleased him to remember poor Prisoners, desiring Almighty God to increase the same in him and in all others; and therefore I would not refuse his Beneficence, and therewith took the same unto my Brethren, praising God for his Providence towards his afflicted Flock, that he stirred our Adversaries up to help the same in their necessity.

Johnson, My Lord would know the cause of your sending hither (for he knoweth nothing thereof) and wondered that he should be troubled with Prisoners of other Diocets, than his own.

Philpot. I declared unto him the whole cause. After the which he said, My Lords will was, that I should have any friendship I would desire, and so departed.

Within a while after, one of my Lords Gentlemen cometh for me. And I was brought into his presence, where he sat at a Table alone, with three or four of his Chaplains waiting upon him, and his Register.

Bener. Mr. Philpots, you are welcome; give me your hand.

Phil. With that, because he so gently put forth his hand, I to render courtesie for courtesie, kissed my hand and gave him the same.

Bener. I am right sorry for your trouble, and I promise you before it was within these two hours, I knew not of your being here. I pray you tell me what was the cause of your sending hither; for I promise you I know nothing thereof as yet, neither would I you should think, that I was the cause thereof: and I marvel that other men will trouble me with their matters; but I must be obedient to my Betters, and I fear men speak otherwise of me than I deserve.

Phil. I shewed him the sum of the matter; that it was for the disputation in the Convocation-houfe, for the which I was against all right molested.

Bener. I marvel that you should be troubled therefore, if there was none other cause but this. But peradventure you have maintained the same since, and some of your Friends of late have asked whether you do stand to the same, and you have said, Yea; and for this you might be committed to Prison.

Phil. If it shall please your Lordship, I am burthened none otherwise than I have told you, by the Commissioners, who sent me hither, because I would not recant the same.

Bener. A man may speak in the Parliament-houfe, though it be a place of free speech, so as he may be imprisoned for it, as in case he speak words of High-Treason against the King or Queen; and so it might be that you spake otherwise than it became you of the Church of Christ.

Anno 1555. Phil. I spake nothing which was out of the Articles which were called in question, and agreed upon to be disputed by the whole House, and by the Queens permission and the Council.

Or else why were the Questions there propounded?

1 Pet. 5.

No man is bound to render account of his Faith privately, unless it be to edification.

Ambrosius ad Valentianum.

Our Ch. wrs.

The Faith promised by his God father was the Faith of Christ, after his Creed only.

And why then began you to baptize with him in the Sacrament of your Altars. Bishop Baser offended with John Philpot, singing in Prison.

Boner. Why, may we dispute of our Faith?

Phil. Yea that we may.

Boner. Nay, I trow not, by the Law.

Phil. Indeed by the Civil Law I know it is not lawful, but by Gods Law we may reason thereof. For St. Peter saith, Be ye ready to render account unto all men of that hope which is in you, that demand you of the same.

Bon. Indeed St. Peter saith so. Why, then I ask of you what your judgement is of the Sacrament of the Altar.

Phil. My Lord, S. Ambrose saith, that the disputation of Faith ought to be in the Congregation; in the hearing of the People, and that I am not bound to render account thereof to every man privately, unless it be to edification. But now I cannot shew you my mind, but I must run upon the pikes in danger of my life therefore. Wherefore as the said Doctor said unto Valentianum the Emperor, to say I to your Lordship; tolle legem & fiet certamen; Take away the Law, and I shall reason with you. And yet if I come in open judgment, where I am bound by the Law to answer, I trust I shall utter my Confidence as freely as any that hath come before you.

Bon. I perceive you are learned, I would have such as you be about me. But you must come and be of the Church; for there is but one Church.

Phil. God forbid I should be out of the Church, I am sure I am within the same: for I know as I am taught by the Scripture, that there is but one Catholic Church, una Columba, una Sponsa, una Dilecta; one Dove, one Spouse, one beloved Congregation, out of the which there is no salvation.

Bon. How chanceth it then, that you go out of the same, and walk not with us?

Phil. My Lord, I am sure I am within the bounds of the Church whereupon she is builded, which is the Word of God.

Bon. What age are ye of?

Phil. I am four and forty.

Bon. You are not now of the same Faith your God-fathers and God-mothers promised for you, in the which you were baptized.

Phil. Yes, I thank God I am: for I was baptized into the Faith of Christ which I now hold.

Bon. How can that be? there is but one Faith.

Phil. I am assured of that by S. Paul, saying; That there is but one God, one Faith, and one Baptism, of the which I am.

Bon. You were twenty years ago of another Faith than you be now.

Phil. Indeed my Lord, to tell you plain I was then nullius fidei, of no Faith, a neuter, a wicked liver, neither hot nor cold.

Bon. Why, do you not think that we have now the true Faith?

Phil. I desire your Lordship to hold me excused for answering at this time. I am sure that Gods Word thoroughly with the Primitive Church, and all the ancient Writers do agree with this Faith I am of.

Boner. Well, I promise you I mean you no more hurt, than to mine own person: I will not therefore burthen you with your Confidence as now; I marvel that you are so merry in Prison as you be, singing and rejoicing, as the Prophet saith, Exultantes in robis pessimis, Rejoicing in your naughtiness. Me thinketh you do not well herein; you should rather lament and be sorry.

Phil. my Lord, the mirth that we make is but in singing certain Psalms, according as we are commanded by S. Paul, willing us to be merry in the Lord, singing together, in Hymns and psalms: And I trust your Lordship cannot be displeased with that.

Boner. We may say unto you as Christ said in the Gospel, Tibi cecimus vobis, & non placestis.

Phil. Here my Lord stumbled, and could not bring forth the Text, and required his Chaplains to help, and to put him in remembrance of the Text better; but they were dumb: and I recited out the Text unto him, which made him wailing to his piteous, unless he would have unto mourn, because they, if they laugh, sing still sorrowful things unto us, threatening fagots and fire.

We are my Lord, in a dark comfortless place, and therefore it behoveth us to be merry, left, as Solomon saith, sorrowfulness eat up our heart. Therefore I trust your Lordship will not be angry for our singing of Psalms, since St. Paul saith; If any man be of an upright mind, let him sing. And we therefore, to testify that we are of, an upright mind to God, (though we be in misery) do sing.

Bon. I will trouble you no further as now. If I can do you any good, I will be glad to do it for you. God be with you, good Mr. Philpot, and give you good night. Have him to the Cellar and let him drink a Cup of Wine.

Thus I departed, and by my Lords Register I was brought to his Cellar door, where I drank a good Cup of Wine. and my Lords Chaplain M. Cousins followed me, taking acquaintance, saying, that I was welcome, and wished that I would not be singular.

Phil. I am well taught the contrary by Solomon, saying, Vae soli, Wo be to him that is alone. After that I was carried to my Lords Cole-house again, where I with my six fellows do rout together in draw as cheerfully (we thank God) as others do in their beds of Down.

Thus for the third Fit.

The fourth Examination of Mr. Philpot in the Archdeacons House of London, the said month of October, before the Bishops of London, Bath, Worcester, and Gloucester.

Boner. Mr. Philpot, it hath pleased my Lords to take pains here to days, to dine with my poor Archdeacons, and in the dinner time it chanced us to have communication of you, and you were pitied here of many that knew you in the New Colledge in Oxford: and I also do pity your case, because you seem unto me by the talk I had with you the other night, to be learned: and therefore now I have sent for you to come before them, that it might not be said hereafter, that I had to many learned Bishops at my house, and yet would not vouchsafe them to talk with you, and at my request (I thank them) they are content so to do. Now therefore utter your mind freely, and you shall with all favour be satisfied. I am sorry to see you lie in so evil a case as you do, and would fain you should do better, as you may if you list.

Bathe. My Lords here have not sent for you to fawn upon you, but for Charities sake to exhort you to come into the right Catholick way of the Church.

Worce. Before he beginneth to speak, it is best that he call to God for grace, and to pray that it might please God to open his heart, that he may conceive the Truth.

Phil. With that I fell down upon my knees before them, and made my Prayer on this manner:

Almighty God, which art the giver of all wisdom and understanding, I beseech thee of thine infinite goodness and mercy in Jesus Christ, to give me (most miserable sinner in thy sight,) the Spirit of wisdom to speak and make answer in thy cause, that it may be to the consolation of the hearers, before whom I stand, and also to my better understanding, if I be deceived in any thing.

Bon. Nay, my Lord of Worcester, you did not well to exhort him to make any Prayer. For this is the thing they have a singular pride in, that they can often make their vain prayers, in the which they glory much. For in this point they are much like to certain arrant Heretics, of whom Pliny maketh mention, that did daily sing Antelucanus Hymns, Praise unto God before dawning of the day.

Phil. My Lord, God make me and all you here present such heretics as those were that sung those morning hymns: for they were right Christians, with whom the Tyrants of the World were offended for their well doing.

Bathe. Proceed to that he hath to say. He hath prayed I cannot tell for what.

Bon.

Another examination of 1774 before the Bishops.

And why do not you Bishops yourselves pray also for them that are out of the way?

The Prayer of J. Pinder before the Bishops.

Bishop Baser against Prayer. Bishop Baser here seemed much more skilful in his Law, than in Church history.

Ben. Say on Mr. Philpot; my Lords will gladly hear you.

Phil. I have, my Lords, been thistwelve month and a half in prison without any iust cause that I know, and my living taken from me without any lawful order, and now I am brought (contrary to right) from mine own Territory and Ordinary, into another mans jurisdiction, I know not why. Wherefore, if your Lordships can burden me with any evil done, I stand here before you to purge me of the same. And if no such thing may be justly laid to my charge, I desire to be releafed of this wrongful trouble.

Boner. There is none here goeth about to trouble you, but to do you good, if we can. For I promise you, ye were sent hither to me without my knowledge. Therefore speak your Confidence without any fear.

Phil. My Lord, I have learned to answer in matters of Religion, In Ecclesia legitime vocatus, in the Congregation being thereto lawfully called: but now I am not lawfully called, neither is here a just Congregation where I ought to answer.

Boner. Indeed this man told me the last time I spake with him, that he was a Lawyer, and would not utter his Confidence in matters of Faith, unless it were in the hearing of the People, where he might speak to vain-glory.

Phil. My Lord, I said not I was a Lawyer, neither do I arrogate to my self that name, although I was once a novice in the same, where I learned something for mine owne defence, when I am called in judgement to answer to any cause, and whereby I have been taught, not to put my self further in danger than I need, and so far am I Lawyer, and no further.

Bathe. If you will not answer to my Lords request, you seem to be a wilful man in your opinion.

Phil. My Lord of London is not mine Ordinary because whom I am bound to answer in this behalf, as Mr. D. Cole (which is a Lawyer) can well tell you by the Law. And I have not offended my Lord of London wherefore he should call me.

Bon. Yes, I have to lay to your charge, that you have offended in my Diocess by speaking against the blessed Sacrament of the Altar: and therefore I may call you, and proceed against you to punish you by the law.

Phil. I have not offended in your Diocess. For that which I spake of the Sacrament was in Pauls Church in the Convocation House, which (as I understand) is a peculiar jurisdiction belonging to the Dean of Pauls, and therefore is counted of your Lordships Diocess, but not in your Diocess.

Boner. Is not Pauls Church in my Diocess? Well I wot, it costeth me a good deal of money by the year, the leading thereof.

Phil. That may be, and yet be exempted from your Lordships Jurisdiction. And albeit I had so offended in your Diocess, yet I ought by the law to be sent to my Ordinary, if I require it, and not to be punished by you that are not mine Ordinary. And already (as I have told you) I have been convented of mine Ordinary for this cause, which you goe about to enquire of me.

Boner. How say you Mr. D. Cole, may not I proceed against him by the law, for that he hath done in my Diocess?

Cole. Me thinketh Mr. Philpot needeth not to stand so much with your Lordship in that point as he doth, since you seek not to hinder him, but to further him: therefore I thinke best that he go to the matter that is laid against him of the Convocation, and make no longer delay.

Phil. I would willingly shew my mind of the matter, but I am sure it will be laid against me to my prejudice when I come to judgement.

Cole. Why then you may speak by protestation.

Phil. But what shall my protestation avail in a cause of Heresie (as you call it) if I (speak otherwise than you will have me; since that which I spake in the Convocation House, being a place privileged, cannot now help me?

Boner. But Master D. Cole, may not I proceed against him for that offence he hath done in my Diocess?

Cole. You may call him before you, my Lord, if he be found in your Diocess.

Phil. But I have by force been brought out of mine owne Diocess to my Lords, and required to be judged of mine own Ordinary: and therefore I know Master Doctor will not say of his knowledge, that your Lordship ought to proceed against me. And here Master Dr. would say nothing.

Worc. Do you not think to find before my Lord here as good equity in your cause, as before your own Ordinary?

Phil. I cannot blame my Lord of Londons equity, with whom (I thank his Lordship) I have found more gentleness since I came, than of mine own Ordinary (I speak it for no flattery) this twelve month and this half before, who never would call me to answer, as his Lordship hath done now twice. Sed nemo prohibetur uti jure suo No man is forbid to use his own right due unto him; but I ought not to be forestalled of my right, and therefore I challenge the same for divers other considerations.

Bon. Now you cannot say hereafter but that you have been gently commended withal of my Lords here, and yet you will be wilful and obdurate in your error, and in your own opinions, and will not shew any cause why you will not come into the Unity of the Church with us.

Phil. My Lords, in that I do not declare my mind according to your expectation, is (as I have said) because I cannot speak without present danger of my life. But rather then you should report me, by this, either obdurate or self-willed without any just ground, whereupon I stand; I will open unto you somewhat of my mind, or rather the whole, desiring your Lordships which seem to be pillars of the Church of England to satisfie me in the same: and I will refer all other causes in the which I differ from you, unto one or two Articles, or rather to one, which includeth them both; in the which if I can by the Scriptures be satisfie at your mouths, I shall as willingly agree to you as any other in all points.

Bon. These Hereticks come always with their ifs, as they rather desire to be satisfie at their own mouths, than to be satisfie at the Scriptures: so that he will always have this exception, I am not satisfie, although the matter be never so plainly proved against him. But will you promise to be satisfie, if my Lords take some pains about you?

Phil. I say (my Lord) I will be satisfie by the Scriptures in that wherein I stand. And I protest here before God and his eternal Son Jesus Christ my Saviour, and the Holy Ghost, and his Angels, and you here present that he judges of that I speak, that I do not stand in any opinion, of wilfulness, or singularity, but only upon my Confidence, certainly informed by Gods Word, from the which I dare not go for fear of damnation, and this is the cause of mine earnestness in this Behalf.

Bon. I will trouble my Lords no longer, seeing that you will not declare your mind.

Phil. I am about so to do, if it please your Lordship to hear me speak.

Bathe. Give him leave (my Lord) to speak that he hath to say.

Phil. My Lords, it is not unknown to you that the chief cause why you do count me, and such as I am, for Hereticks, is because we be not at Unity with your Church. You say you are of the True Church: and we say, we are of the true Church. You say, that whosoever is out of your Church, is damned: and we think verily on the other side, that if we depart from the True Church, whereon we are grafted in Gods Word, we should stand in the state of damnation. Wherefore if your Lordship can bring any better Authority for your Church than we can do for ours, and prove by the Scriptures that the Church of Rome now (of the which you are) is the True Catholic Church, as in all your Sermons, writings, and arguments you do uphold, and that all Christian persons ought to be ruled by the same under pain of damnation (as you say) and that the same Church (as you pretend) hath Authority to interpret the Scriptures as it seemeth her good, and that all men are bound to follow such interpretations only; I shall be as conformable to the same Church as you may desire me, the which otherwise I dare not: therefore I require you for Gods sake to satisfie me in this.

Cole. If you stand upon this point onely, you may soon be satisfie if you list.

The chiefest is the Church

Christ.

Anno 1555. Phil. It is the thing that I require, and to this I have said, I will stand, and referr all other controversies wherein I stand now against you, and will put my hand thereto, if you mistrust my word.

S. Paul 28, years before his conversion. Boner. I pray you Mr. Philpot, what faith were you of twenty years ago : This man will have every year a new faith.

Phil. My Lord to tell you plain, I think I was of no faith : for I was then a wicked liver, and knew not God then, as I ought to do, God forgive me.

Boner. No Faith? that is not so. I am sure you were of some faith.

Phil. My Lord, I have declared to you on my Conscience what I then was, and judge of my self. And what is that to the purpose of the thing I desire to be satisfied of you?

Boner. Master D. Cole, I pray you say your mind to him.

Colo. What will you say, if I can prove that it was decreed by an Universal Council in Atbanafius his time, that all the Christian Church should follow the determination of the Church of Rome? but I do not now remember where.

Phil. If you Master Doctor can shew me the same granted to the See of Rome by the Authority of the Scriptures, I will gladly hearken thereto. But I think you be not able to shew any such thing : for Athanasius was President of Nicene Council, and there was no such thing decreed I am sure.

Cole. Though it were not then, it might be at another time.

Phil. I desire to see the proof thereof. And upon this Mr. Harpfield, Chancellor to the Bishop of London, brought in a book of Irenæus, with certain leaves turned in, and laid it before the Bishops to help them in their perplexity, if it might be: the which after the Bishops of Bath and Glocester had read together, the Bishop of Glocester gave me the book.

Glocest. Take the Book, Master Philpot, and look up on that place, and there may you see how the Church of Rome is to be followed of all men.

A place of Irreversibil-ged.

Phil. I took the Book, and read the place, the which after I had read, I find it made nothing against me, but against the Arrians and other Hercetics, against whom Irenæus wrote, proving that they were not to be credited, because they did teach and follow after strange Doctrine in Europa, and that the chief Church of the same was founded by Peter and Paul; and had to this time continued by faithful succession of the faithful Bishops in preaching the true Gospel, as they had received of the Apostles, and nothing like to those late sprung Hercetics, &c.
Whereby he concludeth against them, that they were not to be heard, neither to be credited, the which thing if you may I desire to prove now of the Church of Rome, then had you as good as proved against me, for the cause now, which I have had against the Hercetics.
But the Church of Rome hath swerved from the truth and simplicity of the Gospel, which it maintained in Irenæus time, and was corrupted from that which it is now wherefore your Lordship cannot justly apply the Authority of Irenæus to the Church of Rome now, which is manifestly corrupted from the Primitive Church.

The Church
of Rome now is was then.

Boner. So will you say still, it maketh nothing for the purpose, whatsoever Authority we bring, and will never be satisfied.

Phil. My Lord, when I do by just reason prove that the Authorities which be brought against me do not make to the purpose (as I have already proved) I trust you will receive mine answer.

The Church
of Rome
never decei-yed,

Wore. It is to be proved most manifestly by all ancient Writers, that the See of Rome hath always followed the truth, and never was deceived, until of late certain Hereticks had defaced the same.

Phil. Let that be proved, and I have done.

Worc. Nay, you are of such arrogancy, singularity and vain-glory, that you will not see it, be it never well proved.

Pil. Ha, my Lords, is it now time (think you) for me to follow singularity or vain-glory, since it is now upon the danger of my life and death, not onely presently, but also before God to come? and I know, if I die not in the true faith, I shall die everlastingly : and again I know, if I do not as you would have me, you will kill me and many thousands more : yet had I rather perish at your hands, than to perish eternally. And at this time I have lost all my commodities of this World; and lie in a colchouse, where a man would not liy a Dogg ; with the which I am well contented.

Cole. Where are you able to prove that the Church of Rome hath erred at any time? and by what Historie? certain it is by Eusebius, that the Church was established at Rome by Peter and Paul, and that Peter was Bishop 25 years at Rome.

Phil. I know well that Eusebius so writeth: but if we compare that which Saint Paul writeth to the Galatians, chap. i. the contrary will manifestly appear, that he was not half so long there. He lived not past 35 years after he was called to be an Apostle: and Paul maketh mention of his abiding at Jerusalem after Christs death more than 12 years.

Cole. What, did Peter write to the Galathians?

Phil. No, I say Paul maketh mention of Peter, writing to the Galatians, and of his abiding at Jerusalem: And further, I am able to prove, both by Eusebius and other Historiographers, that the Church of Rome hath manifestly erred, and at this present doth err, because the agreeeth not with that which they wrote. The primitive Church did use according to the Gospel, and there needeth none other proof but compare the one with the other.

Baner. I may compare this man to a certain man I read of which fell into a desperation, and went into a wood to hang himself, and when he came there, he went viewing of every tree, and could find none on the which he might vouchsafe to hang himself. But I will not apply it as I might. I pray you (Master Doctor) go forth with him.

Cole. My Lord, there be on every side on me that be better able to answer him, and I love not to fall into dispute: for that now adays a man shall but sustain shame and obloquie thereby of the People. I had rather shew my mind in writing.

Phil. And I had rather that you should do so than otherwise, for than a man may better judge of your words than by argument, and I beseech you to do so. But if you were a rich man, I durst wager an hundred pounds, that you shall not be able to show that you have said, to be decreed by a general Council in Albanafius time. For this I am sure of, that it was concluded by a general Council in Africa many years after, that none of Africa (under pain of Excommunication) should appeal to Rome, in the which decree I am sure they would not have made, but by the Scriptures and by a Universal Council it had been decreed, that all men should abide and follow the determination of the Church of Rome.

Cole. But I can shew that they revoked that error a gain.

Phil. So you say, Master Doctor, but I pray you shew me where. I have hitherto heard nothing of you for my contentation, but bare words without any Authority.

Bon. What I pray you ought we to dispute with you of our faith? Justinian in the law hath a title, De fide Catholica, to the contrary.

Phil. I am certain the Civill law hath such a constitution: but our faith must not depend upon the Civil law. For as Saint Ambrose saith, Non lex, sed fides congregavit Ecclesiam, Not the law, but the Gospell (saith he) hath gathered the Church together.

Worc. Mr. Philpot, you have the Spirit of pride where with ye be led, which will not let you to yield to the truth : leave it for shame.

Phil. Sir, I am sure I have the spirit of Faith, by the which I speak at this present; neither am I ashamed to stand to my Faith.

Glocest. What? do you think your self better learned than so many notable learned men as be here?

Phil. Elias alone had the Truth, when there were four hundred Priests against him.

Worce. Oh, you would be counted now for Eliaz. And yet I tell thee he was deceived: for he thought there had been none good but himself: and yet he was deceived, for there were seven thousand beside him.

Phil. Yea, but he was not deceived in Doctrine, as the other four hundred were.

Worce. By my faith you are greatly to blame, that you cannot be content to be of the Church which ever hath been of that Faithful Antiquity.

Phil. My Lord, I know Rome, and have been there, where I saw your Lordship.

A good commendation for Rome by a Roman like

Worce. Indeed I did flee from hence thither, and I remember not that I saw you there. But I am sorry that you have been there: for the wickedness which you have seen there, peradventure causeth you to do as you do.

Phil. No, my Lord, I do not as I do for that cause: for I am taught otherwise by the Gospel, not altogether to refuse the Minister for his evil living, so that he bring forth Doctrine out of Gods Book.

whether the Universal Church may be deceived? a The. 2. A declaration prophesied of the Church.

Worce. Do you think the Universal Church may be deceived?

Phil. St Paul to the Theſſalonians prophesieth that there should come an Universal departing from the Faith in the later days before the coming of Christ, saying, Nem venit Christus, nisi venerit defectio prius, that is, Christ shall not come, till there come a departing first.

Cole. Yea I pray you, how take you the departing there in S. Paul? it is not meant of Faith, but of the departing from the Empire: for it is in Greek, amotia.

Phil. Marry indeed you, Mr. Doctor, put me in good remembrance of the meaning of S. Paul in that place, for Apostasia is properly a departing from the Faith, and thereof cometh Apostata, which properly signifieth one that departeth from his Faith: and S. Paul in the same place after speaketh of the decay of the Empire.

Cole. Apostasia doth not only signify a departing from the Faith, but also from the Empire, as I am able to shew.

Phil. I never read it so taken, and when you shall be able to shew it (as you say in words) I will believe it, and not before.

Worce. I am sorry that you should be against the Christian World.

Phil. The World commonly, and such as be called Christians (for the multitude) hath hated the truth, and been enemies to the same.

Gloe. Why, Mr. Philpot, do you think that the Universal Church hath erred, and you only to be in the Truth?

The Pope's Church which now it was never Universal. Of this Emmona Council which was about the year 1418. read before. The word of the Church judges its controversies.

Phil. The Church that you are of was never Universal, for two parts of the World, which is Asia and Africa never consented to the supremacy of the Bishop of Rome, as at this day they do not, neither do follow his decrees.

Gloe. Yes in the Florentine Council they did agree.

Phil. It was said so by false report, after they of Asia and Africa were gone home: but it was not so indeed, as the sequel of them all hitherto doth prove the contrary.

Gloe. I pray you by whom will you be judged in matters of Controversie which happen daily?

Phil. By the Word of God. For Christ saith in S. John, The word that he spake, shall be judge in the latter day.

Gloe. What if you take the word one way, and I another way: who shall be judge then?

Phil. The Primitive Church.

Gloe. I know you mean the Doctors that wrote there of.

Phil. I mean verily so.

Gloe. What if you take the Doctors in one sense, and I in another: who shall be judge then?

Phil. Then let that be taken which is most agreeable to Gods Word.

Cole. My Lords, why do you trouble your selves to answer him in this matter? It is not the thing which is laid to his charge, but his error of the Sacrament, and he to shift himself of that, brought in another matter.

Phil. This is the matter, Mr. Cole, to the which I have referred all other questions, and desire to be satisfied.

Worce. It is wonder to see how he standeth with a few against a great multitude.

Phil. We have almost as many as you. For we have Asia, Africa, Germany, Denmark, and a great part of France; and daily the number of the Gospel doth increase: so that I am credibly informed, that for this Religion in the which I stand, and for the which I am like to die, a great multitude doth daily come out of France through persecution, that the Cities of Germany be scarce able to receive them: and therefore your Lordship may be sure, the Word of God will one day take place, do what you can to the contrary.

Worce. They were well occupied to bring you such news, and you have been well kept to have such report unto you. Thou art the arrogant fellow, and stoutest fond fellow that ever I knew.

Phil. I pray your Lordship to bear with my hasty speech: for it is part of my corrupt nature to speak somewhat hastily: but for all that, I mean with humility to do my duty to your Lordship.

Bon. Mr. Philpot, my Lords will trouble you no further at this time, but you shall go from whence you came and have such favour as in the mean while I can shew you: and upon Wednesday next you shall be called again to be heard what you can say for maintenance of your Error.

Phil. My Lord, my desire is to be satisfied of you in that I have required; and your Lordship shall find me, as I have said.

Worce. We wish you as well as our selves.

Phil. I think the same (my Lords) but I fear you are deceived, and have a zeal of your selves, not according to knowledge.

Worce. God fend you more grace.

Phil. And also God increase the same in you, and open your eyes that you may see to maintain his Truth, and his true Church.

Then the Bishops rose up and consulted together, and caused a writing to be made, in the which I think, my Blood by them was bought and sold, and thereto they put their hands, and after this I was carried to my Coliseum again.

Thus endeth the fourth part of this tragedy. God hasten the end thereof to his glory Amen.

Because I have begun to write unto you of mine examinations before the Bishop and other, more to satisfy your desire than that it is any thing worthy to be written. I have thought it good to write unto you also that which had been done of late, that the same might come to light which they do in darkness and in privie corners, and that the World now and the posterity hereafter might know how unorderly, unjustly, and unlearnedly these ravening Wolves do proceed against the silly and faithful Flock of Christ, and condemn and persecute the sincere Doctrine of Christ in us, which they are not able by honest means to resist, but only by Tyranny and Violence.

The fifth Examination of John Philpot, had before the Bishops of London, Rochester, Coventry, S. Asaph (I trow) and one other, whose Sess I know not, Doctor Story, Curtop, Doctor Saverfon, Doctor Pendleton, with divers other Chaplains and Gentlemen, in the Queens Chamber, and divers other Gentlemen, in the Gallery of my Lord of Londons palace.

Boner. Mr. Philpot come you hither, I have desired my Lords here, and other learned men to take some pains once again, and to do you good and because I do mind to sit in judgment on you to morrow (as I am commanded) yet I would you should have as much favour as I can shew you, if you will be any thing conformable, Therefore play the wise man, and be not singular in your own opinion, but be ruled by these learned men.

Phil. My Lord, in that you say you will sit on me in judgment to morrow, I am glad thereof, For I was promised by them which sent me unto you, that I should have been judged the next day after: but promise hath not been kept with me, to my farther grief. I look for none other but death at your hands, and I am as ready Anno 1555. to yield my life in Christs cause, as you be to require it.

Bon. Lo what a wilful man is this? By my Faith it is but folly to reason with him, neither with any of these Hereticks. I am sorry that you will be no more tractable, and that I am compelled to shew extremity against you.

Phil. My Lord, you need not to shew extremity against me unless you list: neither by the Law (as I have said) have you any thing to do with me, for that you are not mine Ordinary, albeit I am (contrary to all right) in your Prison.

Bon. Why the Queens Commissioners sent you hither unto me upon your Examination had before them. I know not well the cause; but I am sure they would not have sent you hither to me, unless you had made some talk to them, otherwise than it becometh a Christian man.

Phil. My Lord, indeed they sent me hither without any occasion then ministered by me. Only they laid unto me the Disputation I made in the Convocation-house, requiring me to answer the same, and to recant it. The which because I would not do, they sent me hither to your Lordship.

Bon. Why did you not answer them thereto?

Phil. For that they were temporal men, and ought not to be Judges in Spiritual causes whereof they demanded me, without shewing any authority whereby I was bound to answer them, and hereupon they committed me to your Prison.

Bon. Indeed I remember now, you maintained open Heresie in my Diocese: wherefore the Commissioners sent you unto me that I should proceed against you, for this you have spoken in my Diocese.

Phil. My Lord, I stand still upon my lawful plea in this behalf; that though it were a great heresie, as you suppose it, yet I ought not to be troubled therefore, in respect of the privilege of the Parliament-house, whereof the Convocation-house is a member, where all men in matters propounded may frankly speak their minds, and here is present a Gentleman of the Queens Majesties that was present at the Disputation, and can tell the questions which were then in controversy, were not set forth by me, but by the Prosecutor, who required in the Queens Majesties name, all men to dispute their minds freely in the same, that were of the House.

The Queens Gentleman. Though the Parliament-house be a place of privilege for men of the house to speak, yet may none speak any Treason against the Queen, or maintain Treason against the Crown.

Phil. But if there be any matter which otherwise it were Treason to speak of, were it Treason for any person to speak therein, specially the thing being proposed by the Speaker? I think not.

The Queens Gentleman. You may make the matter easie enough to you yet, as I perceive, if you will revoke the same which you did there so stubbornly maintain.

S. Af. This man did not speak under Reformation, as many as there did but ἀποκατάστασις καὶ ἀποκατάστασις, which is, earnestly and perswably, as ever I heard any.

Phil. My Lords, since you will not cease to trouble me for that I have lawfully done, neither will admit my just defence for that was spoken in the Convocation-house by me, contrary to the Laws and Custom of the Realm; I appeal to the whole Parliament-house, to be judged by the same, whether I ought thus to be molested for that I have there spoken.

Rochester. But have you spoken and maintained the same since that time, or no?

Phil. If any man can charge me justly therewith, here I stand to make answer.

Rochester. How say you to it now? will you stand to that you have spoken in the Convocation-house, and do you think you said then well, or no?

Phil. My Lord, you are not mine Ordinary to proceed Ex officio against me, and therefore I am not bound to tell you my Confidence of your demands.

S. Af. What say you now? Is there not in the blessed Sacrament of the Altar (and with that they put off all their Caps for reverence of the Idol) the presence of our Saviour Christ, really and substantially after the words of Consecration?

Phil. I do believe in the Sacrament of Christs Body, duly ministered, to be such manner of presence, as the Word teacheth me to believe.

S. Af. I pray you, how is that?

Phil. As for that I will declare another time, when I shall be lawfully called to dispute my mind of this matter, but I am not yet driven to that point. And the Scripture saith, All things ought to be done after an order.

Another Bish. This is a froward and vain-glorious man.

Boner. It is not lawful for a man by the Civil Laws to dispute of his Faith openly, as it appeareth in the title, De summa Trinitate & fide Catholica.

Phil. My Lord, I have answered you to this question before.

Boner. Why, I never asked thee of this before now.

Phil. Yes, that you did at my last examination, by that token I answered your Lordship by St. Ambrose, that the Church is congregated by the Word, and not by mans Law. Wherefore I add now further of this saying, Quod si fidem repudias, & legem objicis, injustus es, quia justus ex fide vivit. i. That he which refuseth the Word, and objecteth the Law, is an unjust man, because the just shall live by Faith. And moreover, (my Lord) the title which your Lordship alledgeth out of the Law, maketh it not unlawful to dispute of all the Articles of the Faith, but of the Trinity.

Boner. Thou sayest, it is not so: and I will shew you by the Book how ignorant he is. And with that he went with all haste to his Study, and fetcht his Book and openly read the Text, and the title of the Law, and charged me with such words as seemed to make for his purpose, saying, How sayest thou to this?

Phil. My Lord, I say as I said before, that the Law meaneth of the Catholick Faith, determined in the Council of Chalcedonia, where the Articles of the Creed were only concluded upon.

Bon. Thou art the veriest Beast that ever I heard, I must needs speak it, thou compellest me therunto.

Phil. Your Lordship may speak your pleasure of me. But what is this to the purpose, which your Lordship is so earnest in? You know that our Faith is not grounded upon the Civil Law: therefore it is not material to me whatsoever the Law saith.

Bon. By what Law wilt thou be judged? Wilt thou be judged by the Common Law?

Phil. No, my Lord, our Faith dependeth not upon the Laws of man.

S. Af. He will be judged by no Law, but as he list himself.

Worce. The Common Laws are but abstracts of the Scriptures and Doctors.

Phil. Whatsoever you do make them, they are no ground of my Faith, by the which I ought to be judged.

Bon. I must needs proceed against thee to-morrow.

Phil. If your Lordship so do, I will have Exceptionem forei: for you are not my competent Judge.

Bon. By what Law canst thou refuse me to be thy Judge?

Phil. By the Civil Law, De competente judice.

Boner. There is no such title in the Law. In what Book is it, as cunning a Lawyer as you be?

Phil. My Lord, I take upon me no great cunning in the Law: but you drive me to my shifts for my defence, and I am sure, if I had the Books of the Law, I were able to shew what I say.

Boner. What? De competente judice? I will go fetch thee my Books. There is a title indeed, De officiis judicis Ordinarii.

Phil. Verily that is the same De competente judice, which I have alledged. With that he ran to his Study, and brought the whole course of the Law between his hands, which (as it might appear) he had well occupied, by the dust they were imbrued withal.

Boner. There be the Books: find it now (if thou canst) and I will promise to release thee out of Prison.

Ambr. s. c. Epist. 3. c. Bodem cont. Auctentum.

Our Faiths not grounded upon the Civil Law.

I. Philpot still standeth to his defence of the Law, in refusing the Judge not to be competent. De officiis Ordinarii, to a title in the first Book of the Decretals. De foro competente, is a title in the second Book of the Decretals.

Philpot then seeketh cause against him, and yet pretendeth to be sorry of his trouble.

M. Philpots just defence for (yea) in the Parliament.

It were the part of a charitable Bishop to make a matter better and not worse.

John Philpot appeals to the whole Parliament-house.

This Bishop would fain have blood.

ANNO
1555.

Phil. My Lord I stand not here to reason matters of the Civil Law, although I am not altogether ignorant of the same; for that I have been a Student in the Law six or seven years; but to answer to the Articles of Faith, with the which you may lawfully burden me. And whereas you go about unlawfully to proceed, I challenge, according to my knowledge, the benefit of the Law in my defence.

Boner. Why, thou wilt answer directly to nothing thou art charged withal: therefore say not hereafter but you might have been satisfied here by Learned men, if you would have declared your mind.

Philpot. My Lord, I have declared my mind unto you and to other of the Bishops at my last being with you desiring you to be satisfied but of one thing, whereunto I have referred all other Controversies: the which if your Lordships now, or other Learned men can simply resolve me of, I am as contented to be reformable in all things, as you shall require; the which is to prove that the Church of Rome (whereof you are) is the Catholick Church.

Coven. Why, do you not believe your Creed, Credo Ecclesiam Catholicam?

Phil. Yes that I do: but I cannot understand Rome (wherewithal you burden us) to be the same, neither like to it.

S. As. It is most evident that St. Peter did build the Catholick Church at Rome. And Christ said, Tu es Petrus, & super hanc Petram aedificabo Ecclesiam meam.

Moreover, the succession of Bishops in the See of Rome can be proved from time to time, as it can be of none other place so well, which is a manifest probation of the Catholick Church, as divers Doctors do write.

Phil. That you would have to be undoubted, is most uncertain, and that by the Authority which you alledge of Christ, saying unto Peter, Thou art Peter, and upon this Rock I will build my Church, unless you can prove the Rock to signifie Rome, as you would make me falsely believe. And although you can prove the succession of Bishops from Peter, yet this is not sufficient to prove Rome the Catholick Church unless you can prove the profession of Peters Faith, whereupon the Catholick Church is builded, to have continued in his Successors at Rome, and at this present to remain.

Bon. Is there any more Churches than one Catholick Church? And I pray tell me into what Faith were you baptized?

Phil. I acknowledge one holy Catholick and Apostolick Church, whereof I am a member (I praise God) and am of the Catholick Faith of Christ wherinto I was baptized.

Coven. I pray you, can you tell what this word Catholick doth signifie? shew if you can.

Phil. Yes that I can, I thank God. The Catholick Faith, or the Catholick Church, is not as now adays the People be taught, to be that which is most Universal, or of most part of men received, whereby you do infer our Faith to hang upon the Multitude, which is not so: but I esteem the Catholick Church to be as S. Austin defineth the same. Afirmamus fidem Catholicam à rebus præteritis, præsentibus & futuris. i. We judge, saith he, the Catholick Faith, of that which hath been, is, and shall be. So that if you can be able to prove that your Faith and Church hath been from the beginning taught, and is, and shall be: then may you count your selves Catholick, otherwise not. And Catholick is a Greek word compounded of καθολικός, which signifieth after or according, and λόγος, a sum, or principal or whole. So that Catholick Church, or Catholick Faith, is as much to say, as the first, whole, found, or chiefest Faith.

Bon. Doth St. Austin say so as he alleadgeth it? or doth he mean as he taketh the same? how say you Mr. Curtop?

Curtop. Indeed, my Lord, St. Augustine hath such a saying, speaking against the Donatists, that the Catholick Faith ought to be esteemed of things in time past, and as they are practiced according to the same, and ought to be through all Ages, and not after a new manner, as the Donatists began to profess.

Philpot. You have said well, Mr. Curtop, and after the meaning of St. Austin, and to confirm that which I have said for the signification of Catholick.

Coven. Let the Book be seen my Lord.

Bon. I pray you, my Lord, be content, or in good faith I will break even off and let all alone. Do you think the Catholick Church (until it was within these few years, in the which a few upon singularity have swerved from the same) have erred?

Phil. I do not think that the Catholick Church can err in Doctrine; but I require you to prove this Church of Rome to be the Catholick Church.

Curtop. I can prove that Irenæus (which was within an hundred years after Christ) came to Vistor, then Bishop of Rome, to ask his advice about the excommunication of certain Hereticks, the which he would not have done (by all likelihood) if he had not taken him to be Supreme Head.

Coven. Mark well this Argument. How are you able to answer the same? Answer, if you can?

Phil. It is soon answered, my Lord, for that it is of no force; neither this fact of Irenæus maketh no more for the Supremacy of the Bishop of Rome, than mine excommunicating the Churches of Rome as well as he, and might have spoken with the Pope, if I had list: and yet I would none in England did favour his Supremacy more than I.

S. As. You are more to blame (by the Faith of my Body) for that you favour the same no better, since all the Catholick Church (until these few years) have taken him to be the Supreme head of the Church, besides this good man Irenæus.

Phil. That is not likely, that Irenæus so took him, or the Primitive Church: for I am able to shew seven General Councils after Irenæus time, wherein he was never so taken, which may be a sufficient proof, that the Catholick Primitive Church never took him for Supreme Head.

The other Bishop. This man will never be satisfied, say what we can. It is but folly to reason any more with him.

Phil. O, my Lords, would you have me satisfied with nothing? Judge, I pray you, who of us hath better Authority, he which bringeth the example of one man going to Rome, or I that by these many General Councils am able to prove, that he was never so taken in many hundred years after Christ, as by Nicene, Ephesine, the first and second Chalcedon, Constantinopolitan, Carthagi- nense, Aquileense.

Coven. Why will you not admit the Church of Rome to be the Catholick Church?

Phil. Because it followeth not the Primitive Catholick Church, neither agreeth with the same, no more than an Apple is like a Nut.

Coven. Wherein doth it differ?

Phil. It were too long to recite all, but two things I will name, the Supremacy and Transubstantiation.

Cur. As for Transubstantiation, albeit it was set forth and decreed for an Article of Faith not much above 300 years, yet it was always believed in the Church.

Bon. Ye, that it was. Very well said of you Mr. Curtop.

Phil. Ye have said right, that Transubstantiation is but a late plantation of the Bishop of Rome, and you are notable to shew any ancient Writer, that the Primitive Church did believe any such thing; and with this Curtop shrank away. And immediately after the Ambassador of Spain came in, to whom my Lord of London went, leaving the other with me. To whom I said, My Lords, if you can shew me that this Church of Rome (whereof you are Members) is the true Catholick Church, I shall be content to be one thereof, and as conformable to the same as you can require me in all things; for I know there is no salvation but within the Church.

Coven. Can you disprove that the Church of Rome is not the Catholick Church?

Phil. Ye, that I am able, but I desire rather to hear of you for the proof thereof. And seeing I cannot have my request at your hands, neither be satisfied with any such Church, probable Authority. I will shew you good proof why it is not. For if the Primitive Church were Catholick, as it was indeed, and ought to be the form and School-mistress of the Church to the worlds end; then is not the Church of Rome now the Catholick Church, which dissenteth so far from the same both in Doctrine and use of the Sacraments.

Anno 1555. Covent. How prove you that the Church of Rome now dissenteth in Doctrine and use of the Sacraments from the Primitive Church?

Phil. Compare the one with the other, and it shall soon appear; as you may see both in Eusebius and other Ecclesiastical and ancient writers.

Covent. What have you to say more, why it is not the Catholick Church?

Phil. Because it is not (by your interpretation of Catholick) Universal, neither ever was, albeit you falsely persuade the People that it is so. For the World being divided into three parts, Asia, Africa, and Europa; two parts thereof, Asia, and Africa professing Christi as well as we did never consent to the Church of Rome, which is of Europa; which is a sufficient testimony that your faith was never Universal.

Covent. How prove you that?

Phil. All the Historiographers, which write of the proceedings of the Church, do testify the same. Besides that, this present time doth declare that to be true which I say. For at this present the Church of Asia and Africa do not consent to the Church of Rome. Yea and besides all this, most part of Europa doth not agree, neither allow the Church of Rome; as Germany, the Kingdom of Denmark, the Kingdom of Pole, a great part of France, England, and Zeland, which is a manifest probation that your Church is not Universal. And after this, the Bishop of London called away the other Bishops, and left with me divers gentlemen, with certain of his Chaplains, as Doctor Saver an Englishman, which had proceeded Doctor in Bononie, who after began with me in this matter.

Doctor Saver. Mr. Philpot, I remember you beyond-Sea since the time you reasoned with a Friar (a notable learned man) coming from Venice to Padua in a barge.

Phil. I cannot forget that; for the Friar threatened me to accuse me of Heresie as soon as he came to Padua, for that I talked with him so boldly of the truth. He was no such learned man as you name him to be, but only in his School points a good Purgatorie Friar.

Doctor Saver. Well, he was a learned man for all that. And I am sorry to hear that you this day having communed with so many notable learned men, are no more conformable to them than you be.

Philpot. I will be conformable to all them that be conformable to Christ in his word. And I pray you good Mr. Doctor, be not so conformable to please men more than God, contrary to your learning for worldly eliminations sake.

D. Saver. No that I am not. Upon what occasion should you think thus of me?

Phil. Upon no evil that I do know of you Mr. Doctor; but I speak as one wishing that you should not be led away from the truth for promotions sake, as many Doctors be now days.

D. Saver. I have heard your arguments hitherto, and me think that a great many of the old ancient writers be against you in that you do not allow the Church of Rome, neither the supremacy; for Saint Cyprian (which is an old ancient writer) doth allow the B. of Rome to be supreme head of the Church.

Phil. That I am sure of he doth not. For he, writing unto Cornelius then Bishop of Rome, calleth him but his companion and his fellow Bishop, neither attributed to him the name either of Pope, or else of any usurped terms which now be ascribed to the Bishop of Rome to the setting forth of his dignity.

Saver. You cannot be able to shew that Saint Cyprian calleth Cornelius his fellow Bishop.

Philpot. I will wager with you what I am able to make, that I can shew it you in Cyprian, as I have said.

D. Saver. I will lay none other wager with you, but book for book that it is not so.

Philpot. I agree thereto, and I pray you one of my Lords Chaplains to fet us Cyprian hither for the trial hereof. And with that one of them went to my Lords study and brought forth Cyprian, and by and by he turned to the first book of his Epistles, the third Epistle, and there would have seemed to me gathered a strong argument for the supremacy of the Bishop of Rome, because he thus saith: I goe not well with the Church when the big Priest is not obeyed, which supplieth the stead of Christ, after Gods Word, and the consent of his fellow Bishops and the agreement of the People.

D. Saver. How can you avoid this place which maketh so plainly for the Bishop of *Rome*s Supremacy?

Phil. It maketh not so plain, Mr. Doctor, on your side, as you gather, as by and by I will give you to understand. But first I challenge the wager which we made, that your book is mine. For let us see that he calleth Cornelius his fellow B. as he doth in other places. And now for the understanding of that place, you shall contrive it to take the high Priest only for the Bishop of Rome, and otherwise then it was in his time. For there were by the Nicene Council four Patriarchs appointed, the Patriarch of Jerusalem, the Patriarch of Constantinople, the Patriarch of Alexandria, and the Patriarch of Rome, of which four, the Patriarch of Rome was placed lowest in the Council, and so continued many years, for the time of seven or eight general Councils, as I am able to shew.

Therefore Saint Cyprian writing to Cornelius Patriarch of Rome (whom he calleth his fellow Bishop) unadvisedly offended, that certain Hereticks being justly excommunicated by him (as the Novatians were) did flee from his Diocese, which was their chief Bishop (refusing to be obedient to him and to be reformed) to the B. of Carthage and to the Patriarch of Constantinople, and there were received in communion of the same, and in derogation of good order and discipline in the Church, and to the maintaining of Heresies and Schisms: and then he sheweth that such a daily life he led, that he considered him to be in the Church for the time the Priest, and for the time the judge in Christ's stead, as in the case of Nicene Council was appointed) not the Bishop of Rome only, but every Patriarch in his province who had every one of them a College or Cathedral Church of learned Priests, in hearing of whom by a convocation of his fellow Bishops, with the consent of the People, all Heresies were determined by the Word of God; and this is the meaning of Saint Cyprian.

D. Saver. You take it so, but it seemeth to me otherwise.

Phil. Upon what ground it should seem otherwise unto you I know not, but this meaning which I have declared, the general Councils, seven or eight one after another confirmed it so to be, which did not allow one supreme head only.

Pend. There were not so many general Councils, but four only allowed.

Phil. That is not so, Mr. Pendleton, although there be four specially allowed for the confirmation of the Trinity; but besides these four there were many other general Councils, as you may learn by many writers.

A Chaplain. Did not Christ build his Church upon Peter? Saint Cyprian saith so.

Phil. S. Cyprian De simplicitate Praetorium declaratur in what respect he so said; In persona unius dedit Dominus omnibus claves, ut omnium unitatem denunciantur. i. God gave in person of one man the keys to all, that he might signifie the unity of all men. And also S. Augustine saith in the tenth treatise of S. John, *Si in Petro non esset ecclesiae mysterium, non ei diceret Dominus, tibi dabo claves. Si autem hoc Petro dictum est, non habet Ecclesia; si autem Ecclesia habet, quando claves accepit, ecclesiam totam designant: i. If in Peter had not been the mystery of the Church the Lord had not said unto him, I will give unto thee the keys. For if that were said to Peter, the Church hath them not; if the Church have them when Peter received them, he signified the whole Church. And also S. Hier. a Priest of Rome, writing to Nepotian, saith, That all Churches do lean to their own pastors, where he speaketh of the Ecclesiastical Hierarchy or Regiment, where he maketh no mention of the Bishop of Rome. And Ad Evagrium, he saith, That whosoever a Bishop be, whosoever it be at Rome, or at Evagrie, or at Rhegium, he is of one power and of one jurisdiction.*

D. Saver. S. Hierome De celestibus Hierarchybus? It was Pamphilus you mean.

R r

Phil

Phil. I say not that Hierome wrote any book so intitled. But I say, that in the Epistle by me alledged, he maketh mention of the Ecclesiastical regiment.

D. Saver. I wonder you will stand so steadfast in your error to your own destruction.

Phil. I am sure we are in no error, by the promise of Christ made to the faithful once, which is, that he will give to his true Church such a Spirit of Wisdom, that the Adversaries thereof should never be able to resist. And by this I know we are of the truth, for that neither by reasoning, neither by writing, your Synagogue of Rome is able to answer. Where is there one of you all that ever hath been able to answer any of the godly learned Ministers of Germany, who have disclosed your Counterfeit Religion? Which of you all (at this day) is able to answer Calvins Institutions, which is Minister of Geneva.

D. Saver. A godly Minister indeed of receipt of cutpurse, and Runagate Traytors. And of late I can tell you, there is such contention fallen between him and his own sects, that he was faine to flee the Town, about predestination. I tell you truth, for I came by Geneva hinder.

Philpot. I am sure you Blaspheme that godly man, and that godly Church where he is Minister; as it is your Churches condition, when you cannot answer men by learning, to oppress them with Blasphemies and false reports. For in the matter of predestination he is in none other opinion then all the Doctors of the Church be, agreeing to the Scriptures.

Saver. Men be able to answer him if they list. And I pray you which of you have answered Bishop Fishers book.

Phil. Yes (Master Doctor) that book is answered and answered again, if you list to seek what hath been written against him.

D. Saver. And after this Doctor Story came in. To whom I said, M. Doctor, you have done me great injurie, and without law have straitly imprisoned me, more like a dog then a man. And besides this you have not kept promise with me, for you promised that I should be judged the next day after.

Story. I am come now to keep promise with thee. Was there ever such a phantastical man as this? Nay, he is no man, he is a beastly yea, these Hereticks be worse then brute beasts: for they will upon a vain singularity take upon them to be wiser then all men, being indeed very fools and idle heads, not able to maintain that which of an arrogant obstinacie they do sustain.

Phil. Master Doctor, I am content to abide your railing judgment of me now. Say what you will, I am content, for I am under your feet to be trodden on as you list. God forgive it you; yet I am no Heretic. Neither you nor any other shall be able to prove that I hold any jot against the Word of God otherwise then a Christian man ought.

Story. The Word of God? Forsooth the Word of God? It is but a folly to reason with these Hereticks, for they are incurable and desperate. But yet I may reason with thee, not that I have any hope to win thee; whom wilt thou appoint to judge of the word whereto thou standest?

Phil. Verily the word it self.

Story. Do you not see the Ignorance of this beastly Heretic? He willeth the word to be judged of the word. Can the word speak?

Phil. If I cannot prove that which I have said by good Authority, I will be content to be counted an Heretic and an ignorant person, and further what you please.

Story. Let us hear what wise Authority thou canst bring in.

Phil. It is the saying of Christ in S. John, Verbum quod locutus sum judicabit in novissimo die, The word which I have spoken, fifth Christ, shall judge in the last day. If the word shall judge in the last day, much more it ought to judge our doings now. And I am sure I have my judge on my side, who shall absolve and justify me in another World. Howsoever now it shall please you by Authority unrighteously to judge of me and others, sure I am in another World to judge you.

Story. What? you purpose to be a stinking Martyr, and to sit in judgment with Christ at the last day to judge the twelve tribes of Israel?

Phil. Yea Sir, I doubt not thereof, having the promise of Christ, if I die for righteousness sake, which you have begun to persecute in me.

Story. I told you it was but vain to argue with this Heretic; he is drowned in his Heresies without all learning.

Phil. Sir I have brought you, for that I have said, good Authority out of Gods Book, to the which you answer nothing, but go about still to give railing judgment against me without any cause.

Story. I will come to you by and by. When as the judge in Westminster Hall giveth Sentence, doth the word give Sentence, or the judge? tell me.

Phil. Civil matters be subject to Civil men, and they have Authority by the word, to be judges of them. But the Word of God is not subject to mans judgment, but ought to judge all the Wisdom, thoughts and doings of all men, and therefore your comparison disproveth nothing that I have said, neither answereth any whit thereto.

Story. Wilt thou not allow the interpretation of the Church upon the Scriptures?

Philpot. Yes, if it be according to the Word of the True Church: and this I say to you, as I have said heretofore, that if ye can prove the Church of Rome (whereof ye are) to be the True Catholick Church which I ought to follow, I will be as ready to yield thereto (as long as it can be so proved) as you may desire me.

Story. What a fellow is this! he will believe nothing but what he list himself. Are we not in possession of the Church? have not our forefathers these many hundred years taken this Church for the Catholick Church whereof we are now? And if we had none other proof but this, it were sufficient; for the prescription of time maketh a good title in the Law.

Phil. You do well, Mr. Doctor, to alledge prescription of many years, for it is all that you have to shew for yourselves. But you must understand, In divinis nulla occurrit prescriptio, that prescription hath no place in matters belonging unto God, as I am able to shew by the testimony of many Doctors.

Story. Well Sir, you are like to go after your Father Lawmer the Sophister, and Ridley, who had nothing to alledge for himself, but that he had learned his Heresie of Cyranus. When I came to him a poor Batchelor of Art, he trembled as though he had had the palls, as these Hereticks have always some token of fear whereby a man may know them, as you may see this mans eyes do tremble in his head. But I dispatched them; and I tell thee that there hath been yet never an one burnt, but I have spoken with him, and have been a cause of his dispatch.

Phil. You have themore to answer for, Mr. Doctor, as you shall feel in another World, how much sorer you do now Triumph of your proceedings.

Story. I tell thee I will never be confessed thereof. And because I cannot now tarry to speak with my Lord, I pray one of you tell my Lord, that my coming was to signify to his Lordship, that he must out of hand rid this Heretic out of the way. And going away he said to me, I certify thee, that thou shalt thank none other man but me.

Phil. I thank you therefore with all mine heart, and God forgive it you.

Story. What? dost thou thank me? If I had thee in my study half an hour, I think I should make you sing another song.

Phil. No, Mr. Doctor, I stand upon too sure a ground to be overthrown by you now. And thus they departed all away from me one after another, until I was left all alone. And afterwards with my Keeper going to my Colledge, as I went, I met with my Lord of London, who spake unto me gently, as he hath hitherto in words saying;

London. Philpot, if there be any pleasure I may shew you in my house, I pray you require it, and you shall have it.

Phil. My Lord, The pleasure that I will require of your L. is to hasten my judgment which is committed unto you, and to dispatch me forth of this miserable World, unto my eternal rest. And for all this fair speech I cannot attain hitherto this fortnights space, neither fire nor candle, neither yet good lodging. But it is good for a man to be brought low in this World, and to be counted

Thus endeth the fifth Tragedy.

The sixth Examination of John Philpot had before the right honourable Lords, the Lord Chamberlain to the Queens Majestie, the Vicount Hereford, commonly called Lord Ferras, the Lord Rich, the Lord S. Johns, the Lord Windfore, the Lord Shandois, Sir John Bridges, Lieutenant of the Tower, and two other more whose names I know not, with the Bishop of London and Doctor Chedsey, the sixth day of November. Anno 1555.

The sixth examination of Mr. Philpot before certain Lords, and the B. of London.

Philpot. Before that I was called afore the Lords, and whilst they were in sitting down, the Bishop of London came aside to me and whispered in mine ear, willing me to use my self before the Lords of the Queens Majesties Council prudently, and to take heed what I said; and thus he pretended to give me Counsel because he willed me to do well, as I might now do if I list. And after the Lords and other worshipful Gentlemen of the Queens Majesties Servants were the table, and called me to him, and by the Lords I was placed at the upper end against him; where I kneeling down, the Lords commanded me to stand up, and after in this manner the Bishop began to speak.

The words of R. Bower to Mr. Philpot.

London. Mr. Philpot, I have heretofore both privately my self, and openly before the Lords of the Clergy, more times then once canfed you to be talked withal to reform you of your errors, but I have not found you yet so tractable as I would wish: Wherefore now I have desired these honourable Lords of the temporality and of the Q. Majesties Council, who have taken pains with me this day, I thank them therefore, to hear you what you can say, that they may be judges whether I have sought all means to do you good or no: and I dare be bold to say in their behalf, that if you shew your self conformable to the Q. Majesties proceedings, you shall find as much favour for your deliverance, as you can wish. I speak not this to fawn upon you, but to bring you home into the Church. Now let them hear what you can say.

Mr. Philpot answer to the Bishop.

Phil. My Lord, I thank God of this day, that I have such an honourable audience to declare my mind before. And I cannot but commend your Lordships equity in this behalf, which agreeth with the order of the primitive Church, which was, if any body had been suspected of Heresie, as I am now, he should be called first before the Archbishop or B. of the Diocess where he was suspected; secondly in the presence of others his fellow Bishops and learned elders; and thirdly in hearing of the laitie: where after the judgement of Gods Word declared, and with the assent of our Bishops and consent of the People, he was condemned for an Heretick, or absolved. And the second point of that good order I have found at your Lordships hands already in being called before you and your fellow Bishops, and now have the third fort of men, at whose hands I trust to find more righteousness in my cause then I have found with my Lords of the Clergy; God grant I may have at last the judgement of Gods Word concerning the same.

Hereticks in the primitive Church once by condemned to exile.

London. Mr. Philpot, I pray you ere you go any further, tell my Lords here plainly whether you were by me or by my procurement committed to prison or not; and whether I have shewed you any cruelty sithen ye have been committed to my prison.

Philpot. If it shall please your Lordship to give me leave to declare forth my matter, I will touch that afterward.

R. Bower not the cause of Mr. Philpots imprisonment.

Rich. Answer first of all to my Lords two questions, and then proceed forth to the matter. How say you? were you imprisoned by my Lord or no? can you find any fault since with his cruel using of you?

Phil. I cannot lay to my Lords charge the cause of my imprisonment, neither may I say that he hath used me cruelly, but rather for my part I may say that I have found more gentleness at his Lordships hands, then I did at mine own Ordinaries, for the time I have been within his prison, for that he hath called me three or four times to mine answer, to the which I was not called in a twelvemonth and a half before.

Rich. Well, now go to your matter.

Phil. The matter is, that I am imprisoned for the diffinitions had by me in the Convocation house, against the Sacrament of the Altar, which matter was not moved principally by me, but by the prolocutor, with the consent of the Queens Majestie and of the whole house, and that house, being a member of the Parliament house, ought to be a place of free speech for all men of the house, by the ancient and laudable custom of this Realm. Wherefore I think my self to have sustained hitherto great injurie for speaking my Conscience freely in such a place as I might lawfully do it: and I desire your honourable Lordships judgement which be of the Parliament House, whether of right I ought to be impeached therefore, and sustain the loss of my living, (as I have done) and moreover of my life, as it is sought.

Rich. You are deceived herein; for the Convocation House is no part of the Parliament House.

Phil. My Lord, I have always understood the contrarie by such as are more expert men in things of this Realm then I: and again, the title of every Act leadeth me to think otherwise, which alledgeth the agreement of the spirituality and temporality assembled together.

Rich. Yea, that is meant of the spiritual Lords of the upper house.

Windfor. Indeed the Convocation House is called together by one writ of the Summons of the Parliament of an old custom; notwithstanding that house is no part of the Parliament House.

Phil. My Lords, I must be contented to abide your judgements in this behalf.

Rich. We have told you the truth. Mary yet we would not that you should be troubled for any thing that there was spoken, so that you having spoken amiss do declare now that you are forry therefore.

London. My Lords, he hath spoken there manifest Heresie, yea, and there stoutly maintained the same against the blessed Sacrament of the Altar (and with that he put off his cap, that all the Lords might reverence and vail their bonnets at that idol as he did) and would not allow the real presence of the body and Blood of Christ in the same; yet my Lords, God forbid that I should go about to shew him extremity for so doing, in case he will repent and revoke his wicked sayings; and if in faith he will so do, with your Lordships consent he shall be released by and by: if he will not he shall have the extremity of the law, & that shortly.

Chamb. My Lord of London speaketh reasonably unto you: take it whilst it is offered you.

Rich. How say you? Will you acknowledge the real presence of the Body and Blood of Christ, as all the learned men of this Realm do, in the Mass, and as I do, and will believe as long as I live, I do protest it?

Phil. My Lord, I do acknowledge in the Sacrament of the Body and Blood of Christ such a presence, as the Word of God doth allow and teach me.

Rich. That shall be no otherwise then you list.

London. A Sacrament is the sign of a holy thing; So that there is both the sign which is the accident (as the whiteness, roundness, and shape of Bread) and there is also the thing it self, as very Christ both God and Man. But these Hereticks will have the Sacrament to be but bare signs. How say you? declare unto my Lords here whether you do allow the thing it self in the Sacrament or no.

Phil. I do confess that in the Lords Supper there is in due respects both the sign and the thing signified, when it is duly Ministered after the institution of Christ.

London. You may see how he goeth about the busk (as he hath done before) with my Lords of the Clergy, and dare not utter his mind plainly.

Rich. Shew us what manner of presence you allow in the Sacrament.

Phil. If it please you, my Lord of London, to give me leave to proceed orderly thereunto, and to let me declare my mind without interruption, I will thoroughly open my mind therein.

L. Shand. I pray you my Lord, let him speak his mind.

Phil. My Lords, that at the first I have not plainly declared my judgement unto you the reason is this, because I cannot speak hereof without the danger of my life.

Rich. There is none of us here that seeketh thy life or means to take any advantage of that thou shalt speak.

R r 2

Phil.

The Convocation no part of the Parliament House, (saith the Lord Rich.

Whether the Convocation be part of the Parliament House or no yet free liberty was given by the Queen every man to speak his Conscience.

How Bower taketh the Sacrament, to be both the sign and the thing signified.

Both the sign and the thing signified in due respect be in the Sacrament.

Ye say ye seek not his life, and yet ye know to answer so that ye ask will be his death.

Phil. Although I mistrust not your honourable Lordships that be here of the Temporality; yet here is one that futeeth against me (pointing to my Lord of London) that will lay it to my charge even to the death. Notwithstanding, seeing your Honours do require me to declare my mind of the presence of Christ in the Sacrament, that ye may perceive that I am not ashamed of the Gospel of Christ, neither do maintain any opinion without probable and sufficient authority of the Scripture, I will shew you frankly my mind without all colour, whatsoever shall ensue unto me therefore, so that my Lord of London will not let me to utter my mind.

Rich. My Lord, permit him to say what he can, seeing he is willing to shew his mind.

Lord. I am content, my Lords, let him say what he can, I will hear him.

The prohibition of Joan. Pater before the Lords.

Phil. That which I do intend to speak unto you (right honourable Lords) I do protest here, first before God and his Angels, that I speak it not of vain-glory, neither of singularity, neither of wilful stubbornness, but truly upon a good Conscience, grounded on Gods Word against the which I dare not do for fear of damnation which will follow that which is done contrary to knowledge. Neither do I disagree to the proceedings of this Realm in the Religion, for that I love not the Queen, (whom I love from the bottom of my heart,) but because I ought to love and fear God in his Word more than man in his Laws, though I stand, as I seem to do, in this consideration, and for none other, as God I call to witness.

Two things wherein the Clergy deceive the whole Realm.

There be two things principally, by the which the Clergy at this day doth deceive the whole Realm; that is, the Sacrament of the Body and Blood of Christ, and the name of the Catholick Church: the which both they do usurp, having ended none of them both. And as touching their Sacrament, which they term of the Altar, I say now as I said in the Convocation-house, that it is not the Sacrament of Christ, neither in the same is there any manner of Christs presence. Wherefore they deceive the Queens Majesty, and you of the Nobility of this Realm, in making you to believe that to be a Sacrament which is none, and cause you to commit manifest Idolatry in worshipping that for God, which is no God. And in testimony of this to be true, besides manifest proof, which I am able to make to the Queens Majesty, and to all you of her Nobility, I will yield my life. The which to do, if it were not upon a sure ground, it were to my utter damnation.

Papists untruly using the name of the Church.

And where they take on them the name of the Catholick Church (whereby they blind many folks eyes) they are nothing so, calling you from the true Religion which was revealed and taught in King Edward's time, unto vain superstition. And this I will say for the trial hereof, that if they can prove themselves to be the Catholick Church (as they shall never be able to do) I will never be against their doings, but revoke all that I have said. And I shall desire you, my Lords, to be a mean for me to the Queens Majesty, that I may be brought to the just trial hereof. Yea, I will not refuse to stand against ten of the best of them in this Realm. And if they be able to prove otherwise than I have said, either by writing or by reasoning, with good and lawful Authority, I will here promise to recant whatsoever I have said, and to consent to them in all points. And in the declaration of these things more at large, which now I write in sum, the Bishop of London esteems would have interrupted me, but the Lords procured me liberty to make out my tale, to the great grief of the Lord Bishop of London, as it appeared by the dumps he was in.

M. T. hath offered himself to stand against ten of the best Learned in the Realm, in the proof of his cause.

Lord. It hath been told me before, that you love to make a long tale.

Rich. All Hereticks do boast of the Spirit of God, and every one would have a Church by himself; as Joan of Kent and the Anabaptists. I had my self Joan of Kent a sevennight in my house after the Writ was out for her to be burnt, where my Lord of Canterbury, and Bishop Ridley resorted almost daily unto her: but she was so high in the Spirit, that they could do nothing with her for all their Learnings. But she went wilfully unto the fire, was burnt, and so do you now.

Phil. As for Joan of Kent, she was a vain Woman (I knew her well) and an Heretick indeed, well worthy to be burnt, because she stood against one of the manifest

Articles of our Faith, contrary to the Scriptures: and such vain spirits be soon known from the true Spirit of God and his Church, for that the same abideth within the limits of Gods Word and will not go out of the same, neither stubbornly maintain any thing contrary to the Word, as I have Gods Word thoroughly on my side to shew for that I stand in.

Lord. I pray you, how will you joyn me these two Scriptures together; Pater major me est; & pater & ego unum sumus. I must interpret the same, because my Lords here understand not the Latin, that is to say, The Father is greater than I; and I and the Father are one. But I cry you mercy, my Lords, I have mispoken, in saying you understand no Latin; for the most part of you understand Latin as well as I. But I speak in consideration of my Lord Shandis and Mr. Bridges his Brother, whom I take to be no great Latin men. Now shew your cunning, and joyn these two Scriptures by the Word if you can.

Phil. Yes that I can right well. For we must understand that in Christ there be two natures, the Divinity and Humanity, and in respect of his Humanity it is spoken of Christ, The Father is greater than I. But in respect of his Deity he said again, The Father and I be one.

Lord. But what Scripture have you?

Phil. Yes I have sufficient Scripture for the proof of that I have said. For the first, it is written of Christ in the Psalms, Diminui si eum paulo minus ab Angelis; Thou hast made him a little lesser than Angels. It is the 15. Psalm, beginning Caeli enarrant. And there I misreckoned, wherewithal my Lord took me.

Lord. It is in Domine Dominus noster. Ye may see, my Lords, how well this man is used to say his Mattins.

Phil. Though I say not Mattins in such order as your Lordship meaneth; yet I remember of old, that Domine Dominus noster, and Caeli enarrant, be not far asunder: and albeit I misnamed the Psalm, it is no prejudice to the Truth that I have proved.

Lord. What say you then to the second Scripture? how couple you that by the Word to the other?

Phil. The Text it self declareth, that notwithstanding a Christ did abate himself in our human nature, yet he is still one in Deity with the Father. And this St. Paul to the Hebrews doth more at large set forth. And as I have by the Scriptures joyned these two Scriptures together, so am I able to do in all other Articles of Faith which we ought to believe, and by the manifest Word of God to expound them.

Len. How can that be, seeing St. Paul saith, That the lesser killeth, but it is the spirit that giveth life.

Phil. St. Paul meaneth not the Word of God written, in it self killeth, which is the Word of life, and faithful testimony of the Lord; but that the Word is unprofitable and killeth him that is void of the Spirit of God, although he be the wisest man of the world, and therefore St. Paul said, That the Gospel to some was a savour of life unto life, and to some other a savour of death unto death. Also an example hereof we have in the sixth of John, of them who hearing the Word of God without the Spirit were offended thereby; wherefore Christ said, The flesh profiteth nothing, it is the spirit that quickeneth.

Lord. What? do you understand that of St. Paul and of St. John to?

Phil. It is not mine own interpretation, it is agreeable to the Word in other places; and I have learned the same of ancient Fathers interpreting it likewise. And to the Corinthians it is written, Animalis homo non percipit ea quae sunt Spiritus Dei; spiritualis judicatur omnia. The natural man perceiveth not the things that be of the Spirit of God, but the spiritual man which is induced with the spirit judgeth all things.

Lord. You see, my Lords, that this man will have his own mind, and will wilfully cast away himself. I am sorry for him.

Phil. The words that I have spoken be none of mine but the Gospel, whereon I ought to stand. And if you my Lord of London can bring better Authority for the Faith you will draw me unto, than that which I stand upon, I will gladly hear the same by you or by any other in this Realm.

Anno 1555. Id. Philpot request to the Lords. Wherefore I kneeling down besought the Lords to be good unto me a poor Gentleman, that would raise live in the world if I might, and testify as you have heard me to say this day, that if any man can prove that I ought to be of any other manner of Faith then that of which I now am, and can prove the same sufficiently, I will be neither wilful, neither desperate, as my Lord of London would make you believe me to be.

Rich. What Country man be you? are you of the Philpots of Hampshire.

Phil. Yes, my Lord, I was Sir P. Philpot's Son of Hampshire.

Rich. He is my near kinsman; wherefore I am the more sorry for him.

Phil. I thank your Lordship that it pleaseth you to challenge kindred of a poor Prisoner.

Rich. In Faith I would go an hundred miles on my bare feet to do you good.

Chamb. He may do well enough if he list.

St. John. Mr. Philpot, you are my Countryman, and I would be glad you should do well.

Rich. You said even now, that you would desire to maintain your belief before ten of the best in the Realm. You did not well to compare with the Nobility of the Realm. But what if you have ten of the best in the Realm to hear you, will you be tried by them?

Phil. My Lord your Lordship mistaketh me to think that I challenge ten of the best of the Nobility in this Realm. It was no part of my mind, but I meant of the best Learned on the contrary side.

Rich. Well, I take your meaning: what if means be made to the Queens Majesty, that you shall have your request, will you be judged by them?

Phil. My Lord, it is not meet that a man should be judged by his Adversaries.

Rich. By whom then would you be judged?

Phil. I will make your Honors judges, that shall be hearers of us.

Rich. I dare be bold to procure for you of the Queens Majesty that you shall have ten Learned men to reason with you, and twenty or forty of the Nobility to hear, so you will promise to abide their judgement. How say you, that you promise here afore my Lords to do?

Phil. I will be contented to be judged by them.

R. Yes, but will you promise to agree to their judgment?

Phil. There be causes why I may not so do, unless I were sure they would judge according to the Word of God.

Rich. O, I perceive you will have no man judge but your self, and think your self wiser then all the Learned men in this Realm.

Phil. My Lord, I seek not to be mine own judge, but am content to be judged by other, so that the order of judgment in matters of Religion be kept that was in the primitive Church, which is, first that Gods will by his Word was fought, and therunto both the Spiritual and Temporality was gathered together, and gave their contents and judgment, and such kind of judgment I will stand to.

Lord. My Lords he would make you believe that he were profoundly seen in ancient writers of the judgments of the Primitive Church, and there was never any such manner of judgment used as he now talketh of.

Phil. In the Epistles of St. Cyprian I am able to shew it you.

Lord. Ah, I tell you there is no such thing; fetch me Cyprian's letter.

Phil. You shall find it otherwise when the Book cometh. And Doctor Chedsey his Chaplain (whom he appointed to fetch his Book) whispered the Bishop in his ear, and fetcht not the Book, by likelyhood that he should have sustained the reproach thereof if the Book had been fetcht. Well my Lord, quoth I, Mr. Doctor knoweth it is so, or else he would have fetcht the Book ere this.

Rich. You would have none other judge, I see, but the Word.

Phil. Yes my Lord: I will be tried by the Word, and by such as will judge according to the Word. As for an example, if there were a controversy between your Lordship and another upon the words of a Statute, must not the words of the Statute judge and determine the controversy?

Rich. No marry, the Judges of the Law may determine of the meaning thereof.

Lord. He hath brought as good an example against himself as can be.

And here the Bishop thought he had good handfast against me, and therefore enlarged it with many words to the judgment of the Church.

The Lords. He hath overthrown himself by his own argument.

Phil. My Lords, it seemeth to your Honors that you have great advantage of me by the example I brought in, to express my cause, but if it be pondered thoroughly, it maketh wholly with me, and nothing against me, as my Lord of London hath pretended. For I will ask of my Lord Rich here whom I know to have good knowledge in the Laws and Statutes of this Realm, albeit a Judge may discern the meaning of a Statute agreeable to the words, whether the same may judge a meaning contrary to the express words or no?

Rich. He cannot so do.

Phil. Even so say I, that no man ought to judge the Word of God to have a meaning contrary to the express words thereof, as this false Church of Rome doth in many things; and with this the Lords seemed to be satisfied, and made no further replication herein.

Rich. I marvel then why you do deny the express words of Christ in the Sacrament, saying, This is my Body, and yet you will not stick to say it is not his Body. Is not God Omnipotent? and is not he able as well by his Omnipotency to make it his Body, as he was to make man flesh of a piece of Clay? Did not he say; This is my Body which shall be betrayed for you? and was not his very Body betrayed for us? therefore it must needs be his Body.

Lord. My Lord Rich, you have said wonderful well and learnedly. But you might have begun with him before also in the 6. of John, where Christ promised to give his Body in the Sacrament of the Altar, saying, Panem quem ego dabo caro mea est; The Bread which I will give is my flesh. How can you answer to that?

Phil. If it please you to give me leave to answer first my Lord Rich. I will also answer this Objection.

Rich. Answer my Lord London first, and after come to me.

Phil. My Lord of London may be soon answered, that the saying of S. John is, that the humanity of Christ, which he took upon him for the redemption of man, is the Bread of Life, whereby our Bodies and Souls be sustained to eternal Life, of the which the Sacramental Bread is a lively representation and an effectual participation, to all such as believe on his passion. And as Christ said in the same sixth of John, I am the Bread that came down from Heaven; but yet he is not material neither natural Bread: Likewise the Bread is his flesh, not natural or substantial, but by signification, and by grace in the Sacrament.

And now to my Lord Riches Argument. I do not deny the express words of Christ in the Sacrament, This is my Body, but I deny that they are naturally and corporally to be taken: they must be taken sacramentally and spiritually, according to the express declaration of Christ, saying that the words of the Sacrament which the Catholics took carnally, as the Papists now do, ought to be taken spiritually and not carnally, as they fallily imagine, not weighing what interpretation Christ hath made in this behalf, neither following the intimation of Christ, neither the use of the Apostles and of the primitive Church, who never taught, neither declared any such carnal manner of presence as is now exacted of us violently without any ground of Scripture or antiquity, who used to put out of the Church all such as did not receive the Sacrament with the right, and also to burn that which was left after the receiving, as by the Canon of the Apostles, and by the decree of the Council of Antioch may appear.

Lord. No, that is not so; they were only Catechumens which went out of the Church at the celebration of the Communion, and none other.

Phil. It was not only of such as were Novices in Faith but all others that did not receive.

Lord. What say you to the Omnipotency of God? is not he able to perform that which he saith, as my Lord Rich, hath very well said? I tell thee, that God by his Omnipotency may make himself to be this Carpet if he will.

B. Bower triumphs because the victory. As a Judge of the Law may not discern the meaning of a Statute otherwise than agreeable to the words, so such the Church no power to judge the meaning of Gods Word contrary as he fell.

the words of the Scripture are not to be taken as his Body.

The place John 6. expounded, (The bread that I will give is my flesh, &c.) Answer to the Lord Riches Objection, Papists convert themselves to the Catholics, transubstantiation hath neither ground of Scripture, nor Antiquity.

John Philpot will not be judged by his Adversaries, but by the hearers, so far as they shall judge by Gods Word.

The true order of judgment used in the primitive Church.

B. Bower bewrays his own ignorance.

B. Bower dares not reach out his Book.

Phil. As concerning the Omnipotency of God, I say that God is able to do (as the Prophet David saith) whatsoever he willeth; but he willeth nothing that is not agreeable to his Word; as that is blasphemy which my Lord of London hath spoken, that God may become a Carpet. For as I have learned of ancient Writers? Nom potest Deus facere quæ sunt naturæ sue contraria. That is, God cannot do that which is contrary to his nature, as it is contrary to the nature of God to be a Carpet. A Carpet is a Creature; and God is the Creator; and the Creator cannot be the Creature: wherefore unless you can declare by the word, that Christ is otherwise present with us then spiritually and Sacramentally by grace, as he hath taught us, you pretend the Omnipotency of God in vain.

Lord. Why? Wilt thou not say that Christ is really present in the Sacrament? Or do you deny it?
Phil. I deny not that Christ is really in the Sacrament to the receiver thereof according to Christ's institution.
Lord. What mean you by really present?
Phil. I mean by really present, present indeed.
Lord. Is God really present every where?
Phil. He is so.

Lord. How prove you that?
Phil. The Prophet Esaï saith, That God filleth all places: and wherefore there be two or three gathered together in Christ's name, there is he in the midst of them.
Lord. What? his humanity?
Phil. No my Lord, I mean the Deity, according to that you demanded.

Rich. My Lord of London, I pray you let Mr. Doctor Chedsey reason with him, and let us see how he can answer him, for I tell thee he is a learned man indeed, and one that I do credit before a great many of you, whose Doctrine the Queens Majesty and the whole Realm doth well allow, therefore hear him.

Lord. My Lords I pray you, will it please you to drink? you have talked a great while, and much talk is thirsty. I will leave Mr. Doctor and him reasoning together a while, with your leave, and will come to you by and by again. He went (as I suppose) to make room for more drink, after the Lords had drunken.

Rich. My Lord Rich said to the Lords, I pray you let the poor man drink, for he is thirsty, and with that he called for a Cup of drink, and gave it me, and I drank before all: God requite it him, for I was a thirst indeed. Afterwards Dr. Chedsey began in this wise, making a great process, of the which this is the effect.

Ched. Mr. Philpot findeth fault with the Convocation house before your Lordships, that he hath lain thus long in Prison, and that he had there a dozen Arguments, whereof he could not be suffered to prosecute one thoroughly, which is not so; for he had leave to say what he could, and was answered to as much as he was able to bring and when he had nothing else to say, he fell to weeping. I was there present and can testify thereof; albeit there is a Book abroad of the report of the disputation to the contrary, in the which there is never a true word. And whereas you require to be satisfied of the Sacrament, I will shew you the Truth thereof, both by the Scriptures, and by the Doctors.

Phil. It is a shrewd likelihood that you will not conclude with any Truth, since you have begun with so many untruths, as to say that I was answered whiles I had any thing to say, and that I wept for lack of matter to say, and that the Book of the report of the disputation is nothing true. God be praised, there were a good many of Noblemen, Gentlemen, and worshipful men that heard and saw the doings thereof, which can testify that you here have made an unjust report before these honorable Lords. And that I wept, was not for lack of matter, as you slander me; for I thank God, I have more matter then the best of you all shall ever be able to answer, as little learning as I have: but my weeping was, as Christ was upon Jerusalem, seeing the destruction that should fall upon her? and I foreseeing then the destruction which you (through violence and unrighteousness which you there declared) would work against the true Church of Christ and her faithful Members, as this day beareth witness, was compelled to weep in remembrance of that which I with infinity more have felt and shall feel.

All these words I did then speak out, being interrupted by my Lord Rich, saying that I should suffer him to proceed out in this matter, and afterwards I should have leisure to answer him in every Article. But he promised more then he could perform, as the end did well declare, for he had not the consent of the Spirituality to his promise, which now Rule the roost. God shorten their cruel days, for his Elects sake. And therefore I add this, which I had purposed to have spoken, if then I might have been suffered, left any that perfectly know not the things done in the Convocation-house and now laid to my charge if they should not be answered by me, might reckon Dr. Chedsey's sayings to be true. And as concerning the Book of the report of the disputations, I wrote the same, and it is true in every Argument, as Mr. Dean of Recheſter, and Mr. Cheyney Archdeacon of Hereford (yet being alive, and within the Realm) can testify.

Ched. You have of Scriptures the four Evangelists for the probation of Christ's real presence to be in the Sacrament after the words of Consecration, with St. Paul to the Corinthians; which all say, Hoc est corpus meum, This is my Body. They say not as you would have me to believe, this is not the Body. But specially the 6. of John proveth the same most manifestly, where Christ promised to give his Body, which he performed in his last Supper, as it appeareth by these words, Panis quem ego dabo, caro mea est, quam ego dabo pro mundi vita, The Bread which I will give is my flesh, which I will give for the life of the World.

Phil. My Lord Rich, with your leave, I must needs interrupt him a little, because he speaketh upon blasphemy against the death of Christ: for if that promise brought in by St. John, was performed by Christ in his last Supper, then needed he not to have died after he had given the Sacrament.

Rich. Let Mr. Doctor make an end of his Arguments, and afterward object to him what you can.

Ched. You must note that there is twice Dabo in this saying of St. John, and the first is referred to the Sacrament of the Altar; and the second to the Sacrifice upon the Cross: and besides these manifest Scriptures, there be many ancient Doctors proving the same, as Ignatius, Irenæus, and S. Cyprian (whose Authority he recited at large) which I do omit because I was not permitted to answer the same.

Rich. Now answer, and object to him what you can, and you shall be heard.

Phil. My Lord, the chiefest ground whereon he with the rest of his side do ground themselves against us, be these words, This is my Body, with a false pretence of the Omnipotency of God. And before I will come to the particular answers of all that he hath alledged, for that your Lordships may the better understand me, what I mean, and whereupon I stand, I will first require Mr. Doctor to answer me one question. But first of all I do protest to your Honors that I think as reverently of the Sacrament, as a Christian man ought to do, and that I acknowledge the Sacrament of the Body and Blood of Christ, ministered after Christ's institution, to be one of the greatest treasures and comforts that he left us on the Earth: and contrarywise it is most discomfort and abominable, not being ministered as it ought to be, as it is used now adays. And now to my question, which is this: whether these words only Hoc est corpus meum, This is my Body, spoken by a Priest over the Bread and Wine, may make the Body and Blood of Christ, as you suppose or no?

Ched. Staggering what he might say, at last he said, that these words alone, pronounced by the Priest, be sufficient to make the Bread and the Wine the very Body and Blood of Christ really.

Phil. That is blasphemous to say, and against all the Scriptures and Doctors, who affirm that the form and substance in Consecration must be observed which is used and did institute, as S. Cyprian saith, In sacrificio quod Christus est, non nisi Christus sequendus: In rite (this is my Body) make a real presence. Cyp. lib. 2. And by the Law it is forbidden to add or take away from Gods Word. And Saint Peter saith, If any man speak let him speak as the Word of God. Wherefore whosoever saith that these words only, This is my Body, do make a presence of Christ, without Bless, Take, and Eat, which Anno be three as substantial points of the Sacrament, as, This is my Body, he is highly deceived.

1555. Therefore St. Augustine saith, Accedit verbum ad elementum & fit Sacramentum; Let the word be joyned to the element, and it becometh a Sacrament: So that if the entire words of Christs Institutions be not observed in the ministrat[i]on of a Sacrament, it is no Sacrament; as the sacrifices which the Ten tribes did offer at Beisbel to God, were not acceptable, because they were not in all points done according to Gods Word. Wherefore except blessing be made after the Word (which is a due thanksgiving for our redemption in Christ) and also a shewing forth of the Lords death in such wise as the Congregation may be edified? and moreover a taking and eating after Christs Commandment? except (I say) these three parts be first performed (which is not done in the Mass) these words This is my Body, which are last placed in the institution of the Lords Supper, cannot be verified. For Christ commanded as well. Take ye, Eat ye, as This is my Body.

Christ said, Take, Eat, this is my Body, and not, take ye, Eat ye.

Mr Doctor taken with the manner.

Philpot. No did, Master Doctor? Be not these the words of Christ Accipite, manducate? and do not these words in the plural number signifie, Take ye, Eat ye, and not take thou, Eat thou, as you would suppose?

Ched. I grant it is as you say.

Phil. Likewise of consecrancy, you (M. Doctor) must needs deny, which you have said, that these words, This is my Body, being only spoken, be sufficient to make the Body and Blood of Christ in the Sacrament, as you have untruly said.

Lond. Then came in the Bishop again and said, what is it that you would have M. Doctor deny?

Phil. My Lord, M. Doctor hath affirmed that these words, This is my Body, spoken by the Priest, only do make the Sacrament.

The words of Christ (This is my Body) except a Priest speak them make no body.

Lond. Indeed if M. Bridges should speak these words over the Bread and Wine, they would be of none effect: but if a Priest speak them after a due manner, they are effectual, and make a real Body.

Phil. M. Doctor hath said otherwise.

Lond. I think you mistake him; for he meant of the words duly pronounced.

Phil. Let him revoke that he hath granted, and then will I begin again with that which before was said; that, This is my Body, hath no place, except, bless, take, and Eat, duly go before. And therefore because the same words do not go before, This is my Body, but preposterously follow in your Sacrament of the Mass, it is not the Sacrament of Christ, neither hath Christ in it present.

Ched. If, This is my Body only do not make the Sacrament, no more do, bless, take, and Eat.

Phil. I grant that the one without the other cannot make the Sacrament. And it can be no Sacrament unless the whole action of Christ doth concur together according to the first Institution.

Ched. Why, then you would not have it to be the Body of Christ, unless it be received?

Sacraments without their use be no Sacraments.

Phil. No verily, it is not the very Body of Christ to any other, but such as condignly receive the same after his Institution.

Lond. Is not a Loaf a Loaf, being set on the Table though no Body eat thereof?

Phil. It is not like my Lord; for a Loaf is a Loaf before it be set on the Table: but so is not the Sacrament a perfect Sacrament before it be duly ministrated at the Table of the Lord.

Lond. I pray you, what is it in the mean while, before it is received?

Phil. It is, my Lord, the sign begun of a holy thing, and yet no perfect Sacrament until it be received. For in the Sacrament there be two things to be considered, the sign, and the thing it self, which is Christ and his whole passion; and it is that to none but to such as worthily receive the holy signs of Bread and Wine, according to Christs Institution.

The Sacrament without receiving, is no Sacrament.

Wind. There were never any that denied the words of Christ as you do. Did not he say, This is my Body?

Phil. My Lord, I pray you be not deceived. We do not deny the words of Christ: but we say, these words be of none effect, being spoken otherwise than Christ did institute them in his last Supper. For an example: Christ biddeth the Church to baptize in the name of the Father, of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost: if a Priest say these words over the water, and there be no Child to be baptized, these words only pronounced do not make Baptism. And again; Baptism is only Baptism to such as be baptized, and to none other standing by.

L. Chamb. I pray you, my Lord, let me ask him one question. What kind of presence in the Sacrament (duly ministrated according to Christs Ordinance) do you allow?

Phil. If any come worthily to receive, then do I confess the presence of Christ wholly to be with all the fruits of his Passion, unto the said worthy Receiver, by the Spirit of God, and that Christ is thereby joyned to him and he to Christ.

L. Chamb. I am answered.

Lond. My Lords, take no heed of him, for he goeth about to deceive you. His similitude that he bringeth in of Baptism, is nothing like to the Sacrament of the Altar. For if I should say to Sir John Bridges bring with me at Supper, and having a fat Capon, Take, eat, this is of a Capon, although he eat not thereof, is it not a Capon still? And likewise of a piece of Beef, or of a Cup of Wine; if I say, Drink, this is a Cup of Wine, is it not so, because he drinketh not thereof?

My Lord is better skilled in a fat Capon, than in Christs Sacrament.

Phil. My Lord, your similitudes be too gross for so high mysteries as we have in hand, as if I were your equal I could more plainly declare, and there is much more dissimilitude between common meats and drinks, than there is between Baptism and the Sacrament of the Body and Blood of Christ. Like must be compared to like, and spiritual things with spiritual, and not spiritual things with corporal things. And meats and drinks be of their own natures good or evil, and your words, commending or discommending, do but declare what they are. But the Sacraments be to be considered according to the word which Christ spake of them, of the which, Take ye, and eat ye, be some of the chief, concurrent to the making of the same, without the which there can be no Sacraments: and therefore in Greek, the Sacrament of the Body and Blood of Christ is called εὐχαριστία, i. Communion, and likewise in the Gospel Christ commanded, saying, Dividite inter vos, i. Divide it among you.

Ched. St. Paul calleth it a Communion.

Phil. That doth more expressly shew, that there must be a participation of the Sacrament together.

Lond. My Lords, I am sorry I have troubled you so long with this obstinate man, with whom we can do no good; I will trouble you no longer now: and with that the Lords rose up, none of them saying any evil word unto me, half amazed, in my judgment, God work it to good. Thus endeth the sixth part of this Tragedy: The seventh look for with joy.

You are too weak, my Lord, you may rise when ye will.

The seventh Examination of John Philpot, had the nineteenth of November, before the Bishops of London and Rochester, the Chancellor of Lichfield, and D. Chedley.

Lond. Sirrah, come hither. How chance you come no sooner? Is it well done of you to make Mr. Chancellor and me to tarry for you this hour? By the Faith of my body, half an hour before Mass, and half an hour even at Mass, looking for your coming.

Another calling of the Bishop.

Philpot. My Lord, it is not unknown to you that I am a Prisoner, and that the doors be shut upon me, and I cannot come when I list; but as soon as the doors of my Prison were open, I came immediately.

Lond. We sent for thee to the intent thou shouldst have come to Mass. How say you, would you have come to Mass or no, if the doors had sooner been opened?

Phil. My Lord, that is another manner of question.

Lond. Le, Mr. Chancellor, I told you we should have a froward Fellow of him; he will answer directly to nothing. I have had him before both the Spiritual Lords and Temporal, and thus he saith still; yet he reckoneth himself better learned than all the Realm. Yea, before the Temporal Lords, the other day, he was so foolish to challenge the best: he would make himself learned, and is a very ignorant fool indeed.

You fall before he was learned.

Phil. I reckon, I answered your Lordship before the Lords plain enough.

Lond.

Lord. Why answerest thou not directly, whether thou wouldst have gone to Mass or no, if thou hadst come in time?

Phil. Mine answer shall be thus, that, if your Lordship can prove your Mass, whereunto you would have me to come, to be the true service of God, whereunto a Christian ought to come, I will afterward come with a good will.

Note how insubstantially
Mr. Zuer
proveh the Mass.

Lord. Look I pray you: the King and the Queen, and all the Nobility of the Realm do come to Mass, and yet he will not. By my Faith thou art well handled: thou shalt be worse handled hereafter, I warrant thee.

Phil. If to lie in a blind Cole-house, may be counted good handling, both without fire and candle, then may it be said, I am well handled. Your Lordship hath Power to intreat my Body as you list.

Lord. Thou art a Fool, and a very ignorant Fool. Master Chancellor, in good Faith I have handled him and his fellows with as much gentleness as they can desire. Let their Friends come unto them to relieve them. And wot you what? the other day they had gotten themselves up into the top of the Leads with a many of Prentices, gazing abroad as though they had been at liberty; but I will cut off your resort: and as for the Prentices, they were as good not to come to you, if I take them:

Phil. My Lord, we have no such resort to us as your Lordship imagineth, and there cometh very few unto us. And of Prentices I know not one, neither have we any Leads to walk on over our Cole-house, that I wot of: wherefore your Lordship hath mistaken your mark.

Lord. Nay: now you think (because my Lord Chancellor is gone) that we will burn no more: yes I warrant thee, I will dispatch you shortly, unless you do recant.

Phil. My Lord, I had not thought that I should have been alive now, neither so raw as I am, but well rosted to alhes.

Chan. Cast not your self wilfully away Mr. Philpot. Be content to be ruled by my Lord here, and by other Learned men of this Realm, & you may do well enough.

Mr. Philpot saith that upon his Conscience and the fear of God.

Phil. My Conscience beareth record that I seek to please God, and that the love and fear of God causeth me to do as I do: and I were of all other Creatures most miserable, if for mine own will only I do lose all the commodities I might have in this life, and afterward be cast to damnation. But I am sure, it is not my will whereon I stand, but Gods will, which will not suffer me to be cast away, I am sure.

Chan. You are not so sure, but you may be deceived.

Mr. Zuer
proceedeth
Ex officio with Mr.
Philpot.

Lord. Well, since thou wilt not be conformable by fair means I will proceed against thee Ex officio, and therefore hearken here to such Articles as I have here written, and I charge thee to make answer to them. And with that he read a Libel which he had in his hand of divers Articles, and when he had done, he bad me answer.

Two Ur-truchs in the Bishops Articles.

Phil. Your libel, my Lord, containeth in sum two special points: The first pretendeth, that I should be of your Diocese, and therefore your Lordship, upon divers suspects and infamies of Heresie going upon me, is moved to proceed against me by your Ordinary office; the which first is not true, for that I am not of your Lordships Diocese, as the Libel doth pretend. And the second is, that I being Baptized in the Catholick Church, and in the Catholick Faith, am gone from them, the which is not so, for I am of that Catholick Faith and Church as I was baptized unto.

Lord. What? art thou not of my Diocese? where are ye now I pray you?

Phil. My Lord, I cannot deny but I am in your Cole-house, which is your Diocese: yet I am not of your Diocese.

Lord. You were sent hither unto me by the Queens Majesties Commissioners, and thou art now in my Diocese: wherefore I will proceed against thee as thy Ordinary.

John Philpot
challengeth the privi-
ledge of his Ordinarie
right.

Phil. I was brought hither through violence, and therefore my present being now in your Diocese is not enough to abridge me of mine own Ordinary's Jurisdiction neither maketh it me willingly subject to your Jurisdiction since it cometh by force, and by such men as had no just Authority so to do; no more than a Sanctuary man, being by force brought forth of his place of privilege, doth thereby lose his privilege, but always may challenge the same whereforever he be brought.

Chan. Hath not the Queens Majesty authority, by her Commissioners, to remove your Body whither she will? and ought you not to obey herein?

Phil. I grant that the Queens Majesty (of her just Power) may transpose my Body, whither it shall please her Grace to command the same. But yet by your Laws Spiritualia non sunt subiecta Imperatoris potestati. i. Spiritual causes be not subject to the Temporal Power. As for example; You Mr. Doctor, if the Queens Majesty would appoint two temporal men to be judges over you in certain spiritual matters, might not you allege the privilege of a Clerk, and demand competent Spiritual judges in your causes?

Lord. Doth not a man (I pray you) forisiri forum ratione delicti?

Phil. My Lord, your rule is true in Temporal matters, but in Spiritual causes it is not so: which be otherwise privileged.

Lord. What list thou then to the second Article, and to the other?

Phil. My Lord, I say that I am not bound to answer the second, neither the rest, unless the first be proved.

Lord. Well, suppose the first may be proved, as it will be, what will you say then to the second, that you are not of the same Catholick Faith, neither of the same Church now, as you were baptized in?

Phil. I am of the same Catholick Faith, and of the same Catholick Church which is of Christ, the Pillar and establishment of Truth.

Lord. Nay that you are not.

Phil. Yes that I am.

Lord. Your Godfathers and Godmothers were of another Faith then you be now.

Phil. I was not baptized either into my Godfathers Faith or my Godmothers, but into the Faith and into the Church of Christ.

Lord. How know you that?

Phil. By the Word of God, which is the Touchstone of Faith, and the limits of the Church.

Lord. How long hath your Church stood I pray you?

Phil. Even from the beginning, from Christ and from his Apostles, and from their immediate Successors.

Chan. He will prove his Church to be before Christ.

Phil. If I did so I go not amiss: for there was a Church before the coming of Christ, which maketh one Catholick Church.

Chan. It is so indeed.

Phil. I will define no better rule then the same which is oftentimes brought in of your side, to prove both my Faith and the Catholick Church; that is, Antiquity, Universality, and Unity.

Lord. Do you not see what a bragging foolish fellow this is? He would seem to be very well seen in the Doctors, and he is but a Fool. By what Doctor art thou able to prove thy Church? Name him, and thou shalt have him.

Phil. My Lord, let me have all your ancient writers, with pen, and ink, and paper, and I will prove both my Faith and my Church out of every one of them.

Lord. No that thou shalt not have. You shall see how he lieth. S. Cyprian saith, There must be one High Priest, to the which the residue must obey, and they will allow no Head, neither Vicar general.

Phil. S. Cyprian saith not, that there should be a Vicar general overall. For in his Book De simplicitate Prelatorum, I am sure he faith the contrary. Unus Episcopus est, cuius pars in solidum a singulis tenetur. i. There is but one Bishoprick, which is wholly possessed of every Bishop in part.

Lord. Yet hither the Book, thou shalt fee the manifest place against thee.

Doctor Chedsey brought the Book, and turned to the place in an Epistle written unto Cornelius, then Bishop of Rome, and recited these words in sum That it went not well with the Church, where the high Priest was not obeyed, and so would have concluded for the confirmation of the Bishops saying.

Phil. Mr. Doctor you misconstrue the place of S. Cyprian: for he meaneth not there by the high Priest, the Bishop of Rome, but every Patriarch in his precinct, of whom there were four appointed in his time. And in writing

Anto 1555.

Spiritual things are not subject to temporal Powers, and therefore the temporal Commissioners had no power to remove him into another mans Diocese.

A man is not baptized into his Godfathers Faith, nor his Godmothers Faith, but into the Faith of Christ.

John Philpot proveth his Church to be from Christ.

No rule better than Antiquity, Universality, and Unity, to prove the true Faith and Church of the Protestants.

Because you dare not.

S. Cyprian meaneth every Church to have his own Governor, not all Churches to be under one.

Cyp. lib. 1. Epist. 3.

The place of S. Cyprian explained.

unty

Anno 1555. unto Cornelius he meaneeth by the high Priest, himself, which was then chief Bishop of Africa, whose Authority the Hereticks began to despise. Whereof he complaineth to Cornelius, and faith, the Church cannot be well ordered, where the chief Minister by order after the judgment of the Scriptures, after the agreement of the People and the content of his fellow Bishops, is not obeyed.

Discoler. London. Hath not the Bishop of Rome always been supreme head of the Church, and Christs vicar in earth even from Peter?

The Bishop of Rome no more head of the Church, then the B. of London.

Peter had no more Authority over the Church then every one of the Apostles had.

Philos. I grant that the Bishop of Rome, as he is the successor of Peter, hath the same Authority as Peter had: but Peter had no more Authority then every one of the Apostles had.

Chanc. Yes that S. Peter had; for Christ said specially unto him, Tibi dabo claves regni caelorum; I will give thee the keys of the Kingdom of Heaven; the which he spake to none other of his disciples singularly, but to him.

Phil. S. Augustine answered otherwise to the objection, and faith, That if in Peter there had not been the figure of the Church, the Lord had not said to him, To thee I will give the keys of the Kingdom of Heaven. The which if Peter received not, the Church hath them not. If the Church hath them, then Peter hath them not.

London. What if I can prove and shew you out of the Civil Law, that all Christendome ought to follow the Holy Catholick Church of Rome; as there is a special title thereof, De catholica fide & sancta Romana Ecclesia?

Phil. That is nothing material, seeing the things of God be not subject to mans laws; and the divine matters must be ordered by the Word of God, and not of man.

A Doctor. What will you say if I can prove that Christ builded his Church upon Peter, and that out of S. Cyprian? Will you then believe that the B. of Rome ought to be supreme head of the Church?

Phil. I know what S. Cyprian writeth in that behalf; but he meaneeth nothing as you take it.

A Doctor. S. Cyprian hath these words, Quod super Petrum fundata fuit Ecclesia, tanquam super originem unitatis, That upon Peter was builded the Church, & upon the first beginning of Unity.

Philos. He declareth that in an example, that Unitie must be in the Church; he grounded on Peter his Church alone, and not upon men. The which he doth more manifestly declare in the book De simplicitate Praelatorum, saying, In persona unus Christus dedit omnibus claves, ut omnium unitatem denotaret. In the person of one man God gave the keys to all; that be in signification thereby might declare the unitie of all men.

A Doctor. What will you understand S. Cyprian so? That were good indeed.

Philos. I think you cannot understand S. Cyprian better, then he doth declare himself.

London. I will desire you (Mr. Chancellor) to take some pains with Mr. D. Chadsey, about his examination, for I must go to the Parliament house. And I will desire you to dine with me.

Phil. Then the Doctor took again his former Authority in hand for want of another, and would have made a further circumstance, digressing from his purpose. To whom I said, he knew not whereabouts he went, and therewith he laughed. And I said his divinitie was nothing but scoffing.

Mr. Doctor. Yea, then I have done with you, and so slipped away.

Phil. You are too young in Divinitie to teach me in the matters of my Faith. Though you be learned in other things more then I, yet in Divinitie I have been longer practised then you, for any thing I can hear of you; therefore be not too hafty to judge that you do not perfectly know.

Chanc. Peter and his successors from the beginning have been allowed for the supreme head of the Church, and that by the Scriptures, for that Christ said unto him in S. John thrice, Feed my sheep, Pasce oves meas.

Philos. That is no otherwise to be taken, then, lie, praedicare, Go ye and preach, which was spoken to all the Apostles, as well as unto Peter. And that Christ said thrice, Pasce oves meas, Feed my sheep, it signifieth nothing else but the earnest study that the Ministers of God ought to have in preaching the Word: God grant that you of the Clergy would weigh your dutie in this behalf more then you do. Is this a just interpretation of the Scripture, to take Pasce oves meas, for to be Lord of the whole World? In this mean while came in the Bachelor of Divinitie, which is a Reader of Greek in Oxford, belonging to the Bishop, and he took upon him to help Mr. Chancellor.

Scholar. What will you say if I can shew you a Greek Author called Theophylact, to interpret it so? Will you believe his interpretation?

Phil. Theophyl. is a late Writer, and one that was a favourer of the B. of Rome; and therefore not to be credited, since his interpretation is contrarie to the manifest words of the Scripture, and contrary to the determination of many general Councils.

Scholar. In what general Council was it otherwise, that the B. of Rome was not supreme head over all?

Phil. In Nice Council I am sure it was otherwise; for to Nicomachus Arbanusius was there the chief Bishop and president of the Council, and not the B. of Rome.

Scholar. Nay that is not so.

Phil. Then I perceive you are better seen in words then in knowledge of things: and I will gage with you what you will, it is so, as you may see in the Epitome of the Councils.

Scholar. I will fetch Eusebius and shew the contrary, and the book of general Councils. He went into my Lords closet, and brought Eusebius; but the general Councils he brought not, saying (for favouring of his honesty) that he could not come by them, and there he would have defended that it was otherwise in Eusebius, but was not able to shew the same, and so thrank away confounded.

Chanc. The Church of Rome hath been always taken for the Catholick Church; therefore I would advise you to come into the same with us. You see all the men of this Realm do condemn you. And why will you be so singular?

Phil. I have said, and still do say, that if you can be able to prove it unto me, that I will be of the same. But I am sure that the Church, which you make so much of, is a false Church, and a Synagogue of Satan. And you with the learned men of the Realm do persecute the true Church, and condemn such as be more righteous then you.

Chanc. Do you hear (Mr. Doctor) what he saith, that the Church of Rome is the Devil?

Chad. I wish you did think more reverently of the Church of Rome. What will you say if I can shew you out of S. Austin in his Epistle written unto Pope Innocentius, that the whole general Council of Carthage did allow the Church of Rome to be chiefest over all other?

Phil. I am sure you can shew no such thing. And with that he fet the book of S. Austin, and turned to the Epistle but he could not prove his allegation manifestly, but by conjectures in this wise.

Chad. Here you may see, that the Council of Carthage writing to Innocent, the Bishop, calleth the See of Rome the Apostolick See. And besides this they write to him certifying him of things done in the Council for the condemnation of the Donatists, requiring his approbations in the same, which they would not have done, if they had not taken the Church of Rome for the supreme head of others. And moreover you may see how S. Austin doth prove the Church of Rome to be the Catholick Church by continual succession of the Bishop until his time, which succession we can prove until our daies; therefore by the same reason of S. Austin we say now, that the Church of Rome is the Catholick Church.

Phil. Mr. Doctor, I have considered how you do weigh S. Augustine; and contrary to his meaning and words you would infer your false conclusion. As concerning that it was called by him the Apostolick See, that is not material to prove the Church of Rome now to be the Catholick Church. I will grant it now that it is the Apostolick See, in respect that Paul and Peter did once there preach the Gospel, and abode there for a certain season. I would you could prove it to be the Apostolick See of the true religion and

The word of Christ to Peter, and my deep man, expounded by the Preacher.

Theophylact of no great Authority.

To Nicomachus Arbanusius was there the chief Bishop and president of the Council, and not the B. of Rome.

The scholars of Oxford bristled away.

The Popes side not able to prove the Church to be the holy Catholick Church.

Three mind may be out of the Spittle of Augustine.

How the See of Rome may be called apostolical, and how not apostolical.

The conclusion of the Council of Carthage.

The being of Peter as the head of the whole Church.

and sincerity as the Apostle left it, and did teach the same; the which if ye could do, you might boast of Rome as of the Apostolical See; other wise it is now of no more force, than if the Turk at Antioch and at Jerusalem should boast of the Apostolical Sees, because the Apostles once did there abide, and founded the Church of Christ.

And whereas the whole Council of Carthage did write unto Pope Innocentius, certifying him of that was done in the General Council, and willing him to set his helping hand to the suppressing of the Donatists, as they had done; that fact of the Council proveth nothing the Supremacy of the Bishop of Rome, no more than if the whole Convocation-house now gathered together, and agreeing upon certain Articles, might send the same to some Bishop, that upon certain impediments is not present, willing him to agree thereto, and to set them forth in his Diocels. The which fact doth not make any such Bishop of greater Authority than the rest, because his consent is Brotherly required.

And touching the Succession of the Bishops of Rome, brought in by S. Augustine, it maketh nothing now thereby to prove the same Catholick Church, unless you can conclude with the same reason as S. Augustine doth. And the rehearsal of the succession of the Bishops doth tend to this only, to prove the Donatists to be Heretics, because they began as well at Rome as in Africa, to found another Church of their own setting up, than was grounded by Peter and Paul, and by their Successors, whom he reciteth until his time, which all taught no such Doctrine, neither such Church as the Donatists: And if presently you be able to prove by the Bishops of Rome (whereof you do glory) that such Doctrine hath not been taught by any of the Successors of Peters See, as is now taught and believed of us, you have good reason against us: otherwise it is of no force, as I am able to declare.

Chanc. Well M. Doctor, you see we can do no good in perfwading of him: let us minister the Articles which my Lord hath left us, unto him. How say you M. Philpot to these Articles? M. Johnson I pray you write his Answers.

Phil. M. Chancellor, you have no authority to enquire of me my Belief in such Articles as you go about, for that I am not of my Lord of Londons Diocels; and to be brief with you, I will make no further answer herein than I have already to the Bishop.

Chanc. Why then let us go our ways, and let his Keeper take him away.

Thus endeth the seventh part of this Tragedy.

The Sum of a private Conference or Talk between Mr. Philpot, and the Bishop

Private talk between M. Philpot and Bishop Boner.

Philpot. The next day in the morning betime, the Bishop sent one of his men unto me, to call me up into his Chappell to hear Mass.

Bishop Man. M. Philpot, where be you?

Phil. Who is it that calleth me?

Bishop Man. My Lords will is, you should rise and come to hear Mass: Will you come or no?

Phil. My Stomach is not very good this morning: you may tell my Lord I am sick. After this the Keeper was sent to bring me to my Lord.

The Keeper. Mr. Philpot, you must rise and come to my Lord.

Phil. I am at your commandment (M. Keeper) as soon as I can; and going out of the Prison, he asked me, saying:

The Keeper. Will ye go to Mass?

Phil. My Stomach is too raw to digest such raw meats of flesh, blood, and bone, this morning. After this my Keeper presented me to the Bishop in his Hall.

Lord. Mr. Philpot, I charge you to answer unto such Articles as my Chaplain and my Register have from me to object against you; go and answer them.

Phil. My Lord, Omnia judicium debent esse publica; Anno All Judgments ought to be publick. Therefore if your Lordship have any thing to charge me lawfully withal, let me be in Judgment lawfully and openly called, and I will answer according to my duty; otherwise in corners I will not.

Lord. Thou art a foolish Knave I see well enough, thou shalt answer whether thou wilt or no; Go thy ways with them, I say.

Phil. I will go with them at your Lordships pleasure; but I will make them no further Answers than I have said already.

Lord. No, wilt thou not Knave? Have him away, and set him in the Stocks: What, foolish Knave?

Phil. Indeed (my Lord) you handle me, with others, like Fools: and we must be content to be made fools at your hands, Stocks and Violence be your Bishop-like Alms. You go about by force in corners to oppress, and beamed that your doings should come to light; God shorten your cruel Kingdom for his Mercies sake. And I was put by and by into the Stocks, in an house alone, separate from my Fellows, God be praised that he hath thought me worthy to suffer any thing for his Names sake. Better it is to fit in the Stocks of this world, than to fit in the Stocks of a damnable Conscience.

Another Conference between the Bishop and Mr. Philpot, and other Prisoners.

Philpot. The next day after, an hour before day, the Bishop sent for me again by the Keeper.

The Keeper. Mr. Philpot arise, you must come to my Lord.

Phil. I wonder what my Lord meaneth, that he sendeth for me thus early, I fear he will use some violence towards me, wherefore I pray you make him this answer, That if he did send for me by an order of Law, I will come and answer; otherwise, since I am not of his Diocels, neither is he mine Ordinary, I will not (without I be violently constrained) come unto him.

Keeper. I will tell my Lord what answer you make: and so he went away to the Bishops Men, saying, that I must come whether I would or no.

Phil. If by violence any of you will enforce me to go, then I must go, otherwise I will not; and therewith one of them took me with force by the arm, and led me up into the Bishops Gallery.

Lord. What, Thou art a foolish Knave indeed; thou wilt not come without thou be fetched.

Phil. I am brought indeed (my Lord) by violence unto you, and your cruelty is such, that I am afraid to come before you, I would your Lordship would gently proceed against me by the Law.

Lord. I am blamed of the Lords the Bishops, for that I have not dispatched thee ere this. And in Faith I made sure to my Lord Cardinal, and to all the Convocation, of these things, that they would hear thee. And my Lord of Lincoln stood up, and said, that thou wert a frantick Fellow, and a man that will have the last word. And they all have much blamed me, because I have brought thee so often before the Lords openly: and they say, it is meat and drink to you to speak in an open audience, you glory so of your self. Wherefore I am commanded to take a further order with thee, and in good Faith if you will not relent, I will make no further delay. Marry, if thou wilt be conformable, I will yet forgive thee all that is past, and thou shalt have none hurt for any thing that is already spoken or done.

Phil. My Lord, I have answered you already in this behalf, what I will do. And as for the report of Master White, Bishop of Lincoln, I pass not: who is known to be mine enemy, for that I being Archdeacon did excommunicate him for preaching naughty Doctrine. If Christ my Master were called a mad man, it is no marvel though ye count me frantick.

Lord. Hadst thou not a Pig brought thee the other day with a Knife in it? Wherefore was it (I pray thee) but to kill thy self? or, as it is told me (marry I am counselled to take heed of thee) to kill me? but I fear thee not. I row I am able to tread thee under my feet; do the best thou canst.

Philpot.

The Council of Carthage wrote to Innocentius B. of Rome, to confirm their calls with his fabrication, Arg. the B. of Rome above all Bishops.

The scope of S. Augustines Argument is not to prove the Church of Rome therefore to be found in the Doctrine, because it hath succession of Bishops from the Apostles, but to prove the Donatists to be Schismatics, for that the Church of Rome containing both found in the Doctrine of the Apostles, and also in retaining still succession of Bishops from the Apostles time, yet they would forsake the unity of that Church, and set up another Church of their own.

The Argument is this. To differ from that Church which by continual succession of Bishops descended from the Apostles and keepeth the same Inhabitation still in Faith and Doctrine, is to break the unity of the Church, and to be Schismatics.

The Donatists do so from the Church of Rome, having no just cause of Difference to do so. Ergo, the Donatists be Schismatics.

John Philpot brought to the Bishop by violence.

Non here the just dealings of these Bishops.

This Bishop of Lincoln was Dr. White.

John Philpot being Archdeacon excommunicated Bishop White for preaching false Doctrine.

Anno 1555. Martyr made of a Knife sent to John Philpot in a ship belly.

Philpot. My Lord I cannot deny but that there was a knife in the Piggs belly that was brought me. But who put it in, or for what purpose I know not, unless it were because he that sent the meat, thought I was without a Knife, and so put it in. But other things your Lordship I came to Prison. And touching your own person, you should live long if you should live until I go about to kill you; and I confess by violence your Lordship is able to overcome me.

Articles against John Philpot.

London. I charge thee to answer to mine Articles. Hold him a Book. Thou shalt swear to answer truly to all such Articles, as I shall demand of thee.

Phil. I will first know your Lordship to be mine Ordinary, before I swear herein.

London. What, we shall have an Anabaptist of thee, which thinketh it not lawful to swear before a judge?

Phil. My Lord, I am no Anabaptist, I think it lawful to swear before a competent judge, being lawfully required. But I refuse to swear in these causes before your Lordship, because you are not mine Ordinary.

London. I am thine Ordinary, and here do pronounce by sentence peremptory. that I am thine Ordinary, and that thou art of my Diocess: and here he bad call in more to bear him witness. And I make thee (taking one of his Servants by the arm) to be my notary. And now hearken to my Articles, to the which (when he had read them) he monished me to make answer, and said to the Keeper, Let me his fellows, and I shall make them to be witnesses against him.

False Articles feigned against John Philpot.

In the mean while came in one of the Sheriffs of London, whom the Bishop (calling for two Chairs) placed by him, saying, Master Sheriff I would you should understand how I do proceed against this man. Master Sheriff, you shall hear what Articles this man doth maintain; and so read a rablement of feigned Articles: That I should deny Baptism to be necessary to them that were born of Christian parents, that I denied Fasting and Prayer, and all other good deeds, and I maintained only bare Faith to be sufficient to salvation whatsoever a man did besides, and I maintained God to be the Author of all sin and wickedness.

Phil. Ha, my Lord, have ye nothing of Truth to charge me withal, but ye must be fain to imagine these blasphemous lies against me? You might as well have said I had killed your Father. The scriptures say, That God will destroy all men that speak lies. And is not your Lordship ashamed to say before this worlshipful Gentleman (who is unknown to me) that I maintain these abominable blasphemies which you have rehearsed? which if I did maintain, I were well worthy to be counted an Heretick, and to be burned an hundred times if it were possible.

London. I do object them unto thee, to hear what thou wilt say in them, and how thou canst purge thy self of them.

Phil. Then it was not justly said of your Lordship in the beginning, that I did maintain them, since almost I hold none of these Articles you have read, in form as they are written.

London. How saist thou? Wilt thou answer to them or no?

Phil. I will first know you to be mine Ordinary, and that you may lawfully charge me with such things, and then afterward being lawfully called in judgment, I will shew my mind fully thereof, and not otherwise.

London. Well, then I will make thy Fellows to be witnesses herein against thee? where are they? come.

Keep. They be here my Lord.

London. Come hither Sirs, hold them a Book, you shall swear by the contents of that Book, that you shall (all manner of affections laid apart) say the Truth of all such Articles as you shall be demanded of concerning this man here present, which is a very naughty man, and take you heed of him that he doth not deceive you, as I am afraid he doth you much hurt, and strengtheneth you in your Errors.

Prisoners. My Lord, we will not swear, except we know whereto: we can accuse him of no evil, we have been but a while acquainted with him.

Phil. I wonder your Lordship knowing the Law will go about, contrary to the same, to have infamous persons to be witnesses, for your Lordship doth take them to be Hereticks; and by the Law an Heretick cannot be a witness.

London. Yes, one Heretick against another may be well enough. And Mr. Sheriff, I will make one of them to be a witness against another.

Phil. You have the Law in your hand, and you will do what you list.

Prisoners. No, my Lord.

London. No, will you not? I will make you swear, whether you will or no. I wene they be Anabaptists, Master Sheriff, they think it not lawful to swear before a Judge.

Philpot. We think it lawful to swear for a man judicially called as we are not now, but in a blind corner.

London. Why then, seeing you will not swear against your fellow, you shall swear for your selves, and I do here in the presence of Mr. Sheriff object the same Articles unto you as I have done unto him, and do requite you under the pain of Excommunication, to answer particularly unto every one of them when ye shall be examined, as ye shall be by and by examined by my Register and some of my Chaplains.

Prisoners. My Lord, we will not accuse our selves. If any man can lay any thing against us, we are here ready to answer thereto: otherwise we pray your Lordship not to burthen us; for some of us are here before you, we know no just cause why.

London. Mr. Sheriff, I will trouble you no longer with these forward men. And so he rose up and was going away, talking with Mr. Sheriff.

Phil. Mr. Sheriff, I pray you record how my Lord proceedeth against us in Corners, without all order of Law, having no just cause to lay against us. And after this were all commanded to be put in the Stocks, where I fate from morning untill night, and the Keeper at Night upon favour let me out.

Another Private conference between the Bishop and Philpot in the Cole-house

Phil. The Sunday after, the Bishop came into the Cole-house at night with the Keeper, and viewed the house, saying that he was never here afore: whereby a man may guess how he hath kept Gods Commandment in visiting the Prisoners, seeing he was never with them that have been so nigh his nose: and he came not then for any good zeal but to view the place, and thought it too good for me, and therefore after Supper, between eight and nine, he sent for me, saying,

London. Sir, I have great displeasure of the Queen and the Council for keeping you so long, and letting you have so much liberty; and besides that, you be yonder and strengthen the other Prisoners in their Errors, as I have laid wait for your doings, and am certified of you well enough: I will sequester you therefore from them, and you shall hurt no more as you have done, and I will out of hand dispatch you, as I am commanded, unless you will be a comfortable man.

Phil. My Lord, you have my Body in your custody; you may transport it whither you please: I am content. And I would you would make as quick expedition in my judgment, as you say, I long therefore; and as for Conformity, I am ready to yield to all Truth, if any can bring better then I.

London. Why, will you believe no man but your self, whatsoever they say?

Phil. My belief must not hang upon mens sayings, without sure Authority of Gods Word, the which if any can shew me, I will be pliant to the same; otherwise, I cannot go from my certain Faith to that which is uncertain.

London. Have you then the Truth only?

Phil. My Lord, I will speak my mind freely unto you, and upon no malice I bear to you, before God. You have not the Truth, neither are you of the Church of God; but you persecute both the Truth and the true Church of God, for the which cause you cannot prosper long. You see God doth not prosper your doings according to your expectations: He hath of late shewed his just judgment against one of your greatest doers, who by report died miserably. I envy not your Authority you are in. You that have Learning should know best how to rule. And seeing God hath restored you to your dignity and living again, use the same to Gods glory, and to the setting forth of his true Religion; otherwise it will not continue, do what you can. With this saying he was paused, and said at length:

Lord. That good man was punished for such a thou art. Where is the Keeper? Come let him have him to the place that is provided for him. Go your way before.

Phil. And he followed me, calling the Keeper aside, commanding to keep all men from me, and narrowly to watch me (as the sequel did declare) and brought me to his privy door that goeth into the Church, and commanded two of his men to accompany the Keeper, and to see me placed.

And afterwards I passed through Pauls up to Lollards Tower, and after that turned along all the West-side of Pauls through the Wall and passing through six or seven Doors, came to my lodging through many straits; where I called to remembrance, that strait is the way to Heaven, and it is in a Tower right on the other side of Lollards Tower, as high almost as the Battlements of Pauls, 8 foot of breadth and 13 of length, and almost over the Prison where I was before, having a window opening toward the East, by the which I may look over the tops of a great many houses, but see no man passing into them: and who so walketh in the Bishops utter Gallery going to his Chappel, may see my Window and me standing in the same.

And as I was come to my place, the Keeper plucked off my Gown, and searched me very narrowly, and took away Penner, Inkhorn, Girdle and Knife, but (as God would) I had an inkling a little before I was called, of my removing, and thereupon made an errand to the Stool, where full fore against my will I cast away many a sweet Letter and friendly: but that I had written of my last Examination before, I thrust into my Hofs, thinking the next day to have made an end thereof, and with going it was fallen down to my Leg, the which he by feeling did soon spy, and asked what that was. I said, they were certain Letters: and with that he was very busy to have them out. Let me alone (said I) I will pluck them out; with that I put in my hand, having two other Letters therein, and brought up the same writing to my Coodpiece, and there left it, giving him the other two Letters that were not of any great importance; the which to make a shew that they had been weighty, I began to tear as well as I could, till they snatched them from me, and so deluded him (I thank God) of his purpose.

After this he went his way, and as he was going, one of them that came with him, said, that I did not deliver the Writings I had in my Hofs, but two other Letters I had in my hand before. No dill, quoth he? I will go search him better: the which hearing, conveyed my Examination I had written, into another place besides my Bed, and took all my Letters I had in my purse, and was tearing of them when he came again, and as he came I threw the same out of my Windows, saying, That I heard what he said; wherefore I did prevent his searching again, wherefore I was right glad. God be praised that gave me that present shift to blind their eyes from the knowledge of my writings, the which if they had known, it would have been a great occasion of more stricter keeping and looking unto, although they look as narrowly as they may.

The eighth Examination of John Philpot, before the Bishop of London, the Bishop of St. Davids, Mr. Mordant, and others, in the Bishops Chappel.

The eighth Examination of Mr.
Philpot.

The next day after, my Keeper came before day in the morning to call me down, and so was I brought down into his Wardrobe, where with a Keeper I was left and there continued all the day. But after dinner I was called down into the Chappel, before the Bishop of London, the Bof St. Davids, Mr. Mordant one of the Queens Council, Mr. Archdeacon of London, and before a great many more Baslamites, and the Bishop spake unto me in this wise.

Lord. Sir, here I object and lay unto you in the presence of my Lord of St. Davids, and of Mr. Mordant, and of these worshipful men, these Articles here in this Libel contained, and openly he read them.

To whom when I would particularly have answered to some of his Blaphemies, he would not permit me, but said, I should have leisure enough to say what I would, when he had said: And unto these here I add another Schedule. Also I require thee to answer to the Catechism set forth in the Schismatical time of K. Edward. Also I will thee to answer to certain Conclusions agreed upon both in Oxford and Cambridge. And I here do bring forth these Witnesses against thee in thine own presence, namely my Lord of St. Davids, Mr. Mordant, and Mr. Harpfield, with as many of you as were present in the Disputation he made in the Convocation-house; willing you to testify, of your Oaths taken upon a Book, his stubborn and unrepentant behaviour he did there use against the blessed Sacrament of the Altar. Give me a Book, and receiving one, he opened the same, saying, I will teach him here one trick in our Law which he knoweth not; that is, my Lord of St. Davids, because you are a Bishop, you have this privilege, that you may swear, Insuper Evangelium, & non tactis; By looking on the Gospel Book, without touching of the same. And so he opened the Book in his sight, and shut it again, and caused the other to put their hands on the Book, and took their Oath, and willed them to refer to his Register to make their Depositions when they might be best at leisure; and afterwards he turned to me and said, Now Sir, you shall answer but two words, whether you will answer to these Articles which I have laid unto you, directly, yea or nay?

Phil. My Lord, you have told a long Tale against me, containing many lying Blaphemies, which cannot be answered in two words: besides this, you promised me at the beginning, that I should say what I could for my defence, and now will you not give me leave to speak? What Law is this?

Papists keep no promise.

Lord. Speak, yea or nay, for you shall say no more at this time.

The cause was, as I guess, that he saw so many there gathered to hear.

Phil. Then my two words you would have me speak shall be, that I have appealed from you, and take you not for my sufficient judge.

John Philpot

Boner.

Lord. Indeed, Mr. Mordant, he hath appealed to the King and to the Queen; but I will be so bold with her Majesty, to stay that appeal in mine own hands.

Phil. You will do what you list, my Lord, you have the Law in your hands.

Lord. Wilt thou answer or no?

Philpot. I will not answer otherwise than I have said.

Lord. Register, note his answer that he maketh.

Phil. Knock me on the head with an hatchet, or set up a stake and burn me out of hand, without further Law; as well you may do so, as do that you do, for all is without order of Law: such tyranny was never seen as you use now adays; God of his mercy destroy your cruel Kingdom. And whilst I spake this, the Bishop went away in haste.
